Laſtly, This caſting into the ditch, and the abhorring of his cloaths, may refer to the continuance of his afflictions; though I ſhould make my ſelf never ſo pure, yet the Lord would caſt me again into the ditch of affliction, he will put me into the pit of trouble, till (like a man drawn out of the mire) Mine own cloaths abhor me, or make me an abhorring to all that ſee me. I know the Lord will make further trial of me. Hence note,

Quamvis ego mundus ſum à culpa, tamen pœnis atq; dolorũ & ægritudinam ſordibus & ſqualore obſoloſcam.

> God caſts his ſervants again and again into the miery ditch, as refiners caſt gold again and again into the fiery furnace, to make them more pure.

That which defiles the outward man, may be cleanſing to the inward: And the abominable clothing of the body, may be a means to put the ſoul into the moſt handſom dreſs. Hence obſerve, > Secondly, That, After purgings and cleanſings, the Lord often goes on with further chaſtenings.

Though I waſh my ſelf, &c. yet thou wilt caſt me in the ditch, and mine own cloaths will abhor me. Ye our purgings and cleanſings are ſometimes ſo far from cauſing God to take off our afflictions, that they do but fit us for more affliction: For the Lord will not truſt an impure ſpirit, or an heart defiled under many corruptions, under great afflictions. He therefore cleanſes many, and makes them more holy, that they may be more fit to bear afflictions. No certain argument can be grounded upon this, that a man ſhall come out of affliction, becauſe he is cleanſed, for God chuſes (in ſome caſes) to afflict ſuch moſt, who are moſt cleanſed. The Lord hath as much ſervice from us, while we ſuffer, as while we do his will; Paſſive obedience is higher and harder ſervice then active, and an unclean heart is of the two (though it be fit for neither) more unfit for ſuffering then for doing. Therefore Job's friends could not groundedly affirm, that he ſhould be delivered, if he were cleanſed. Indeed if Gods thoughts were like mans thoughts, or if he were tied by ſuch rules as we, we might make ſuch concluſions; but (Job concludes) He is not a man as we are.

VERS. 32, 33.

For he is not a man as I am, that I ſhould anſwer him, and we ſhould come together in judgment.

Neither is there any Dayes-man betwixt us, that might lay his hand upon us both.

JOB doth two things in the cloſe of this Chapter.

Firſt, He again renounceth all thought or intendment of anſwering God by any worthineſs or goodneſs in himſelf. A point he had often touched before, it being the grand objection, which his friends brought againſt him, as if his ſpirit were heightned up to the preſumption of a trial or conteſt with God himſelf. 'Tis a duty to clear our ſelves moſt, where and in what we are moſt ſuſpected.

This he doth in Verſ. 32, 33.

He is not a man as I am, that I ſhould anſwer him, and we ſhould come together in judgment.

Neither is there any Dayes-man betwixt us, that might lay his hand upon us both.

In which words Job offers two things to aſſure them that he was far enough from ſuch on engaging with God.

Firſt, From the diſparity of their condition (verſ. 32.) He is not a man as I am. God is not like me, I am no match for God; and I will not be ſo fool hardy, as to contend with one, who is infinitely above me.

Secondly, Leſt any ſhould think, that though himſelf hand to hand (as we ſpeak) would not venture upon God, yet he might (poſſibly) get ſome friend or ſecond, to interpoſe and umpire it between them, or to determine whether Gods dealings with him were juſt and equal, or no: And ſo (though not alone, yet) by a friend, or a third party to them both, he would try out the matter. No (ſaith Job in verſ. 33.) not ſo neither, as I alone will not undertake him; ſo neither is there any Dayes-man betwixt us, that might lay his hand upon us both.

In the two laſt verſes Job makes a petition to the Lord deſiring a favourable condeſcenſion, that he would be pleaſed to abate of the preſent height and extremity of his pain, and then he hoped yet that he might anſwer him, though he would not contend with him, anſwer him in reference to his own integrity, about which his friends had charged and wounded him, though not in reference to his own righteouſneſs, about which the Lord might charge and condemn him, Let him take his rod away from me, and let not his fear terrifie me, then would I ſpeak and not fear him; but it is not ſo with me. He concludes with the difference of his ſtate, from what he deſired of God it might be: And he begins with the difference of his perſon from what God himſelf is. It is not with me as I could wiſh, and God is not ſuch an one, nor can be, as I am, and muſt be.

Verſ. 32. For he is not a man as I am, &c.

He doth not ſay, God is not ſuch a man as I am, but God is not a man as I am. One man may ſay unto another man, Thou art not ſuch a man as I am: Every different degree or endowment among men, may bear a man out in ſaying ſo, and pride will prompt a man to ſay ſo, when he is not in degree better, but in kind worſe then other men. Such was the language of the Phariſee (Luke 18. 11.) God I thank thee, I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjuſt, adulterers, or even as this Publican: yet no man can ſay to another man, Thou art not a man as I am.

But ſeeing God is not a man at all, what is there in this aſſertion of Job? He is not a man as I am.

The words import a double difference; Firſt, A difference in qualification. Secondly, In nature: here Job chiefly intends the difference of quality (which yet in God is his nature) that he was not wiſe, and juſt, and holy, and pure as God.

Non tam eſſentiæ ad eſſentiā quā qualitatis ad qualitatem i. e. ſuæ ad divinam paritatem collatio fit & denotatur. Bold.

Moſes in his ſong (Exod. 15. 3.) after the overthrow of the Egyptians in the Red Sea, ſpeaks thus, The Lord is a man of War; that phraſe intends not a humane nature to God; when he ſaith, God is a man of War, he meaneth only this, God is a great Warrior. We call a Ship of War, a Man of War. As a man of words ſignifies an eloquent man, though with ſome only a talkative man: So a Man of War ſignifies a famous Warrior, or one trained up for War; in which ſence Saul ſaith of Goliah, that he had been a man of war from his youth (1 Sam. 17. 33.) God is a great Warrior, the moſt potent Commander, The Generalliſſimo of all the Armies in heaven and earth, The Lord of hoſts is his Name, He is a man of war, though he is not a man.

Ratio eſt omnium ſuperiorum, etſi juſtus ſim, cum Deo tamen contendens pro ſonte habeor, quia non eſt par utriuſq; noſtrum conditio. Merc.

Further, when Job ſaith, He is not a man as I am, he gives us the reaſon of all he had ſaid before, eſpecially of what he had ſaid immediately before, Though I waſh my ſelf with ſnow-water, and make my hands never ſo clean, yet thou ſhalt plunge me in the ditch; For he is not a man as I am, that is, though I by waſhing my ſelf ſhould think I were all white, and not a ſpot to be ſeen upon me (as hypocrites by covering themſelves, think they are all hid, and not a ſin to be found about them) yet he would throw me into the ditch again, as like to like, dirt to dirt, for he is not a man as I am, he hath other eyes, and thoughts, and wayes then creatures have.

Secondly, As they contain a reaſon, why the Lord would judge him impure, though he ſhould waſh himſelf with ſnow-water; ſo alſo, why the Lord would afflict him, though he ſhould waſh himſelf with ſnow-water, He is not a man as I am. As if he had ſaid, Should I ſee a man without ſpot or ſpeck, without blame or fault, yet full of wounds and ſtripes, full of troubles and ſorrows: Should I ſee him afflicted, of whom I could not ſay, He had ſinned, it were beyond my reaſon. But though I cannot, yet the Lord can ſee reaſon to afflict a man in whom I ſee no iniquity. He knows why and wherefore; he may and doth caſt them into the fire in whom I can ſee no droſs. He is not a man as I am. God exceeds man in his actings, as much as he doth in his nature; as he is what man is not, ſo he can do what man cannot. Every thing is in working, as it is in being. God alwayes works like himſelf, and infinitely above man.

As to the preſent buſineſs, he works above man chiefly in two things.

Firſt; Man cannot juſtly commence a ſuit againſt, or contend with another man, except he be able to charge him with ſome wrong that he hath done him, or lay ſome crime to his charge.

Secondly, A humane Judge cannot condemn or caſt a man, unleſs he firſt legally convict him of his crime. Thus it is with men in their judicial proceedings. He that contends muſt know ſome crime; and the Judge paſſes ſentence as he ſees the crime proved and made good againſt him; but God is not as man, he may proceed to judgment without an accuſation, and he may give judgment before the crime be proved; Job was ſmitten without cauſe truly alledged, much leſs atteſted. God afflicts, that grace may be proved, not becauſe ſin is proved; He is not a man as I am, that I ſhould anſwer him.

Anſwer him.] It is a judiciary word, or anſwering in judgment; To juſtifie is a Law-term, and ſo is to anſwer; one puts in his Bill, and another his Anſwer; ſome Courts proceed by Bill and Anſwer. If the Lord (ſaith Job) ſhould put in his Bill againſt me, I would not put in my Anſwer; He is not a man as I am that I ſhould anſwer him.

Or we may take the word [Anſwer] in general, for the returning of ſatisfaction to a queſtion. If the Lord demand a reaſon or an account of me, I could not ſatisfie him. Many, who can give a reaſon of the hope that is in them, cannot give a reaſon of the ſufferings which are upon them: But though they know no particular reaſon why they ſuffer, yet they believe it is not without reaſon. Some holy Martyrs have ſaid to their cruel Perſecutors, urging them with Sophiſtical Queſtions, We can die, but we cannot diſpute. And ſo the Saints, under the moſt difficult providences of God, are reſolved to ſay, We can die under them, but we will not diſpute them. He is not a man that we ſhould anſwer him in what he ſpeaks or doth. Hence obſerve, > Firſt, The conſideration, that God is above man, is enough to humble and ſilence man.

No man is proud in the preſence of another whom he thinks to be his better. The ſight of greater beauty, keeps down pride of beauty. Pride cannot live in the eye of that which is above the reaſon of it in our ſelves: Yea, he that finds he is but equal, or upon even ground with others, can hardly be proud of any thing in himſelf. While we ſuppoſe our gifts or knowledge, but like thoſe of other men, we are not lifted up in the opinion of them. Now, If equality check pride, a thought of ſuperiority muſt needs kill it. And if the common ſuperiority of a man kills our pride, how much more doth the knowledge of that ſuper-excellent ſuperiority which is in God? Doth not the beauty and dignity of God, obſcure the luſtre and darken the beauty of all creatures? Is the ſhining of the Stars any thing, when the Sun appears? Much leſs is the holineſs, ſtrength, and goodneſs of man any thing, when the goodneſs, holineſs, and ſtrength of God ſtand forth or appear: we muſt ſay we are nothing, when we ſee what God is. The ſight of him, in whom nothing of our imperfection can be found, cannot but humble us in the ſight of all our perfections. Hence, when the Lord would abaſe man, and extol himſelf, he removes all of man from himſelf, (1 Sam. 15. 29.) God is not a man that he ſhould repent; Men are full of repentings, and that they are ſo, ſhews them to be men. There is a repentance which is a grace of God, and there is a repentance which is an infirmity in man. By the former, men turn to God from that ſin, in which they were, or have done. By the latter, men turn both from God and man in what they promiſe or purpoſe either to be or do. They are this day of one mind, and to morrow of another; to day they love, and to morrow they hate; now they will, and anon they will not. They are in and out, no man knows where to find them; but God is ever the ſame, he changes not. Elihu ſends a challenge to all teachers in the name of God, Who teacheth like him? (Chap. 36. 22.) God himſelf challengeth Job in his own name, (Chap. 40. 9.) Haſt thou an arm like God? Or canſt thou thunder with a voice like him? To whom will you liken me (ſaith God, when he would bring down the pride of the creature) To whom will you liken me, and make me equal, and compare me that we may be like? (Iſa. 46. 5.) Why do ye exalt your ſelves? Why have ye ſuch high thoughts of your ſelves? Can ye find out any to compare with me? Or can ye make a parallel of me among all my creatures?

All the unevenneſs of man towards God, ariſes from preſumptuous thoughts of his unevenneſs with God. Take a taſte in two or three particulars.

Firſt, Man grows into a boldneſs of ſinning againſt God, becauſe he thinks God is but ſo holy as man is; he conceits that which ſuits his ſpirit, ſuits Gods Spirit alſo: This cauſeth him to do many things moſt unſuitable to the Spirit of God (Pſalm 50. 18.) When thou ſaweſt a thief, then thou conſentedſt with him, and thou haſt been partaker with the adulterer: thou giveſt thy mouth to evil, and thy tongue frameth deceit, &c. Theſe things haſt thou done. And what encouraged or hardned him to do theſe things? The next words give us an account of that, Thou thoughteſt that I was altogether ſuch an one as thy ſelf; that is, thou didſt frame conceptions of me according to the Idæa of thine own brain, or the model of thine own heart. Thou waſt well pleaſed with ſuch filthineſs and abominations, therefore thou didſt conclude, I would not be diſpleaſed with them. The true reaſon why moſt men make nothing of evil, is, becauſe they make God nothing in goodneſs (as to that point) beyond themſelves; this doth not trouble our ſpirits, we ſee no hurt in what we do: Surely then God ſees no hurt in it, neither is his Spirit troubled with our doings.

Secondly, Boldneſs in pleading with, and complaining againſt God, when he doth what likes not us, ariſes from thoughts that we are like him. None would quarrel what God doth in cutting out and proportioning their own eſtates to them; or in caſting down the humble and meek, in exalting the proud and vile, if they did fully believe God had as much right and reaſon as they ſee he hath power to do what he doth. Man draws God into his own compaſs, and then wonders to find him work ſo out of compaſs. If I were as God, ſaith one I would do thus and thus; ſurely, God is as I am, he hath ſuch thoughts as I have, ſaith another, then why doth he thus? Till we have fully ſtudied this Point, That God is not as we are, we ſhall never reſt fully ſatisfied in what God doth, if he doth what we would not.

Thirdly, Unbelief ſprings from the ſame muddy fountain; unbelief of the power of God to deliver us when we are in outward ſtraights and dangers; and unbelief of the mercy of God to pardon us, when we are in ſpiritual ſtraights and deſertions. What's the reaſon why, when great dangers encompaſs us, we cannot believe deliverances? Do we not make God like to our ſelves? Do we not ſhorten his hand to our own meaſure, and think it cannot be done, becauſe men cannot do it? And for mercy about the pardon of ſin; man being awakened, ſees how he hath provoked God, ſin ſtares upon his face, and he finds out many aggravations upon his ſin; then he begins to collect thus, certainly if a man had ſo provoked his neighbour, he could never pardon or forgive him; can then ſuch ſins as theſe be forgiven by God? Mans mercy cannot reach ſo high as this, therefore ſurely the mercies of God will not. We have a very gracious promiſe, backt with a caution, to prevent theſe jealouſies (Iſa. 55.6,7.) Let the wicked forſake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon. Now, as when God calls upon man to obey his will, and do his Commandments, he is apt to ſay, at leaſt in his heart, the duties are too many, and the burdens too great to be born: So when the Lord calleth upon wicked men, the worſt of wicked men to repent or turn unto him, and he will abundantly pardon, or he will multiply to pardon (as it is in the original) they are ready to object, what, pardon ſuch as we are? we are too filthy and vile for waſhing, Surely he will not pardon us: Theſe mercies are too many for us, and theſe favours too great for us to receive. Well (ſaith God) I preconceive your conceits of me, ye are meaſuring me by your ſelves, ye think it cannot be done, becauſe ye cannot do it; your hearts are too narrow to paſs by ſo many, ſo great provocations; therefore ye ſay mine is too narrow alſo. Do ye thus meaſure me, the Lord, O fooliſh people and unwiſe? I would have you know, My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your wayes my wayes; for as the heavens are higher then the earth, ſo are my wayes higher then your wayes, and my thoughts then your thoughts, verſ. 8, 9. As if he had ſaid, your thoughts are as much below my mercy, as your wayes were below my holineſs. Ceaſe then from doubting what I have promiſed, as I would have you ceaſe from doing what I have forbidden. Your unbelief that I will not pardon your ſin, diſhonours me as much as your diſobedience did in committing ſin. Till we believe God is holy above us, we fear not to ſin; and till we believe God is merciful above us, we cannot believe he will pardon our ſin.

Thus we ſee how the lifting up of our ſelves in our thoughts to an equality, or to ſome ſimilitude with God, or the drawing down of God to an equality, or ſome ſimilitude with our ſelves, is the ground and cauſe of all our unequal carriage towards God, of our boldneſs in ſinning, of our boldneſs in pleading with, and complaining againſt him, of our extream unbelief in the point of deliverance from troubles, or of the pardon of our ſins.

Secondly obſerve, There is no compariſon between God and man.

He is not a man as I am. Man is like to man, face anſwers face, and heart anſwers heart, ſtrength anſwers ſtrength, and wit anſwers wit. Solomon concludes this (Eccleſ. 6.10.) That which hath been, is named already, and it is known that it is man. A man is but a man, be he never ſo great in worldly wealth or honour; as he bears the name, ſo he hath the nature of man ſtill: Nor can he contend with him that is mightier then he, i. e. with God. If he venture beyond his line, or move out of the ſphear of his activity, if he would act more then a man, he ſhall quickly find that he is but man; He cannot contend with him that is mightier then he. Man was indeed made in the likeneſs of God, Gen. 1.27. In the image of God created he him; yet we muſt not ſay God is like man; he is not in our image. God put ſome impreſſions of himſelf upon man, but he took no impreſſions of man upon himſelf; He is not a man as I am. He hath given us ſome of his own excellencies, but he hath not taken upon him any of our weakneſſes. God hath honoured man to give him ſomewhat of himſelf, but God ſhould diſhonour himſelf to take any thing of man. Thus man is in the likeneſs of God; but God is not in the likeneſs of man. Take heed of ſuch thoughts. It is as dangerous to frame a likeneſs or a ſimilitude of God to our hearts, as to frame a likeneſs or a ſimilitude of God upon a wall (Exod. 15.11.) Who is like unto thee, O Lord, amongſt the gods? That is, there is none like unto thee: None amongſt the gods, neither among thoſe who are falſly called gods, the Idols of the Heathen, or among thoſe who are truly called gods (for God calls them ſo) the Angels in heaven, and Magiſtrates here upon earth: among theſe truly called gods, there is none like the true God, much leſs is there any among the meer pure mortals, like unto the immortal God. Who is like unto thee, glorious in holineſs, fearful in praiſes, doing wonders? So (Micah 7. 18.) Who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and paſſeth by the tranſgreſſion of the remnant of his heritage? Who is a God like unto thee? Not only is there no man that can pardon as God, but there is no god that can pardon like God; he puts it upon that: Who is a god like unto thee? Not as if he granted that there were any other gods beſides the Lord, but to meet with the thoughts of men, with thoſe ſinful principles and conceits which lodge in man, and make other gods. To ſay of God only this, He is God, is to ſay all; we cannot ſay more good of God, then to call him God; as we cannot ſay more evil of ſin, then to call it ſin; when we have called it ſin, we have called it all. The Apoſtle (Rom. 7. 13.) puts that upon it, as the worſt he could ſay of it, Sin that it might appear ſin. We cannot repreſent it in a worſe likeneſs then its own. All men ſay they ſin, but ſin appears ſin to very few. And when the Apoſtle would put a diſgraceful title or epithete upon ſin, he inveſts it with its own name, ſinful ſin. Thus to the point in hand, we cannot call God more, then when we call him God: Nothing can be predicated of him better then himſelf. When God appears to be God, all excellency appears. All men (almoſt) acknowledge God, but God appears to very few. 'Tis but little of God that can be known; and there are not many who know that little; very many know but little of that little, and moſt know nothing of it at all.

Thus alſo to ſay that man is man, is proof and aggravation enough of his depraved condition (Hoſ. 6. 7.) They like men have tranſgreſſed the Covenant; they have done like themſelves. When we ſee men vain, and wicked, and ſinful, and covetous, and earthly, we may ſay of them, they have done like men; and how wondrous and glorious things ſoever God doth, we can but ſay, He hath done like God.

As a conſectary from the whole, take this caution, If God is not a man as we are, then God muſt never be meaſured by the rule and line of man. Man hath not line enough to meaſure God by. The Lord exceeds man in all; he is not only above mans infirmities, but he is above all his perfections. The Lord is not only not weak as man is weak, or unholy as man is unholy, but the Lord is not ſtrong as man is ſtrong, nor holy as man is holy, nor juſt as man is juſt, nor wiſe as man is wiſe: Then, man muſt not venture to judge of the wiſdom of God by his own wiſdom; or of the juſtice, holineſs and ſtrength of God by his own ſtrength, holineſs and juſtice. Man is not able to meaſure God in any of his Attributes; and in three things eſpecially man ſhould take heed of meaſuring God in his actings.

Firſt, In the great work of election. In this man is very apt to be medling and to be meaſuring God by the line of natural reaſon, or of civil juſtice: The Apoſtles diſpute beats down this preſumption, Rom. 9. We read there how man begins to buſtle and ſtartle at that great concluſion (verſ. 18.) Therefore he hath mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth. If it be thus, ſaith he, if every mans ſtate be peremptorily determined by the will of God, if he loves and hates before men have done either good or evil, why doth he find fault? for who hath reſiſted his will? What need any trouble themſelves about the way, when their end is under an unmoveable decree? Why ſhould any ſtrive to forſake evil and do good on earth, ſeeing it was reſolved in heaven what ſhould become of them before they had done either good or evil? Thus the pride and ignorance of man cavils at the decrees of God. But ſtay (ſaith the Apoſtle) O man, who art thou that repliest againſt God? He is not a man as thou art: he hath done what he hath done by virtue of his juſt Prerogative, and therefore he is not unjuſt in doing it. Beſides, if ye will needs argu from reaſon, then ſee how common reaſon confutes this Blaſphemy: Hath not the Potter power over the clay, of the ſame lump to make one veſſel unto honour, and another unto diſhonour? What if God hath done thus, and what if he will do thus? What haſt thou to do with it? Know thy place, and keep thy rank; art not thou clay in the hand of the Potter?

Secondly, Meaſure not God by your own line in his providential diſpenſations: He may have a method of his own in giving or taking away, in pulling down or building up, in wounding or healing, in abaſing man; or in raiſing him, becauſe all is his own. He who hath a right to all, can wrong none; and he who poſſeſſeth all, is debtor to none.

Thirdly, Meaſure not God by your own line in the matter of your ordinary Approvings: And that two wayes.

Firſt, Do it not in your approving of things. And,

Secondly, Do it not in your approving of perſons. Take heed firſt of meaſuring God by your ſelves in your approving of things; as if becauſe you approve it, therefore God ſurely doth: This miſconceit hath been the cauſe of almoſt all, and almoſt all the cauſe of all the Superſtition, Idolatry and Will-worſhip that ever was in the world. Man thinks God muſt needs like any thing which is done to his honour; hence becauſe the adorning and adoring of Images, are directed to the honour of God, therefore man concludes, ſurely God likes them. Whereas he is never honoured but when he is obeyed. As no man hath been his Counſellor, to direct him what to do with us; ſo no man can be his Counſellor, to direct him what to require of us. Not that which we commend is approved, but that which the Lord commends.

Secondly, Take heed of this in your approbation or eſtimation of perſons: Not he whom you commend is approved, but he whom the Lord commends. We ſhould judge of men as we believe God judges. Or (to come nearer) let no man think himſelf is approved of God, becauſe he is approved by himſelf. Many flatter themſelves in their own eyes, till their iniquity is found to be hateful (Pſal. 36. 2.) Chriſt intimates this, ſpeaking to the Phariſees (Luke 16. 15.) Ye are they that juſtifie your ſelves; ye have high thoughts of your own worth, and glory in your own excellencies, and ye think God hath high thoughts of you, that he glories in you too; but let me tell you, That which is highly eſteemed amongſt men, is an abomination in the ſight of God. We are the men, ſaid the Phariſees, ours are excellent gifts; thus they admired and doted upon themſelves: but the Lord found them out, and what they highly eſteemed, he abominated. Some write and ſubſcribe their own Letters teſtimonial, and get no hand to them but their own. Not he who commends himſelf, is approved, but he whom the Lord commends: Such ſhall find, that their own good word will do them no good; He is not a man as they are. He, ſaith Job, is not a man as I am, that I ſhould anſwer him.

And we ſhould come together in judgment.

It hath been ſhewed what Judgment is at the nineteenth verſe of this Chapter, and at the third verſe of the eighth Chapter, therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon it, only as to the matter in hand, Judgment may be taken three wayes.

Firſt, For pleading, which is but preparatory to Judgment, the opening and arguing of the caſe or fact under trial.

Secondly, For the deciſion and determination of the caſe according to Law, or the award of Judgment.

Thirdly, For the inflicting and executing ſentence according to the judgment awarded.

1. Diſceptatio & mutuus ἔλεγχος rationum.
2. Juris definitio.
3. Exactio caſtigationis & debiti. Merc.

Here Job chiefly intends the firſt; He is not a man as I am, that I ſhould anſwer him, and we ſhould come together in judgment, that is, that I ſhould plead, argue and debate my matters with him before any other Judge: God and man cannot come together to be judged; for all mankind muſt receive their judgment from God. Or nearer the Hebrew (which ſuits the former clauſe better) He is not a man as I am, that we ſhould come alike to judgment: No, we ſhould be very unlike, very unequally matched in judgment. Man and man, who are upon even terms in their nature, may yet be upon ſuch uneven terms in their condition, that they cannot come alike to judgment. A poor man cannot grapple with a rich man, nor a mean man with the honourable. Now, if they who are of the ſame nature, cannot come alike in judgment, becauſe of a diſparity in their condition, how ſhall they who differ not only in condition, but in nature? Can God and man, can poor, wretched and miſerable man, come alike in judgment with the great and glorious God? And ſo the meaning of Job may be thus conceived, If I had only a man (like my ſelf) to deal with, then I would venture a trial with him at any ſeat of Judgment or Court of Juſtice; but he is not a man as I am, much leſs ſuch a man as I am. How ſhall I ſet my ſelf with him to be judged, whenas himſelf is the Judge of all, and is himſelf judged of none?

Ut veniamus pariter in judicium.

Hence obſerve, Man is not able to contend with God in judgment.

Who is like me, and who will appoint me a time? or (nearer the Letter) Who will convent me in judgment? Who is that Shepherd that will ſtand before me? Iſa 49. 14. Man muſt come before God in judgment. We muſt all appear before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt (2 Cor. 5. 10.) None ſhall eſcape his Tribunal. But man cannot ſtand before God in judgment. The wicked cannot ſtand at all before him in judgment, becauſe they ſtand upon their own bottom. The righteous dare not ſtand before him in judgment upon their own bottom; if they ſhould, themſelves and their cauſe would quickly fall together.

There are ſeven conſiderations which tell us, that we cannot come together, much leſs alike together with God in judgment.

Firſt, He is of ſuch ſtrength, that none can wreſt themſelves out of his hand: No power can daunt him.

Secondly, He is of ſuch ſincerity, that bribes cannot corrupt him, nor can gifts put out his eyes.

Thirdly, He is of ſuch wiſdom, that none can over-reach him, nor can our wit entangle him.

Fourthly, He is ſo knowing, that none of our ſins or failings, no, not the leaſt of them, are ſecrets to, or hidden from him.

Fifthly, He is ſo holy, that he cannot bear with the leaſt ſin, and ſo juſt, that he cannot but puniſh it, unleſs he receive ſatisfaction for it.

Sixthly, He cannot be a party in judgment, for he is the ſupream Judge, and there is no appealing from his ſentence.

Seventhly, He is the laſt, yea, an everlaſting Judge, and therefore there is no repealing of his ſentence. Who is able to contend with him whom no power can daunt, no bribes corrupt, no wit over-reach, who knows all our ſins, and will ſpare none of them, from whoſe ſentence there is no appealing, and whoſe ſentence cannot be repealed? There is no Judge above God, therefore we cannot appeal from him; there is none to come after ter God, therefore what he hath judged, cannot be repealed.

Job having thus waved and profeſſed againſt contending with God in judgment, proceedeth in the thirty third verſe, to ſhew that there is none to whom his caſe might be referred for arbitration. There are two wayes by which controverſies are ended.

Firſt, By the Legal Sentence of the publick Judge.

Secondly, By the moderation of a private Friend. This latter Job means, when he ſaith, Verſe 33. Neither is there any Dayeſ-man betwixt us, that can lay hand upon us both.

The Septuagint render theſe words as a wiſh, or as a prayer; O that there were a Dayeſ-man, or a Mediator betwixt God and me, that might lay his hand upon us both! But the Original bears it clearly in the Negative.

Εἴθ' ἦν ὁ μεσίτης ἡμῶν ϗ ἐλέγχων. Sept.

Neither is there any Dayeſ-man betwixt us.

The word which we tranſlate [Dayeſ-man,] cometh from a root which ſignifieth to argue or reprove, and ſo ſome render it here; Neither is there any Arguer or Reprover; none to ſet the matter right between God and me; none to ſtate the queſtion between us, none to reprove the Lord, if I ſhould ſay, or if by the common rule of Juſtice it ſhould appear he hath done me wrong. The word is uſed in that ſence (Gen. 31. 24.) Where Jacob tells his Uncle Laban, The Lord rebuked thee yeſternight; the Lord himſelf came as an Umpire, as a Dayeſ-man betwixt Jacob and Laban, and rebuked Laban for his hard and unjuſt thoughts of, and intentions concerning Jacob: Take heed (ſaith God) thou ſpeak not unto Jacob either good or bad, that is, do not threaten or perſwade him to return, thou wilt repent it if thou doſt. Thus alſo the Lord appeared, as a Dayeſ-man between his people of old and the great ones of the world (Pſal. 105. 14.) He ſuffered no man to do them wrong; yea, he rebuked Kings for their ſakes. God is alwayes able to, and often doth interpoſe for, and vindicate his people from the oppreſſions of men. 'Tis coſtly medling with the Saints, Kings may get a rebuke for it: Yea, Kings may ſmart, and Kingdoms ſhake for it.

What a Dayeſ-man is, is ſo plain and well known by the cuſtom and uſage of moſt places, that it needs little explication. We in our Language, ſometimes call him an Umpire, ſometimes an Arbitrator, ſometimes a Mediator, ſometimes a Referree; and in ſome Countreyes with us, when a queſtion ariſes between Neighbours, concerning which they are unwilling to ſpend money and time in Suits of Law, they ſay, We will refer it unto men; which kind of ſpeaking ſeems to allude to the Title of Magiſtrates and Judges, whom the Scripture calleth gods; and when a buſineſs is brought before them, it may be ſaid to be referred or put to God. In oppoſition to which, when it is taken up by the Umpirage of friends, it is ſaid to be referred or put to men. We in our Engliſh Tongue, call ſuch Dayeſ-men, either becauſe they beſtowed a dayes pains upon the ending of a buſineſs, or becauſe they were obliged to end it by a ſet day; whereas Judges may take more liberty to themſelves. Yet ſome of the Greeks expreſs all mans judgment by this word, Mans-day, becauſe certain dayes were appointed for Judicature. The Apoſtle Paul uſes the ſame phraſe (1 Cor. 4. 3.) in oppoſition to the Lords-day, the great day of Judgment, to which he there appeals, from all the dayes ſet for mans judgment in this world. The Latines call Dayeſ-men, Sequeſtres; and Criticks tell us, that as the Dayeſman is expreſſed by a word in the Hebrew, whoſe root ſignifies to rebuke, becauſe a Dayeſ-man had power to rebuke and reprove him that had done the wrong; So he is called Sequeſter in the Latine, from a word that ſignifies to follow, becauſe of a power committed to him, that which way ſoever he ſhould ſtate and determine the buſineſs between the parties, they were bound to follow and ſubmit to his award; or, becauſe he was ſuppoſed a man of ſuch wiſdom, faithfulneſs and integrity, that both parties might ſafely follow him. Hence he was called Sequeſter, that is, one whom they muſt or might follow and abide by his ſentence. To aſſure which, the parties uſually engaged themſelves under penalties (of valuable dammage to the buſineſs in queſtion) to ſtand to his arbitration.

Ideo Sequeſter appellatur quod ejus qui electus ſit, utraque pars fidem ſequatur. Gel. l. 20. c. 10. Sequeſter eſt qui errantibus medius intervenit, qui apud Græcos μέσος dicitur, apud quem pignora deponi ſolent, à ſequendo dictus, quod ejus fidem utraq; pars ſequatur. Iſid. l. 10. Etym.

There are five things (by which we may more diſtinctly underſtand Job's meaning) belonging to a Dayeſ-man, or an Umpire.

Firſt, He muſt be agreed upon and choſen by both parties; for unleſs he be accepted by both of them, he can have no power to determine for or againſt either of them.

Secondly, He muſt hear both ſides ſpeak, and alledge what they can for themſelves, before he determines.

Thirdly, He muſt beat out the matter by interrogatories and queſtions; he muſt not ſtay upon the bare narrative of the perſons.

Fourthly, He muſt have power to conclude and determine of the differences betwixt them.

Fifthly, Both parties muſt be bound, at leaſt by promiſe, to ſtand to the determination which he ſhall make. Such an one is a Dayeſ-man among men; who is alſo called a Compromiſer, and his work, the Compromiſing of a matter, becauſe as he is elected by the mutual conſent, ſo confirmed by the mutual promiſe of thoſe who are at variance, to reconcile them, and take up their differences. Now, ſaith Job, as there is no Judge, ſo there is no Dayeſ-man betwixt me and God,

Talis judex vocatur cōpromiſſarius quaſi ex cōpromiſſo à litigatoribus ſumpto.

That might lay his hand upon us both.

Some underſtand the words [upon us both] of Job and his Friends; There is not a Dayeſ-man betwixt me and my Friends, not one that can judge and conſider of my innocency and their charge: As if he had ſaid, Though I will not plead it out with God, yet I dare refer the controverſie betwixt you and me to an equal Umpire, I dare go to the trial of my innocency with you, but I ſee no Dayeſman; you are all parties in the buſineſs, and I know none of that will ſtand between us indifferently and unprejudiced.

But the Text refers clearly to God, There is no Dayeſman, none to arbitrate the matter between God and me; None to lay his hand upon us both.

To lay on hands is diverſly uſed in Scripture. The hand ſignifies all power: Hence, to lay the hands, is to put forth power; and to do ſo, is taken ſometimes in an ill ſence, and ſometimes in a good ſence.

Firſt, In an ill ſence; and ſo to lay the hands, is to ſtrike or ſmite even to death, Gen. 22. 12. Lay not thine hand upon the Child, upon Iſaac, that is, do not ſlay him. We have the ſame expreſſion (Gen. 37. 22.) when Reuben pleaded for Joſeph, that he ſhould not be murdered; Shed no blood, but caſt him into this pit, and lay no hand upon him; that is, do not deſtroy him. This laying on of the hands notes a violent act, either proceeding from holy zeal or juſtice, as in Nehemiah, who threatens the prophaners of the Sabbath, If ye do ſo again, I will lay hands on you; or from malice, as in the chief Prieſts, who ſought to lay hands on Chriſt the Lord of the Sabbath (Luke 20. 19.) And Chriſt propheſying what the condition of his Diſciples and of Believers ſhould be, what uſage they ſhould find in the world, tells them (Mat. 21. 12.) They ſhall lay their hands upon you, and perſecute you. Thus Haman thought ſcorn to lay his hands on Mordecai alone (Eſth. 3. 6.) He had a deſign to take revenge upon the whole Nation of the Jews.

Secondly, To lay on the hands, is taken in a good ſence; and ſo I find it uſed three wayes.

Firſt, In Benedictions, Mark 10. 16. Chriſt took up the young Children in his arms, and laid his hands upon them, and bleſſed them. As under the Law, Lev. 1. 4. & 4. 15. The people or the Elders laying their hands upon the Beaſt, which was to be offered in Sacrifice, intimated the laying of all their ſins by faith upon Chriſt, of whom that Sacrifice was a type. So Chriſt laying his hands upon thoſe Children, implied the beſtowing and powring out of mercy upon them, in the pardoning of their ſins, and the furniſhing of them with the Graces of his Spirit. The ſame action uſed by the Apoſtles, in the name of Chriſt, had the ſame ſignification and effect. When Peter and John came to Samaria, and ſaw what work the Word had made among that people, They laid their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghoſt, Acts 8. 17. Paul likewiſe laid his hands on the Diſciples at Epheſus, and they received the holy Ghoſt, Acts 19. 6. It was uſed alſo as a ſign of healing, Mark 16. 18. They ſhall lay hands on the ſick, and they ſhall recover. And (Mat. 9. 18.) the Ruler ſaith unto Chriſt, My Daughter is ſick, but come and lay thy hands on her, and ſhe ſhall be healed. Some interpret the Rulers deſire of this ſign, to be as a ſign he had faith, ſo alſo that his faith was weak. The Centurion (concerning whom Chriſt teſtified, I have not found ſo great faith, no not in Iſrael) deſired Chriſt but to ſpeak the word only, and his ſervant ſhould be healed (Mat. 8. 8.) As a word is the proper object of faith, ſo faith acts moſt properly, when it reſts and lives upon a word only. Signes are mercies to the weak, and they are witneſſes of our weakneſs. Signes are but Crutches and Spectacles to help the lameneſs and dim-ſightedneſs of faith. But to our Text.

Secondly, Laying on of hands was uſed in the ordination or ſolemn ſetting of a man apart unto an Office, The Children of Iſrael, that is, ſome of the chief of them (under the Ceremonial Law) laid their hands upon the Levites (Num. 8, 18) Which was either a teſtification that they gave up all carnal and worldly intereſts in them, and bequeathed them wholly unto God; or an approbation of their Office, and of the Levites miniſtration in it on their behalf. The ſame Ceremony (for the matter) was continued in the ſending forth of Goſpel-officers. Neglect not the gift which is in thee, which was given thee by propheſie, with the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery, was Paul's counſel to Timothy, in reference to himſelf (1 Tim. 4.14.) And in reference to others (1 Tim. 5.22.) Lay hands ſuddenly on no man, And Paul and Barnabas being immediately deſigned by God for a ſpecial work of the Miniſtry, to which they wer called before, were ſent away with faſting and prayer, and the laying on of hands, Acts 13. 3.

Thirdly, The hand ſpecially ſignifies civil power, Pſal. 89. 25. I will ſet his hand alſo in the Sea, and his right hand in the floods, that is, I will give him power over them who dwell by the Seas. And then laying on of hands implies the authority which one man hath over another, to determine or reſolve a Caſe, or to ſettle a buſineſs between them, and that is the intendment of it here; There is no Dayes-man that might lay his hand upon us both, that is, who may authoritatively decide and make an end of this controverſie. To impoſe the hand, was to compoſe the difference. I find a threefold poſture of the Dayeſ-man obſerved in the action of his hand.

Impoſitio manuum poteſtatis ſignum, q. d. qui utrumq; noſtrum valet manu impoſita coercere Mer.

Ponere manum eſt litẽ componere, & controverſiæ authores ad fœdus concordiamque adducere. Pacificatoris effigies deſcribitur ad alterutrum litigãtium manum alternatim extendens, ut junctis dextris pacis fœdus iniretur. Quintil. Quibus nulla fœderis ſervati fides mendacem dextram habere dicuntur.

First, He put forth his hands towards the parties, deſiring them to join hands, or (as we ſpeak) to ſhake hands and be friends. Joining hands ſignifies conſent (Exod. 23. 1.) Thou ſhalt not put thy hand with the wicked, that is, thou ſhalt make no agreement with him. Some of the Ancients deſcribe the Pacificator or Dayeſ-man, having his hands cloſed into the hands of thoſe between whom he was to make peace: Hence they who are unfaithful in covenant, are ſaid to have a lying or a deceitful right hand. The Prophet Iſaiah ſpeaking of a falſe worſhipper, who had engaged his faith to ſerve Idols, concludes, He feedeth of aſhes, a deceived heart hath turned him aſide that he cannot deliver his ſoul, nor ſay, Is there not a lie in my right hand? (Iſa. 44. 20.) or (as other tranſlate) Is there not a lie at my right hand? Noting, that the Idol to which he had given his heart and hand, would deceive him moſt, when he truſted moſt to it.

Secondly, The Dayeſ-man eying the temper or diſtemper, both of the Complainant and Defendant, laid his hand gently now upon one, and then upon another, uſing his beſt Rhetorick to perſwade, yea, to conjure them to peace and quietneſs: Sir, ſaid he to one, I beſeech you to accept of theſe terms and conditions; 'tis you that have done the wrong, and treſpaſſed againſt your neighbour: and preſently he beſpake the other, that he would paſs by the offence, heal the breach, forget the injury, or take reaſonable ſatisfaction for his dammage.

Thirdly, The Dayeſ-man giving ſentence, laid his hand upon the head of him whom he found faulty and to have done the wrong, in token of condemnation. Among the Ceremonies of conſecrating the Levitical Prieſts, this is given in command (Exod. 29. 10.) Thou ſhalt cauſe a Bullock to be brought before the Tabernacle of the Congregation, and Aaron and his Sons ſhall put their hands upon the head of the Bullock: And in the Rules given concerning the Burnt Offerings of the people, it is directed, that the bringer ſhall lay his hand upon the head of the burnt offering, &c. (Lev. 1. 4.) Now this laying of the hands upon the head of the Sacrifice, implied the laying of their ſins upon the head of the Sacrifice, and that, the laying of their ſins upon the head of Chriſt, on whom the Prophet aſſures us, the Lord hath laid the iniquity of us all (Iſa. 53. 6.) And as the laying on of the hand upon the head of the beaſt, transferred their ſins upon him, ſo likewiſe that ſentence of death and condemnation which was due to their ſin, and was preſently executed by ſlaying of the Beaſt; which was a lively type of Chriſt (the Lamb ſlain from the beginning of the world) dying under a ſentence of condemnation in the ſtead of ſinners.

Laſtly, The laying on of the hand notes the keeping of the parties in compaſs; for contenders uſe to be very violent one againſt another.

Thus to the preſent Text. The laying on of the hand ſignifies only the compoſing or compounding of a difference. When Job complained or affirmed only, There is no Dayeſ-man betwixt us, his meaning was, that there was no man who could take up the matter betwixt God and him, there was none ſuch to be found; for he ſpeaks not only (de facto) that there was no Dayeſ-man; but (de impoſſibili) as of a thing which was impoſſible to be: As if he had ſaid, I would gladly refer this matter to arbitration; but the Lord, who is engaged with me, is above the arbitration of men or Angels: Creatures may not meddle with any of his matters further then they are called, and I know not of any whom God hath called to, or appointed over this matter.

Non poteſt dari Deo mihique ſimul litigantibus arbiter: quaſi in Deum æquè ac in me poteſtatẽ exercendo.

Hence obſerve Firſt, When Controverſies ariſe, the rule of Love bids us refer our differences to the determination of Brethren.

Job ſpeaks according to the uſage of thoſe dayes; men did not preſently run to Law, and call one another before the Judge, they had Dayeſ-men and Umpires to determine matters between them. Thus Jacob beſpeaks Laban (Gen. 31. 37.) Whereas thou haſt ſearched all my ſtuff, what haſt thou found of all thy houſhold-ſtuff? ſet it here before my brethren and thy brethren, that they may judge betwixt us both. The Apoſtle (1 Cor. 6. 1, 5.) is very angry with the Corinthians, becauſe they were ſo haſty to go to Law; Verily there is utterly a fault among you, becauſe ye go to Law one with another. What! is there not a Dayeſ-man among you? Is there not a man among you fit to be an Arbitrator? I ſpeak to your ſhame (ſaith Paul) Is it ſo that there is not a wiſe man among you, no not one that ſhall be able to judge between his brethren? But brother goeth to Law with brother, and that before the unbelievers. The ſin of theſe Corinthians was the greater, becauſe the Judges were heathen; yet ſuch contendings bear a proportion of ſinfulneſs, though Judges be Chriſtians. To bring every matter to the Judgment-Seat, when (poſſibly) a Brother or a Friend might take up the matter, is a tranſgreſſion againſt the Law of Love. We ſhould rather labour after reconcilements, then Suits in Law, which are a cauſe, not only of trouble and expence, but of great breaches and heart-burnings among Friends and Brethren. We have a proverbial ſpeech among us, A lean Arbitration is better then a fat Judgment. It is better to the Parties, they ſhall get more by it; the charge of obtaining Right by Law, many times eating out all, and ſometimes more then all, alwayes a conſiderable part of that which the Law gives us as our Right. We uſe to ſay to diſſenters, Be friends, the Law is coſtly. 'Tis very coſtly to moſt mens purſes, and to ſome mens Conſciences. 'Tis rare if a man wrongs not his ſoul by ſeeking the rights of his Credit or Eſtate.

In proverbio eſt, potiores eſſe iniquas pacis conditiones optima judicis ſententia.

Secondly obſerve, That, No creature can umpire the buſineſs betwixt God and man.

There is a twofold reaſon of it.

Firſt, He that is our Umpire is ſuppoſed wiſer then our ſelves. They who cannot agree, need more wiſdom then their own to work their agreement. But there is no creature wiſe as God, yea, there is no creature wiſe but God; who is therefore called The God only wiſe. God is beſt able to judge of his own actions. No man hath been his Counſellor, (Rom. 11. 34.) much leſs ſhall any man be his Judge: Men ſometimes abound too much in their own ſence; but God muſt abound in his. His will is the rule of all, much more his wiſdom; or rather his wiſdom is the rule of all, becauſe his will is; his will and wiſdom being the ſame, and of the ſame extent, both infinite.

Oportet ut in judice ſit altior ſapientia, quæ ſit quaſi regula, ad quã examinantur dicta utriuſq; partis.

Secondly, He that is a Dayes-man or Umpire, muſt (according to the rules before ſpoken of) have power to compel the parties to ſubmit or ſtand to what he ſhall determine. But as we cannot lay any reſtraint upon God, from doing what he will; ſo we cannot lay any conſtraint upon him to do what we will. Who ſhall force the Lord? To whom hath he given an aſſumpſit, or ingaged himſelf under a penalty to perform what he ſhall award? The Lord doth whatſoever he pleaſeth both in Heaven and Earth, and he will do no more then he pleaſeth. Perſwaſion cannot move him, much leſs can power compel him. He that is above all in power, cannot be dealt with any way, but by perſwaſion. And he who is above all in wiſdom, cannot be perſwaded by any againſt his own will.

Oportet ut in judice ſit major poteſtas, quæ poſſit utrãq; partem comprimere.

There is indeed a Dayes-man betwixt God and man, but God himſelf hath appointed him. God hath referred the differences betwixt himſelf and man, unto Jeſus Chriſt; and (his own good will and free grace moving him thereunto) he ſtands engaged in the bonds of his everlaſting truth and faithfulneſs to perform what Jeſus Chriſt, as Mediator, ſhould ask for us: unto him we may ſafely commit our cauſe and our ſouls, with that aſſurance of the Apoſtle (2 Tim. 1. 12.) I know whom I have believed, and am perſwaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him againſt that day. Chriſt, God-man is Umpire between God and man; what we truſt him with ſhall not miſcarry: he will make our Cauſe good, and our perſons acceptable before God at that great day. It is infinite mercy, when we were neither able to manage our own cauſe, nor to find out any in Heaven or Earth who could, that then God himſelf ſhould find out one, in wiſdom and power like himſelf, one who thought it no robbery to be equal with God, to be our Dayes-man. Many of the Ancients interpret this Text, either as Job's deſire and prayer, that Chriſt would come in the fleſh, O that there were a Dayes-man betwixt us: or as a propheſie of Jeſus Chriſt, to come as our Dayes-man in the fleſh, There is no Dayes-man yet, but a Dayes-man ſhall come. The ſence is pious, but the context will not bear it: In Chap. 16. v. 21. and Chap. 17. v. 3. We ſhall find Job ſpeaking clearly of the Mediator Jeſus Chriſt, and of his great work of atonement between God and man. But here he ſeems to keep to the preſent controverſie, about the buſineſs of affliction, not of ſalvation.

Take two or three conſectaries flowing from the whole matter.

Firſt, Job at the loweſt ſpeaks highly of God, and humbly of himſelf.

The greater his afflictions were, the purer was his language.

He was not able to grapple with God, and there was none to be found who could umpire the matter betwixt them. The will of God is the ſupreme Law. What he will do with us, we muſt be content he ſhould. The ſecrets of his providence are beyond our ſearch, and his judgments above our reach.

Secondly, The greatneſs and tranſcendency of God ſhould keep us low in our own thoughts.

Our knowledge of God is the preſent cure of our own pride. The knowledge of God cauſeth us to know our ſelves; and that which makes us know our ſelves, cannot but make us low in our ſelves. Though a proud man is commonly ſaid, To know himſelf too much, yet the truth is, he doth not know himſelf enough, no, not at all, as he ſhould know himſelf. Many are proud of, and with their knowledge, yet pride is the daughter of ignorance. Some pride lodges in every mans heart, becauſe more then ſome ignorance doth. Job had ſome of both, in his; why doth he lay the thought of the infinite glory and ſoveraignty of God ſo often to his heart, but to keep down or to cure the ſwellings of his heart.

Thirdly, It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of God.

He is not a man as we are (we are not able to match him) and there is (among men) no Dayes man betwixt us. David made it his election (2 Sam. 24.) To fall into the hands of God, and not into the hands of man. And it is beſt for us to fall into the hands of God (as David put himſelf into his hands) with reſpect to his great mercies. But wo unto us, if we fall into his hands, as contenders with his great power. Shall we thus provoke the Lord? Are we ſtronger then he? It is our duty, when we do, and our priviledge that we may, caſt our ſelves into the hands of God, when the hand of man oppreſſeth us; for (as one of the Ancients ſpeaks ſweetly and feelingly) If thou doeſt depoſit thy injuries with him, he is able to revenge thee; if thy loſſes, he is able to repair thee; if thy ſickneſs, he is able to heal thee; and if thy death, he can raiſe thee up, and eſtate thee in life again. Thus (I ſay) it is beſt to fall into the hands of God, in expectation of mercy, through the Mediator; but it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God, upon contempt of mercy obtained by the Mediator: So the Apoſtle argues (Heb. 10. 26.) If men ſin wilfully after they have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſin, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, &c. Thence concluding (verſ. 31.) It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. They who ſleight the blood of Chriſt, and neglect the great ſalvation tendered to ſinners by him, can have no more ſacrifice for ſin. Wicked men crucifie to themſelves the Son of God afreſh, and put him to open ſhame (Heb. 6. 6.) But God will not crucifie his Son, or put him to open ſhame again for them. God will not make another Goſpel for them (as he muſt, if they be ſaved) who contemn this. No, there remains no more ſacrifice for ſin, theſe men who once (with all man-kind) fell into the hands of God by tranſgreſſing his Law, are now (under another notion) fallen into his hands, even by the contempt of the Goſpel; and now God ſaith, I will deal with them alone, for they have refuſed the Dayes-man whom I ſent, and who was ready to lay his hand upon us both. It had been inconceivably ſad with us all, if, as in the caſe of Job's temporal loſt eſtate, there was no Dayes-man between God and him on earth; ſo in the caſe of our ſpiritual loſt eſtate, there had been no Dayes-man between God and man in heaven: but it will be unconceivably more ſad with thoſe, who having had the tender of ſuch a Dayes-man, ſhall be found contemners of him. Greateſt love neglected, breaks forth and ends in greateſt wrath.

Satis idoneus eſt patientiæ ſequeſter Deus, ſi injuriam depoſueris juxta eum, ultor eſt; ſi damnum, reſtitutor; ſi dolorem, medicus; ſi mortem, reſuſcitator eſt. Tertul. l. de Patient.

VERS. 34, 35.

Let him take his rod away from me, and let not his fear terrifie me.

Then would I ſpeak, and not fear him: but it is not ſo with me.

WE have ſhewed (in the two former verſes) Job renouncing and proteſting againſt all thought of contending at all with God; He is not a man as I am, that I ſhould anſwer him, &c. In theſe two he deſireth God not to contend with him: as if he had ſaid, Lord, I will not plead or diſpute with thee; and I know (ſuch is thy ſoveraignty) thou mayeſt do what thou pleaſeſt with me; Yet, oh that thou wouldſt be pleaſed to abate of the ſeverity of thy proceeding, and to remit the fierceneſs of that wrath, wherein thou appeareſt againſt me, that I might have liberty to ſpread my condition in thy preſence. I have no friend to take up the matter for me; but I would open my caſe in a few words my ſelf, if I might obtain a ceſſation but for the time of treaty, if thou wouldſt forbear fighting, while I am ſpeaking. Let him take his rod away from me, and let not his fear terrifie me. Then would I ſpeak, &c.

Exploratum eſt me non poſſe Deum, coram ſuperiore aliquo judice ſiſtere: quocirca ſupereſt, ut ipſe ſit ſupremus judex, apud quem ego pro me dicere paratus ſum, ſi contrahet flagellum calamitatis quo me cædit, & extenuet formidinē majeſtatis quâ concutior. Pined.

Let him take his rod away from me.

The Rod hath divers acceptions: The word Shebet in the Hebrew, is taken ſometimes ſtrictly for a branch, bough, or ſprig, growing forth from the ſtock of a tree: and becauſe a rod or a ſtaff is made of the branch of a tree, therefore the ſame word ſignifies both.

Secondly, It ſignifies a Scepter; the Scepter of a King, which emblems the power of a King. Ahaſuerus held forth his golden Scepter to Queen Eſther, in token of acceptance (Eſth. 5. 2.) And becauſe in ancient times (as the Learned obſerve) they were wont to make Scepters of ſuch rods, and all Scepters have the form or ſhape of a rod, therefore the original expreſſes the rod and the Scepter by the ſame word (Gen. 49. 10.) The Scepter [Shebet, the rod] ſhall not depart from Judah, nor a Law-giver from between his feet. Thy Scepter, O God, is a Scepter of righteouſneſs (Pſal. 45. 6.) that is, thou uſeſt thy Scepter righteouſly. The Scepter notes two things; Firſt, Authority to judge or command. Secondly, Power to correct or puniſh; both are included in that propheſie of the Kingdom of Chriſt (Pſal. 110. 2.) The Lord ſhall ſend the rod of thy ſtrength out of Sion; that is, he ſhall inveſt thee with power to govern, as the next words expound it, Rule thou in the midſt of thine enemies. Commanders in war direct with a rod or leading ſtaff; and Magiſtrates puniſh with a rod in times of peace.

Sceptrum quod priſci reges majeſtatis & ſeveritatis gratia, manu tenebant, baculus erat.

Sceptrum ſignificat regium Dominium, cujus ſignum erat ſceptrū. Tribus quæ ex uno patre tanquam baculus ex una arbore nata eſt. Percuſſio, punitio, plaga, quæ fit baculo.

Hence thirdly, By a Metonymy the Scepter imports dominion, rule and government it ſelf, Amos 1. 8. I will cut off him that holdeth the Scepter; that is, who hath the government in his hand.

Fourthly, The word is often uſed in Scripture to ſignifie a Tribe, or a family of perſons, becauſe a Tribe is as a branch ſprung from one ſtock; ſo the twelve Tribes of Iſrael (like twelve branches) ſprung from that great and ancient ſtock, the Patriarch Jacob.

Laſtly, The word ſignifies puniſhment or correction; correction is often given with a rod, therefore to be under the rod is to be under puniſhment. Thus the Lord threatens to viſit the tranſgreſſion of the houſe of David with a rod, and their iniquity with ſtripes, Pſal. 89. 32. The rod and reproof give wiſdom (Prov. 29. 15.) The rod hath a voice, Hear the rod (ſaith the Prophet, Mich. 6. 9.) but 'tis beſt when a voice is joyned with the rod, and inſtruction mixed with correction.

Bold. in loc.

There are in the Hebrew (to note that by the way) five words, which ſignifie a rod or a ſtaff. Some reſolve that ſeeming contradiction which is in the two Evangeliſts, Matthew and Mark, by the different ſignification of theſe words. When Chriſt (Matth. 10. 10. as alſo, Luke 6. 3.) ſent forth his Apoſtles to preach the Goſpel, among other inſtructions and directions given them for their journey, this is one, Take no ſtaves. But (Mark 6. 8.) Chriſt commanded them that they ſhould take nothing for their journey ſave a ſtaff only. One Evangeliſt ſaith, they muſt not take ſtaves, and in the other they are bidden to take ſtaves. Now (ſay theſe) in Matthew and Luke, where he forbids his Diſciples to take ſtaves, he expreſſeth himſelf by the word in the Text, Shebet, which ſignifies a correcting or ſmiting ſtaff: Take no ſtaves to ſmite and ſtrike with, ye go out with a meſſage of peace in your mouths, let there not be ſo much as an inſtrument of contention in your hands. But in Mark he uſeth the word Miſnan, which ſignifies a ſtaff to lean upon; Take a ſtaff to reſt or eaſe your ſelves upon, or to help your ſelves on in your travel; A walking ſtaff, but not a ſtriking ſtaff. Thus they reconcile the difference. But though this interpretation be good, yet this ground of it apppears not, either in the Syriack, which in both Texts hath the word Shebet, or in the Greek, which expreſſes both by (ῥάβδος) So then we muſt rather ſay, that the ſame word ſignifies a ſtaff for both uſes, and that when Chriſt forbids his Diſciples a ſtaff, he means a ſtaff to ſtrike with (Preachers muſt be no ſtrikers, according to the Apoſtles rule in Timothy) and that when he bids them take a ſtaff, he means a walking ſtaff. Itineriant Preachers might be wearied with travelling, as well as with ſpeaking.

Nihil aliud poſtulat Job quā ut Deus vel mitigaret, vel penitus auferret ab eo flagella, ſc. morbos, & dolores. Non agat pro jure, ſed gratiæ & moderationi faciat locū. Coc.

But to the Text. The rod which Job deſires might be removed, is, that ſore affliction which the ſoveraign power of God laid upon him, and exerciſed him with. As if he had ſaid, Lord, thou dealeſt with me upon the height of thy prerogative, and I acknowledge thou mayeſt do ſo: But my humble ſuit and prayer is, that thou wouldeſt afflict me leſs then thou haſt, though thou haſt not afflicted me more then thou mayeſt. Thou haſt not injured me at all, but O that thou wouldeſt relieve me.

He ſpeaks to this ſence with a little variety of words, (Chap. 13. 20, 21.) Only do not two things unto me, then will I not hide my ſelf from thee; withdraw thine hand from me, and let not thy dread make me afraid. And in a language not unlike this, he deſcribes the peace and proſperity of wicked men (Chap. 21. 9.) Their houſes are ſafe from fear, neither is the rod of God upon them. We find alſo that Elihu (who undertook Job, and debated the matter with him, when theſe three had no more to ſay, or would ſay no more) He, I ſay, perceiving what it was which Job had complained of as an impediment of ſpeaking unto God, promiſes that himſelf would give him no ſuch impediment or cauſe of complaint (Chap. 33. 7.) Behold, my terror ſhall not make thee afraid, neither ſhall my hand be heavy upon thee; As if he had ſaid, The Lords hand hath been heavy upon thee, and his terror hath made thee afraid, but (take my word) I will deal gently and mildly with thee, My terror ſhall not make thee afraid, neither ſhall my hand be heavy upon thee. So that, Job's deſire is only this, that he might have eaſe or releaſe from his preſent ſorrows. And 'tis (not improbably) conceived, that he alludes to the cuſtom of the Judges in thoſe Eaſtern Countries, who laid a rod upon ſome offenders in token of condemnation, and took it off from others in token of abſolution, of grace and favour. Take thy rod away from me.

Affliction is called a rod in a three-fold conſideration.

Firſt, Becauſe of the ſmart of it. Afflictions are grievous and painful to fleſh and blood. They grieve and pain the outward man, while the inward man takes pleaſure in them. I (ſaith Paul) take pleaſure in infirmities, in reproaches, in perſecutions, in neceſſities, in diſtreſſes for Chriſts ſake (2 Cor. 12. 10.) that is, my ſpirit doth, for no affliction (not that for Chriſts ſake) is joyous for the preſent, but grievous to the fleſh. For, as the Spirit would not do thoſe evils of ſin, which the fleſh would and doth (The evil which I would not, that I do, was Paul's cry, Rom. 7. 19.) So the fleſh would not endure thoſe evils of ſorrow, which the Spirit would and doth. And as a believer delights in the Law of God, after the inward man, when corruption is vext and troubled at it; ſo a believer delights in the rod of God, after the inward man, when corruption is moſt impatient and unquiet under it. Hence the Apoſtles counſel to the diſperſed Jews, Rejoyce when ye fall into divers temptations (James 1.) that is, into divers afflictions; the fleſh hath its ſenſe, and feels ſmart; but the Spirit is armed with faith, which overcomes the ſmart. Affliction were not ſo much as a rod, if it did not make us ſmart; and we are not ſo much as Chriſtians, if we cannot bear the ſmart with patience, or overcome it with faith.

Secondly, Affliction is called a rod, in regard of the hand that uſeth it. A ſword is in the hand of a Judge, and a rod in the hand of a father. God deals with his people as a father with his children in afflicting them. When we moſt provoke his Fatherly diſpleaſure againſt us, he doth not wiſh (as Balaam when his Aſſe offended him) that there were a ſword in his hand to ſlay us; he only takes up a rod to ſcourge us. Hence

Thirdly, Affliction is called a rod, in regard of the end for which it is ſent. A rod is not prepared to kill, nor is it an inſtrument of cruelty. A rod is not for deſtruction, but for correction. There are indeed deſtroying rods, which God will deſtroy, and ſave his people who are deſtroyed by them; I will deſtroy the rod of the oppreſſor (Iſa. 9. 4.) Nebuchadnezzar the rod of Gods anger, was a deſtroying rod, yet they among the Jews, who feared God, were only corrected, while they were deſtroyed. The Lord means no hurt to thoſe who are good, when he makes them ſmart and die under the rod of thoſe who are evil. If ever any man might think he had a ſword in his bowels, rather then a rod upon his back, Job might: yet even he calls it a rod, while he calls to God, for the removing of it, Remove thy rod away from me. And ſeeing he calls to have it removed, we may Obſerve,

That it is lawful to pray againſt affliction.

We may pray to be eaſed of that, which we muſt be patient under. To be diſcontented with affliction is ſinful, but it is no ſin (it is a duty) to deſire the taking of it away. For Firſt, We may pray for the preventing of afflictions, therefore we may pray for the removing of afflictions, we may pray, Lord, keep thy rod off from us; therefore we may pray, Lord, take thy rod off from us.

Secondly, Afflictions themſelves are evil. There is no good in them, nor can they do us any good of themſelves. The good cometh from a ſuperior work, from thoſe admirable influences and concurrences of God upon, and with corrections. The rod is an evil in it ſelf, and will make us worſe, unleſs the Lord make it a bleſſing to us. Some are ſtubborn under the rod: and their hearts are hardened, while themſelves are melted in the fire of affliction. As man lives not by bread alone, ſo man mends not by the rod alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. 'Tis little leſs then a miracle that this dry rod (as that of Aaron did natural) ſhould bloſſom and bring forth ſpiritual fruit, the fruit of righteouſneſs.

Thirdly, We may pray for the removing of afflictions, becauſe the Lord often ſends afflictions upon this meſſage, to beſpeak prayer. Many a ſoul is ſluggiſh in prayer till awakened by the voice of the rod. When the rod makes the fleſh ſmart, then the Spirit (in whom any thing of the Spirit is) cries mightily unto God, and among the many things about which the ſoul exerciſes prayer under afflictions, this is one, that the afflictions may be removed. As they alwayes ſin, who murmur at and quarrel with God, becauſe he corrects them; ſo alſo do they, who ſay, they care not how long he corrects them, or let him correct them, as long as he will. It is as ill a ſign when a child will not pray his parent to ſpare him, when he is about to chaſten him, or to ſtay his hand when he is chaſtening of him, as it is to reſiſt his chaſtiſement. There may be greater contempt of God in lying under affliction, then in reſiſting it. Now, as it is our duty to pray for deliverance out of trouble; ſo it is one end why the Lord caſts us into trouble, that we may be engaged to pray for deliverance.

But take it with a caution, we muſt not pray abſolutely for deliverance, or the removal of afflictions, but at leaſt with an implicit limitation. While we are ſtriving earneſtly for the taking away of the rod, we ſhould be ready to ſubmit, if the Lord will not take it away. A believer may ſay to the Lord (as wreſtling Jacob) I will not let thee go except thou bleſs me; but he muſt not ſay, I will not let thee go, except thou now deliver me. Time, and means, and manner muſt all be laid at Gods feet, and ſubmitted to his wiſdom. And we muſt honour God, though he will not remove the rod, even while we are praying that he would remove it.

For the cloſe of this point, conſider, the rod may be removed, not only by a total releaſe from affliction; But Firſt, By an abatement of the affliction. As we are ſaid to leave off thoſe graces, from the degrees and lively actings of which we fall and decline: He that lacketh theſe things (that is, who aboundeth not, as he hath heretofore, in the exerciſe of them) is blind, &c. (2 Pet. 1.9.) Thou haſt left thy firſt love, ſaith Chriſt to the Angel of Epheſus, when the heat of his former love was cooled: So the Lord may be ſaid to remove our troubles, when he remits the extremity, and cools the heat of them.

Secondly, The rod is removed, when it is ſanctified to us, when the Lord (who is excellent in workings) cauſeth it to do us good. The Saints die, yet death is aboliſhed, as to the Saints, by the death of Chriſt (2 Tim. 1.10.) becauſe Chriſt hath pluckt out the ſting of their death, and made it a gain to them. Thus while Chriſt makes temporal loſſes or ſufferings an advantage to the ſpiritual eſtate of his people, he takes them away. And as outward bleſſings are taken away, from wicked men, while they poſſeſs them; riches are not riches to them, nor is their honour an honour to them, becauſe they are enſnared by them: So the outward croſs is taken away from the godly, while they ſuffer, becauſe they are bettered by the croſs.

Thirdly, Affliction is removed from us, when Chriſt gives us ſtrength to bear affliction. Nothing grieves us, either in active or paſſive obedience, but what is either againſt our wills, or above our power. It is all one to have a burthen taken off our ſhoulders, or to have ſo much ſtrength given as makes it eaſie to us. While the Saints have trouble upon their backs and loins, they have no trouble in their hearts and ſpirits, when their ſpirits are carried above thoſe troubles. To conquer an enemy is more noble then to have none. Much more (which is promiſed the Saints in the throng of ſoreſt enemies) to be more then conquerors. In all, or any of theſe wayes Job's prayer may be fulfilled, Take away thy rod from me,

And let not thy fear terrifie me.

There was ſomewhat more upon Job then a rod, or it was an extraordinary rod, a rod like a Scorpion.

Let not thy fear terrifie me.] The word which we tranſlate [Fear] comes from a root ſignifying that which is very formidable and terrible. Fear and dread ſhall fall upon them (Exod. 15.16.) that is, they ſhall be extreamly afraid, even dead with fear, as the next words import; They ſhall be ſtill as a ſtone, &c. there is a letter added (as the Hebricians obſerve) to the word uſed by Moſes, implying the exceſs of fear. Giants are called by this name Emims (Deut. 2.11.) becauſe they are of a dreadful aſpect. The whole hoſt of Iſrael trembled at the ſight of Goliah, (1 Sam. 17.14.) An Idol is expreſt by this name Emim: And there is a double reaſon of it. Either becauſe Idols are a terror to their worſhippers: we hear how at this day poor Pagans who worſhip Idols, are extreamly oppreſt with ſlaviſh fear of diſpleaſing them. The true God is terrible to his deſpiſers: but falſe Gods are terrible to their worſhippers.

μὴ μὲ στροβείτω. Ne me tranſverſum agat Sept. Alius, ne me conſternet.

Or Secondly, They were called Emims in a way of contempt; Yours are terrible Gods ſure: They have hands, and handle not; feet, and walk not; eyes, and ſee not. Here are terrible gods. So then, Idols are Emims, either becauſe they are really to be feared ſo little; or becauſe they are ſuperſtitiouſly feared ſo much.

Job's fear was no needleſs fear, he was not terrified with a fancy, though his fancy was ready enough to over-act upon his afflictions, and ſo encreaſed his fear; Let not thy fear, that is (ſay ſome) fearful thoughts or ſights terrifie me. So (Chap. 7.14.) When I ſay, my bed ſhall comfort me, my couch ſhall eaſe my complaint; then thou ſcareſt me with dreams, and terrifieſt me with viſions. There is an humbling and a cleanſing fear; The fear of the Lord is clean, not only in the nature of it, but in the effects of it (Pſal. 19.9.) There is alſo an amazing, and a terrifying fear: ſuch the letter of the original imports this to be, even a fear bordering upon madneſs, as if he were rather frighted then afraid, and ſcared, rather then troubled.

Ex vi verbi originalis ejuſmodi terror eſt qui hominē exagitat & quaſi extra valde diſtrahit.

Others expound this fear with reference to the two former verſes, eſpecially to the verſe immediately foregoing. There Job deſires a Dayes-man, or complains that there is none; here he tells us what he might have expected, if he had one. As if he had ſaid, Had I a Dayes-man, then I know he would take away the rod from me, that is, he would give judgment that I ſhould be eaſed of this affliction; and his fear ſhould not terrifie me, that is, he would never give a ſentence which ſhould be a terror to me. That's a fair ſence in reference to what he ſpake before; but I rather keep his meaning within the compaſs of what he is ſpeaking here.

And then by fear we may underſtand,

Firſt, Thoſe rayes and beams of Majeſty, which the Lord letting out a little upon Job, he was not able to bear them. We find when in thoſe ancient times God appeared, the beholders were terrified. Manoah's wife tells her huſband, A man of God came unto me, and his countenance was like the countenance of an Angel of God very terrible, (Judg. 13.6.) And when God appeared to Abraham, an horror of great darkneſs fell upon him (Gen. 15.12.) In what a woful plight was Daniel, receiving the viſions of God? (Dan. 10.8.) God who is the joy of his people, is alſo a terror to them. Things which are not what they ſeem to be, are not ſo terrible near hand as at a diſtance. God who is infinitely more then he can ſeem to be, is more terrible near hand then at a diſtance. Hence it is, that when God, who is alwayes near us, ſhews himſelf to be ſo, our ſpirits fail within us. In that preſence of God which we ſhall have in glory, there will be fulneſs of joy. And in that preſence of God which we have in the wayes of grace, there is abundance of joy. But if while we are here in a ſtate of grace, ſome little of that preſence of God which is proper to the ſtate of glory falls upon us, we are more diſtreſſed then comforted with it. How much more then when God cloaths himſelf with terror, and (as he did to Job) ſo reveals himſelf unto us?

Pavoris nomine intelligendū putarem fulgorē, ſplendorem, vel majeſtatem nimiam, qua priſcis illis temporibus nonnunquam Deus, vel Angelus pro Deo ſervis ſuis apparebat. Bol.

Secondly, We may interpret this fear (by the former part of the Verſe) the rod; his afflictions were terrible, the hand of God lifted up to ſmite him, made him afraid. But whether it were this or that, the Majeſty of God over-awing him, or the Rod of God chaſtening him, the ſence is plain, Job was oppreſt with fear from the Lord, yea, with terror from the Almighty, cauſing this vehement deprecation, Let not his fear terrifie me. Hence obſerve, Firſt, That, God ſometimes appears terribly to thoſe he loves entirely.

Job was one of Gods darlings, and God was embracing him while he was ſcourging him. Job had kiſſes from heaven, when he felt nothing but laſhes here upon the earth. The heart of God was full of love, while his hand was filled with a rod; his bowels yearned upon Job, and his face terrified him at the ſame time. That precious man Heman was followed with terrors and viſions of amazement all his dayes; I am afflicted and ready to die from my youth up: while I ſuffer thy terrors, I am diſtracted (Pſal. 88. 15.) The terrors of God, even terrors to diſtraction, may be the preſent portion of thoſe whoſe portion is everlaſting mercy. Obſerve, Secondly Man is not able to bear the anger of God.

Though he be but correcting us, yet we cannot bear his anger toward us. This cauſed the Prophet to cry out (Jer. 10. 24.) Correct me, O Lord, but not in thine anger. The words are not a Prayer for correction (I know no warrant for that) but a ſubmiſſion to it; as if he had ſaid, Lord, I am willing to bear thy correction, but I cannot (and who can?) bear thine anger. The Church complains (Pſal. 90. 7.) We are conſumed by thine anger, and by thy wrath we are troubled. The fatherly anger of God is as a conſuming fire, and we are but as ſtubble before it: What then is the fierceneſs of that anger, which he will powr out upon wicked men for ever? Who knoweth the power of thine anger: (Pſal. 90. 11.) Man cannot underſtand how powerful the anger of God is, much leſs ſtand before the power of his anger. As man cannot comprehend the love of God (Eph. 3. 18, 19.) The Apoſtle exhorts, To know the love of God which paſſeth knowledge, that is, to know ſo much of it as is knowable (the love of God is paſt the knowledge, not only of Nature, but of Grace, becauſe it is infinite) So we ſhould labour to know the anger of God, which paſſeth knowledge, that is, to know it ſo far as it is knowable. The anger of God cannot be fully known, becauſe it hath an infiniteneſs in it, as well as his love. And as the one ſhall never be fully known, but by enjoying it; ſo neither can the other, but by feeling it. Upon this conſideration, the Lord makes that gracious promiſe to his people (Iſa. 57. 10.) I will not contend for ever, neither will I be alwayes wrath, for the ſpirit ſhould fail before me, and the ſouls which I have made. But is not the ſpirit or ſoul of man of an everlaſting make? And ſhall not the damned endure the contendings of Gods wrath for ever, and not fail? The ſubſtance of the ſoul cannot fail, and the ſpirit is incorruptible: The ſpirit is full of moral corruption, but it is not ſubject to natural corruption, or the corruption of its nature. How glad would the damned be if their ſpirits might fail, and their ſouls return to nothing? The failing of the ſpirit under the wrath of God, is the failing of its hope and courage. Thus the ſpirit ſinks, and the immortal ſoul dies away under the ſenſe and weight of Gods diſpleaſure.

But what if the Lord ſhould take away his rod, and change his terrors into ſmiles? what will Job do then? when this is granted, ſee what he will do.

Verſe 35. Then would I ſpeak, and not fear him; but it is not ſo with me.

Καὶ οὐ μὴ φοβηθῶ. ἀλλὰ λαλήσω. Sept.

But is this the uſe which Job would make of the mercy he begs? Doth he entreat the Lord to take his terrifying fear away from him, and then reſolve not to fear him at all? Whoſe voyce is this? Is this the voyce of Job, I will ſpeak and not fear him? Job's character in the firſt Chapter was, A man fearing God; and dares he now ſay, I will ſpeak and not fear him? As the fear of God ought to be the ſeaſoning of all our works and actions, ſo it ought to be the ſeaſoning of all our words and ſpeeches: why then doth he ſay, I will ſpeak and not fear him?

To clear this, I anſwer, Fear may be taken two wayes: Either for the grace of fear, or for the perturbation of fear. When Job ſaith, I would ſpeak and not fear him, his meaning is not to lay down that fear of God, which is a bridle to the ſoul, keeping it from ſin, or that reverential affection which fits us for, and ſhould act us in every holy duty we perform to God: When Job prayed to be free from the fear of God, he reſolved thus to fear God. 'Tis only the perturbation of fear, diſtracting fear, not ſanctifying, humbling fear, which Job would lay aſide, when God ſhould pleaſe to withdraw his terrifying fear. And ſo his mind is plainly this; If the Lord will be intreated to remit the extremity of my affliction, and remove thoſe terrors wherewith I am affrighted, then I would ſpeak boldly and chearfully to him, I would ſet out the truth of my caſe, and declare the innocency of my perſon. Vehement paſſions hinder my reaſon; 'tis uneaſie to ſpeak, till I am eaſed of my pains: I cannot tell how it is with me, ſo long as it is thus with me. Hence obſerve, Qui in judicio conſternatur non poteſt rectè agere cauſam ſuã, ſeq; ita ut oportet defendere ac tueri, terror enim impedimento eſt ei. Pined.

That, Extremity of fear is an interruption to ſpeech.

While Senſe is much troubled, Reaſon cannot act much. When Ephraim ſpake trembling, he exalted himſelf in Iſrael, (Hoſ. 13. 1.) There, to ſpeak trembling, is, to ſpeak humbly. Our words to God ſhould be accompanied with low thoughts of our ſelves. Ephraim's trembling is oppoſed to pride and hardneſs of heart. They who thus tremble at the Word of God, are fitteſt to ſpeak to God: yet exceſſive trembling hinders us in ſpeaking. And until the Lord quiets and compoſes our hearts by a word from heaven, till he ſpeak to our diſtempered minds, as once to the raging ſea, Be quiet and ſtill; we cannot utter our hearts, or declare our minds unto him. When God ſends a gracious meſſage to poor ſinners, and invites them to a conference, as he did his ancient people (Iſa. 1. 18.) Come, let us reaſon together: then they come boldly to the Throne of Grace, notwithſtanding their crimſon and ſcarlet ſins. Then they are not afraid to ſpeak, they may ſpeak and not fear him.

But (ſaith Job) it is not ſo with me.

There is much diverſity of opinion about theſe words. Mr. Broughton tranſlates, I am not ſo with my ſelf; and gives this Note upon it, I am not ſuch with my ſelf as Gods ſcourge ſeemeth to make me, or ſuch as your words would make me. The Septuagint renders it, I am not ſo conſcious to my ſelf, or I am not ſo ſelf-guilty. The Hebrew word for word runs thus, For not ſo I with my ſelf. Some difference ariſes from the firſt Particle; we read [But] moſt [For] the original is rather cauſal then exceptive; I would ſpeak and not fear him, for it is not ſo with me.

Quia non ſic ego mecũ. οὐ γὰρ οὕτω συνεπίσταμαι Non enim ſic conſcius ſum.

But the word which cauſes the greateſt difference, is, that which we tranſlate [So] It is not ſo with me. The Hebrew is Chen, and that hath two principal ſignifications. It ſignifies ſometimes right or juſt, and is applied both to perſons and to things.

Particula Chen propter variam quam habet ſignificationem, variis quoque interpretationibus anſam præbet, eſt enim vox æquivoca, plura ſignificans. Bol.

Firſt, Unto things, Jer. 8. 6. The Lord hearkened and heard, and there was no man that ſpake (Chen) aright, or things which were right. Jer. 23. 10. The word is oppoſed to evil; Their courſe is evil, and their force is not right, that is, the force, might or power which they have, is not ſet upon or employed about that which is right, but wholly bent to do wrong; or they commit evil with all their might.

Secondly, The word [Chen] is applied unto perſons; noting a man that is upright-hearted, faithful and honeſt, both in conſcience and converſation. When Joſeph's brethren (Gen. 42. 11, 19, 31.) pleaded for themſelves, they ſay unto him, We are (Chenim) right men, we are no ſpies. We are not come to find out the weakneſs of the Land, but to get a ſupply of our own wants. Joſeph ſaid, Ye are ſpies, ye come to circumvent us, to put tricks upon us, to work your own ends, by diſcovering what we are; No, ſay they, pray, Sir, do not miſunderſtand us, we are (Chenim) honeſt, right-hearted, plain-meaning men.

Qui bonam habet συνείδησιν, eſt (כן) tectus apud ſeipſũ: teſtatur igitur ſe bonam habere conſcientiam & inde παῤῥησίαν apud Deum, ſi non pro jure ſuo agere, vel gratia uti velit. Coc.

Secondly, The word is uſed adverbially; It is not ſo with me, that is, It is not ſo as you imagine. In which ſence you find it, Gen. 1. 7. The Lord ſaid, Let there be light, and it was (Chen) ſo; as the Lord commanded, ſo it was, Eccl. 8. 10. I ſaw the wicked buried who had come and gone from the place of the holy, and they were ſtrangers in the City where they had done ſo.

Upon both theſe conſiderations of the word, different interpretations of the whole are grounded.

Firſt, Taking the word to note an upright-hearted man, Job is conceived to ſpeak interrogatively, as if he put this Queſtion, For am I not right in my ſelf? As if he had ſaid, If you think it too much boldneſs that I have ſaid, I would ſpeak unto God, and not fear him; Am not I right in my ſelf? Am not I ſound and true at heart? Thus he ſeems to allude unto that teſtimony which God gave of him at the firſt verſe of this Book, a man perfect and upright; As if he had ſaid, I am no Turn-coat or Apoſtate, I am as I was, and I doubt not but I ſhall be what I am, ſtill perfect before God, and upright with men. And if ſo, why may not I have boldneſs to come unto God, and ſpeak freely with him? They who are ſincere with God, may have great boldneſs in coming unto God. Uprightneſs hath boldneſs with men, and uprightneſs hath boldneſs towards God; though no uprightneſs or righteouſneſs in man can give him boldneſs in himſelf, yet it may give him boldneſs in another. He may be aſſured, that though he cannot be accepted for his righteouſneſs, yet being upright, he ſhall be accepted.

Secondly, Others read it negatively; I would ſpeak and not fear him, for I am not right in, or with my ſelf. And ſo the ſence may be made out thus, I have not gone about to juſtifie my ſelf all this while, I have not ſtood upon my own righteouſneſs pleading with God; if my righteouſneſs were in my ſelf, then I might fear to ſpeak with God, though his fear ſhould not terrifie me, and though he ſhould take away his rod from me; but I have a better bottom then my own, I am not right in my ſelf, I am right only in the free grace of God, and in the righteouſneſs of my Redeemer. According to this expoſition, he returneth to his firſt propoſition, laid down in the ſecond verſe of this Chapter; How ſhould man be juſt or righteous with God? I am not right in my ſelf. As I ſaid in the beginning of my anſwer, Man is not righteous; ſo I now conclude in my own particular caſe, I am not righteous in my ſelf; and being righteous in another, if God would but give me a little reſpite from theſe ſorrows, I would ſpeak, and not be afraid. This teaches us, > Firſt, That, The confidence and the holy boldneſs which the Saints have in coming unto God, is grounded upon the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, not upon any worthineſs in themſelves.

> Secondly obſerve, He that is moſt upright in heart, is moſt forward to acknowledge, moſt conſtant in acknowledging his own unrighteouſneſs.

They who are moſt proud, are moſt empty. And they who have leaſt, uſually ſpeak with the moſt. Sincerity rates it ſelf low; I am not right, that is, righteous, ſaith upright Job.

Thirdly (ſay others) I am not right in my ſelf, that is, I am at preſent uncompoſed and unſetled in my own ſpirit: As if Job had ſaid, I deſire that the Lord would remove his fear, and mitigate my afflictions, that I might ſpeak with him, and not fear; for as yet I am not right in my ſelf, my ſpirit is ſo overwhelmed, and my thoughts are ſo troubled within me, that I have not the free uſe of my own underſtanding, nor can my Reaſon do its office, much leſs my Grace. I am ſcarce in my right mind, but rather as a man diſtracted (ſo was Heman) with the terrors of the Lord; I know not how to manage Faith under ſuch fears, the Majeſty and dreadfulneſs of God oppreſs my ſpirit; as I am, I am not my ſelf. The Vulgar gives this interpretation inſtead of a tranſlation; For I cannot anſwer while I am afraid. Hence note, Quia non ſic ſum apud me; ut nunc ſum, ſc. in hac afflictione ut me nunc tractat & exagitat Deus, ſum velut extra me, animi impos. Merc. Neque enim metuens poſſum reſpondere. Vulg.

> A godly man in ſore temptations, may for a while appear leſs then a man.

Fears hinder him from ſhewing the beſt of his natural ſelf, much more any thing of his ſpiritual ſelf.

Further, note two things, experienced by many of the Saints in the day of their diſtreſs.

> Firſt, A godly man under greateſt afflictions, keeps to the opinion of his own integrity, yet builds his comfort upon the free Grace of God.

He can, according to the firſt interpretation of theſe words, challenge all with this Queſtion, Am I not right in my ſelf? Is there not integrity in my ſpirit? and according to the ſecond, he is ready to make this negative confeſſion, I am not right in my ſelf, I ſtand not upon my own integrity.

> Secondly, The Saints in great afflictions, are often ſo overwhelmed with the Majeſty of God, that they are not able to expreſs their intereſt in God, much leſs make out the comforts of that intereſt.

The former of theſe ariſes from that ſeed of holineſs and ſtock of Grace abiding in them. The other ariſeth from the natural weakneſs of fleſh and blood, in which they abide, and from the moral corruption of nature abiding in them.

Thus we ſee how the ſence of the Text riſes, as the word [Chen] is underſtood nominally, for right or juſt. We tranſlate it adverbially, But it is not ſo with me; or, For it is not ſo with me. This reading bears a threefold interpretation.

Firſt, In conſtruction with the former words, thus: Let him take away his rod, &c. then will I ſpeak and not fear him; for it is not ſo with me, that is, I am not ſo fearful, or of ſo low a ſpirit, I am not ſuch a ſtranger, or of ſo little acquaintance with God, that I ſhould not know how to ſpeak unto him, or that I ſhould be afraid to ſpeak to him. If the Lord would but hide that brightneſs of his own glory, which dazles me, and eaſe me of my own pains, which diſtract me, I ſhould ſure enough ſpeak unto him, and declare my cauſe.

But ſecondly, We rather refer it to the falſe and unkind opinion of his friends, who judged him a wicked man, or an hypocrite, which he here denies; It is not ſo with me: As if he had ſaid, If the Lord would be pleaſed to grant what I have petitioned, I would ſpeak unto him without fear or doubt of being heard; for it is not ſo with me, namely, as you have ſuſpected and imagined all this while, or as you think it is. I am not the man you take, or rather miſtake me to be; if I were, then though the Lord ſhould take all his afflictions from me, and withdraw his terrors, yet I ſhould be afraid to ſpeak unto him, yea, I ſhould be afraid to pray unto him: every prayer (were I wicked) would be a praying down judgment upon my ſelf: But ſeeing I can boldly affirm, my Conſcience alſo bearing me witneſs, that though I ſin, yet I love not to ſin, that though I am weak, yet I am not wicked, as ye have charged me; my heart being thus clear before God, I cannot fear to open my mouth, and report my cauſe before God.

Non ſic impius ego apud me. Pag. Non ſum talis qualem me putatis. Vatabl. Merc.

Hence obſerve (which hath been offered from other paſſages in this book, and therefore I ſhall only obſerve it,)

> That, A godly man ſtandeth to, and knoweth his own integrity in the midſt of all the clamors and ſlanders, the miſapprehenſions or aſperſions of friends or enemies.

Whoſoever loads and charges him with ſtudied or approved hypocriſie, he will (and he ought to) unload and diſcharge himſelf (at leaſt) with Job's plain denial; you ſuſpect me thus, but I am ſure it is not ſo with me.

Thirdly, The words may bear this meaning, I have ſought and earneſtly intreated the Lord to abate my afflictions, and to remove his terrors; But it is not ſo with me: Alas, I do not find that the Lord hath done any of theſe things for me. His rod is ſtill upon my back, and his terrors ſtand as thick about my ſoul as ever: was ever poor man in ſuch a plight as I? 'Tis not (alas) with me as I have prayed, or as I would have it. The rod ſmarts, and terrors amaze me ſtill. Hence note,

> That, A godly man may pray in affliction, and not preſently be relieved in or from his affliction.

Many a ſoul can ſay, It is ſo with me as I have prayed, I have the wiſhes and deſires of my ſoul; yet many (and I believe many more then can) cannot ſay ſo. The Lord lets precious prayers lie unanſwered to our ſenſe. We may pray long before we find it ſo with us as we have prayed, and yet thoſe prayers are not loſt, but laid up; not buried, but ſown. And it becomes us to have patience till the harveſt, though it be a late one.

Laſtly, There is an opinion which gives this verſe connection with the firſt of the next Chapter. As if Job had thus reſolved, upon the Lords not anſwering his petition, Had the Lord condeſcended to take away his rod, and remove his terror, as I requeſted, then I had ſomewhat to ſay, and I would

Quia non ita eſt (ſc. quia à me terrorem ſuum non eximit) ego mecum, ſc. loquar mecum, ipſe querar & omnem acerbitatem animi effundā apud me, ut facit in ſequenti capite.

would have ſpoken it unto him, but becauſe it is not ſo, or becauſe I am not anſwered, therefore I with my ſelf (the word [Speak] is not in the Text: but ſuch ſupplies of a word are frequent, not only in the Hebrew, but alſo in other languages) Seeing I have not liberty to ſpeak to the Lord, I will pour my complaint into mine own boſom, and commune with my own heart. He purſues this tacite reſolution in Chap. 10. which begins thus, My ſoul is weary of my life, I will leave my complaint upon my ſelf.

CHAP. X. Verſ. 1.

My ſoul is weary of my life, I will leave my complaint upon my ſelf, I will ſpeak in the bitterneſs of my ſoul.

Afflicti ſæpe ſe exonerari putant, ſi laxis habenis de ſuo dolore querantur & ſuas enumerent calamitates uberrima oratione. Merc.

Argumentis utitur à natura Dei & ante acceptis ipſius beneficiis, quibus mala hæc quæ immiſit Deus magnopere repugnare videantur: Merl.

Vehemens quidem partibus omnibus & gravis eſt querimonia, ſed modeſta, ſi unum illud optatum exceperis. ver. 8, 19. Merc.

IOB having in the former Chapter juſtified God in afflicting him, and maintained his own integrity, notwithſtanding thoſe afflictions, now returneth to that work, about which he had been too buſie before; yet that, wherein it ſeems he only found (as the caſe ſtood with him) ſome little eaſe and refreſhing; The breathing out of his afflicted ſpirit in ſad complainings; He reſumes his former lamentation, and renews afreſh what he had been more then large enough in, at Chap. 3, 6, 7. of this Book. Here, as there, he ſhews how ill it was with him, and what cauſe he had to be in heavineſs, under the preſſure of ſo many evils.

And here, more then there, he remonſtrates that he conceived himſelf more hardly dealt with, then ſtood not only with the goodneſs of God in his nature, but with that goodneſs which he had formerly acted both towards others and himſelf: This encouraged him about the cloſe of the Chapter (verſ. 20, & 22.) to petition again, that he might have a little refreſhing before he lay down in his grave: and that God would (after theſe ſtorms) return him ſome of thoſe fair dayes he had enjoyed, before he returned to the earth, and ſhould be ſeen no more.

His complaint is very rhetorical and high, yet with an allay or mixture of modeſty. Indeed his ſpirit brake out, and paſſion got head, at verſ. 18, 19. where he expoſtulates with God, in the language of Chap. 3. Wherefore haſt thou brought me forth out of the womb? &c. But abating that exceſs of his tongue and ſpirit, his complaints are knit up with ſolid arguments, and his Queries put the point reſolutely, yet humbly, home to God himſelf: that he would be pleaſed to ſhew the reaſon of his preſent dealings, and why he varied ſo much from what he had done in former times.

The firſt verſe gives us a general ground of this and of all his ſorrowful complaints; the weariſomneſs of his life.

My ſoul is weary of my life, I will leave my complaint upon my ſelf.

The Argument may be formed thus,

He hath reaſon to complain of his afflictions, whoſe afflictions are ſo heavy upon him, and ſo bitter, that he hath reaſon to be weary of his very life.

But thus my caſe ſtands, my afflictions are ſo bitter to, and heavy upon me, that I am weary of my life.

Therefore I have reaſon to complain.

The aſſumption of this Syllogiſm is contained in the firſt words of the verſe, My ſoul is weary of my life. And the concluſion, in the latter; Therefore I will leave my complaint upon my ſelf; I will ſpeak in the bitterneſs of my ſoul.

My ſoul is weary of my life.] Life and ſoul are often in Scripture put promiſcuouſly for the ſame, but here they differ. The ſoul may be taken two wayes, Firſt, Strictly, as it is oppoſed to the body.

Secondly, In a more large ſence (by a Synechdoche of the part for the whole) for the whole man conſiſting of body and ſoul: If ſo here, then the meaning of Job in ſaying [My ſoul is weary of my life] is no more then this, I (Job) am weary of my life; that is, of the marriage or union of my ſoul and body, O that this band (which I (though moſt are grieved at the weakneſs of theirs) find too ſtrong) were broken, or a bill of divorce granted for their ſeperation. Life is the bond or tie by which ſoul and body ſubſiſt together: And when that bond is broken or cut aſunder by the ſtroke of death, the body goes to the grave, and the ſoul or ſpirit returns to God who gave it.

Again, When Job ſaith, My ſoul is weary of my life. Life may be taken either for the act of life, and ſo the ſence is, I am weary of living; or it may be taken for the manner of life, and ſo the ſence is, I am weary of that courſe or ſtate of life wherein I am. Life is often put (not ſtrictly for the act of living, but) for the ſtate or condition in which a man lives, or with which life is cloathed; The circumſtances and concomitants of life are called life. Thus in our common ſpeech, when a man is in miſery, another ſaith, I would not have his life, or, what a life hath he? The Apoſtle's character of all natural men, is, that they are alienated from the life of God (Epheſ. 4. 18.) that is, they cannot endure to live ſuch a life as God lives, or as he commands them to live; they cannot endure to be holy, as he is holy, or holy, as he calls them to be holy, in all manner of converſation. Thus Job was alienated from his own life; I (ſaith he) am weary of my life; that is, of a life thus imbittered, thus afflicted.

My ſoul is weary.] The word which we tranſlate [weary] varies the underſtending of this ſentence. It ſignifies properly to be weakned, as alſo to be melted or molten with heat; becauſe a man that is extreamly heated or melted by heat, is weakned, his ſpirits and ſtrength being drawn forth and diſſipated. But it is moſt commonly applied to that wearineſs which ariſes from the diſpleaſedneſs or irkſomneſs of our minds. All burdens upon the body are light, compared with thoſe which reach the ſoul. Three things weary and load the ſoul.

Firſt, The filth and guilt of our own ſins. I will ſprinkle you (ſaith the Lord, Ezek. 36. 31.) with clean water, &c. What's the effect of this? It follows, Then ſhall you remember your own evil wayes, and loath, or be weary, of your ſelves (it is this word) becauſe of all your abominations. As if the Lord had ſaid, before I change your hearts, ye ſin, and are not wearied of your ſins; nay, ye make a ſport of, and dally with them: But when I ſhall work that great change upon your hearts, your opinion and apprehenſions of ſin will change too: nothing will be ſo bitter or burdenſom, ſo unpleaſant or weariſom to your ſouls as ſin. Fools make a mock of ſin; they who are truly wiſe, mourn and groan under the ſenſe and weight of it.

Secondly, The unſuitableneſs and perverſeneſs of other mens manners or diſpoſitions weary the ſoul. The righteous ſoul of Lot was vexed from day to day, in ſeeing and hearing the unrighteous deeds of the debauched Sodomites (2 Pet. 2. 8.) The ſoul of God is ſaid to be wearied by ſuch courſes of the ſons of men (Pſal. 95. 10.) Fourty years long was I grieved, or wearied, with that generation. The Lord (as we may ſpeak with reverence) was even weary of his life, he had ſuch a troubleſom people to deal with; they grieved him at the heart (as the old world did, Gen. 6. 6.) and were a heavy burden to his Spirit. That's the Apoſtle's language, in his deſcription of that peoples frowardneſs, and of Gods patience towards them (Act. 13. 18.) He ſuffered their manners fourty years in the wilderneſs; which ſome ſome render, He bare them as a burthen; the continual murmurings and unbelief of that people were to the Lord (who is yet above all paſſion) as a heivy weight is to a man, or as the peeviſhneſs and unquietneſs of a ſucking child is to the nurſe, as our Tranſlators conceive the Greek word ſhould rather be. Thus alſo he reproves the ſame people by the Prophet (*Iſa.*43.24.) Thou haſt wearied me with thine iniquities. And Chriſt (though by another word) ſpeaks the ſame thing of his own Diſciples (Mark 9.19. when the man poſſeſt with an unclean ſpirit being brought to them, they could not caſt him out) How long ſhall I be with you? How long ſhall I ſuffer you? I am wearied with your unbelief, O ye of little faith. The Diſciples were ſtill ſo ſlow of heart, and came ſo ſhort of a Goſpel-ſpirit, that Chriſt profeſſeth, He was burthened even with them; How long ſhall I ſuffer you? The ill manners of all, are a wearineſs to the good, but theirs moſt who are neareſt to them. Which is alſo the reaſon, why a godly man is wearied moſt of all with the corruption of his own heart, for that is neareſt to him of all.

ἀνέχομαι Tolero, ἀνέχεσθαι autem dicuntur tranſlatitiè qui volentes onus ſubeunt, & ſub eo perdurat.

Now, as our ſins, and the ill manners of others weary the ſoul: ſo

Thirdly, The pains and troubles which are upon the body often cauſe ſuch grief of mind, as is an extream wearineſs to the ſoul: That's the meaning of this Text [My ſoul is weary of my life] That is, my life is filled with ſuch outward troubles, as fill my inward man with trouble, and weary my very ſoul.

Secondly, The word is tranſlated by divers of the learned Rabbies, To cut, yea to cut off, as with a ſword, or any other edged inſtrument: Theſe render Job's mind thus, My ſoul is cut off in me, or My ſoul is cut off from my life; As if he had ſaid, My dayes are at an end, I am ready to die, the threed of my life is cut, I am but a dead man. While life continues, ſoul and body are as it were one piece, but death divides them; or the recourſe of night and day, runs the threed of time through our lives, till our web (longer or ſhorter) be finiſhed, and then the threed is cut. To which ſimilitude Hezekiah alludes in his mourning death-bed ſong, as he ſuppoſed (Iſa. 38. 10, 12.) I ſaid in the cutting off of my dayes, &c. Mine age is removed from me, as a ſhepherds tent, I have cut off like a Weaver my life, he will cut me off with pining ſickneſs or from the thrum, which being woond about the beam, the Weaver having finiſhed his work, cuts the web off from it. The ſame word in the Hebrew ſignifies pining ſickneſs, and a thrum, becauſe of the thinneſs and weakneſs of it. My life (ſaith Hezekiah) is ſpent, I am at the very laſt caſt, the yarn of time is all wrought off, therefore my life is ready to be cut off. I am a borderer upon death, and to be numbred among the dead, rather then among the living. Such a ſence this reading gives the Text of Job, My ſoul is cut off from my life.

Denotat diſplicentiam qua homo interius tabeſcit præ doloris ſenſu. Propriè ſignificat βδέλυγμα, i.e. rem putidã & quæ nauſeam parit averſari.

Thirdly, The word ſignifies a reluctance or diſplicency of ſpirit, ariſing from the ſight and ſenſe of that which is very loathſom, filthy, and of an evil ſavour. It anſwers the Greek word rendered Abomination (Matth. 24. 15.) The abomination of deſolation, he means the Romans, who being Idolaters, their worſhip was abominable; and who being Lords of the world, their power was formidable, and laid all Countries waſte and deſolate, which oppoſed them, or which they had a mind to oppoſe. And ſo when Job ſaith, My ſoul is weary of my life; his meaning is repreſented thus, My ſoul refuſes to inhabit, or to act ſo filthy a body as mine; My ſoul loaths to dwell, or ſtay any longer in this naſty lodging. As David (*Pſal.*120.5.) ſpeaks of his wearineſs in dwelling amongſt wicked men, becauſe of their moral filthineſs, or the pollution of their minds and wayes. Wo is me that I ſojourn in Meſhec; that I dwell in the tents of Kedar; So Job ſeems to ſpeak, in reference to the natural pollution and filthineſs of his own body. Wo is me that I ſojourn in ſuch a diſeaſed body, and dwell (which yet will not die) in ſuch a dying carcaſe. The noble tenant, my ſoul, is weary of ſtaying in ſuch a ſtinking and filthy habitation, and I perceive (for I have moved him hitherto in vain) the great Land-lord will neither repair it, nor as yet let it fall. As then a man, who lives in an ill or incommodious houſe, ſaith, I am weary of dwelling in it; or as a man that hath a filthy garment, ſaith, I am weary of wearing it: So ſaith Job here, My ſoul is weary of my life, were I well rid of it, I ſhould be well.

Fourthly, Many of the Jewiſh Doctors tell us, that the moſt ſtrict and proper ſignification of this word, is, To contend or ſtrive, to chide or wrangle (we may give it in that homely language.) As if the meaning of Job were, My ſoul doth even contend, chide and wrangle with my life; my ſoul conteſts and diſputes the matter with my life, why it will not end, that I may get out from this body of mine, and go beyond the reach of theſe afflictions. The 95. Pſalm, verſ. 10. is ſo tranſlated, Fourty years long did I contend, chide or conteſt angerly with that generation: The Lord did often chide with the people of Iſrael, and they uſed to chide with Moſes; whence one place was called Meribah; yea, through their unbelief they did chide with God himſelf, and (there is no reaſon duſt and aſhes ſhould have the laſt word) God alſo gave them their chidings, and told them plainly their own, more then once. Thus the ſoul of Job chid his life; what's the reaſon that I am held in this condition, why wilt thou not be gone that I may be at reſt? Carnal men chide with their lives for haſtening ſo faſt away, becauſe they know of no reſt, or have hope of none hereafter. A godly man may be brought to chide with his life for making no more haſte away, becauſe he finds none, or ſo little reſt here. Elihu (Chap. 33. 19.) deſcribing the method in which God uſes to humble proud man, adds, He is chaſtened alſo with pain upon his bed, and the multitude of his bones with ſtrong pains; He is chaſtened, the word ſignifies alſo reproving or convincing by arguments, and that in a quick and paſſionate, as well as in a rational and ſolid way. Now, while afflictions chidingly ſmite us, we are apt to chide them, and give them at leaſt a word for a blow. Job did not only chide with his afflictions, but with his life, becauſe it would not depart and be gone, being ſo unkindly uſed and imbittered by afflictions. His ſoul did even chide his life out a doors.

Crudelis effecta eſt anima mea. Chald. Homo qui ſibi-ipſi mortem precatur adverſum ſe ſævire videtur.

The Chaldee paraphraſt gives the meaning yet higher, My ſoul is grown cruel againſt my life; As if he had ſaid, I am ſo exceedingly afflicted and pained, that my ſoul begins to rage againſt my life, I can hardly hold my own hands off from my life, and I would not have God hold his. Let not my life be ſpared; how glad ſhould I be to ſee it poured out? Anguiſh is come upon me (as the Amalakites reports of Saul, 2 Sam. 1. 9.) becauſe my life is whole in me. O that God would ſtand upon me and ſlay me; my ſoul is hardned againſt my life (like the Oſtrich againſt her young ones, Chap. 39. 16.) as if it were not mine. Let me die, and that ſhall be a favour, ſmite me, and that will be to me as a precious ointment, though it break my head, and let out my troubled ſpirits. Then we are cruel to our lives, when we care not what's done to us, or how we are uſed, ſo we may be rid of our lives.

But (to paſs this) our tranſlation is clear and ſignificant, [My ſoul is weary of my life.] I am ſo weary of the pains wherein I live, that I had rather my life ſhould end, then my pains ſhould continue.

Job complained in Chap. 3. he complained at Chap. 6, 7. he erred twice, yea, thrice upon this point before, yet now we hear him complaining, as if he had not complained at all. This was Job's infirmity: though ſomewhat hath, and more may be ſaid to take off thoſe aſperſions which his friends caſt upon him for complaining, yet no doubt it was his ſin to complain; eſpecially to break out ſo often, and in ſuch bitter complainings.

Hence obſerve, A godly man may (poſſibly) fall often into the ſame ſin.

Where grace taketh hold of the heart, it breaks the cuſtom and ſpoils the trade of ſin; yet a godly man may ſin over the ſame ſin, and renew the ſame tranſgreſſion. The trade of ſin is ſpoiled, when the ſoul leaves deviſing, plotting, contriving ſin, which Acts denominate a worker of iniquity. The cuſtom of ſin is broken, when though the ſame ſin be committed again, yet the ſoul puts in it's plea and complaint againſt it. 'Tis here as in civil things, if we make our challenge or demand, the cuſtom is gone, though the acts be renewed by the power and prevalency of the oppoſite party; yet, when I ſay a godly man may fall into ſin often, I mean not of groſs and ſcandalous ſins; God doth not let his people fall often into the mire. Noah was not often drunk, nor did David commit adultery often, or more then once. The grace of God which bringeth ſalvation, teacheth us to deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts. And if a godly man fall often into any the leaſt ſin, yet he lies not in ſin, becauſe he renews repentance, as often as he ſins, and riſes as often as he falls: he reſolves (through the ſtrength of Chriſt) never to ſin; when through his own weakneſs, and the violence of temptation, he is ſoon after over-taken or ſurpriz'd with ſin. David profeſſeth (Pſal. 119. 30.) I have choſen the way of truth: His election was Truth; truth of heart, which is oppoſed to hypocriſie; truth of judgment, which is oppoſed to error; and truth of ſpeech, which is oppoſed to lying; yet he ſlipt with his tongue, more then once; and told an untruth, more then one. He cannot be acquitted from this failing, when he anſwered Abimelech the Prieſt, The King hath commanded me a buſineſs, and hath ſaid unto me, Let not any man know any thing of the buſineſs whereabout I ſend thee, and what I have commanded thee; and I have appointed my ſervants to ſuch a place (1 Sam. 21. 2.) He again faulters with his tongue, and ſpeaks either falſly or doubtfully, when the King of the Philiſtines asked him, Whether have ye made a rode to day? And David ſaid, againſt the South of Judah, &c. (1 Sam. 27. 10.) whenas his invaſion was againſt the Geſhurites, and the Gezrites, and the Amalekites (verſ. 8.) He that overcame the Bear, the Lion, and Goliah the Giant, is overcome by fear, and the mother of it, unbelief. David's example ſhould be no encouragement, ſhall be no excuſe to thoſe who willingly fall often into the ſame ſin. A good man is not priviledg'd from doing it, but no man is priviledg'd to do it. Such examples muſt not teach us to ſin, but they teach us how unable we (alone) are to keep our ſelves from ſin: they teach us alſo, what need we have to depend upon, and look up to Chriſt, that we may be kept from ſin: if he leave us but a little unto our ſelves, the fleſh will diſcover much of it ſelf, and we ſhall quickly ſhew what our natures are, though we are renewed by grace. We muſt truſt to the ſupplies, not to the receipts of grace.

Secondly, When Job ſaith, [My ſoul is weary of my life.] We learn,

That, Soul and life in man are two diſtinct things.

For howſoever (as was toucht in explication) the ſoul is often put for the whole man, and ſo the ſence of my ſoul is weary, may be but this, I am weary of my life: yet the Holy Ghoſt would never denominate all man by that, which is not, not a part of man. That's a brutiſh opinion which makes the ſoul nothing, or nothing elſe but life, and this life no more in entity then the life of a beaſt, which vaniſheth, when it dieth. That theſe Opinioniſts tell us, they believe the body ſhall riſe again by the power of God, cannot ſatisfie for this fall, which their opinion gives the ſoul: neither doth the immortality of the ſoul at all contradict (which was threatned for, and is the wages of ſin) the death of the whole man. For death conſiſts not (if we may ſay a privation doth conſiſt) in the annihilation, but in the ſeparation of thoſe parts of man, ſoul and body, which by life are united and kept cloſe together.

Thirdly, When Job ſaith, My ſoul is weary of my life, we learn,

That the life of man may grow to be a burthen to him.

In Chap. 3. Job wiſheth for death; his wiſh was examined there, about the lawfulneſs of it; I ſhall now only examine (a touch about which was given lately) whence this wearineſs of life, cauſing wiſhes to be rid of life, doth ariſe. There is a wearineſs of life incident only, and proper to wicked men; And there is a wearineſs of life, which may grow upon the beſt of men. Take a brief account of the uſual grounds of both.

Firſt, Carnal men are often ſick with diſcontent, and die of a humor: If the Lord will not give them their luſts, they bid him take their lives. Neceſſaries and competencies will not ſatisfie them, they muſt have ſuperfluities; they languiſh, if they have not Quails to their Manna, as Iſrael once deſired and had. Was it any thing but this, which made Ahab go home ſullen and ſad? Sullen ſadneſs is a degree of this wearineſs. Ahab had a Kingdom, and yet he could not live without a vineyard. He that takes away another mans life to obtain what he deſires, thinks his own life ſcarce deſireable, unleſs he may obtain it. There was a ſpice of this diſtemper in Jonah, though a good man, and a Prophet (Jonah 4. 8.) becauſe the Lord did but kill his Gourd, kill me too, ſaith Jonah, He wiſhes himſelf to die, and ſaid (his Gourd being dead) It is better for me to die then to live. It is an exceſs of deſire, when we deſire any outward thing (much more when we deſire things unneceſſary, things not to ſupply our wants, but to ſerve our luſts:) as Rachel did children (who are the beſt and nobleſt of outward things) Give me them, or elſe I die (Gen. 30. 1.)

Secondly, Some wicked men are wearied of their lives by the horror of their conſciences. A Hell within, makes the world without a Hell too. They who have a ſight of eternal death (as the wages of ſin) without the ſight of a remedy may ſoon be weary of a temporal life. As much peace of conſcience and ſoul-joy in believing, makes ſome of the Saints wiſh themſelves out of the body; ſo alſo doth trouble of conſcience, and grief of ſoul make many of the wicked. A man who is not at all weary of committing ſin may be weary of his life, becauſe he hath committed it. And he, who was never troubled that his wickedneſs is an offence againſt God, may feel his wickedneſs extremely offenſive againſt himſelf. To ſuch a ſoul the evil of ſin is ſo great an evil of puniſhment, that he is ready to cry out with Cain, My puniſhment is greater then I can bear. Yea, what his guilty conſcience feared, comes to be the deſire of many under the ſame guilt, That every one that findeth them would ſlay them: And ſome are ſo weary of their lives at the ſight of ſin, that they make away their lives themſelves, hoping to get out of the ſight of ſin. There are ſins which cry to God for vengeance, and ſome cry to the ſinner himſelf for vengeance. This cry was ſo loud and forcible in the ears of Judas, that it cauſed him to go away and hang himſelf. And what made Ahithophel weary of his life, but his wickedneſs? The rejecting of his counſel was not ſo much the reaſon of it, as the ſinfulneſs of his counſel: A good man may be troubled at others, when his good counſel is not accepted, but he grows not unacceptable to himſelf; nay, he is well-pleaſed that he hath given honeſt counſel, though none will take it, though all are diſpleaſed at it. But they who aim not at the pleaſing of God in what they do, think themſelves undone (and dye they will) if they pleaſe not men.

Thirdly, Inordinate cares for the things of this life, make others weary of their lives. He that cannot caſt his care upon God, may ſoon be caſt down himſelf. Chriſt (Luke 21. 34.) cautions his Diſciples, Take heed leſt your hearts be over-charged with the cares of this life. That which Chriſt would prevent in the Saints, falls often upon carnal men, their hearts are over-charged with cares; cares are compared to a burden, and they are compared to thorns, they do not only preſs, but vex and wound: Their weight preſſes ſome to death, their ſharpneſs wounds others to death: and not a few would go out of the world, becauſe they cannot get ſo much of it, as they would.

Theſe things (among others) make wicked men weary of their lives. There are other things which make godly men weary of their lives; ſuch are theſe, Firſt, The violence of Satans, and the worlds temptations. The ſoul would gladly be rid of the body, that it might be beyond the reach and aſſaults of the Devil, and his aſſiſtants. There's a Serpent every where, but in the heavenly Paradiſe. Only they complain not of temptation, who are willing ſlaves to the tempter. The Apoſtle (1 Cor. 10. 13.) aſſures the Corinthians, There hath no temptation taken you, but ſuch as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not ſuffer you to be tempted above what you are able, but will with the temptation alſo make a way to eſcape, that ye may be able to bear it. As if he had ſaid, Temptations are ſore burdens, and although yours hitherto have been but ordinary temptations, ſuch as uſually befall the Saints; though yours be moderate afflictions, and of a common ſtature, ſuch as in the eye of reaſon any man may deal with by a common aſſiſtance of grace; yet there are temptations, which (if God, the faithful God ſhould not come in with greater aſſiſtances then uſual) you are not able to bear. They who wreſtle with more then fleſh and blood, alwayes need more then the ſtrength of fleſh and blood to help them in their wreſtlings.

wreſtlings. And becauſe they are often aſſaulted with greater ſtrength, therefore they are aſſiſted with greater ſtrength. For if God do either withdraw his help from the Saints, or leave them to wreſtle with Satan alone, and to fight ſingle with his Armies, or if he do not proportion the aid he ſends to the temptations he permits, they are ſadly overcharged though they can never be totally overcome; and 'tis poſſible to grow weary of the battel, though we are aſſured of the victory. It is the honour of the Saints to conquer when they are tempted; but it is their happineſs to be above or without temptation. How many poor ſouls put up Bills of complaint, and beg prayers againſt temptations. Paul prayed thrice, that is, often and much, when the meſſengers of Satan buffeted him; whether his were an inward or an outward temptation, is doubted; but without doubt that temptation made his life burdenſome to him, till he received that anſwer from God, My Grace is ſufficient for thee.

Secondly, The Saints are wearied with the weight of their ſinful hearts. Inward corruption burdens more then outward temptation; and were it not for corruption within, temptation without could not be very burdenſome. The Devil tempted Chriſt, but becauſe he found nothing at all in him, complying with, or ſuitable to his temptations, therefore Chriſt threw them off with eaſe. That enemy without could do us no hurt (he might put us to ſome trouble) if he found no correſpondence within. The traitor in our own bowels opens our ports, and lets in the adverſary. His ſparks could never enflame us, if he found no tinder in us. The baſeneſs and unbelief, the luſts and vanities of our minds are apt to take fire at every injection. A gracious ſoul cannot live here without ſin, and yet can eaſier die then ſin. Paul (Rom. 7. 24.) cries out, O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death, or, from this body of death! That is, from my body which is ſubject to death by reaſon of theſe remains of carnal corruption or from my carnal corruptions, which are the remains of my ſpiritual death, and are worſe to me then any death. All the afflictions of his life, and the pains of his body were but a play, and a kind of ſport, compared with the trouble which this body of death put him to. He rejoyced in tribulation, but he could not but mourn under corruption. Many poor ſouls are ſo vexed with theſe myſtical Canaanites, that their ſpiritual Canaan (the ſtate of Grace) is to them like Egpt, the Land of their captivity. And when they are commanded to rejoyce, they anſwer, if we could not ſin, we could rejoyce; How ſhall we ſing the Lords ſong in a ſtrange Land? O that we might go home!

Thirdly, The Saints grow weary of their lives through the wickedneſs of other mens lives; not only do their own corruptions burden them, but (which ſhews the holineſs of their hearts more) the corruptions of others. The ſinfulneſs and pollutions of the times and places wherein they live, eſpecially of perſons they are related to, makes their lives grievous, and imbitters all their comforts. Rebekah, that good woman, tells her husband Iſaac (Gen. 27. 46.) I am weary of my life becauſe of the Daughters of Heth; for if Jacob take a wife of the daughters of Heth, ſuch as theſe which are of the daughters of the Land, What good ſhall my life do me? The ſweetneſs of my life is gone if this ſon miſcarry, as his Brother hath done before him. The Prophet Jeremy cries out, O that I had in the wilderneſs a lodging place of wayfaring men, that I might leave my people, and go from them: What made him ſo weary of living among them? (and that was but a ſtep on this ſide being weary of his life.) The next words ſhew us; They be all Adulterers, an aſſembly of treacherous men (Jer. 9. 2.) Better be in a waſte wilderneſs among wild beaſts, then in a populous City, among beaſtly men, 'Tis a part of our compleat happineſs in heaven, that we ſhall have no ill neighbours there. They who are evil, can take pleaſure in thoſe who do evil. But the more holineſs any one hath, the more is he burdened with the unholineſs of others. And that's the reaſon why God himſelf is expreſt to be ſo exceedingly burdened with the ſins of men, to be wearied and broken with them, to be laden with them, as a Cart with ſheaves, He is infinitely holy. Grieve not the holy Spirit of God (Eph. 4. 30.) The Spirit is ſo holy that ſin (which is unholineſs) grieves him preſently. And in proportion, look how much any man is more holy then others, by ſo much is he more afflicted with the impurity of others. As the holy Spirit of God, who is all holy, ſo the ſpirits of holy men (who yet have a mixture of ſin) cannot but be afflicted with the ſins of men.

Fourthly, Some of the Saints would part with this life, becauſe they have got ſuch aſſurance and evidence of a better life. When much of eternal life appears to a godly man, he is weary of a temporal life. Natural things are but burdenſome trifles to thoſe who are ſtored with ſpiritual. Chriſt ſaith (Luke 5. 39.) No man having drunk old wine, ſtraightway deſireth new; for he ſaith the old is better: He that taſtes what is better then he enjoyes, is unſatiſfied with all he enjoyes. We can hardly be perſwaded what we have is good, when we ſee better of the ſame kind. How much more hardly is this perſwaſion wrought in us, that earthly things (which differ in kind from heavenly) are any great good, when heavenly things are open before us? When the Diſciples (at the transfiguration) had but a glimpſe of Glory, they ſay, It is good to be here; let us build three Tabernacles. They do not ſpeak comparatively, as if now they had met with ſomewhat better then ever they had before; but poſitively, as if they had never met with any good before. When the Spirit carries the Saints into his Wine-cellar, and gives them a draught of everlaſting conſolations, the wine of worldly comforts will not down; they begin to diſreliſh the dainties and delicacies of the Creature. A true ſight of heaven makes the earth ſcarce worth the looking after, or the living in. Such live, becauſe God will have them live to do him ſervice, not becauſe they deſire to live to ſerve their own ends. Paul was in a great ſtraight betwixt two (Phil. 1. 23.) whether he ſhould depart or abide in the fleſh: but the ſtraight was not in reference to himſelf, he was aſſured dying would be to him but a travelling to Chriſt, and therefore death was to him an eaſie election. His ſtraight was only this, whether he ſhould not abide ſtill in the fleſh, to ſupply the needs of the Church, and forbear Glory a while, that he might prepare others for Glory. The ſame Apoſtle (2 Cor. 5. 4.) ſaith in the firſt verſe, We know that if the earthly houſe of this Tabernacle be diſſolved, we have a building of God, an houſe made without hands, eternal in the heavens. When their Faith was thus upon the wing, ſoaring up to the aſſurance of an houſe made without hands; they grew weary of their ſmoakie cottages preſently: they could not endure to live in thoſe poor Lodges, corruptible bodies, having a view of ſuch glorious Palaces; therefore he adds, In this we groan earneſtly, deſiring to be cloathed upon with our houſe which is from heaven. The word ſignifies groaning, as a man that hath a weighty burden lying upon him, which makes him fetch his wind even from his bowels. The body is the burden, rather then the houſe or the cloathing of the ſoul, when once the ſoul knows it ſhall be cloathed with an houſe which is from heaven. As (I ſaid before) much of hell in this life, makes wicked men weary of this life, ſo alſo doth much of heaven. The Roman Orator tells us, that a young man, who lived in great proſperity, having read Plato about the Immortality of the Soul, was ſo affected, that he threw himſelf violently from a high wall into the Sea, that he might have a proof of that Immortality, by his experience of it. The Goſpel forbids ſuch haſte, and knows no ſuch wayes to happineſs. As Chriſt (not we) hath purchaſed that eſtate; ſo Chriſt muſt lead us (we muſt not thruſt our ſelve) into the poſſeſſion of it: but yet the earneſts, the fore-taſtes and firſt-fruits of heaven, which the Saints find in this life (though they be ſuch as eat the marrow & fatneſs, ſuch as may have the very cream and ſpirits of the Creature to live upon) make them groan often and earneſtly for the next life. This is good, but heaven is better.

Στενάζομεν.

Cic. in Tuſcul. Queſt. de Cleombroto.

Laſtly, Which is the caſe of this Text, The Saints may grow weary of their lives from the outward afflictions and troubles of this life. Sickneſs and pains upon the body, poverty and want in the eſtate, reproaches and unkindneſſes put upon our perſons, with a thouſand evils to which this life is ſubject every day, cauſe many to wiſh and long for an end of their dayes. And though they are ready to ſubmit to the will of God, if he hath appointed to them a longer conflict with theſe evils, yet they cannot but ſhew their willingneſs, yea their gladneſs to part with their lives, that they may part with ſuch troubles accompanying their lives.

And as the afflictions of the body natural, ſo of the body politick, may make them weary of their lives. How many in Germany and Ireland have been ſo wearied with hearing the voyce of the Oppreſſor, that they have wiſhed themſelves in their graves, only to get out of their hearing? And with us, ſince theſe troubles began, have not many been tired with living? Have they not cried after death, and wooed the grave, as being weary of the world? The Prophet (Iſa. 32. 2.) ſpeaks of a weary Land. A man (meaning Chriſt) ſhall be as the ſhadow of a great rock in a weary Land. The Land it ſelf (being inſenſible) could not be weary; but he calls it a weary Land, becauſe the inhabitants living in the Land, were wearied with the troubles and continual vexations which they found there. In theſe caſes the ſoul of a Believer ſtands (like Abraham, when the Angels paſſed by) at the Tent-door of his Body, ready to come forth, looking when God will but call; yea, he cries out that he may be called (in the language of Job) My ſoul is weary of my life.

I will leave my complaint upon my ſelf, I will ſpeak in the bitterneſs of my ſoul.

I will leave, &c.] That is, I will carry my complaint no further, it ſhall trouble none but my ſelf.

The Original ſignifies alſo to ſtrengthen or fortifie (Neh. 3. 8.) They fortified Jeruſalem unto the broad wall; we put in the Margin, They left Jeruſalem to the broad wall: ſo the ſence of Job may be this, My pain does not abate, but encreaſe, why then ſhould I remit or abate my complaint? I will ſtrengthen my complaint as long as my ſorrows are ſtrengthened.

My complaint.] That word hath been explained before; it ſignifies an inward, as well as an outward complaint, and that moſt properly. Some tranſlate it ſo here; I will groan in ſilence with my ſelf. But the Text requires, rather that we interpret it of an external complaint formed up into words. The Septuagint are expreſs, and ſo is Auſtin, I will leave my words upon my ſelf: both interpreting it of a vocal declaration of his mind and meaning.

Permittam mihi muſſitationem. Tygur. Silentio egomet ingemiſcam & Philoſophabor. Polych. Deponam à me querimoniam meam. Jun.

The greateſt difficulty lies in thoſe words [upon my ſelf] One renders, I will leave my complaint off, or lay it aſide from my ſelf. As if Job meant to give over this work of complaining, and to compoſe his heart to quietneſs, how unquiet ſoever his eſtate continued. But his following practice ſeems to confute this interpretation, and to deny any ſuch intention.

Others give this ſence, I will ſpeak at my own peril, and if any danger or inconvenience come of it, I will bear it my ſelf, I will run that venture. Job uſes ſuch language (chap. 13. 13.) Hold your peace, let me alone that I may ſpeak, and let come on me what will. We may gloſs it with that Heroical reſolution of Queen Eſther, (Eſt. 4. 16.) So will I go in unto the King, which is not according to the Law, and if I periſh, I periſh. The Hebrew Prepoſition hath various acceptions.

First (as we) It is tranſlated Upon. Secondly, With. Thirdly, Againſt. Fourthly, Concerning or about.

We may take in any of, or all theſe tranſlations. And from all, the meaning of Job ſeems to riſe thus, I intend not to ſpeak a word againſt God, I will not charge the Almighty with injuſtice, or with rigor, to do which, were higheſt wickedneſs; I purpoſe indeed to complain, but I will complain only upon or with my ſelf, concerning or againſt my ſelf, I will not utter a word againſt the wiſdom of God, or accuſe his Providence; I will not ſhoot an arrow againſt Heaven, or ſend out a murmur againſt the moſt High.

Præpoſitio על frequenter per ſuper, nonnunquam per cum, & aliquando per adverſus redditur. Nihil contra Deum, in me tantum deſæviam. Pin.

There are two wayes of leaving our complaints upon our ſelves.

Firſt, When we let them lie wholly upon our ſelves, and will not go to God for ſtrength or patience to bear them. Who can ſufficiently mourn over them, who leave their complaints in this ſence upon themſelves? It is ſinful and fooliſh to leave our complaints thus upon our ſelves. 'Tis a duty to leave them upon God, and to powr them into the boſom of Chriſt, who can, and who only can either eaſe us of them, or make them eaſie to us; who can, and who only can take off our burdens, or enable us to carry them. The burden of our ordinary cares will break our backs, if left upon our ſelves; how then ſhall we in our own ſtrength ſtand under the burden of extreameſt ſorrows?

Secondly, We leave our complaint upon our ſelves, when we make no excuſes or evaſions, but plainly charge the fault upon our ſelves. Thus we ought to leave all our complaints upon our ſelves. It is ſinful and fooliſh to charge any of them wholly upon the Devil, or at all upon God. An honeſt heart takes them home, and ſaith, God is righteous, but I am a tranſgreſſor; what he hath done, he may do, and he hath done juſtly in all that he hath done. This is the ſence of Job's reſolution, I will leave my complaint upon my ſelf. Hence obſerve, > Whatſoever a godly man ſuffereth, he will not charge God with it, but himſelf.

He is more careful of the honour of God, then of his his own peace; and had rather die, then the glory of God ſhould ſuffer. O Lord (ſaith Daniel, chap. 9. 7.) righteouſneſs belongeth unto thee, but unto us confuſion of face: And (verſ. 14.) The Lord is righteous in all his works which he doth, for we obeyed not his voyce. When the Angel was ſmiting Iſrael with the Plague of Peſtilence, David beſpeaks the Lord in reference to the people, Lo, I have ſinned, and done wickedly; but theſe ſheep what have they done? Let thine hand I pray thee be againſt me, &c. (2 Sam. 24. 17.) I take the blame to my ſelf, Lord, upon me let thy ſtroak be, even upon me, not upon Iſrael: So ſaith the ſoul in reference unto God; upon me be the blame of all the troubles and afflictions which I feel, not upon God; What hath God done? All that he hath done is right, and juſt and good. It is an argument of a holy frame of heart, to be often judging our ſelves, and alwayes acquitting of God, to be often complaining of our ſelves, and to be ever exalting God; to be alwayes thanking him for our comforts, and alwayes ſaying, we may thank our ſelves for our ſorrows. Whatſoever the Lord ſaith or doth concerning us, we ſhould not only ſay with Hezekiah (when a ſad meſſage was brought him, 2 Kings 20. 19.) Good is the word of the Lord; but alſo, good are the works of the Lord. Many men are ready to lay their ſins (much more their ſorrows) upon God. So the Apoſtle repreſents them (Rom. 9. 19.) Thou wilt ſay unto me, why doth he then find fault? Why doth God complain of us? We have more reaſon to complain of, and charge our faults on God. If he hardeneth whom he will, why are we blamed for being hardened? For who hath reſiſted his will? Thus they queſtion God, who hath reſiſted thy will? whoſe lives are nothing elſe but a continued war againſt, and reſiſtance of his will. They who ſtrive moſt to comply with the will of God, complain often of themſelves for reſiſting it. And though they know God hardeneth whom he will, yet they will not leave the hardening of any upon God, as his fault, but as his prerogative. They confeſs it to be as great an act of holineſs in God, to harden ſome men in ſin, as it is to ſoften others by his Grace: Mercy appears in the one, Juſtice appears chiefly in the other, but holineſs equally in both.

I will ſpeak in the bitterneſs of my ſoul.

A bitter ſoul bringeth forth bitter words. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh. If there be abundance of joy in the heart, the mouth will ſpeak joyfully; and if there be abundance of ſorrow in the heart, the mouth ſpeaks ſorrowfully. As when there is abundance of filth in the heart, the mouth ſpeaks filthineſs. We may ſee the Lines and Image of a mans mind drawn upon his words. One man ſpeaks in the anger of his ſoul, and he ſpeaks eagerly; another ſpeaks in the pride of his ſoul, and he ſpeaks proudly: A third ſpeaks in the prophaneſs of his ſoul, and he ſpeaks prophanely. Again, one ſpeaks in the courage of his ſoul, and he ſpeaks couragiouſly. Another ſpeaks in the patience of his ſoul, and he ſpeaks patiently. A third ſpeaks in the faith of his ſoul, and he ſpeaks believingly. There is a nearneſs to this ſence, in that of the ſixtieth Pſalm (ver. 6.) God hath ſpoken in his holineſs: and we are aſſured he cannot but ſpeak holily, who is all holy. I (ſaith Job) will ſpeak in the bitterneſs of my ſoul, and he ſpake bitterly; his ſoul was bitter, and ſo was his ſpeech too.

Loquar quicquid mihi afflictio ſuggeſſerit.

What he means by the bitterneſs of his ſoul, hath been opened heretofore in the third Chapter, and in the ſeventh Chapter, v. 11. Thither I refer the Reader.

In brief, I will ſpeak in the bitterneſs of my ſoul, is either this, I will let out the ſorrow of my heart at my tongue, and it ſhall appear by what I ſay, what I feel. Or,

Further, I will ſpeak in the bitterneſs of my ſoul, may be taken as an Apology for what he ſpake. As if he had ſaid, Do not charge my complaint upon my own account; If I ſpeak bitterly, it is not I that ſpeak, but the bitterneſs that is in me. As Paul, when he did what he would not, pleads in the ſeventh of the Romans, It is no more I that do it, but ſin that dwelleth in me. It is not I Paul, an Apoſtle, nor I regenerate Paul; but the remains of unregenerate Paul, of Paul a Phariſee, which rebell againſt the Law of God. In the ſame manner ſaith Job here, and ſo ſay the Saints; Are we at any time impatient, and complain more then becometh us? know it is not we that ſpeak, but the bitterneſs of our hearts; the thing which we would not, that ſpeak we; and therefore it is not we that ſpeak, but the ſorrow that dwelleth in us.

Non tam mea futura ſunt verba quam meæ amaritudinis; hæc enim imperat & extorquet orationem.

So then, ſpeaking in the bitterneſs of the ſoul, notes either the exceſs or greatneſs of a complaint, or the cauſe and ſpring of a complaint. The complaints of Job came not from the ordinary temper of the ſpirit, but from the troubles of his eſtate, diſtempering his ſpirit, he deſired rather to be praiſing and glorifying God for his receipts, then complaining over his own wants. But his wants were ſuch, as he could not refrain from complaining; I will ſpeak in the bitterneſs of my ſoul.

But what ſpeaks he?

As when he firſt ſpake theſe words (chap. 7. 11.) he preſently turned his ſpeech to God, deſiring him to deal more ſweetly with him; and puts the queſtion, Am I a Sea, or a Whale? &c.

So here, after he hath ſet forth his reſolvedneſs to complain, he preſently turns his ſpeech to God, imploring favour, I will ſay unto God, do not condemn me (verſe 2.) and he puts the queſtion (verſe 3.) Is it good unto thee that thou ſhouldeſt oppreſs? As if he had ſaid, Lord, I cannot but complain of my condition, and I muſt take the boldneſs to complain to thee; but I will not complain of thee, as if thou wert mine enemy; nor will I contend with thee, as if thou wert a party; my meaning and ſcope is only this, to ſupplicate thee as my Judge; I will ſay unto God, Do not condemn me, &c.

VERS. 2, 3.

I will ſay unto God, Do not condemn me, ſhew me wherefore thou contendeſt with me.

Is it good unto thee that thou ſhouldeſt oppreſs? that thou ſhouldeſt deſpiſe the work of thine hands, and ſhine upon the counſel of the wicked?

IN the former verſe Job reſolved to complain; in this ſecond he begins his complaint; I will ſay unto God, &c. He complains to God, not againſt God. He leaves his complaint upon himſelf, but he rendereth and preſenteth it before the Lord; I will ſay unto God.

What he ſaith, may be caſt into a double requeſt.

Firſt, That God would not condemn him.

Secondly, That he would inſtruct or convince him; as if he had ſaid, Lord, do not uſe thy abſolute power to deſtroy me; do not reject me, becauſe thou wilt: Shew me the reaſon of thy proceedings, that I may either ſit down contented with what is amiſs in my ſtate, or reform and amend what is amiſs in my life.

Do not condemn me.

The Septuagint hath a very different rendring of this clauſe, I will ſay unto God, Do not teach me to be wicked, or to do wickedly; but is it not wickedneſs as black as hell, to ſuppoſe that God teaches any man to be wicked? The Lord hates wickedneſs, and can he teach it? The Lord puniſhes wickedneſs, therefore he cannot teach it.

The mind of the Greek Tranſlators is not that God doth formally teach any to be wicked, but that ſome learn wickedneſs, or are enſnared in ſin by that which God doth unto them: As if Job had ſaid, Lord, do not encreaſe and heap affliction upon me: Do not over-grieve and burden the ſpirit of thy poor creature, leſt he ſhould even be forced through impatience, to ſpeak unadviſedly, or to do any thing unbecomingly: Lord, do not occaſion me through the extremity of my afflictions, to ſay or do that which I muſt repent and be aſhamed of. Which is alſo the ſence of that Petition in the Lords Prayer, Lead us not into temptation. Great afflictions lay us open to great temptations. And as great calamity is an occaſion for our Graces and Virtues to ſhew themſelves; ſo alſo for our Luſts and Corruptions. Some never appear ſo holy; and others (I mean of thoſe who are really godly) never ſhew ſo much unholineſs, as in affliction. Hence that requeſt of Agur (Prov. 30. 9.) Lord, feed me with food convenient for me, leſt I be poor and ſteal, and take the name of my God in vain. Such is the meaning of the Septuagint, when they ſay, Lord, teach me not to be wicked. God teaches man to be holy, both by his word, and by his works; yet ſome of his works may occaſion the fleſh to learn wickedneſs, and to act wickedly.

Μή με ἀσεβεῖν δίδασκε. Noli me docere impium eſſe. Sept. Fortè graviore aliqua triſtitia obrutus, impiam aliquam vocem emittam, q. d. Noli occaſionem quærere mei lapſus.

Secondly, Theſe words may be underſtood as a Preface, or a Rhetorical introduction to prepare the ears of the Lord to receive the Bill of Complaint, which Job was about to put up unto him: As if he had ſaid, Lord (poſſibly) through the tedioufneſs of my pain, and the continuance of my ſorrows, words may ſlip from me, of which I ſhall not be able to give a good account, or others make a fair conſtruction; yet, Lord, do not condemn me: Do not cenſure me; I ſpeak only to excuſe my ſelf, not to accuſe thy Majeſty, to ſpeak only in my own defence; let not what I ſpeak be an offence to thee. Lord, I have ſo great a weight of affliction upon me, that I cannot but hope thou wilt give my words ſome grains of allowance, if they ſhould want their due weight of wiſdom and of holineſs. As Abraham when he was about to pray for Sodom, makes his apologies and preparatory ſpeeches unto to God; Let not my Lord be angry, and I will ſpeak; and I will ſpeak yet this once (Gen. 18.) So here, I will ſpeak, &c. But I will firſt ſay unto God, Do not condemn me. If (my infirmities prevailing over me) I ſpeak amiſs, Lord, be not critical with me, examine not every word ſtrictly. Strong paſſions make an unruly Orator; and when the Speaker bears much, he may expect to be much born with by his Hearers. That's a ſecond, But rather,

Verba ſunt hominis ſe excuſantis, & quaſi præcaſtigâtis liberiorē ſuam orationem, Aqu.

Thirdly, We may take the words as a plain deprecation, Do not condemn me; the Hebrew is literally thus rendred, Do not wicked me, that is, Do not count me, or caſt me for a wicked man. But did the Lord account Job as a wicked man? Or had Job an opinion that the Lord did account him ſo? Surely Job had good (yet humble) thoughts of himſelf, though he endur'd ſo many evils; yea, he was perſwaded that the Lord (who laid thoſe evils on him) had good thoughts of him too: and when he ſaith, Do not condemn me, doubtleſs he had hopes, poſſibly he had aſſurances that the Lord had juſtified and acquitted him: Why then reſolves he, I will ſay unto God, Do not condemn me?

First, We may expound him thus, Lord, Do not that againſt me which may give the world occaſion to condemn me; or, Lay not thy hand ſo heavily upon me, leſt they that underſtand not the reaſon of thy dealings, ſhould be occaſioned to adjudge me wicked: though Job had a witneſs above, and a record on high, though he knew his reputation was unblemiſhed before God in the midſt of all theſe breaches upon his Family, and botches upon his Body, yet he knew men would condemn him as guilty of the moſt notorious evils of ſin, when they ſaw him languiſhing under ſuch unparallell'd evils of puniſhment. This moved him to pray, Lord, Do not condemn me, by making me an Object of the worlds condemnation.

His ſuppliciis videris me velut impium, ſceleratumq; palam declarare. Pin. Ne quæſo me ita affligas ut omnes qui hoc vident, judicent me propter peccata graviſſima talia pati.

Again, The words (Do not condemn me) may have this meaning; Lord, Do what thou wilt with me, only do not condemn me. His earneſt deprecation of this, may carry in it a willing ſubmiſſion to any thing beſides this. And 'tis very uſual with men to do ſo; we think we could bear any affliction but that, or better then that which is upon us. Yet Job had great reaſon to chuſe any affliction rather then this. He might well ſay, I can (through thy Grace enabling me) bear theſe or any other pains of my body, and loſſes in my eſtate, but I know not how to bear the loſs of mine innocency, or the reproach of being thrown out of thy favour. The world and theſe my friends will be confirmed in their miſapprehenſions of me, if thou doſt not ſpeedily deliver me, and confute their raſh judgment by ſome eminent mercy.

Permitto rerum aliarum jacturam, ſed non poſſum non dolere vehementer læſā meæ ſanctitatis & innocentiæ exiſtimationem. Pin.

Condemnation hath three things in it which make it grievous.

Firſt, The penalty of the ſentence.

Secondly, The diſfavour of the Judge.

Thirdly, The ſtain of his integrity who is condemned.

To have but ſo much as a ſuſpition or jealouſie of the diſpleaſure of God, afflicts the ſpirit of a godly man, more then all his other afflictions. Though Job had a ſure intereſt in the favour of God, and was freed from the penalty of condemnation, by his union with Chriſt; yet ſometimes clouds and darkneſs came over him, and terrours of the Lord did fight againſt him, which cauſed thoſe ſad lamentations in the ſixth Chapter: but here he is chiefly troubled at the ſtain of his integrity in the eye of the world, who beholding his afflictions. blotted him as a wicked man, and eſteemed him forſaken of God, even utterly diſcarded and caſt out of his ſight. Hence obſerve,

First, That, Great afflictions carry a charge of wickedneſs upon the afflicted.

Paul having eſcaped death in a wreck at Sea, could not eſcape a hard cenſure at Land, when a Viper was ſeen upon his hand: This man (ſay thoſe Barbarians of Melita, among themſelves) is no doubt a murderer, whom though he hath eſcaped the Sea, yet vengeance ſuffereth not to live (Acts 28. 4.) We find alſo that thoſe exemplary judgments which befel the Galileans, whoſe blood Pilate had mingled with their Sacrifices (it ſeems he cauſed them to be ſlain while they offered Sacrifice) and thoſe upon whom the Tower of Siloe fell, leſt them all under a charge of higheſt wickedneſs; elſe Chriſt had not taken it off, ſaying, Suppoſe ye that thoſe Galileans were ſinners above all the Galileans, becauſe they ſuffered ſuch things? or thoſe eighteen upon whom the Tower of Siloe fell, think ye that they were ſinners above all that dwelt in Jeruſalem? As if he had ſaid, I, who know your thoughts, know ye are ready to think ſo. It is a very ill, but it is a very common thing, to judge both of perſons and of cauſes by ſucceſs. Doth a man gain and thrive in the world? here's a man ſure whom God loves, ſaith the world. Though a Jeremy can ſay, Why doth the way of the wicked proſper? He can ſee them to them to be wicked through all their proſperity; yet, how often are they accounted righteous who proſper? and good, who enjoy good? But doth a man wither and go down the wind in the world? He is a man ſure, whom God hates, ſaith the world. Man is apt to think them the worſt, who ſuffer worſt, and that they have ſinned moſt, who have moſt ſorrow. The Prophet (Iſa. 53. 4, 5.) foretels that Chriſt himſelf, while he bore our griefs, and carried our ſorrows, ſhould be eſteemed ſtricken, ſmitten of God and afflicted. Chriſt was eſteemed a great ſinner, when God gave him up to be ſmitten for ſinners; therefore he adds, But he was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, &c. Hence obſerve, Secondly, The diſpleaſure of God is more grievous to the Saints, then all other preſſures and ſorrows whatſoever.

Job ſaith not, Lord, do not afflict me, do not chaſten me, lay not thine hand upon me more; but, Lord, do not condemn me: It is infinitely worſe to be condemned, then to be chaſtened, yea, then to be killed. Condemnation carries in it an argument of diſfavour, and that makes it ſo burdenſome. As the love of God is better to us, then all the good things of this life (Pſal. 4. 6.) Many will ſay, who will ſhew us any good? This is the great Query of the world: but what ſaith David? Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us; thou haſt put gladneſs in my heart, more then in the time that their Corn and their Wine encreaſed. And as the favour of God is better to us then the good things of this life, ſo then life, which is better then all earthly goods (Pſal. 63. 3.) Thy loving kindneſs is better then life. Now, I ſay, as the Love of God is better to us then the beſt things in the world; ſo the diſpleaſure of God is worſer to us then the worſt things that are in the world: all the Torments and Racks, all the Sickneſſes and diſtempers, all the Reproaches and Contempts of men have not ſo much evil in them to us, as one Frown from God. Hence, as when two ſore Diſeaſes (ſuppoſe the Gout and the Stone) both very painful, yet one much exceeding, at once afflict the Body, the Patient forgets the leſs; ſo it is, when inward and outward ſorrows at once ſeize upon one man, when the Arrows of God are faſtened in his ſpirit, he forgets his Arrow in his fleſh. The wounds of the Spirit heal all the wounds of the fleſh; they make them as if they were no wounds, or not worth the complaining of.

Thirdly obſerve, To be accounted wicked, is a ſore affliction.

It is an affliction to have an ill name, though we deſerve it not, and to be accounted wicked, though we are not; it is, I grant, far better to be cenſured, then to be flattered. It is very ill when others count us, and worſt of all, when we account our ſelves better then we are; yet it is no ſmall evil to be accounted worſe then we are, eſpecially to be accounted evil, when we are good, A wound in our honour is not a wound to be ſlighted. It was no ſmall part of the ſufferings of Chriſt, that he was numbred with the tranſgreſſors in his death, and called Beelzebub, a friend of Publicans and ſinners, while he lived.

Fourthly, Obſerve from this, Do not condemn me.

That, Condemnation is the adjudging of one to be wicked.

Condemnation ſuppoſeth a man guilty, and leaveth him under a penalty. As Juſtification is the adjudging and declaring of a perſon to be righteous, or the accepting of him for righteous in another, who is not righteous in himſelf; ſo Condemnation is the adjudging, pronouncing and declaring of a man to be wicked, who in himſelf is wicked. That's Job's firſt Requeſt, I will ſay unto God, Do not condemn me: As if he had ſaid, Seeing thou art the God and Father of all who call upon thee in Faith, and fear thy Name; therefore in Faith and Filial Reverence I beſeech thee to acquit me of my ſin; yea, becauſe I know thou haſt acquitted me, therefore deal not with me as if I were condemned for ſin. Make it appear that thou art my God, either by removing theſe ſtroaks (which repreſent me to the world as thy Enemy, rather then thy Son) or by removing the dread and terror of them, that they may appear as exerciſes of my Grace, not as revenges upon, or puniſhments of my ſin; that while my Body is pained with thy Rod, my Soul may rejoyce in thy Love; and that while I am under this Croſs, I may triumph over it. Or if thou art reſolved ſtill to detain me at this rate of ſuffering, then I have another humble Suit:

Shew me wherefore thou contendeſt with me.

That's his ſecond Requeſt.

הודיע Fac ſcire me.

Shew me.] The word ſignifies to make a matter intelligible or plain to the underſtanding: If I muſt feel theſe pains, then make me to underſtand them alſo: Let not the whole weight of my ſorrows lie upon my Senſe, manifeſt them to my Reaſon; the more I know of them, the better I ſhall manage and endure them.

ריב Partium eſt non judicis, partes litigant, non condemnant, judex condemnat, non litigat. Dru.

Shew me wherefore thou contendeſt with me.] The Word which we tranſlate contend, ſignifies properly contention between party and party, not the Sentence of the Judge. The Parties to a Suit, contend, but do not condemn. The Judge condemns the delinquent party, but he doth not contend. His Office is, to hear the Cauſe, and upon full evidence on both ſides, to paſs his Sentence. Job ſpeaks in the ſtile of both, deſiring the Lord not to condem him as a Judge, and to ſhew him why he contended with him, as a Party. Thus the Lord is ſaid in Hoſea, to have a controverſie with the Inhabitants of Iſrael (Hoſ. 4. 1.) And it ſeems by another Prophet, that he had continued a long one with them, and therefore promiſed, I will not contend for ever, Iſa. 57. 16.

Further, Cauſe me to know, or, ſhew me wherefore thou contendeſt with me, is, as if Job had ſaid, Lord, my troubles and and ſorrows are very well known, they run into every eye, they are apparent enough to the world; all ſee that thy hand is lifted up, and I feel it: but the reaſon of it I do not underſtand, much leſs do they; there is a curtain drawn between the world, and the reaſon why I am troubled; yea, there is a curtain drawn between me, and the reaſon of my troubles: Now therefore, Lord, draw back the curtain, or unvail my eyes; let me ſee clearly, and let the world ſee why I am thus afflicted; for though I know I am a ſinner and have many failings, yet I know nothing my ſelf: I am not conſcious of any wickedneſs, or cloſe hypocriſie, much leſs of any prophaneneſs or apoſtacy, which ſhould cauſe thee to pour out ſuch full viols of thy indignation upon me; Then, Shew me wherefore thou contendeſt with me:

This [Wherefore] may have a three-fold reference;

First, Shew me, whether it be for ſin or no?

Secondly, If it be for ſin, Shew me for what ſin it is?

Thirdly, If it be not for ſin, Shew me for what elſe it is? What is the thing thou aimeſt at and intendeſt? What's the end thou propoſeſt to thy ſelf in theſe my unheard of afflictions?

But is it lawful to put ſuch queries, or to deſire ſuch reſolutions from the Lord? Ought not Job to have prayed for wiſdom how to bear his croſs, rather then have asked knowledge, why it was laid upon him?

Job deſired a reaſon, firſt, Not to ſatisfie his curioſity, but his conſcience; not that he would be prying into Gods ſecrets, or unlocking the cabinet of his counſel to ſee what was there; but that the ſecrets of his own heart might be opened, and a diſcovery made to him of what was hid there. He deſired a reaſon, not doubting the juſtice or goodneſs of God, but as ſuſpecting ſome evil in himſelf, as yet unſeen.

Or, ſecondly, He deſired a reaſon, not ſo much to ſatisfie himſelf, as that the world might be ſatisfied; that they who judged and condemned him, as an hypocrite, might have their raſh judgment confuted and anſwered by a determination from heaven. As if he had further ſaid, Lord, if thou wouldeſt but ſhew me this thing, it would either ſtop the mouthes of thoſe who have been ſo forward to cenſure me; or ſtop my mouth from any further complainings to thee: I cannot reſcue my ſelf out of thy hand, nor dare I accuſe thy wiſdom, in laying thy hand upon me. But, Lord, deal not with me by the ſtrict rule of thy ſoveraignty, which is to act above all rules, and to do what thou wilt, becauſe thou wilt, without giving a reaſon to thy creature. I cannot charge thee with injuſtice, if thou ſhouldſt reſolve to keep me ſtill unreſolved. I know thou art not obliged to give me an account of any of thy matters; but Lord, condeſcend ſo far to duſt and aſhes. Shew me wherefore thou contendeſt with me. If it be for ſin, a ſight of that (through thy grace) will humble me for it, and cauſe me to return to thee from it. If it be for trial, I ſhall undergo it with more patience, and my friends will behold me under it with more charity. Let all or ſome of theſe conſiderations prevail with thy majeſty, to open this ſecret to me, and expound the myſtery of my afflictions; Shew me wherefore thou contendeſt with me. Obſerve hence, > Firſt, An afflicted ſoul is very ſollicitous about the reaſon of his affliction.

He that knows what it is to be in the dark, loves not to be in the dark. As natural, ſo moral light is ſweet, and ſpiritual light is ſweeteſt of all. Man would not be under concealments, or have all about him myſteries and riddles. Evil men love not that light which ſhews them a rule againſt their ſins, but any man would have light to ſhew him the reaſon of his ſufferings. To be troubled we know not why, is an aggravation of our troubles. That is more then felt, which is only felt. As to know the cauſe of a diſeaſe, leads and lets us into the way of a perfect cure, ſo to know it is half a cure. Job, as here he doth, ſo heretofore he had complained that his way was hidden (Chap. 3. 23.) and here as before, he ſolicites that his way might be cleared to him.

> Secondly obſerve, A godly man may be long in the dark about the reaſon of Gods dealings with him.

He labours alwayes to give an account of his own heart and wayes to God, but he is ſeldom able to give an account of the wayes of God toward him. The way of God both in mercy and in judgment is in the Sea, and his foot-ſteps are not ſeen. As there is much of the Word of God, which a ſincere heart after many prayers and much ſtudy, is not able to give a reaſon of: ſo alſo are there many of his works. The Text of both is dark to us, till God make the Comment, and he ſees it beſt ſometimes to make us call and call, wait and wait before he makes it. There was famine in the Land of Iſrael three years, year after year, and yet David knew not the cauſe; doubtleſs he did often examine his own heart, and look into the Kingdom, to ſee what might be a provocation there, but ſaw nothing, till (after three years) he enquired of the Lord, who anſwered, It is for Saul, and for his bloody houſe, becauſe he ſlew the Gibeonites (2 Sam. 21. 1.) It is more then probable that David had enquired of the Lord before that time. A holy heart, eſpecially one ſo holy as David was, can hardly let perſonal affliction be a day or an hour old, without enquiring of the Lord about it: And ſhall we think that David let this National affliction grow three years old, before he enquired of the Lord about it? Surely, then this enquiry after the end of three years, was that grand and moſt ſolemn enquiry by Urim and Thummim, appointed as the laſt reſort to God in caſes of greateſt difficulty and concernment; till David uſed this means, he found no reſolution of that caſe, why the Lord contended with his Kingdom by famine, year after year. Neither had Job got reſolution (when he thus complained) why the Lord contended with him, by ſore diſeaſes and mighty terrors, day after day.

But becauſe it might yet be wondered at by ſome, how he durſt adventure to put up ſuch a requeſt to God; he argues further, in the next verſe, that the ſtate wherein he was, ſeemed to neceſſitate him to it, and to prompt or put that requeſt into his mouth; As if he had ſaid, My condition cries aloud to me, that I ſhould cry aloud to God, Shew me wherefore thou contendeſt with me. For, far be it from me to think that the Lord delighteth in oppreſſion, in breaking the work of his own hands, or in maintaining the works of wicked men: wicked Judges uſe to do ſo, whom God will never encourage (as with a light ſhining from heaven) by his example. Far be it from me to think ſo diſhonourably of God, and therefore I am thus importunate to know the reaſon of his dealings with me, and what his thoughts are concerning me.

Ne cui mirū videatur iſtud à me poſtulari, res ipſa huc me adegit, abſit enim à me, ut tibi placere poſſe exiſtimem violentam cujuſpiam oppreſſionem. Bez.

Verſ. 3. Is it good unto thee that thou ſhouldeſt oppreſs? that thou ſhouldeſt deſpiſe the work of thine hands, and ſhine upon the counſel of the wicked.

Is it good, &c.] I am ſure it is not, it is not pleaſing unto thee to oppreſs, to deſpiſe the work of thy hands, thou delighteſt not to ſhine upon the counſel of the wicked: Thou canſt not endure any of theſe evils acted by man, much leſs wilt thou act them thy ſelf: Thou who art juſt, even juſtice it ſelf, canſt not love oppreſſion; thou who art merciful, even mercy it ſelf, wilt not deſpiſe the work of thine hands: thou who art holy, even holineſs it ſelf, how ſhouldeſt thou delight in wicked men? Thou art of purer eyes then to behold iniquity, and approve of it. What blaſphemy then is it to imagine that thou doſt practiſe it. Thy juſtice, thy mercy, thy holineſs, are ſuch as cannot admit the taint of theſe aſperſions.

Nequaquam probat aliorum iniquā vim multò minus ipſe alios opprimit. Sanct.

So then, in verſ. 3, 4. Job reckons up thoſe wayes, by which earthly men corrupt or pervert juſtice; and he removes them all from the Lord. Some men do, but God doth not oppreſs: Some men do, but God doth not deſtroy the work of his hands: Some men do, but God never doth ſhine upon the counſel of the wicked.

Omnes vias injuſtitiæ quibus terreni judices corrumpi & jus pervertere ſolent à Domino conatur amoliri. Mer.

Interrogatio ſenſum reddit omnino contrariam, nequaquam probat, &c. Sanct.

Is it good to thee that thou doeſt oppreſs? &c.

Theſe interrogations (we ſee) are vehement negations, they flatly and peremptorily deny, what they ſeem doubtingly to enquire. The ſence is, It is not good unto thee; yea, it is evil in thy ſight to oppreſs, &c. Thou hateſt oppreſſion, wrong dealing ſhall not dwell with thee. Job puts theſe queſtions, not as if he queſtioned, whether it were good to the Lord to oppreſs, or good to deſtroy the work of his hands, and to ſhine upon the counſel of the wicked; Theſe were no points of controverſie with him, nor did he ſeek reſolution about them. Yea, he therefore begs a reaſon of the Lord, wherefore he was ſo oppreſſed, becauſe he knew it was not good unto Him that he ſhould oppreſs.

Bonum triplex denotat.

3. Honeſtum.

Is it good unto thee?] The Hebrew ſignifies three things.

Firſt, That which is profitable.

Secondly; That which is pleaſant.

Thirdly, That which is juſt, right, or honourable, any thing tending to reputation. And there may be this threefold ſence of it in this place.

Firſt, Is it good unto thee? that is, Comes there any advantage unto the Lord by oppreſſing? Surely none, What profit is there in our blood?

Numquid tibi proderit? Vatab.

Secondly, Is it good unto thee? that is, Is it pleaſing or delightful? Is the Lord taken with the afflicting of his people? I know he doth not willingly afflict the children of men.

Thirdly, Is it good unto thee? that is, Doſt thou reckon it thine honour to lay thy hand ſeverely upon thy poor creatures? No, it is thy glory to paſs by a tranſgreſſion. Now ſeeing it is not good unto thee any of theſe wayes, ſeeing thou haſt no gain or profit by it, no joy or delight in it, no glory or honour from it. Shew me wherefore thou contendeſt with me; That's ſtill the burden of this mournful Song, Is it good unto thee?

Significat opprimere aliquem verbis aut factis. Nunquid bonum tibi videtur, ſi calumnieris me? Vulg.

That thou ſhouldſt oppreſs?] The word which we tranſlate to Oppreſs, ſignifies a double oppreſſion. Firſt, An oppreſſion by our words. And ſecondly, An oppreſſion by our actions, the oppreſſion of the tongue, and the oppreſſion of the hand. The tongue is a great tyrant, the tongue will lay on load, and draw blood. The Vulgar underſtands it of this tongue-oppreſſion; Is it good for thee that thou ſhouldeſt calumniate or ſlander me? that is, Give others occaſion to ſpeak evil of me. That is a good ſence. Slander and cenſure wound deep, hard words bruiſe the credit and break the heart, as well as hard blows bruiſe the fleſh, and break the bones. But take it here rather for oppreſſion by outward violence: So the word is often uſed, (Pſal. 119. 122.) I have done judgment and juſtice, give me not over to mine oppreſſors, to thoſe who would wrong me, becauſe I have done right. And it noteth, as an open or violent oppreſſion, ſo a cunning, ſubtil oppreſſion, a cheating, fraudulent oppreſſion. All wrong, how cloſe and cunning ſoever, is oppreſſion. We have that ſence of the word (Hoſ. 12. 7.) He is a merchant, the balances of deceit are in his hand, he loveth to oppreſs. How doth a Merchant oppreſs? He comes not like a thief or a Nimrod with a ſword in his hand, bidding you, Deliver your purſe or your life, commanding you to give up your right, or your liberty; but while in buying and ſelling, in trading and dealing, he offers you a fair bargain, or as we ſay, a pennyworth for your penny, he ſmites you ſecretly, and cuts your throat (as famine doth) without a knife: the balances of deceit are in his hand. Balances are put for all inſtruments, or means of trading, by theſe he deceives: light weights oppreſs the State, as a heavy weight preſſes the body. The word imports alſo oppreſſion by with-holding what is due, as well as by taking away what we duly hold (Deut. 24. 14.) Thou ſhalt not oppreſs an hired ſervant that is poor and needy; that is, thou ſhalt not detain or keep back any part of his wages.

The word (you ſee) is of a large ſence, Is it good unto thee to oppreſs? I know thou wilt not oppreſs me, either by ſpeaking evil of, or over-cenſuring me; either by open violence, or by ſecret fraud; either by taking from me what I have, or by detaining from me, what I ought to have. Thou wilt not oppreſs either with tongue or hand; either as a robber with thy ſword, or a merchant with thy balances. Thus Job expoſtulates upon higheſt confidence, both of the juſtice and holineſs of God; as if he had ſeid, Lord, I know thou doeſt not love to oppreſs; no thou art merciful and full of compaſſion. Whence is it then that thou ſeemeſt to act ſo unlike thy ſelf? Is this thy pity to a poor creature, and thy love to the work of thy hands? Thou uſeſt to rejoyce in the conſolation of thy people, and mercy pleaſeth thee; Thou uſeſt to ſend out rivers of goodneſs for wearied ſouls to bathe in, and ſtreams of comfort for thirſty ſouls to drink and be refreſhed in. How is it then that a bitter cup is put to my lips continually, and that I am overwhelmed in a ſalt Sea, in a Sea of gall and bitterneſs?

Hence obſerve, God is ſo good and gracious that he loves not to greive his creature.

Among men (Micah 7. 4.) The beſt of them is as a brier, the moſt upright is ſharper then a thorn hedge. Even they that ſeem moſt gentle and compaſſionate, will yet ſometimes ſcratch like briars, and tear like thorns: but the Lord changeth not, neither do his compaſſions fail. The actings of God appear ſometimes unſutable to his nature, but they are never ſo. When he breaks us to pieces, he delights not in our breakings; nor doth he ever break his own, but with an intent to bind them up again. God is ſo far from loving to oppreſs, that one of his moſt eminent works of providence is, to relieve thoſe who are oppreſſed (*Pſal.*12.4.) For the oppreſſion of the poor will I ariſe, ſaith the Lord. And when the Lord ariſes, oppreſſors ſhall fall. O Lord (cryes Hezekiah in his ſickneſs) I am oppreſſed, undertake for me (Iſa. 38. 14.) As if he had ſaid, this diſeaſe like a mercileſs tyrant oppreſſes my ſpirit, death hath even maſtred me, and got the victory over my houſe of clay. Lord, Come to my reſcue, thou waſt wont to deliver poor men, as a prey out of the hand, yea mouths of their oppreſſors. O deliver me from this cruel ſickneſs, which is ready to oppreſs my life, and hale me as a priſoner to the grave. Is it good unto thee that thou ſhouldeſt oppreſs? And,

That thou ſhouldeſt deſpiſe the work of thine hands?

Significat rejicere cum faſtidio, tanquam vile & contemptum quid. Mer. in Pagn. Ex faſtidio & contemptu ſequi ſolet rei contemptæ oppreſſio aut abjectio. Hunc hominem quem tuis manibus formaſti de luto terræ. Dru.

This clauſe hath the ſame ſence in general with the former, It is not good unto thee, It is neither pleaſing nor profitable, nor honourable, That thou ſhouldeſt deſpiſe the work of thine hands.

Some tranſlate this clauſe by oppreſſion, Is it good that thou ſhouldeſt oppreſs the work of thine hands? The word in propriety ſignifies to deſpiſe: we have met with it more then once before; it noteth alſo loathing, yea abhorring. And it may very well bear that other ſence of oppreſſing: for when a man loaths a thing and abhors it, he will quickly ſlight and oppreſs it: who cares what becomes of that which he abhors? Theſe two are joyned together (2 King. 17. 20.) The Lord rejected all the ſeed of Iſrael, and afflicted them, and delivered them into the hand of ſpoilers, until he had caſt them out of his ſight. When once the Lord rejected, or deſpiſed the ſeed of Iſrael, they were preſently afflicted and delivered up to ſpoiling.

Propriè laborem & laſſitudinem quandam in efficiendo opere denotat, ex quo orationis hujus vis amplificatur.

That thou ſhouldeſt deſpiſe the work of thine hands. He means himſelf or any other man; all men being the work of Gods hands. The word which we tranſlate work, ſtrictly taken, ſignifies hard work, extream labour, labour with wearineſs. Here underſtand it in a large ſence, for God works not to wearineſs. And when after he had finiſhed the whole work of creation, it is ſaid by Moſes (Gen.2.2.) That he reſted on the ſeventh day from all the work which he had made. The meaning is only this, he gave over or ceaſed to work, not that his work put him to any pain or need of reſt.

But why is man called, The work of Gods hands? Hath God (who is a Spirit) hands or any bodily part?

By an ordinary figure in Scripture, hands and feet, eyes and ears, are aſcribed unto God. He is therefore ſaid to have hands, becauſe he works, not becauſe he works with hands. The hand is the inſtrument of work. Philoſophers call it The Organ of Organs; man is called the work of Gods hand, becauſe the hand is mans inſtrument in working. Now whereas man is called, The work of Gods hands, it imports three things;

Firſt, An immediety in the work, or an immediate work. God made man himſelf without any help.

Secondly, An exactneſs in the work, the work proclaims an accurate author, The work of thy hands, a ſpecial piece of work, No hand but thine could make ſuch a piece.

Thirdly, It notes the fulneſs and compleatneſs of the work, a work conſummate and perfect, having the laſt hand put to it. Man is the work of Gods hands in all and each of theſe ſences.

Heaven is called a building of God, an houſe not made with hands (2 Cor. 5. 1.) Man is a building of God, and he is the work of Gods hands, yet God made man without hands, as much as he made heaven without hands. The hand of God implies two things;

Firſt, The Power
Secondly, The Wiſdom } of God.

Man is the work of both, For the inviſible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and God-head. Now, if the beams and beauty of the divine nature be viſible in all that was created, then much more in man, who is the epitome or ſum of all that was created.

When Job puts the queſtion, Is it good unto thee to deſpiſe the work of thy hands? he alludes to Artificers, who having made an excellent piece, will not deſtroy or break it in pieces, no, they are very tender of their work, yea, they are apt to boaſt and grow proud of it. The inſtinct of nature teaches us to love, not only that which is our own by natural production, but that alſo which is our own by artificial conception or operation. Indeed if a man make a mean, or an unworthy piece, he deſpiſes it; ſuch work diſcommends the workman, and he will break or burn it, rather then let it be made publick to the publiſhing of his own weakneſs or unskilfulneſs. Man was the Maſter-piece of the whole viſible Creation. Man was made (not as other creatures) to have a being only, but that he might be in the likeneſs of God, and bear his image. The Lord needs not be aſhamed of, neither doth he deſpiſe any part of his work, much leſs this, which is the beſt and nobleſt part of his work. Hence obſerve in general, Alio argumento injuſtitiam à Deo auſert, quod artifices ſua opera amare ſoleant. Merc.

In utero matris mea tam concinnè & aptè formaſti, deſtrues?

Man is the work of God.

All of man, man throughout is the work of God. The fabrick of his body is Gods work. I am fearfully and wonderfully made, ſaith David, marvellous are thy works, and that my ſoul knoweth right well; my ſubſtance was not hid from thee, when I was made in ſecret, &c. In thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were faſhioned, when as yet there was none of them (Pſal. 139. 14, 15.) A skilful Architect, before he builds, draws a model, or gives a draught of the building in his Book, or upon a Table; there he will ſhew you every room and contrivance: in his book are all the parts of the building written, while as yet there are none of them, or before any of them are framed and ſet up. In alluſion to Architects, and other Artiſans, David ſpeaks of God, In thy book were all my members written; that is, Thou haſt made me as exactly, as if thou hadſt drawn my ſeveral members, and my whole proportion with a pen or penſil in a book, before thou wouldeſt adventure to form me up. The Lord uſes no book, no pen to decipher his work. He had the perfect Idæa of all things in himſelf from everlaſting; But he may well be ſaid to work as by pattern, whoſe work is the moſt perfect pattern.

As the body, ſo the ſoul of man is the work of Gods hand too. His power and wiſdom wrought it, and work mightily in it. In regard of bodily ſubſtance, the moſt inferior creatures claim kindred of man, and he may be compared to the beaſt that periſheth; but in regard of the ſoul, man tranſcends them all, and may challenge a nearneſs, if not an equality with the Angels. The body is to the ſoul but as a mud wall which impriſons ſome pretious treaſure; at beſt but like a gold ring to a ſparkling Diamond. If the more unworthy part of man, be a work worthy of God, how much more is his more worthy part? There is yet ſomewhat in man of Gods making, which is better then either of theſe parts, and is indeed all man. There is ſomewhat in man more excellent then man. The qualities of man are ſuperior to his nature: man by his nature, differs only from a beaſt, but ſome men by their qualities differ from other men: one man hath better qualities then another, but no man hath a better nature then another. As the ſoul is more excellent then the body, and reaſon then ſenſe, ſo inward gifts are more excellent then the ſoul, and grace then reaſon. Theſe are the beauty, the gildings and engravings of the inner man. The Aſſyrians are called the work of Gods hands, not only in reference to creation, but regeneration in Chriſt (Iſa. 19. 25.) Bleſſed be Ægypt my people, and Aſſyria the work of my hand, and Iſrael mine inheritance. 'Tis a promiſe of the calling of the Gentiles, when they who were not a people ſhould receive Chriſt, and be made the ſpiritual Iſrael, by the mighty work of God. This alſo is the work which David intends, when he invites all lands to ſerve the Lord with gladneſs; becauſe it is he that hath made us, and not we our ſelves (Pſal. 100. 3.) Hence the Apoſtle calls all believers emphatically, The work of God (Epheſ. 2. 10.) We are his workmanſhip created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works. Man is the workmanſhip of God, as he is fitted for natural and civil works; but he is moſt of all the workmanſhip of God, as he is fitted for ſpiritual and holy works. All is the work of God, but this is curious work, workmanſhip indeed.

From the whole, take three cautions.

Firſt, Be not proud of what ye are, all's the work of God: How beautiful or comely, how wiſe or holy ſoever ye are, 'tis not of your ſelves. What hath any man either in naturals or ſupernaturals, which he hath not received?

Secondly, Deſpiſe not what others are or have, though they are not ſuch exact pieces, though they have not ſuch excellent endowments as your ſelves, yet they are what the hand of God hath wrought them, and they have what the hand of God hath wrought in them. Be more thankful if ye are better framed, and have more workmanſhip beſtowed upon you, ſleight not thoſe upon whom God hath beſtowed leſs.

Thirdly, Deſpiſe not what your ſelves are; to do ſo is a ſin, and a ſin (in reſpect of the body) very common. Many are aſhamed to be ſeen, as God hath made them; few are aſhamed to be ſeen what the Devil hath made them. Many are troubled at ſmall defects in the outward man: Few are troubled at the greateſt deformities of their inner man; they call for no repairs, for no freſh colours to be laid on there; many buy artificial beauty to ſupply the defects of natural, who never had a thought of buying (without money) ſpiritual beauty to ſupply the defects of ſupernatural. The crookedneſs and diſtortions, the blackneſs and uncomelineſs of the ſoul are moſt deplorable, yet are they little deplored; we are called every day to mend and cure them, we are told where and how we may have all ſet right, and made fair again, and yet the moſt ſtir not, or not to purpoſe. God will not know any body at the laſt day, unleſs his ſoul be mended by Grace, and ſome do ſo mend their bodies by Art, that God will not know their ſouls at that day. Depart from me, I know you not (will be all their entertainment) ye have mended your bodies, till ye have mar'd your ſouls. Beſides, What can the man do that cometh after the King? ſaith Solomon (Eccleſ. 2. 12.) The work of the wiſeſt among men, is beyond the correction of an ordinary man. Much more may we ſay, What can the man do that cometh after God? The work of the moſt wiſe God is beyond the correction of the wiſeſt among men. They who thus come after God to mend his work, leſt they ſhould be deſpiſed, will but make themſelves more deſpicable. There is more worth in the very defect of Gods work, then in the perfection of mans. We may uſe means to help many bodily infirmities, but they who are diſcontent with Gods work, are quickly proud of their own, and will one day be aſhamed of their own.

Secondly, Conſider how Job argues, Is it good that thou ſhouldeſt deſpiſe the work of thy hands? Hence obſerve,

It is an argument moving the Lord to much compaſſion to tell him that we are his work, as we are creatures, and his work eſpecially as we are new creatures.

When we are under ſuch afflictions, as threaten to ruine us, 'tis ſeaſonable to tell the Lord he made us. David ſtrengthens prayer upon this argument (Pſal. 138. 8.) Forſake not the work of thine own hands; All men love their own works many dote upon them: Shall we think God will forſake his? See how the people of God plead with God in greateſt diſtreſs (Iſa. 64. 8.) But now O Lord, thou art our Father, we are the clay, and thou our Potter, and we all are the work of thine hand. Be not wroth very ſore, O Lord. Wilt thou be angry with thy work? Lord, be angry with the works of wicked men, and deſtroy the work of Satan; Do not deſtroy the work of thine own hands, thy people are thy work, Haſt thou not formed them for thy ſelf? They will ſhew forth thy praiſe. That invitation to prayer (Iſa. 45. 11.) ſeems to intimate that this plea hath a kind of command upon God, Thus ſaith the holy One of Iſrael, and his Maker, Ask of me things to come concerning my ſons, and concerning the work of my hands, command ye me: while ye come to me under that notion, that theſe are the work of my hands, I cannot deny you; Do but name this, and it is a law upon me; ye may have any thing of me, or do any thing with me, while ye ſpeak for the work of mine hands. Hence when the Prophet had put the Jews from that plea, they were a loſt people, and their caſe was deſperate; This is a people of no underſtanding, therefore he that made them will not have mercy on them; and he that formed them will ſhew them no favour (Iſa. 27. 11.) As if he had ſaid, ye were wont (I know) to come to God with this motive of mercy, when he afflicted you; Lord, thou didſt make and form us, therefore have mercy upon us; but this ſhall prevail no more: He that made you will not have mercy on you; He that formed you will ſhew you no favour. There is but one argument ſtronger then this among all the Topicks of prayer, and that never fails; namely that God hath redeemed us, or that we are his redeemed ones. God beſtowed much coſt upon us in the work of Creation, and therefore under that title he can hardly caſt us off; but he hath beſtowed ſo much coſt upon us in the work of Redemption, that he will never caſt us off.

Further, The Scripture makes frequent uſe of this argument to repreſs the pride and preſumption of man, and to ſtop his mouth when he begins to queſtion, and call God to account about any of his dealings, with, why is it thus? or, why am I thus? Thus the Prophet ſilences the murmurings both of mans heart and tongue (Iſa. 45. 9, 10.) Wo unto him that ſtriveth with his Maker, ſhall the clay ſay to him that faſhioned it, Why haſt thou made me thus? And when the Apoſtle found unquiet, and bold ſpirits buſied in conteſting with God about his eternal counſels, in chuſing ſome and rejecting others; in ſhewing mercy to ſome, and hardening others; he ſtops them with, Who art thou, O man that replieſt againſt God? Shall the thing formed ſay to him that formed it, Why haſt thou made me thus? Remember thou art the clay, and he the Potter. That we are the work of Gods hand moveth his compaſſion towards us, and repreſſeth our preſumption againſt him. We muſt not proudly diſpute it out with him, for we are the work of his hands, and we may humbly plead with him, not to deſpiſe the work of his hands, or to Shine upon the counſel of the wicked.

God is light and he hath light, but he hath none for wicked men or for their counſels.

To ſhine upon the counſel of the wicked.] Notes three things.

Firſt, To favour or delight in them.
Secondly, To ſuccour or aſſiſt them.
Thirdly, To make them proſperous and ſucceſsful.

Impiorum conſilia illuſtrare, ideſt quod juvare, illorū cæptis ac conatibus favere.

David praying againſt his enemies, ſaith, Let their way be dark and ſlippery, Pſal. 35. 6. And when the Lord anſwered Job out of the whirlwind, he queſtions, Who is this that darkneth counſel by words without knowledge? (Job 38. 2.) as to darken wayes, and to darken counſel is to hinder and trouble them: ſo to ſhine upon wayes and counſels is to help and favour them. The Sun is the candle of the world, and Sunſhine is the comfort of the world. The Pſalmiſt prayes in this language, Thou that dwelleſt between the Cherubims, ſhine forth; that is, help and favour us; ſo it is expounded in the next verſe, Before Ephraim, Benjamin and Manaſſes, ſtir up thy ſtrength, and come and ſave us (Pſal. 80. 1, 2.) Thou wilt light my candle (was David's confidence) the Lord my God will enlighten my darkneſs: for by thee I have run thorow a troop, and by my God have I leaped over a wall (Pſal. 18. 28, 29.) that is, I have done great things, and I have overcome the greateſt difficulties through thine aſſiſtance. Will God ſhine thus upon the counſel of the wicked? Or will he help the evil-doer? Job denieth it, and therefore prayeth, Shew me why thou contendeſt with me. I know thou beareſt no good will to thoſe who are wilful in doing evil, nor takeſt thou pleaſure in thoſe who take pleaſure in iniquity.

But doth not the Lord give good ſucceſs to thoſe who are evil? Doth the way of the wicked never proſper? Proſpereth it not ſo far ſometime, that godly men ſtumble in their way, and are offended?

I anſwer, God maketh his Sun to ſhine upon the evil and the good, but himſelf never ſhineth upon the evil. Wicked men receive benefits from God, but they receive no bleſſings from God.

There is a two-fold light. Firſt, The light of Gods Providence. Secondly, The light of Gods Countenance. The light of Gods Countenance never ſhines upon the counſel of the wicked, they have only the light of his Providence. He never ſhines upon them to favour them, though he often ſhines upon them to proſper them. A man may have much good ſhewed him, and yet no good will ſhewed him. The clouds and darkneſs, which at any time cover the counſels of the righteous, are clearer then all the light which ſhines upon the counſels of the wicked. God varies his diſpenſations often, but he never varies his affections; whatſoever he doth againſt the righteous, he never hates or diſlikes them; and whatſoever he doth for the wicked, he never loves or likes them.

But who are the wicked intended in this Text, upon whoſe counſels God will not ſhine? There are four apprehenſions about it: who are wicked all agree, but who theſe wicked are, is not agreed. Some refer the word to his friends, I know thou wilt not favour their ſinful cenſures and raſh judgments concerning me. Surely they ſhall receive little thanks and leſs reward for theſe diſcourteſies; thou wilt not go forth with them, or give witneſs to what they have done; thou wilt not confirm or atteſt what they have ſpoken.

Job (I grant) found little comfort from his friends: but I do not find that they gave him evil counſel, much leſs that they took wicked counſel againſt him. The Lord reproved them for the error of their ſpeech, but he did not reprove them for the wickedneſs of their perſons. Indeed Job charges them deeply (Chap. 13. 7.) Will you ſpeak wickedly for God? Yet I do not believe that he judged them wicked. A thing in it ſelf wicked may be ſpoken, and yet the ſpeaker not be wicked. Therefore I would not think Job aims at his friends, or faſtens ſo deep a charge on them, though they had charged him ſo deep.

Secondly, Others conceive Job means the Devil and his Angels, Wilt thou ſhine upon Satan's counſel? As when Ahaſuerus (being enformed of that conſpiracy againſt the Jews) enquired, who is he? and where is he that durſt preſume in his heart to do ſo? Queen Eſther ſaid, the adverſary and enemy is this wicked Haman (Chap. 7. 5, 6.) So might Job have anſwered the Lord. My adverſary and enemy is this wicked Satan. He laid the plot and hath ſtirred up all theſe evils againſt me: I know Lord, thou wilt not take Satans part: thou wilt not help him who would be the deſtroyer and murderer, who is the great malignant and projector againſt thy ſervant.

Thirdly, Others take the wicked here, for the Sabeans and Caldeans, who were the inſtruments of Satan, in ſpoiling and robbing Job of his goods and ſubſtance. That they were wicked, we need not queſtion; yet

Fourthly, Take it rather in general, for all or any wicked men, upon whoſe wayes God ſeems to ſhine when he gives ſucceſs to their works of darkneſs. Hence obſerve,

First, Wicked men are ſometimes proſpered in their counſels, and walk in pleaſant (though evil) wayes.

God gives delight to thoſe in whom he hath no delight. And they have many good things from him, who never had one good thought from him. Thouſands are proſpered and hated at the ſame time. When Dionyſius (in the ſtory) had rob'd an Idol-Temple, and at his return by Sea had a fair gail and pleaſant weather to waft him home with the ſpoils; See (ſaid he) how the heavens ſmile upon us, and how the gods are pleaſed with what we have done. The like concluſions many draw from the premiſes of outward proſperity: ſurely the true God is pleaſed with us: but there is a cloud upon this Sunſhine, and darkneſs in all this light.

Secondly obſerve, The Lord hates the counſel of wicked men.

He is ſo far from ſhining upon, that he, indeed, darkens their counſels. He caſts darkneſs upon them, even the darkneſs

darkneſs of his heavieſt diſpleaſure, when themſelves think, and the world ſaith, all is light about them (Zech. 1. 15.) Thus ſaith the Lord, I am very ſore diſpleaſed with the Heathen that are at eaſe; They had their pleaſure, but God took no pleaſure in them; I am very ſore diſpleaſed with theſe Heathens that are at eaſe; that is, I approve not their courſes, yea my wrath is kindled againſt their perſons. The light which ſhines upon wicked men, turns all at laſt into heat; and they have alwayes the heat of Gods anger mixed with their light: a heat not to warm but to conſume and burn them up. As when the Lord ſends the clouds and darkneſs of outward affliction upon his own people, he ſends likewiſe the beams of his everlaſting love into the hearts: So he clouds and darkens wicked men, while his candle ſhineth upon their heads.

VERS. 4, 5, 6, 7.

Haſt thou eyes of fleſh? Or ſeeſt thou as man ſeeth?
Are thy dayes as the dayes of men? Are thy years as mans dayes?
That thou enquireſt after mine iniquity, and ſearcheſt after my ſin.
Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked, and there is none that can deliver out of thy hand.

JOB proceedeth upon the ſame Argument; and as in verſ. 3. he had removed three things inconſiſtent with, and diſhonorable to the juſtice of God: So in the two verſes following, he removeth two more. And as he thus acquits the Lord from injuſtice or unrighteous dealing with him: ſo he appeals to the Lord (who was able (he knew) to do it upon certain knowledge) to acquit him from all the unjuſt charges, with which his friends had burdened him, Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked, &c.

Haſt thou eyes of fleſh? Or ſeeſt thou as man ſeeth?

The Queſtion is to be reſolved into this negation, Lord, Thou haſt not eyes of fleſh; Lord, Thou ſeeſt not as man ſeeth; as if Job had thus ſpoken, Lord, I have been long afflicted with grievous pains, I am as a man hanging upon a rack, to draw out and force a confeſſion from him; Lord, why is it thus with me? Why am I brought to ſuch a trial? I am ſure it is not with thee as with mortal Judges, who having eyes of fleſh, can ſee no further then the out-ſide of things, and know no more then is told them; and therefore muſt fetch out what lies in the heart of man by examination, and if examination will not do it, they muſt do it by torture; Lord, there is no need thou ſhouldeſt take this courſe; Thou canſt enform thy ſelf fully how it is with me, though I ſhould not ſpeak a word; though I am ſilent, yet thine ear hears the voice and underſtands the language of my ſpirit. Though I hide or cover my ſelf, yet the eye of thy omniſcience looks quite thorow me; ſeeing then thou haſt not eyes like the eyes of men, wherefore is it that thou enquireſt by theſe afflictions after mine iniquity, and ſearcheſt (as men uſe to do) after my ſin?

Haſt thou eyes of fleſh? Or ſeeſt thou as man ſeeth?

God hath no eyes, much leſs eyes of fleſh; God is a Spirit, and therefore he cannot have eyes of fleſh; He is all eye; and therefore (properly) he hath no eyes. The eye is that ſpecial organ or member of the body into which the power of ſeeing is contracted, but God is all over a power of ſeeing. The body of man hath ſeveral parts, and ſeveral honours and offices are beſtowed upon every part. The eye hath the great office and honour of ſeeing committed to it. The eye is the light of the whole body, and knowledge is the eye of the ſoul. The eye of God is the knowledge of God. The Greeks expreſs God by a word which ſignifies to ſee: and he is therefore ſaid to have eyes, and to ſee, becauſe the eye is a principal inſtrument, and ſeeing a principal means by which man receives knowledge. Naturaliſts tell us, there is nothing in the underſtanding but that which is firſt in the ſenſe. The ſenſes are doors to the mind, the furniture and riches of that are conveyed in by the eyes or ears. Theſe bring informations to the underſtanding. Natural knowledge cannot have an immediate acceſs to man, and 'tis but ſeldom that ſpiritual hath: Both are commonly let in by ſenſe. The ſuperior powers muſt traffick with the inferior, otherwiſe they make no gain. Though God hath no need of any help to bring in or improve his knowledge, yet that is aſcribed to him by which knowledge is improved; He hath eyes, but not of fleſh; he ſeeth, but not as man.

Ipſum nomen Dei Græcum hanc videndi efficacitatem præ ſe fert, θεὸς nimirum à θεᾶν, ſpectare, contemplari dicitur. Nihil eſt in intellectu quod non prius fuit in ſenſu.

Haſt thou eyes of fleſh?] Fleſh by a Synechdoche is put for the whole nature of man. The Word was made fleſh, (Joh. 1. 14.) not body or ſoul, but Fleſh, that is, man conſiſting of ſoul and body. Thus here, eyes of fleſh, that is, mans eyes. And ſo the latter clauſe of the verſe is an expoſition of the former. When he ſaith, Haſt thou eyes of fleſh? It is no more then this, Doeſt thou ſee as man ſeeth? To have an eye of fleſh, is to judge according to the fleſh; and to ſee as man ſeeth, is to ſee no more then man.

Oculi carnei ſunt ſecundũ carnem judicantes.

When Samuel was ſent to anoint a King over Iſrael in the place of Saul (1 Sam. 16. 7.) the Lord ſaid concerning the firſt-born of Jeſſe, Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his ſtature, becauſe I have refuſed him; The reaſon added is this, For the Lord ſeeth not as man ſeeth, for man looks on the outward appearance, but the Lord looks on the heart. There we have Job's doctrine of Gods ſeeing, delivered by God himſelf. Samuel thought he who made the faireſt ſhew to the eye of man, muſt needs be the man who was faireſt in the eye of God; but the Lord ſeeth what is not ſeen, and often finds moſt reality in the leaſt appearance; he who hath not eyes of fleſh, ſees beyond the fleſh.

There are ſeven differences between the eye of fleſh or mans eye, and the eye of God.

Firſt, Mans eye is but a means, or an inſtrument of knowledge: Gods eye is his knowledge. The act and the faculty are not diſtinct in God. All in God is act; neither is God another thing from his act: whatſoever is aſcribed to him, is himſelf. The eye of God is God ſeeing. The knowſedge of God is God knowing. The love of God is God loving.

Secondly, Man muſt have a two-fold light to ſee by; an inward light, the light of the eye; and an outward light, the light in the air; without both he cannot ſee. Man doth not ſee (as Naturaliſts ſpeak) by ſending forth a beam or a ray from his eye to the object, but by receiving or taking in a beam or a ray from the object into his eye; The object iſſues it's ſpecies to the eye, which being joyned with the viſive power of the eye, man ſeeth: But God ſeeth in himſelf, of himſelf, and from himſelf, he needs no outward light. Chriſt is deſcribed having a fiery eye; His eyes were as a flame of fire (Revel. 1. 14. & 2. 18.) Even nature teacheth us that thoſe creatures which have fiery eyes, ſee in the dark, and ſee beſt when it is darkeſt; becauſe they ſee by ſending forth a beam or a flame from their eyes, which at once apprehends the object, and enlightens the paſſage to it. God who commanded light to come out of darkneſs for the uſe of man, commands light in darkneſs for his own. The darkneſs hideth not from thee (ſaith David) but the night ſhineth as the day. The darkneſs and the light are both alike to thee. There is no darkneſs nor ſhadow of death, where any of the workers of iniquity can hide themſelves, Job 34. 22. Thus God hath not eyes of fleſh; he ſeeth not as man ſeeth.

Thirdly, Man ſeeth one thing after another: his eye is not able to take in all objects at once; he views now one, and then another, to make his judgment of them. But God ſeeth all things together; he beholdeth all at one view; his eye takes and gathers in all objects, and all that is in every object by one act. The Lord looketh from heaven, and beholdeth all the ſons of men; from the place of his habitation he looks upon all the inhabitants of the earth (Pſal. 33. 13, 14.

Fourthly, An eye of fleſh ſeeth at a diſtance, and at ſuch a diſtance. Naturaliſts tell us, there muſt be a due diſtance between the eye and the object. If you put the object too near the eye, the eye cannot ſee it; That which is ſenſible put upon the ſenſe, takes away ſenſation. Again, if the object be very remote, the eye cannot make any diſcovery of it. The eye cannot ſee far, and it cannot diſcern ſo far as it can ſee. We may ſee a thing, and not know what we ſee. But the eye of the Lord ſeeth and diſcerneth at all diſtances. There are none ſo near him, but he knows what they are; nearneſs doth not hinder his ſight; and there are none ſo far from him, but he can diſcover what they are, remoteneſs doth not hinder his ſight. And indeed, all all things are preſent with him, as in time, ſo in place; God is neareſt, even next to every object: He is in every place, yet not included by any; he is in every thing, yet not mixed with any (Prov. 15. 3.) The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good. His eyes are upon the wayes of man, he ſeeth all his goings (Job 34.21.) and that this ſeeing is a diſtinguiſhing ſight, another Scripture clears to us; His eye-lids try the children of men (Pſal. 11. 5.) Let them be what they will, and where they will, his eye-lids do not only ſee, but try, that is, he hath a diſtinct, and a certain knowledge, or a critical ſight of the ſtate and condition of every man.

Deus non ſolum eſt proximus objecto, ſed eſt intimè cum illo conjunctus.

Fifthly, Man ſeeth but the colour and skin, the face and out-ſide of things or perſons, but God ſeeth the in-ſides, and looks into the very bowels of them. He is a ſearcher and diſcerner of the heart: He ſeeth the ſpirit as ſoon as the face. Our cloaths are not more open to him then our breſts and boſoms. An Heathen wiſhed for a window there, and if we had windows there, we could not ſee what's there. An eye of fleſh cannot read the meaning of our ſpirits; but the Lord can look into the heart without a window, yea, we are all window to him, and he at every turn looks not only upon us, but into us. It was propheſied of Chriſt, (Iſa. 11. 3.) He ſhall not judge after the ſight of his eyes; neither reprove after the hearing of his ears; that is, he ſhall not judge as a mear man, but as God; he ſhall not judge according to fair appearances, or flying reports; He ſhall judge with righteouſneſs, and reprove with equity. Man (whoſe eyes are of fleſh) ſhould not judge according to appearance; yet becauſe his eyes are of fleſh, he cannot judge of that which doth not appear. But God who calleth thoſe things which are not, as if they were, judgeth of thoſe things which appear not, as if they did appear.

Sixthly, An eye of fleſh may be deceived. The ſight of man is ſubject to manifold deceptions. Many things put a ſtop to the ſight of the eye. The eye of man is in danger of as many fallacies, as the underſtanding; and the underſtanding is entangled with many fallacies by the eye. But there is no error in the ſight of God, nor any deception of his eye; you cannot by any art or device, by any policy or hypocriſie, by any masks or diſguiſes, by any ſimulations or diſſimulations make that appear to him, which is not, or make it appear to him otherwiſe then it is. The heart of man (ſaith the Lord) is deceitful above all things, and deſperately wicked, who can know it? (only the Lord who makes, can anſwer this challenge, ſo he doth in the next words) I the Lord ſearch the heart, I try the reins, even to give every man according to his wayes, and according to the fruit of his doings. How can that which is deceitful receive according to its doings, but by knowing all it's doings and all it's deceits? As the tongue (the greateſt troubler of the world) no man can tame: ſo the heart (the greateſt impoſtor in the world) no man can diſcover but God, and he can do it eaſily, and doth it continually.

Seventhly, When it is ſaid, the Lord hath not eyes of fleſh, he ſeeth not as man ſeeth, the meaning is, his knowledge is not imperfect as the knowledge of man is. An eye of fleſh hath been but a while, and can be but a while, and therefore cannot attain much knowledge; We are but of yeſterday, and know nothing (ſaith Bildad, chap. 8.) He that hath but little experience, muſt needs have more then a little ignorance. Experience breeds knowledge, and brings to perfection in knowledge. The eye of God is from everlaſting. If he had not (as he hath) all knowledge in and from himſelf, he might have fetcht it in before this time, from what he hath ſeen. And he (having ſeen all things) muſt needs have perfect knowledge, whoſe knowledge had been perfect, though he had never ſeen any of theſe things.

Beſides, As this phraſe, an eye of fleſh, imports thinneſs of experience, and thence imperfection of knowledge, ſo groſneſs of ſpirit, and dimneſs of underſtanding to attain knowledge. When Peter made that gracious confeſſion (Matth. 16. 16.) Thou art Chriſt the Son of the living God; Chriſt anſwers, Bleſſed art thou Simon Bar-jona, for fleſh and blood (that is, man) hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. As if he had ſaid, All men are fleſh and blood, ſo dull-ſighted and blind, that they could never have perceived this truth by any ſtudy or obſervation, it comes only by gift and revelation.

Caro ſignificat aliquid pingue, obtuſum, craſſu, minime ſubtile aut perſpicax.

The eye of God is not an eye of fleſh in this ſence neither. All ſpirits have much clearneſs of underſtanding, much ſharpneſs and quickneſs of apprehenſion. The Devil being a ſpirit, though now a wicked ſpirit, hath one name from knowledge. How much more knowing is he, who is The Spirit, the Creator of the ſpirits of all fleſh, and the Creator of thoſe ſpirits which ſubſiſt without fleſh?

Dæmon.

Further, Sight is put for judgment, and ſeeing for judging. Judging is an act beyond knowing. Judgment is the reſult of knowledge. So, Thou doeſt not ſee, is, Thou doeſt not judge as man judgeth.

Firſt, Mans judgment is often hindered by his affections. His judgment is hindered by divers affections, eſpecially by love, and the nearneſs of relations; man can hardly ſee a fault and a friend, a ſin and a ſon together. Love makes knowledge as ignorance, and light as darkneſs. Chriſtian charity covers a multitude of ſins from private revenge, and harſh cenſures; But humane charity covers a multitude of ſins from publick juſtice, and wholſom admonitions. The former keeps from rigid ſeverity, this endangers to cockering flattery. It is not thus with God, He ſeeth not as man ſeeth. They who have the greateſt interreſt, the neareſt relation to God, are ſeen what they are, and ſhall be judged as they are. God hath (indeed) an infinite largeneſs of affection to poor ſinners, and the lap of his garment of love covers every day a multitude, yea, many multitudes of ſins. But he doth not this, becauſe his love to the perſons offending hinders his eye from ſeeing, but becauſe his Son having ſatisfied his juſtice for the perſons offending, he turns away his eye from ſeeing their ſins. God proclaims himſelf at once, The God pardoning iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin, and that will by no means acquit the guilty (Exod. 34. 7.) There is nothing but the Name of his Son, and of his Sons ſuffering, which turns his eye from ſin. He will eſpy, and puniſh, or eſpy to puniſh all our faults through all other titles and intereſts whatſoever.

Non vides more hominum, & ſicut illi ex facie judicas ut affectibus ducaris ſicut illi?

Again, Mans judgment is clouded by wrath and malice. He cannot ſee the innocency of thoſe he hates, or do them juſtice to whom he bears no affection. The want of love hinders an eye of fleſh, as much as the inordinacy or exceſs of it. But though the Lord be angry and diſpleaſed with man, yet he wrongs no man; The wrath of man cannot work the righteouſneſs of God, but the wrath of God works righteouſneſs to man. He never gives more then right to thoſe he loves moſt, nor leſs then right to thoſe he hates moſt. That which we call paſſion in God, is acted with higheſt reaſon, his anger never errs.

Secondly, Man is much ſwayed in judgment by the power, pomp and ſplendor of men. We are apt to think they have moſt worth in them, who are worth moſt. And that they are good, with whom all's well. Even the Saints are toucht with this infirmity: The Apoſtle James (Chap. 2. 2, 3.) beſpeaks them thus, If there come into your Aſſembly a man with a gold ring in goodly apparel, and there come in a poor man in vile raiment, and ye have reſpect to him that that weareth the gay clothing, and ſay unto him, Come and ſit here by me in a good place; and ſay to the poor, Stand thou there, or ſit here under my foot-ſtool; are ye not partial in your ſelves, and Judges of evil thoughts? that is, Are ye not condemned in your ſelves and convinced in your own conſciences, that you do evil; and ſo that your thoughts have been evil, which moved you to do ſo? Can you chuſe but judge this an evil thought, to think him the beſt man that weareth the beſt cloaths, and him a vile perſon that is in vile apparel? Thus men, yea, good men may miſ-judge of men. But the Lord ſeeth not as man ſeeth, It is not good cloaths, but a good heart; it is not a gold ring, but a golden converſation which he accepts; wickedneſs is abominable in his eye, though it ſit upon a Throne; and holineſs ſhines in his eye, though it lie upon a dung-hill. Holineſs is not leſs lovely to him, becauſe cloathed with rags, nor unholineſs leſs loathſom to him, becauſe it goes in a gay coat. 'Tis well conceived, that Job had reference to his own condition when he ſpake thus; he lay in a woful plight, all over ſores, and boils, and filthineſs; yet (ſaith he) Lord, I know thou ſeeſt not as man ſeeſt; Thou doſt not therefore think me the worſe, becauſe I am thus ill. I am even a loathing, not only to others, but to my ſelf, yet I know thou doſt not loath me; Thou haſt not a bad opinion of me, becauſe my condition is thus bad.

Thirdly, Man judgeth the cauſe by the effect, the tree by the fruit, the man by his actions; that's the way of mans judgment, and ſo man ought to judge. We ought to think well of them, who do well; and when the hand is clean, charity bids us ſay the heart is clean too. But the Lord ſeeth not as man ſeeth; he in judging men tranſcends the rule he gives men to judge by. He judgeth the fruit by the tree, the effect by the cauſe, and the action by the man; he had reſpect to Abel, and then to his offering. If the worker pleaſe him not, neither doth his work; as he makes, ſo he ſees the tree good, and then the fruit good. Till the man mends, his manners never mends in Gods eſteem. When a good tree brings forth evil fruit, or an evil tree good fruit, 'tis accidental to them both, not natural. God judgeth us by what we alwayes are, not by what we ſometimes act, either in good or evil.

In this alſo Job comforts himſelf, that whatſoever fruit he might ſeem to bring forth, yet the Lord judg'd him not (as his friends did) by ſome unſavoury ſpeeches that came from him, but by the ſavourineſs of that ſpirit which was in him. He knew God judged him by the ſetled temper of his inward man, and the ſoundneſs of his mind, not by the caſual diſtemper of his outward man, or the ſound of his tongue. Job was a good tree, and the root of the matter was in him. And Job was aſſured God would not condemn him for his fruit, if ſome of it were bitter and unpleaſant, while he ſaw his root was good.

Fourthly, Man muſt take time to hear and diſcuſs every caſe, to find and beat out the truth of every controverſie, but God judgeth all at an inſtant; the matter is no ſooner before him, but he knoweth it fully: indeed the matter was ever before him, and ever fully known, he knew it from eternity: Things are known to him before they are, by whom all things are. The Lord needeth not to put queſtions or to be informed by confeſſions. God is able to prevent our queſtions with reſolutions, and to give us anſwers before we give him our doubts (Joh. 16. 30.) Now are we ſure that thou knoweſt all things, and needeſt not that any man ſhould ask thee. He that is acquainted with our doubts before we propoſe them, can anſwer them as ſoon as we propoſe them. Seeing it is thus (ſaith Job) why am I held ſo long upon the rack to draw out the matter from me? I know thou doſt not judge as man judgeth, by enquiring into, or comparing circumſtances and actions, anſwers and queſtions. Thou art able to make out a judgment of me, and of my condition from thy own knowledge; without the contribution of my anſwers to thy queſtions, or of other mens teſtimonies concerning my actions; Thou ſeeſt not as man ſeeth.

Laſtly, To have eyes of fleſh, and to ſee as man, is to ſee with ſcorn, or with diſdain. The original word which we tranſlate to See, put alone, ſignifies ſometimes to deſpiſe. The Prince of Tyrus is threatned thus (Ezek. 28. 17.) I will lay thee before Kings that they may behold (that is, deſpiſe and deride) thee. And the Spouſe in the Canticles, (Chap. 1. 6.) deprecates, look not upon me, becauſe I am black, becauſe the Sun hath looked upon me; that is, God hath looked upon me with a ſcorching eye of diſpleaſure, and made me black with troubles; do not ye look upon me with a ſcornful eye of diſdain, becauſe of my blackneſs. Thus God ſeeth or looketh not as man ſeeth; he looketh not diſdainfully upon a poor afflicted ſoul, as men do upon their friends in their affliction, or as ye my friends do upon me in mine affliction.

This is the fourth diſhonourable thought, which Job removeth from God. His eyes are not eyes of fleſh, he ſeeth not as man ſeeth, either in reference to the truth or manner, the clearneſs or ſpeedineſs, the certainty or impartiality, the infallibility or charity of his judgment. Upon all which his former requeſt is again to be inferred, Shew me wherefore thou contendeſt with me.

He proceedeth to a fifth, which he alſo by way of interrogation removeth from God, and ſo virtually reneweth the ſame petition.

Verſ. 5. Are thy dayes as the dayes of men? Are thy years as mans dayes?

I know they are not.

Are thy dayes as mans dayes?] Some Interpreters take the word Day for Judgment. Are thy dayes as mans dayes? that is, Are thy judging dayes, or thy judgment given upon thoſe dayes, like mans dayes, or the judgment which man giveth? We have the word in that ſence (1 Cor. 4. 3.) where the Apoſtle concludes in his own caſe; It is a very ſmall thing of me to be judged of you, or of mans judgment, the Greek is, To be judged of mans day: and according to the idiom of that Language in ſome Countreys, the day of a man is put for the judgment of a man: Though others conceive Paul calls it a day rather then a judgment, in alluſion to that laſt day, wherein God will ſit in judgment upon the whole world. So the meaning of Job is plainly this, The Lords judgment is not like mans judgment. This Expoſition falls in with the ſence of the former verſe; men judge by outward proofs and probabilities, by queſtions and interrogatories, by teſtimonies and witneſſes: God needs none of theſe humane helps in his day of judgment; yet in Job's caſe, he carried it, as if he needed them. The Suit depending ſo long before him, and ſuch variety of experiments and trials, being put upon, or taken of him.

Ponitur dies pro judicio ex Cilicum idiotiſmo. Hier. Putarim Paulum potius diem maluiſſe dicere, quam judicium ut alluderet ad diem illum ſupremum in quo Dominus ipſe judex ſedebit. Bez.

But, we may better interpret Dayes for a part of time; and ſo, Are thy dayes as mans dayes? is, Art thou ſhort liv'd as man is? The word [Man] ſignifies man in his worſt condition, Are thy dayes like the dayes of a weak man? of a miſerable ſickly man? Are they like the dayes of a man, whom we number among the dead, and who is giving up the ghoſt every hour? There are ſome men, whom we call long liv'd, that is, men who in probability may live very long: we ſay of a healthy ſtrong man, we would take a leaſe of his life, or if we were to take a leaſe for lives, we would put his life in for one: he is a man of a good complexion and conſtitution, a man like to live, and ſee many dayes. But, ſaith Job, Are thy dayes as the dayes of Enoſh? As the dayes of a weak ſickly man, as the dayes of one, who looks as if he would drop into the grave every day; as the dayes of a very borderer upon death, of the next neighbour, and heir apparent to the King of terrors? Lord, I am ſure thy dayes are not as the dayes of ſuch a weakling, of ſuch mouldring, ſickly clod of earth. This ſence may have a double reference.

Enos cujus vitæ duratio breviſſima & penè nulla.

Firſt, To the knowledge of God concerning Job.

Secondly, To the manner of Gods dealing with Job.

Firſt, Thy dayes are not as the dayes of man; thou haſt had, and haſt time enough to gather knowledge and experience, if thou didſt need ſuch help to make thee more knowing. It was the ancient complaint of that great Phyſitian, when he ſaw how much of his Art he had to learn, and how little time he had to learn it in, Art is long, and time is ſhort, what can I learn in ſuch a ſpan-long life as mine? Hence it is conceived, that though the Fathers before the flood (ſome of whoſe lives reached eight or nine Centuries) wanted the help of Libraries and Academies, which we enjoy; yet, that by the experience of ſo many years, they gathered a great ſtock of knowledge, and proved men of eminent Learning. Men whoſe dayes are not as the dayes of ordinary men, attain knowledge beyond ordinary men. How then can the Lord want any perfection of the moſt perfect knowledge, who numbereth not only by hundreds and thouſands of years, but by an eternity of years? His knowledge muſt needs be full, concerning the ſtate both of things and perſons, who not only hath Antiquity of dayes, but is the Ancient of dayes (Dan. 7. 9.) Many men have lived ſo many dayes, that they are juſtly called Ancient, but no man ever lived or ſhall live ſo long, as to deſerve this title, Ancient of dayes. God is called the Ancient of dayes, not only, becauſe he hath been many dayes, yea all the dayes that ever have been, but becauſe he is ancienter then dayes; He is the dayes ancient, for he made the day. His dayes cannot be like mans dayes, who made five dayes ancienter then man. God hath more then all dayes, therefore he hath all knowledge: he hath all experience, therefore he hath neither ignorance, nor neſcience. Upon this ground Job argues it out with God, that he muſt needs know all things, who was before all times; and that he was acquainted with him better then all men, who who lived at that day, becauſe he lived and was acquainted with what he would be, before man had a day, even from eternity.

Theſe words, Thy dayes are not as mans dayes, may refer to the dealing of God with Job. As if he had ſaid, Lord, why then doeſt thou make ſuch haſte to enquire after me? why doeſt thou ſo inceſſantly follow me with afflictions? why doeſt thou keep me upon the rack from day to day, night and day, and wilt give me no reſt? Lord, thou needeſt not fear to looſe time, for thou haſt all time at thy command; thou canſt not want opportunity, who haſt eternity. The reaſon why man is called upon ſo earneſtly to redeem the time, is, becauſe he hath ſo little time given him, and no time at all but what is given him. His dayes are ſhort dayes, and they are but few, and (which ſhould provoke him for to make haſte) he knows not how few: unleſs he lay hold upon the preſent day, he is not ſure of any day. But Lord, thou art Lord of time, and Maſter not only over thy work, but alſo over thy dayes; thou canſt allow thy ſelf as many dayes as thou pleaſeſt to do thy work in. Why then doeſt thou deal thus ſeverely with me, as if thou wert afraid thou ſhouldeſt overſlip thy day, or want a ſeaſon to deal with me in?

Deo nihil effert novi craſtina dies.

Again, When he ſaith, Are thy dayes as mans dayes? it may refer to the changes which happen in the dayes of man: the dayes of man are ſometimes fair, and ſometimes cloudy, ſometimes he hath good dayes, and ſometimes he hath ill dayes, therefore he muſt take his time, and lay hold upon his opportunity. He muſt make his hay while the Sun ſhines, who cannot command the Sun to ſhine. But the dayes of the Lord are (like himſelf) alwayes the ſame, alwayes alike, There are no changes of time to him, who is himſelf unchangeable.

Aliam ſuarum miſeriarum cauſā excludit à Deo, q. d. ſi non eſſet firma Dei voluntas, atq; benevolentia erga ſuos, ſed innata illi eſſet inconſtantia, nihil mirum eſſet ſi me, quē quondā ingentibus beneficiis cumulavit odio proſequatur. Bol.

Laſtly, Are thy dayes as the dayes of man? may have reference to man himſelf; man is as mutable a creature, as his time is: and man is mutable, not only in his condition, but in his affection; now he loveth, anon he hateth; now he rejoyceth, anon he ſorroweth; now he eſteemeth, anon he rejecteth; now he imbraceth, anon he contemneth. Lord (ſaith Job) I know thou art not in thy dayes as man is in his: Where thou art once a friend, thou art alwayes a friend; whom thou loveſt, thou loveſt for ever. Thy affections are as unchangeable as thy nature.

There is a difference in the latter clauſe of the verſe; for whereas he ſaith, in the firſt, Are thy dayes as the dayes of man? In the ſecond he ſaith, Are thy years as mans dayes? The dayes of God in the firſt part, are the ſame with the years of God in the ſecond. But man hath not years aſcribed to him in the ſecond. The time of man is ſo ſhort, that it is reckoned by the ſhorteſt compleat time, a day. And when David computes the longeſt date of mans life, he doth not ſay, The years of man are threeſcore years and ten; but the dayes of our years are threeſcore years and ten (Pſal. 90. 10.) There is yet another difference in the original about the word Man. In the firſt clauſe the Hebrew word for man was Enoſh, here it is Geber, which ſignifies a ſtrong man, a mighty man, a man of the moſt maſculine ſpirit, and ſtrongeſt body, of the moſt vigorous abilities, and greateſt probabilities to live long; a man of braſs, and heart of oak, rather then of clay, and duſt of the earth. Lord, Thy dayes are not only not as the dayes of Enoſh, a weak, ſickly man; but, Thy years are not as the dayes of Geber, as the dayes of the mightieſt and healthieſt, of the ſtrongeſt and ſtouteſt among the ſons of men.

Obſerve hence more diſtinctly the difference between the dayes of God, and the dayes of man.

First, Gods day is the day of eternity.

Mans dayes are but dayes of time. God is ſaid, To inhabit eternity (Iſa. 57.15.) that is, he is fixed in eternity, he is without beginning, and without end, yea his dayes are without ſucceſſion of dayes. All the dayes of God are but a day. Not only are a thouſand years to him as one day, but eternity is to him as one day. All that God doth, is ſaid to be done to day; Thou art my Son, to day have I begotten thee (Pſal. 2. 7.) yet he ſpeaks (ſay ſome) of the eternal generation of the Son: or as it referreth to the reſurrection of Chriſt (ſo the Apoſtle expounds it, Act. 13. 33.) God calls that time, To day, though it came a long time after: all is preſent with God; Paſt and to come in relation to God, is neither paſt nor to come, all is now or to day. That was not paſt to God, which never had beginning, the eternal generation of his Son: nor was that to come to God which was alwayes before him: The temporal reſurrection of his Son, To day have I begotten thee, is the moſt proper ſtile for God.

Tempus eſt menſura hominū habens principiū & finem; æviternitas eſt Angelorum, principium habens, ſed non finem; æternitas eſt propria Deo, nec principium habens nec finem. Æternitas eſt quæ nihil habet mutabile, ibi nihil eſt præteritū quaſi jam non ſit, nihil futurū quaſi nondū ſit, quia non eſt ibi niſi eſt. Aug. in Pſal. 101. Erat & erit noſtri temporis fluxæque naturæ ſegmenta ſunt. Æternitas eſt ſemper & immutabile eſſe.

Some diſtinguiſh thus between theſe three, Eternity, Eviternity, and Time. Eternity is that which is peculiar unto God, his are the dayes of eternity. Eviternity is proper to Angels and Spirits, which have a beginning, but ſhall have no end. Time is the portion and lot of man, who hath had a beginning, and ſhall have an end. Time is the meaſure of thoſe things, which actually corrupt and change. Eviternity is the meaſure of things incorruptible and unchangeable, not in themſelves, but by the appointment of God. Eternity is peculiar to God, in whom it is abſolutely impoſſible any change ſhould be. Time hath continual ſucceſſions, Eternity a conſtant permanency, Eviternity partakes of both. Hence the ſecond difference, Mans dayes are moveable, the dayes of God move not.

Thirdly, Mans dayes being paſt cannot be recalled; Gods day is ever within his call.

For, that which is paſt is as much preſent to him, as that which is preſent; and that which is to come is as much preſent to him, as that which is. Mans day was, is, and ſhall be; Gods day alwayes is; his name is, I am: It was, and it will be, are diviſions and fragments, morſels and bits of time; eternity is an It is. This teacheth us,

Firſt, That God hath time enough to do his work in.

His dayes are not as mans dayes. He needs not haſten his work, leſt he ſhould loſe his opportunity, who is poſſeſſed of eternity. And Secondly, This (by the way) ſhews us, The infinite happineſs and unconceivable bleſſedneſs of God.

His dayes are not as mans dayes. One of mans dayes carrieth away one comfort, and the next a ſecond. This day brings one comfort, and the next a ſecond; and ſo he loſeth or receiveth his comforts by dayes and by dayes, by the fluxes and refluxes of time. God hath all his happineſs in eternity, that is, he hath all at once. Time neither bringeth nor carrieth away from God. He enjoyeth as much at this preſent, what ever he had, as what he hath at this preſent; and he enjoyes as much what ſhall be, as he doth what is preſent; he enjoyeth all at once, becauſe he ſeeth all at once. God hath not one thing after another, but all together. Eternity is the longeſt and the ſhorteſt, it is longeſt in duration, and the ſhorteſt in fruition; not that the enjoyment of any thing there is ſhort, but becauſe in the ſhorteſt enjoyment there is all: Every moment of eternity being filled with all the bleſſedneſs of eternity.

Thirdly, This ſhews the reaſon why the Lord taketh ſuch leiſure to do his work; he doth not precipitate or thruſt on his deſigns, becauſe he may take what time he will.

God hath all time at his command.

Men bear ſway and rule over perſons and places: God only ruleth times. Man hath not one day in his power, not only not the day to come, but not the day preſent. Go to now (ſaith the Apoſtle James, Chap. 4. 13, 14.) ye that ſay to day, or to morrow we will go into ſuch a City, and continue there a year, and buy, and ſell, and get gain, whereas ye know not what ſhall be on the morrow. Nor indeed doth any man know whether he ſhall be on the morrow, or on all the day wherein he is. God can boaſt of to morrow, that is, of eternity, or of all time to come. Man cannot boaſt of to morrow, that is, of the next day, no nor of the the next time to come of the ſame day. Hence it is that man muſt haſten leſt he miſs his ſeaſon. When David had Saul at an advantage (1 Sam. 24. 5.) they about him adviſe him to make uſe of it, and not to let it ſlip, Behold the day of which the Lord ſaid unto thee, &c. Sir having ſuch a day, take hold of it; if you let this go, you may never ſee ſuch another. Time is no part of the dominion of Kings. So likewiſe Abiſhai counſels David upon the ſame advantage (1 Sam. 26. 8.) God hath delivered thy enemy into thine hand this day (let him go this day, and probably thou ſhalt never have the like day again) Now therefore let me ſmite him, I pray thee, with the ſpear, even to the earth at once, and I will not ſmite him the ſecond time, I can diſpatch him at one time, and poſſibly thou ſhalt not have a ſecond time. In a good work, it is good, yea, it is beſt to do our work at once, and not to expect (what we may, or may never have) a ſecond time, when we have a time: To day if ye will hear his voyce, harden not your hearts. He hath much hardneſs, but no wiſdom in his heart, who hopes to do that good to morrow, which he reſolves to neglect until to morrow, A wiſe man may hope to do that to morrow, which he cannot do to day; but it is higheſt folly to reſolve upon a neglect of any duty this day upon a hope of doing it next day. It is ſaid, Rev. 12. 6. Wo to the Inhabitants of the earth, becauſe the Devil is come down, having great wrath; (why ſo angry?) becauſe he knoweth that his time is but ſhort. When the Devil knows he hath but a little time, he will do as much work as he can, and do it preſently, he ſees all will ſcape out of his hands elſe. Only the Lord haſtens not, neither needeth he to haſten his work at any time upon this ground, becauſe he hath but a ſhort time. He can take what time he will, and make his day as long, and his dayes as many as himſelf pleaſeth, for the acting of his counſels, whether to puniſh or to ſhew mercy. And hence it is that he delayeth till wicked prophane ſpirits wonder, yea, ſcoff at his delay, and think, ſurely the Lord will never do any ſuch thing as he hath threatened or promiſed, becauſe he ſtayeth ſo long before he doth it; whereas indeed to him that inhabiteth eternity, deferment is no delay, though to us it ſeem ſo, whoſe times are meaſured out by inches and hours, by moments and by minutes. Thoſe prophane wretches (Iſa. 5. 19.) call the Lord, and provoke him to action; Let him make ſpeed and haſten his work, that we may ſee it. The Lord appears ſlow and ſlack to many men, but the Lord is not ſlack as ſome men count ſlackneſs (2 Pet. 3. 9.) Men think he is ſlack when he is only patient, and themſelves ignorant, That a thouſand years to the Lord are but as one day; God doth not meaſure time by our Pole, nor caſt it up by our Arithmetick. Eternity doth not only like the unjuſt Steward, bid us write fifty for an hundred, but one for a thouſand, and (which bears the diſproportion of divers hundreds in every one of that thouſand) one day for a thouſand years. Time is not only a ſmall thing, but nothing unto God. Mine age (ſaith David) is nothing unto thee (Pſal. 39. 5.) And if all Nations before him are as nothing, if they are counted to him leſs then nothing (Iſa. 40. 17.) Then not only the age of one man, but the ages of all men added together, are before him as nothing, and are counted to him leſs then nothing. Surely he cannot want time to do all things, before whom all times are nothing. He cannot want time to powr out his judgments, and to empty the Vials of his wrath upon wicked men, nor can he want time to fulfil his promiſes, and to make good every word of bleſſing which he hath ſpoken to, or concerning his own people. Wicked men! Do not ye hope? Godly men! Do not ye fear, God will not do what he hath ſaid, becauſe he hath not already done it? He hath not loſt his time or ſeaſon, becauſe he hath not accepted that which ye thought to be the time or ſeaſon. Chriſt warns his Diſciples (John 9. 4.) to make haſte about their work, for the night (namely of death) cometh, wherein no man can work; while you have the day, do your work, for I know what day yours is, your day will be gone, and the night will come, when you can work no more; but Gods day fears no night, whatever comes, he can do his work. The Preacher gives the ſame counſel upon the ſame ground (Eccleſ. 9.) Whatſoever thine hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might; lay hold upon the forelock of time, why? There is no wiſdom or counſel in the grave whither thou goeſt: When thou dieſt, there is an end of all thy working-time; do thy work well, for thou canſt not recall a day of thy life to mend thy work in, neither canſt thou work at all in that night of death. The Lords day knows nothing of a grave, nor is his Sun acquainted with going down; if he ſeems ſlack to his work, or ſlack at his work this day and the next, &c. Yet he hath another day at his call, and after that another and another, all which are to him but one day. Therefore he takes or leaves, defers or haſtens, comes or goes at pleaſure, Are thy dayes, O Lord, as mans dayes? Are thy years as the dayes of man? I know they are not.

But why doth Job make ſo many of theſe negative Queries?

The next words will anſwer,

Verſe 6. That thou enquireſt after mine iniquity, and ſearcheſt after my ſin.

Here's the reaſon of theſe former Queſtions, As if he had ſaid, Lord, ſurely thou needeſt not ſearch and examine me in this manner, ſeeing it is neither thus nor thus with thee; It is not good to thee to oppoſe or to deſpiſe the work of thy hands; thou haſt not eyes of fleſh or dayes of man.

That thou enquireſt after mine iniquity.

The Original ſignifies an enquiry two wayes. Firſt, By Word. Secondly, By Actions. By ſomewhat done, or by ſomewhat ſpoken. And it ſignifies both to do and ſpeak with great attention and heat of ſpirit. The word is alſo applied to thoſe enquiries which are made by torture, when the party is ſuſpected for concealment of the matter under enquiry. Which way of examination is called by the Latines, a bringing of a man to queſtion. That laſt Engine which was invented to ſupport the tottering ſtate of Rome, wherein poor ſouls are put to extream tortures, to force confeſſion or ſelf-accuſations (that I ſay) is called the Inquiſition, and the Judges Inquiſitors; becauſe inquiſition or enquiry (according to the word of the Text) is there made after the iniquities of men, after their ſuppoſed hereſies and heretical practices againſt the Romiſh Church. Job ſeems to allude to ſuch wayes of examination, why doth the Lord enquire after mine iniquity by ſore judgments and terrible afflictions, by ſtrong pains and mighty terrors?

At loweſt, the word ſignifieth a diligent ſearch or ſcrutinie with utmoſt induſtry; induſtry, even ſuch as they uſe, who maliciouſly hunt for the precious life. The Lord ſaith to Moſes, return into Egypt, for all the men that ſought thy life are dead (Exod. 4, 19.) It is this word. So (1 Sam. 22. 23.) Abide thou with me (ſaith David to Abiathar) fear not; for he that ſeeks my life, ſeeketh thy life. When revenge makes a ſearch, it is a diligent ſearch; malice hath a piercing eye, and enquires narrowly. That gracious promiſe is thus expreſſed (Jer. 50. 20.) In thoſe dayes the iniquity of Iſrael ſhall be ſought for, and there ſhall be none; and the ſins of Judah, and they ſhall not be found. Job complains here, Thou enquireſt after mine iniquity; there the promiſe is, In thoſe dayes the iniquity of Iſrael ſhall be ſought for, or, enquired after, and it ſhall not be found; that is, ſuppoſe the iniquity of Iſrael ſhould be ſought after, ſuppoſe there ſhould be an Hue and Cry ſent out after the ſin of my people; yet, ſaith the Lord, it ſhall not be found: why? what hinders the finding of it, or where ſhall it be hid? The next words reſolve the doubt; It ſhall be hid in the pardoning mercies of God. I the Lord will pardon thoſe whom I reſerve; The Lord would give ſuch a full and free pardon of ſin, that what ſearch and enquiry ſoever ſhould be made after it, there ſhould not be ſo much as any ſcar or mark, not ſo much as any print or ſtain left to be a witneſs of their ſin, or a plea for their condemnation. Anſwerable to that (Rom. 8. 1.) There is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Jeſus. Job ſpeaks as if God were ſo far from hiding his iniquity in a pardon, when it came to be ſearched for, that himſelf ſearched for it, as if he were reſolved not to pardon it. Wherefore is it that thou enquireſt after mine iniquity, and ſearcheſt after my ſin?

Both parts of the Verſe meet in the ſame ſence. The word (Daraſh) in the latter, being often applied as the former, to a judiciary ſearch. Yet ſome diſtinguiſh them ſtrictly, thus; the former to ſignifie an enquiry by recalling to memory, or the examining of our ſelves; Thou enquireſt after mine iniquity, that is, thou askeſt thy ſelf whether thou haſt not obſerved ſome iniquity in me; thou doſt (as it were) rub thy memory, and take an account of what is laid up there concerning me. Memory is the ſtore-houſe or treaſury, the record or regiſter of the ſoul. Books are a Memory without us, and Memory is a Book within us. Then the other word ſignifies ſearching by examination of the ſuſpected party in either of thoſe wayes before explained. The Lord tells the Jews (whoſe wickedneſs was grown immodeſt, and roſe a ſtep beyond hypocriſie) that he needed not not ſearch after their ſins. In thy ſkirts is found the blood of the ſouls of poor innocents, I have not found it by ſecret ſearch, Jer. 2. 34. As noting, that the Lord doth ſometimes make a ſecret ſearch, and that there are ſome who hide their ſins, ſome who ſit cloſe upon, and cover them, as Rachel did the ſtoln Idols, when Laban came to ſearch Jacob's ſtuff; that there are ſome who make excuſes, and Apologies for them; to theſe the Lord comes with a ſecret ſearch for their iniquity. The word in Jeremy ſignifies digging; I have not found it by digging: Some put their ſins under ground; only deep digging can find theſe out: Job enquires of the Lord why he made ſuch a ſearching after his iniquities, why he was ſo curious in looking into every corner, and behind every door, to find out the rubbiſh of his life, ſeeing the cloſeſt ſin is as open to his eye, as the Sun at noon-day; and beſides, God knew that Job had no cloſe ſin, no darling beloved ſin in his boſom, no ſweet morſels of any forbidden fruit under his tongue. He tells the Lord as much in plain terms, in the next words; Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked. As we uſe to ſay to a man that makes a buſie ſearch after any thing, either in a place or about a perſon, where there is no probability that it ſhould be found; or when we ſuppoſe the perſon ſearching cannot have the leaſt ground of perſwaſion, that the thing is there, or with him; in ſuch a caſe (I ſay) a man will anſwer, why do ye make ſuch a ſearch? ye know what ye look for, is not here; ye know well enough I have it not; ye have ſome other end in this. Thus Job ſpeaks here: Lord, why doſt thou ſearch for mine iniquity? Thou knoweſt well enough that I am not wicked, There is certainly ſomewhat elſe in the wind. Shew me wherefore thou contendeſt with me.

Sententia plana eſt, non eſt neceſſe ut in peccata mea curioſius inquiras, cum Deus ſis cui nota ſunt & perſpecta omnia, etiam interiora cordis. Bol.

Take a Note or two from theſe words, That thou enquireſt after mine iniquity, &c.

First, God knoweth us before he ſearcheth us.

Job profeſſes of himſelf as a Judge (chap. 29. 16.) The Cauſe which I knew not, I ſearched out; but God ſearches out thoſe Cauſes which he knows. God doth not ſearch us, that he may know us, or to inform himſelf, but to make us know him and our ſelves. There are not many who know themſelves at all; there are none who know themſelves enough. The Lord ſearches us, that we may ſearch our ſelves. There are not many who know God at all; there are none who know God enough. God ſearches us, that we may ſeek after him. By every affliction the Lord would make us know our ſelves and Himſelf better. It is ſaid of Manaſſeh, when he was in the Briars, That, then Manaſſeh knew the Lord; and then (doubtleſs) he began to know himſelf. The ſame light that brings us to the knowledge of what God is, brings us alſo to the knowledge of what our ſelves are. Secondly obſerve, Afflictions are Searchers.

Thou ſearcheſt for mine iniquity, ſaith Job. Job ſuppoſed that the Lord came to try him, and to find out the bottom of his heart: When God ſmites our Bodies or our Eſtates, he ſearcheth our hearts, and maketh enquiry in our lives. The Prophet threatens the Jews (Zeph. 1. 12.) That God would come and ſearch Jeruſalem with Candles; That is, as ſome interpret, he would cauſe the Chaldeans to ſearch for their moſt hidden treaſures, and find them out. Others underſtand it of God himſelf, ſearching Jeruſalem. But God is not like the Woman in the Parable, who had loſt her Groat, he needeth to Candlelight to find out the loſt Groat, or to find out the filthineſs that is in the moſt ſecret corners of the heart. The meaning then is, that God would ſearch Jeruſalem, that is, the people of Jeruſalem, as exactly, as if they were ſearched with a Candle: he would bring forth their ſecret ſins, and all their hidden abominations. This ſearch was was made by thoſe terrible and ſore Judgments brought upon Jeruſalem. God kindled a fire of affliction, and ſearched them by the light of that fire; Troubles are as ſo many Candles lighted up to ſearch our ſelves by, and they will be as ſo many fires kindled to conſume us with, if we ſearch not our ſelves. At this time God is ſearching England with Candles. The Prophet deſcribing the great ſorrows of the Jews, in their Captivity, directs us what to do (Lam. 3. 40.) Let us ſearch and try our wayes. When God is ſearching us, it is high time for us to ſearch our ſelves. It is ſad when God is ſearching for our ſins, if we are not ſearching for them too; and it is more ſad, if when God cometh to ſearch for our ſins, we be found hiding our ſins. Theſe are ſearching times; God is ſearching, let us ſearch too; elſe we may be ſure (as Moſes (Numb. 32.) tells the people of Iſrael) our ſins will find us out. They who endeavour not to find their ſins, ſhall be found by their ſins; Our iniquity will enquire after us, if we enquire not after it. But what if iniquity enquire after us? What? If iniquity enquire after us, it will find us; and if iniquity find us, trouble will find us; yea, if iniquity find us alone without Chriſt, Hell and Death will find us. If Iniquity find any man, he hath reaſon enough to ſay unto it (what Ahab ſaid to Eliah without reaſon) Haſt thou found me, O mine enemy? The beſt of men have reaſon to look what is evil in them, when God brings evil upon them, or wraps them up in common evils. They who have no wickedneſs in them to caſt them under condemnation, have yet ſin enough in them to make them ſmart under correction. Though Job could ſay from the teſtimony of a pure Conſcience, Thou knoweſt I am not wicked; yet he durſt not ſay, thou knoweſt I have not ſinned. Job acknowledged he was ſinful, and God knew he was not wicked. In ſearching after iniquity, he found not hypocriſie; yea, he knew he was not an hypocrite before he ſearched him; ſo it follows,

Quum minutatim agnoſcam de peccatis populi, & cum eo inibo rationes mea accuratiſſimè, ut ſolent qui adhibitis lucernis perluſtrant omnia. Jun.

Verſe 7. Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked, and there is none that can deliver out of thine hand.

This ſeventh verſe containeth one of the chiefeſt queſtions of that grand controverſie handled in this Book, whether Job were a wicked man or no? Satan repreſented him for ſuch to God; and therefore called that he might be tried; the Lord tried him upon that challenge, and he was brought to a grievous trial; Job appeals to the Lords own knowledge, and is contented to ſtand or fall according to his determination, being yet aſſured that he ſtood right in the thoughts of God. Thou knoweſt I am not wicked.

Continet verſus ſeptimus id quod præcipuè in hac cauſa & diſputatione ſpectandum eſt, ſc. Jobũ non eſſe improbum. Pin.

Thou knoweſt.] The Hebrew is rendered word for word, thus, It is upon thy knowledge; or, It is upon thy know that I am not wicked: As if he had ſaid, Thou haſt not this knowledge from without, thou doſt not ground thy judgment concerning the ſtate of any man upon what others ſay of him, upon reports or hear-ſayes; no, thy knowledge is from thy ſelf; thou knoweſt upon thine own knowledge, thine is an internal, an immediate, and ſo a perfect, an infallible knowledge, and that tells thee of me, I am not wicked.

לע רעתך Apud ſcire tuum eſt. Multo plus dicit per hanc phraſin apud ſcire tuum eſt, quam ſi diceret, tu ſcis In ſcientia tua eſt, penes notitiam tuam eſt, non aliunde ſed ex te optimè noſti me non eſſe improbum. Druſ.

That I am not wicked.] He doth not ſay, Thou knoweſt that I am not a ſinner; or, Thou knoweſt that I have not ſinned; Job had no ſuch opinion of himſelf, and he knew God had no ſuch knowledge of him. There is a great difference between being a ſinner and a wicked man. The beſt of Saints while they are here upon the earth, are ſinners, but the worſt of Saints, even here upon earth, are not wicked; they have a new nature, they are new creatures, regenerate and born again by the Word and Spirit, therefore they are not wicked; though much ſin be in them, yet no wickedneſs is in them; and they are denominated from their better part; not wicked from their remaining corruption, but holy from their received renovation. Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked.

Hæret in regenitis peccatum, improbi tamen dici nec poſſunt, nec debent. Merc.

Again, The word in the Original being in the Verb, we may tranſlate (as many do) Thou knoweſt that I have not done wickedly. But the ſence is the ſame; for every man is in doing as he is in being: He that is not wicked in his ſtate, cannot act wickedly. So we muſt underſtand that of the Apoſtle (1 John 3. 8.) He that committeth ſin, is of the Devil.

כי לא ארשע Quod non impiè egerim. Mon.

Thirdly, To be wicked, is ordinarily oppoſed to our being juſt; and ſo, Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked, is, Thou knoweſt that I am not condemned or caſt at thy Bar for a wicked man. I am not condemned, but juſtified in thy ſight. In which ſence the word is uſed in that Prophetick curſe againſt Judas, who betrayed Chriſt (Pſal. 109. 7.) When he ſhall be judged, let him be condemned; ſo we render it: The Hebrew is elegantly tranſlated thus, When he ſhall be judged, let him go out wicked; that is, let him go out from before the Bar and Tribunal of his Judges, a condemned man; or, Let him proceed wicked, let that be his title and his honour;

Exeat improbus.

Improbus & juſtus verba ſunt forenſia. Druſ.

nour; wicked and juſt are Judiciary or Court-terms, equivalent with juſtified and condemned.

Some join theſe words with the Verſe going before; Doſt thou ſearch into mine iniquity that thou maiſt know whether I am wicked? As if he had ſaid, Lord, thou needeſt not make enquiry about this thing; for as I am not wicked, ſo thou art not ignorant: thou haſt not afflicted me, becauſe I am wicked; nor haſt thou ſearched me, becauſe thou art ignorant; Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked. Hence obſerve, Firſt, That, The Lord knows the ſtate of every man, and of every thing exactly.

The foundation of God ſtands ſure, having this ſeal, The Lord knoweth them that are his (2 Tim. 2. 19.) And he knoweth them that are not his; not his by the grace of election and regeneration: for all are his by the right of creation and dominion. Thus he knows all the fowls of the Mountains, and the beaſts of the field are his (Pſal. 50. 11.) David gives this glory to God in his own caſe (Pſal. 139. 11.) O Lord, thou haſt ſearched me and known me: God did not ſearch to know him, but he ſearched him and knew him. The knowledge of God was not a conſequent, but a concomitant of that ſearch; or it is ſpoken in oppoſition to man; a man may ſearch his neighbour, and yet not know him. There are depths and turnings in the heart of man, which no man can reach or find out; but God hath a thread which will lead him into all, and through all the Labyrinths, a Line which will ſound all the depths of man. Hence David makes a particular of the knowledge of God; God knew him in all that he was, and in all that he did. Thou knoweſt my down-lying and my upriſing, and thou art acquainted with all my wayes. God is the Judge of all men, therefore he knows all men, Heb. 4. 13. There is no creature which is not manifeſt in his ſight, all things are naked and open before him with whom we have to do. The Apoſtle by two Metaphors in theſe words, teaches us, that as the out-members and lineaments of the Body, together with their beauty or deformity, are clearly ſeen when the Body is naked and uncloathed; that as the bowels and entrals of the body, together with their ſoundneſs or diſeaſes are perfectly diſcovered, when the body is diſſected or cut up by the hand of a skilful Anatomiſt; even ſo are we in all we do, and in all we are perſectly known; or as the ſame Apoſtle ſpeaks (2 Cor. 5. 11.) manifeſt unto God, even manifeſt with as much clearneſs to the knowledge of God, as the light is to the eye of man. He knows, 1. Our perſons. 2. Our actions. 3. He knoweth the manner of our actions. 4. He knoweth with what hearts we act. 5. He knoweth not only the means we uſe, but the ends we propoſe in every action. 6. He knoweth what we have been, as well as what we are. And, 7. He knoweth what we will be, as well as what we are or have been; he knoweth what we have done, as well as what we do; and he knoweth what we will do, as well as what we do or have already done. He ſeeth all creatures in the Glaſs of his own counſels through and through. His eye hath thorowlights in all parts of the world, and in the hearts of all men in the world.

And ſeeing man cannot be hid from God, it is the vaineſt attempt for any man to think of hiding himſelf from God; yet that's not only the attempt, but the hope of many, who while they do what they would not have ſeen, pleaſe themſelves with this conceit, that they are not ſeen in doing it, or that they can ſecure what they have done from being ſeen. We learned this of our firſt Parents, in whom the firſt thing that appeared next their ſhame, after they had ſinned, was the hiding of their ſin. Man loveth to draw a curtain between God and himſelf, to raiſe up artificial darkneſs, and to walk in thick clouds (as he vainly hopes) undiſcovered.

Again, Doth God know us? Then let us labour to know our ſelves. God knows who are wicked, many are wicked, and know it not. It is a woful miſtake, when we think our ſelves to be in a good eſtate, and God knows us to be in a bad eſtate: It is a wrong to God and our ſelves, when God knows us to be in a good eſtate, and we think our ſelves to be in a bad eſtate; but it is far worſe, when we think our eſtate good, and God knows it to be bad. We ſhould be acquainted with our condition, leſt we (like Laodicea) flatter our ſelves into an opinion that we are rich and cloathed, and have need of nothing, when God knows we are poor and naked, and wanting all things.

Secondly, Obſerve from the elegancy of the Hebrew expreſſion, It is upon thy knowledge that I am not wicked.

God knoweth all things in and of himſelf

This gives glory to God, and lifteth him up above the Creature in the fulneſs of his knowledge. Men who have the greateſt knowledge, and vaſteſt comprehenſions of things, yet have not that knowledge in and from themſelves, they fetch it in by borrowed helps, and glad they can have it ſo too. It coſts man a great deal of travel and ſtudy to make himſelf maſter of a little knowledge (Job 12. 12.) With the ancient is wiſdom, and in length of dayes is underſtanding. Some indeed get wiſdom and underſtanding, and are owners of a vaſt ſtock and treaſure of knowledge; but when? but how? When they are old, when they have had long experience, and have ſtudied hard for it: With the ancient is wiſdom, and in length of dayes is underſtanding: Thus men get knowledge. But mark what is ſaid of God in the next words (verſ. 13.) But with him (meaning God) is wiſdom and ſtrength; he hath counſel and underſtanding. With him it is, and he hath it. The Lord doth not grow more knowing by years, nor doth his underſtanding mend by the multitude of dayes; though he be the Ancient of dayes, yet it is not his antiquity which hath got him this knowledge; his knowledge is in him, and with him, and from himſelf: he fetches not his knowledge from ſence, nor doth he take it up by information; he learns it not by demonſtration raiſed from the things themſelves, nor by the collation of one thing with another. He doth not know this to be ſo, becauſe that is ſo, but all things are ſo, becauſe he knows them. He knows all; 1. Fully, not to halves. 2. Certainly, not probably. 3. Actually, not poſſibly. 4. At once, not ſucceſſively; as not one thing by another, ſo not one thing after another. Such are the eminencies and tranſcendencies of the knowledge of God.

The Scripture ſpeaks ſometimes as if God derived his knowledge from report, or as if he did not know whether a people were wicked or no, till he had enquired. When the new world was building their Babel, the Lord ſaid, Let us go down to ſee the City (Gen. 11. 5.) And when Sodom was burning in luſt, the Lord reſolved, I will go down and ſee whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, which is come unto me; and if not, I will know (Gen. 18. 21.)

In both thoſe places of Scripture God comes down to our capacity, but he comes not down to any place in the world. He needs not come any whither who is every where. God ſpeaks after the manner of men; but he acts not after the manner of men. God gives us an example what we ſhould do, he doth not work after our example. Leſt we ſhould judge before we ſee, God ſaith I will go down and ſee, before I judge; leſt we ſhould cenſure one another upon fames and common cries without further enquiry, whether it be ſo or no, therefore the Lord ſaith, I will go down and ſee whether they have done altogether according to the cry that is come unto me. God knew Sodom was wicked, before he came down, but he came down to make it known that he knew it.

As thoſe Scriptures ſeem to import that God knew not how wicked the Builders of Babel were, or the dwellers in Sodom, till he took pains to enquire; ſo another Scripture imports, that he did not know Abraham was a godly man, till he made an experiment of it, by putting him upon that hard piece of obedience, the offering up of his Son; Now I know thou feareſt me (Gen. 22. 12.) As if the Lord had collected his knowledge of what Abraham was, from what Abraham did. But that teſtimony of God, Now I know, is but now I have made it known; or, now I know that in the fruit, which I knew before in the root; now I ſee my fear in thy works, as before I ſaw it in thy faith. That place (Deut. 8. 2.) bears a like ſence; where Moſes beſpeaks Iſrael thus; Thou ſhalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee theſe forty years in the wilderneſs to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldeſt keep his Commandments or no.

The Lord needed not forty years, no, nor one minutes experience to make up his thoughts concerning that people; he knew what they were at firſt ſight, and what they would prove (even a ſtubborn, an unbelieving, and a backſliding people) before they were. God proved them, not to know what was in their hearts, but that we might know it; that, what he knew by his internal, immediate inſpection, others alſo might know by external obſervation. It wou'd not have been believed that they were ſo bad, if God had not drawn it out by that forty years variety of his diſpenſations towards them. Or Moſes deſcribes God after the manner of men, who prove things, that they may know them, whereas indeed God knows, and then proves them.

Thirdly, Conſidering how Job comes in with this aſſurance [Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked] to relieve himſelf in his diſtreſs, we may obſerve,

> That, It is matter of higheſt conſolation to the Saints, to know and remember that God knows them.

That God knows their hearts and lives, is the joy of their hearts and lives. How rejoycingly doth David ſpeak (Pſal. 139. 1, 2.) O Lord, thou haſt ſearched me and known me, thou knoweſt my down-ſitting and mine up-riſing, &c. He ſeems to be as glad that God knew him, as that God would ſave him. My witneſs is in heaven, and my record is on high, was Job's retort again, when his friends ſcorned him (chap. 16. 19.) There are no miſtakes in God; he will give right evidence, as a witneſs; and a righteous ſentence, as Judge.

Again, That God knows, aſſures us,

Firſt, That what we have done, ſhall not be forgotten; God is not unrighteous to forget our work and labour of love, &c. Heb. 6. 10. It aſſures us,

Secondly, That we ſhall not be miſs-interpreted for what we have done. The reaſon why many men have ſo ill an opinion of others, is, becauſe they have ſo little knowledge of them. Ignorance makes as corrupt gloſſes, as unſound deciſions upon perſons and actions, as it doth up-Texts or Queſtions. Some pervert knowingly and againſt light, but moſt pervert ignorantly and for want of light. God knows us perfectly, and he never acts againſt his knowledge. It aſſures us,

Thirdly, That we ſhall be well accepted and rewarded. Though men make ill requital, and pay in bad, yea, in baſe coyn; yet every man ſhall receive of God according to what he is, and what his works are (Gen. 4. 7.) If thou doſt well, ſhalt thou not be accepted?

Laſtly, It is a comfort to us, while we are uncertain about our own eſtates, to know that God knoweth us. God hath a better opinion of ſome men then they have of themſelves. Some do not think, but judge and conclude themſelves wicked, when God knoweth that they are not wicked. The foundation of God ſtandeth ſure, having this ſeal, The Lord knoweth who are his.

Fourthly, Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked. Hence obſerve,

> To do wickedly, or to be wicked, is inconſiſtent with Grace.

If Job had been a wicked man, he had been a loſt man. Sin is not inconſiſtent with Grace, but wickedneſs is.

But you will ſay, What is wickedneſs? And when is a man ſo ſinful that he is to be numbered among the wicked? To clear that, becauſe Job ventures all upon it.

I anſwer; Firſt, In every wicked man ſin reigneth, that is, ſin hath not only a being in him, but dominion over him; he yieldeth ready and free obedience to it, as to his natural Lord: not a forced and involuntary obedience only, as to a Tyrant. Our committing of ſin gives not the rule to ſin; but our ſubmitting to it. As a man may do many good things, and yet Grace not reign and rule in his heart; ſo it is poſſible for a man to do many evil things, and yet not have ſin rule in his heart. A man may lay by the actings of a ſin, and yet that be a reigning ſin; and a man may fall into the act of ſin, and yet that no reigning ſin. The reign of ſin or of grace are chiefly ſeen in that profeſſed ſubjection or reſignation of our ſelves to the dictates and commands of grace or ſin. No man can be at once Gods ſon, and ſins ſervant; no, nor at once a ſervant to both.

Secondly, A wicked man is a cuſtomary ſinner, he driveth a trade in ſin. A godly man (poſſibly) may commit the ſame ſin again, yet the cuſtom is broken, becauſe he putteth in a plea againſt ſin, and often moveth God for power, not only againſt, but over it; if he attain not this bleſſed victory, yet he ceaſeth not to complain, and pray, O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from this body of death? When ſhall I be delivered from this burden and bondage of corruption? When ſhall it once be? O that it might once be! Wicked men are ſo far from pleading againſt, that they uſually plead for their ſins; and labour more to make excuſes and apologies for them, then to get power and victory over them. They inſtead of making preparation to reſiſt the luſts of the fleſh, make proviſion for the fleſh to fulfil the luſts thereof.

Thirdly, A wicked man preſerves in himſelf a purpoſe to ſin, while he ſeems to pray and proteſt againſt his ſin. He is (as Auguſtine confeſſed of himſelf before his converſion) afraid God ſhould grant his prayer, while he prayeth that his corruptions may be mortified. He may put up prayers againſt ſin, but he puts up no deſires againſt it. As cuſtom is the rode of our lives, ſo purpoſes are the rode of our hearts. What a mans purpoſes are, ſuch the movings of his heart are (Iſa. 56. 12.) To morrow ſhall be as to day, and much more abundant, ſay they in their beaſtly abuſe of the creatures; we have been drunk to day, and hope to be more to morrow. (Ezek. 11. 21.) Their heart doth go after the heart of their abominable things, that is, the inclinations and reſolutions of their hearts go or walk after their abominations. A godly man ſinneth, but he doth not purpoſe to ſin; his purpoſes are not to ſin, holineſs is his way; and as ſin is it ſelf a by-way, ſo it is beſides his way. The honeſt Traveller intends to keep ſtraight on to his journeyes end; if he miſs his way at any time, he miſſes his purpoſe. The Robber skulks about in by-wayes, and comes not into the Rode, but to find and ſeize upon his prey. Peter denied Chriſt, but did Peter purpoſe to deny Chriſt? No, Peter purpoſed not to deny Chriſt; yea, Peter promiſed not to deny Chriſt. Peter reſolved that he would die rather then deny Chriſt, and yet he denied Chriſt; Peter did not go out and make a bargain with the Scribes and Phariſees, as Judas did, to betray his Maſter. Peter was betrayed when he denied his Maſter. Peter was ſuddenly attached with a violent temptation, and arreſted with baſe fear. He did not deny Chriſt becauſe he reſolved to do it, but becauſe he reſolved ſo much not to do it, without due dependance upon Chriſt for power not to do it. A godly man may have ſome deliberations about ſin, yet no reſolutions. He may deliberate upon the acting of ſome ſin, when the occaſion is given, but he doth not deliberate upon the finding of occaſions to provoke him to the acting of ſin. David did not go up to his houſe-top to invite an incentive of Luſt, though he there met with one.

Fourthly, Wickedneſs carrieth clearneſs, yea, fulneſs of conſent in ſin. A wicked man may have many checks at ſin from his Conſcience, but he hath none from his Will. And a wicked man may have ſome motions to good from his Conſcience, but he hath none from his Will. When a wicked man abſtains from doing evil he wills it; and when he doth good, he wills it not. In Nature, the act and the conſent go both to evil; I do evil, and I will do it, is the ſtubborn voyce of corrupt Nature. In Grace, though the act goes ſometimes to evil, yet the conſent doth not. The evil which I would not, that I do, is the mournful voyce of Grace. In Glory, both act and conſent go to good, and neither of them to any evil. The good which I will, I do; the evil which I would not, I do not; ſhall be for ever the triumphant voyce of Glory. When the Apoſtle Paul (Rom. 7.) bewailed his own bondage under corruption, he yet profeſſed that whatever evil he did, he conſented not to do it. And though there may be ſome kind of conſent in the ſinning of a godly man, yet it is not ſuch a conſent as is in a wicked man: For as a wicked man, though he may ſometimes ſhew his willingneſs, and give his conſent to do good, to hear the Word, to pray, &c. Yet it is not a clear, a full and free conſent; the will never comes up heartily in it: ſo there may be ſome kind of conſent, a negative conſent in a godly man doing evil, he may not (as to that act) reſiſt or deny; as when a Queſtion is put to the vote, a man who doth not affirm, may be ſaid to give ſome conſent, when he ſuſpends his voyce, and doth not openly oppoſe.

Thus a godly man when a temptation cometh, never gives a direct yea of conſent, yet ſometimes not giving his no, there is a kind of conſent, a middle act, not a clear or determinate act of conſent. Now a wicked man, as he is taken captive by the Devil at his will (2 Tim. 2. 26.) that is, at Satans will, the Devil takes him captive when he pleaſeth: ſo alſo at his own will; He is pleaſed to be taken captive by the Devil.

Eram gratis malus & malitiæ meæ cauſa nulla erat niſi malitia. Auguſt. *l.*3. *confeſſ. c.*4.

Fifthly, Where there is a wickedneſs in ſinning, there is delight in ſin. Pure delight in ſin is impureſt wickedneſs. To diſobey for nought is the moſt wicked diſobedience, as to ſerve God for nought is the moſt holy ſervice. What is it which ſheweth the eminency of grace? Is it not the joy which the ſoul finds in the wayes of grace? When we can delight in the Law of God, as his Law, abſtracted from ends and fruits. When it is meat and drink to us to do the will of God, though we ſuffer hunger, and are ready to ſtarve in doing it, here is godlineſs at the higheſt: and when any delight in ſin as ſin, as contrary to the will of God, abſtracted from ends and fruits, here is wickedneſs at the higheſt. To act in ſuch a degree of ſin, is inconſiſtent with any degree of grace.

Job appeals to the teſtimony of God, that he had not ſinned in any of theſe degrees, while he ſaith, Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked.

Fifthly obſerve, A godly man may know that he is ſo, and be confident of it.

He that ſaith, God knoweth he is not wicked, knoweth it himſelf. For though the Lord hath a knowledge of us beyond ours, though he knows us, better then we know our ſelves, yet no man can tell the Lord, Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked, but he who knows that he is not. The excellency of our condition conſiſts in being godly, the comfort of it conſiſts in knowing that we are godly. When David offers himſelf to the tryal (Pſal. 139. 24.) Search me, O Lord, and ſee if there be any way of wickedneſs in me; He ſpeaks not as doubting whether he were wicked or no, but as being aſſured that he was not. As if he had ſaid, There are many weakneſſes in me I know, but I know not of any wickedneſs. He that offers himſelf to Gods ſearch for his wickedneſs, gives a ſtrong argument of his own uprightneſs. The beſt of the Saints may be at a loſs ſometimes for their aſſurances, and not know they are good. They may ſtand ſometimes hovering between heaven and earth, yea, between heaven and hell, as uncertain to which they ſhall be accounted. Yet many of the Saints are fully perſwaded they are Saints, and ſit with Chriſt in heavenly places, while they are wandering here upon the earth. A godly man may know this two wayes;

First, By the workings of Grace in his heart.

Secondly, By the teſtimony of the Spirit with his heart.

Firſt, By the workings of grace in his heart (1 Joh. 2. 3.) Hereby we know that we know him, if we keep his Commandments: and (Chap. 3. 14.) We know that we are paſſed from death to life, becauſe we love the brethren. There may be ſuch workings of grace in the heart, as may amount to an evidence of grace. What our being is, is diſcernable in our workings. The word is as clear as light, that our juſtification may have a light or evidence in our ſanctification, though no cauſe or foundation there. Grace is the image of Chriſt ſtamped upon the ſoul, and they who reflecting upon their ſouls, ſee the image of Chriſt there, may be ſure that Chriſt is theirs. Chriſt hath given all himſelf to thoſe to whom he hath given this part of himſelf.

Secondly, This may be known by the teſtimony of the Spirit with the heart (2 Cor. 5. 5.) He that hath wrought us for the ſelf ſame thing is God. God ſets up a frame of holineſs in every believer, He hath wrought us; and how are we aſſured that he hath? Who alſo hath given us the earneſt of his Spirit. The graces of the Spirit are a real earneſt of the Spirit, yet they are not alwayes an evidential earneſt; therefore an earneſt is often ſuperadded to our graces. There is a three-fold work of the Spirit.

Firſt, To conveigh and plant grace in the ſoul.

Secondly, To act and help us to exerciſe the graces, which are planted there.

Thirdly, To ſhine upon and enlighten thoſe graces, or to give an earneſt of thoſe graces; This laſt work the Spirit fulfils two wayes.

Firſt, By arguments and inferences, which is a mediate work.

Secondly, By preſence and influence, which is an immediate work. This the Apoſtle calls witneſs-bearing, (1 Joh. 5. 8.) There are three that bear witneſs in earth, The Spirit, and the Water, and the Blood. The Spirit brings in the witneſs of the Water and of the Blood, which is his mediate work; but beſides and above theſe he gives a diſtinct witneſs of his own, which is his immediate work, and is in a way of peculiarity and tranſcendency, called the witneſs of the Spirit. Hence that of the Apoſtle Paul, We have not received the ſpirit of the world, but we have received the Spirit which us of Chriſt, that we may know the things that are freely given us of God, 1 Cor. 2. 12. The things freely given may be received by us, and yet the receit of them not known to us, therefore we receive the Spirit, that we may know what is given us, and what we have received. The Spirit doth (as it were) put his hand to our receits, and his ſeal alſo, whence he is ſaid, To ſeal us up to the day of redemption, Epheſ. 4. 30.

Sixthly obſerve, A godly man dares appeal to God himſelf, that he is not wicked.

He dares ſtand before God to juſtifie his ſincerity, though he dares not ſtand to juſtifie himſelf before God: Job had often laid all thoughts of his own righteouſneſs in the duſt, but he alwayes ſtands up for his own uprightneſs. God is my witneſs (ſaith the Apoſtle Paul, Rom. 9. 1.) whom I ſerve in my ſpirit in the Goſpel of his Son; I ſerve God in my ſpirit, and God knows that I do ſo, I dare appeal unto him that it is ſo, God is my witneſs. When Chriſt put that queſtion, & drove it home upon Peter thrice, Simon, loveſt thou me? Lord, (ſaith he) Thou knoweſt all things, Thou knoweſt that I love thee (Joh. 21.) as if he had ſaid, I will not give teſtimony of my ſelf, thou ſhalt not have it upon my word, but upon thine own knowledge. It were eaſie for me to ſay, Maſter I love thee with all my heart, with all my ſoul; but I refer my ſelf to thy own boſom, Thou knoweſt I love thee. So when Hezekiah lay (as he thought) upon his death-bed, he turned himſelf to the wall, deſiring God to look upon the integrity of his life, Lord, remember how I have walked before thee in truth (Iſa. 38. 3.) I do not go to the world for their good word of me, I reſt not in what my Subjects or Neighbor Princes ſay of me, Lord, it is enough for me, that what I have been, and what I am, is laid up ſafe in the treaſury of thy thoughts. This brings ſtrong conſolation, when we take not up the teſtimony of men, nor reſt in the good opinion of our brethren, but can have God himſelf to make affidavit, or bear witneſs with us and for us. That ſuch a man will ſay, I am an honeſt man, that ſuch a man will give his word for me, is cold comfort; but when the ſoul can ſay, God will give his word for me, The Lord knows that I am not wicked; here's enough to warm our hearts when the love of the world is waxen ſo cold, and their tongues ſo frozen with uncharitableneſs, that they will not ſpeak a good word of us, how much good ſoever they know by us.

Seventhly, Conſider the condition wherein Job was, when he ſpake this, he was upon the rack, and as it were, under an inquiſition, God laid his hand extream hard upon him, yet at that time, even then he ſaith, Lord, thou knoweſt that I am not wicked. Hence obſerve,

A man of an upright heart, and a good conſcience, will not be brought to think that God hath ill thoughts of him, how much evil ſo ever God brings upon him.

The actings of God toward us are often full of changes and turnings, but the thoughts of God never change. A ſoul may be afflicted till he is weary of himſelf, yet he knows God is not weary of him. Whomſoever he hath once made good, he cannot but for ever eſteem good; and all ſuch a mans afflictions, are either to ſhew how good God hath made him, or to make him better.

Eightly, Job was under as bad thoughts of man, as (almoſt) any man ever was, when he ſpake thus to God, Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked. Hence obſerve,

That all the hard cenſures and miſconſtructions of men, cannot beat an upright heart out of this hold, that God loveth him, and hath a good opinion of him.

Let men think what they will of him, and judge him as ſeverely as they pleaſe; this moves him not at all to think that God judges him ſo too. He can ſee the love of God through all the anger of the creatures. He likes not his condition the better, becauſe ſome men tell him it is good; nor the worſe, becauſe any man tells him it is ill, while he finds himſelf bottomed upon the free grace of God, and cheared with the clearneſs of his own integrity. The gates of Hell ſhall not (much leſs ſhall the uncharitableneſs of men) prevail againſt ſuch a man. Happy is he, who can ſay unto God, Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked, while men are ſaying, thou art wicked. And how miſerable is he, whoſe heart tells him he is wicked, though men ſay, ſurely thou art good. If our heart condemn us, God is greater then our heart, and knoweth all things (1 *Joh.*3.20.) Doth conſcience tell you that you are wicked? God can tell you ſo much more. It is a woful thing for any man to be under the juſt condemnation of his own heart, though it is more woful to be under the flatteries of his own heart. It is bad enough to be daubed by others with untempered morter, it is far worſe to be a ſelf-dauber; No man hath cauſe to rejoyce in what himſelf, or be troubled at what others ſay of him, unleſs God ſay ſo too.

Two things are further obſervable from theſe words;

Firſt, There is no medium between a godly and a wicked man.

Every man is one of theſe two. Some are called civil honeſt men; many conceit that theſe are good men indeed, and not a few, that theſe are in a middle ſtate between good and evil: but the truth is, there is nothing between good and evil, light and darkneſs: there is no medium of participation between theſe extreams. Solomon (Eccleſ. 9. 2.) ſets all men in two orders, All things come alike unto all, there is one event to the righteous and to the wicked, to the good, to the clean, and to the unclean, to him that ſweareth, and to him that feareth an oath. Note by the way, he doth not put the diſtinction betwen him that ſweareth, and him that ſweareth not, but between him that ſweareth, and him that feareth an oath. There are many who are not ſwearers (ſwearing is deboyſery, and ſo inconſiſtent with civility) who yet do not fear an oath. It is better to fear to do evil, then not to do evil. This diviſion runs through the whole world. Good and evil (in a remiſs degree) mingle in the ſame perſon, but no mans perſon is in a middle ſtate between good and evil.

Secondly, God hath a certain knowledge concerning the ſtate of every man.

This is a tranſcendent, beyond any knowledge which man hath of man; God doth not only know what is in us, but what is not in us; not only what we are, but what we are not. Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked. The reaſon why a negative oath is not admitted among men, is, becauſe no man can ſwear ſo in knowledge. None can ſpeak negatively of another, knowingly, but God alone. We may ſay of a man, there is that in him for which it is meet for us to judge him godly. But it is impoſſible from any outward evidence to conclude peremptorily he is not wicked. It is more to ſay of a man, he is not wicked, then to ſay he is godly. It is eaſier to know what is, then what is not. As it is in voting, ſo in knowing: Negative votes are ſtrongeſt. To ſay ſuch a thing ſhall not paſs or be done, imports the greateſt power: ſo negative knowledge is the higheſt; to ſay ſuch a thing is not, or ſuch a man did it not, imports a certain knowledge, a knowledge ſo certain, as is applicable to none, but God himſelf, Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked.

And there is none that can deliver out of thine hand.

What none? Then were our condition ſad indeed? None excludes meer creatures onely; Chriſt can deliver us out of the hand of God; and Job believed Chriſt had delivered him, when he ſaid, There is none that can deliver.

The hand of God is the power of God; and to deliver out of his hand, is to fetch out or free from his power. The word which we tranſlate to deliver, notes delivering either by power or by policy, by ſtrength or by wit. A priſoner is delivered ſometimes by reſcue or open violence, ſometimes by ſtealth or ſecret conveyance; he picks a lock or breaks a door to deliver himſelf out of the hand of man. But neither of theſe wayes can any man deliver himſelf, or get deliverance out of the hand of God. There is no difficulty in the interpretation of theſe words, but there is ſome difference about the intent of them.

Ne mea quidē integritas, cujus tu mihi teſtis es, facit ut hac plaga liberer ut qui nihil facto meo corā te promereri poſſim. Jun.

Firſt, Some, for none tranſlate nothing, and ſo joyn theſe words with the former, as an argument of the inſufficiency of mans righteouſneſs; Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked, yet there is nothing (in my righteouſneſs) that can deliver me out of thine hand. As Paul ſaid (1 Cor. 4.4.) I know nothing by my ſelf, yet am I not hereby juſtified. So Job ſaith, Lord, Thou knoweſt nothing by me, yet hereby I cannot be delivered.

Secondly, Theſe words may be expounded as tending to move compaſſion, and to ſtir up bowels of pity in God toward Job; As if he had ſaid, Lord, why doeſt thou deal thus ſeverely with me, when there is none that can deliver me out of thine hand? who can reſcue me, while thou layeſt thine arreſt upon me? Thou maiſt keep me under reſtraint as long as thou wilt; I cannot be fetcht off, or out, and wilt thou deal thus hardly with me? Wilt thou puniſh me thus? Whom we cannot hold long in our hands, we are apt to deal more roughly with, while they are in our hands, and to take our peniworths out of them, while we have them. And 'tis uſual with great Princes ſpeedily to ſeal the Writ of execution againſt an eminent offender, when they hear or ſuſpect many potent ſuiters will move for his pardon, and ſolicite his deliverance out of the hand of juſtice. Job ſeems to ſpeak in alluſion to ſuch, If there were any who could deliver me out of thine hand, or pull me away from thee by ſtrength, or by entreaty, I ſhould wonder the leſs at thy ſeverity.

Non eſt qui clamat, Deus optime, ne ſtringas gladium, ne ſtrictum extendas in populū tuū.

God doth ſometimes even beſpeak the interceſſion of others, and complains that none come in to deliver a people or a perſon out of his hand. When he was about to deſtroy Sodome he tells it unto Abraham, probably, for that very end, that Abraham might intercede for Sodom, and (at leaſt) get Lot out of his hand. When God was about to execute his judgments upon Jeruſalem, He ſaw and there was no man, and wondred that there was no interceſſor, none to take him off from deſtroying that people (*Iſa.*59.16.) The Prophet complains in words of the ſame importance (*Chap.*64.7.) There is none that calleth upon thy name, that ſtirreth up himſelf to take hold of thee. Friends, ſeeing a father go out haſtily to correct his child, riſe preſently, or ſtir up themſelves to take hold of the father, or to mediate for the child, Pray ſpare him for this time, and hold your hand: but ſaith the Prophet, There is none that will ſtir up himſelf to take hold of God. He is going out in wrath, and no man puts him in mind of mercy, with that cry of another Prophet, O ſpare thy people, and give not thine heritage to reproach! When Abraham was ready to ſlay Iſaac upon the altar, when his hand was ſtretched out to fetch the fatal blow, juſt then, did the Angel take hold of his ſword, and delivered Iſaac out of his hand. God ſaith to Moſes (Exod. 32. 10.) Let me alone; God was about to deſtroy that People, Moſes would not permit him, he ſeeks to deliver Iſrael out of the revenging hand of God, by that holy violence of Prayer and ſupplication.

Laſtly, Others look upon Job, as breathing out a very heroick and magnanimous ſpirit in theſe words. As if he had ſaid, Lord, Thou knoweſt and thou ſhalt know, that I am not wicked, though none deliver or take me out of thine hand, Thou ſhalt find me holding mine integrity, as long as I hold my life, I am reſolved to honour thee, whatſoever thou doeſt with me. And ſo he refutes the charge of Satan: Satan ſaid, Touch his fleſh and his bone, and he will curſe thee to thy face: No, ſaith Job, though he take away my fleſh and my bones, yet I will not curſe him to his face, no, nor ſpeak an ill word of him behind his back. Though I ſhould never be delivered, yet God ſhall never be blaſphemed. Upon the whole, obſerve,

That, there is no means on earth can reſcue us out of the hands of God.

I kill and I make alive, I wound and I heal, neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand, Deut. 32 39. Till God diſcharge us there's no eſcaping: none can force us out of his hand, whatſoever is in theirs; power cannot, policy cannot, riches cannot: we cannot bribe our ſelves out of the ſight, or beyond the ſtroke of divine juſtice. A golden key will not open Gods priſon door. Riches avail not in the day of wrath, and in ſome dayes of wrath, prayer it ſelf cannot prevail. Then take heed how ye fall into the hands of God. No wiſe man will run into his diſpleaſure, from whom there is no deliverance, but at his own pleaſure. See more of this point, Chap. 9. 12.

VERS. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13.

Thine hands have made me, and faſhioned me together round about; and yet thou doeſt deſtroy me.

Remember I beſeech thee, that thou haſt made me as the clay, and wilt thou bring me into duſt again?

Haſt thou not poured me out like milk, and crudled me like cheeſe?

Thou haſt cloathed me with skin and fleſh, and haſt fenced me with bones and ſinews.

Thou haſt granted me life and favour, and thy viſitation hath preſerved my ſpirit.

And theſe things haſt thou hid in thine heart, I know that this is with thee,

AT Verſ. 3. of this Chapter, we found Job queſtioning with the Lord, Is it good for thee that thou ſhouldeſt oppreſs, That thou ſhouldeſt deſpiſe the work of thine hands? In theſe words he inſiſteth upon, and illuſtrateth that argument, by fitting it to his own condition; as if he had ſaid, Seeing thou wilt not deſpiſe the work of thy hands, Why ſhouldeſt thou deſpiſe me? Am not I the work of thy hands? Thine hands have made me, and faſhioned me together round about, and yet thou doeſt deſtroy me. The whole context argues out this point: wherein we may obſerve, Firſt, His forming or making, ſet down in general at Verſ. 8. Thine hands have made me, and faſhoned me together round about.

Secondly, The matter out of which he was formed and made, at Verſ. 9. Remember I beſeech thee, that thou haſt made me as the clay.

Thirdly, His forming is drawn out in particulars, Wherein we have,

Firſt, His Conception at Verſ. 10. Haſt thou not poured me out as milk, and crudled me as cheeſe?

Secondly, The Conjunction or ſetting together of his parts, at Verſ. 11. Thou haſt clothed me with ſkin and fleſh, and haſt fenced me with bones and ſinews.

Thirdly, The quickning of his parts thus joyned and ſet together, at Verſ. 12. Thou haſt granted me life.

Fourthly, The preſervation of his life, in the ſame Verſe, Thou haſt given me life, and (not only ſo, but) favour, and thy viſitation doth preſerve my ſpirit.

Laſtly, We have Job's ſtrength of aſſurance, or his aſſertion concerning all this, at Verſ. 13. Theſe things haſt thou hid in thine heart, I know that this is with thee; as if he had ſaid, Lord, Thou knoweſt all is truth which I have ſpoken.

There are three opinions concerning the connection or tie of theſe words with thoſe that went before.

Firſt, Some conceive that Job perſiſteth in the ſame matter handled, in the words immediately foregoing, exalting the knowledge of God concerning man upon this ground, becauſe God made man. Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked. How did Job know that? He muſt needs know what man is, who made man; Thine hands have made me and faſhioned me together round about; foraſmuch as I am thy work, a piece of thy framing, ſurely, thou knoweſt what thou haſt framed: thou who haſt knowledge enough to make me, haſt a perfect knowledge of what thou haſt made. We may joyn it alſo with the latter clauſe; None can deliver out of thy hand; Why? Thine hands have made me and faſhioned me. Is it poſſible for the work to deliver it ſelf out of the hand of him who wrought it? Is that which is formed too ſtrong for him that formed it, when as the ſame hand which gave it form, gave it ſtrength? We find this argument as to the former part (Pſal. 94. 9.) where from the work of God in our natural conſtitution, the holy Pen-man proves the fulneſs of his knowledge concerning us in every condition; Underſtand ye brutiſh (he ſpeaks to men, who acted more like beaſts then men) He that planted the ear ſhall he not hear? He that formed the eye ſhall he not ſee? As if he had ſaid, He that made the ear, is all hearing; and he who formed the eye, is all eye, all ſight. The argument holds ſtrong from Gods power in forming man, to his power of knowing man, and to his power of diſpoſing man. That's the firſt way of dependance.

Secondly, Job may be conceived, as rendering an account of thoſe things about which he had taken the boldneſs to interrogate the Lord, at Verſ. 3. Here he anſwers his own queſtion; as if he had ſaid, now I ſee well enough why thou maiſt deſpiſe and deſtroy thy work, It is thy work; I will go no further for a reaſon to vindicate thee in breaking me to pieces then this, That thine hands have ſet me together: Thou haſt made me, and thou mayeſt unmake me; thou haſt raiſed me up, and thou mayeſt pull me down. So the copulative (Vau) in the original which we tranſlate by the adverſative, yet, is taken for a conjunction cauſal; and ſo it is frequently uſed in Scripture (Gen. 30. 20.) Duſt thou art, and to duſt thou ſhalt return; The ſence is, Duſt thou art, therefore to duſt thou ſhalt return (Exod. 15. 23, 24.) The waters were bitter, and the people murmured; that is, The waters were bitter, therefore the people murmured; thus here, Thine hands have made me and faſhioned me, therefore thou doeſt deſtroy me. He that builds the houſe at his own charge, and by his own power, may ruine it at his own pleaſure.

Jam teneo hujus rei cauſam; cum enim manus illius me fecerint, jure ſuo poteſt Deus me deſtruere. Cajet.

Thirdly, The words may carry the ſence of a ſtrong motive to prevail with God, to handle Job more gently, or to deal more tenderly with him; Why? The Lord had beſtowed much care and coſt to make and faſhion him: therefore he will ſurely pity and ſpare him. There is a natural motion of the heart in every agent, towards the preſervation of that which proceedeth from it. Creation is followed with providence. If a ſpeechleſs and liveleſs creature could ſpeak and underſtand, it would argue with it's Maker (in Job's caſe) as Job doth, Doeſt thou yet deſtroy me? David ſtrengthens his heart to ask good at the hands of God, becauſe he had ſpoken good concerning him (2 Sam. 7. 27. Thou, O Lord of Hoſts, God of Iſrael, haſt revealed to thy ſervant, ſaying, I will build thee an houſe, therefore hath thy ſervant found in his heart to pray this prayer unto thee. Now, if David were not only emboldened to ask, but even aſſured to receive mercy, becauſe God promiſed to build him a houſe, that is, to proſper his eſtate and family; how much more might Job be encouraged to pray for, and expect mercy from the hand of God, becauſe God had already framed and built that natural houſe, his body? The Prophet Iſaiah being about to plead with God for new mercies, preſents him with a catalogue of his old mercies (Chap. 63. 7, 8, 9.) I will mention the loving kindneſſes of the Lord, and the praiſes of the Lord, according to all that the Lord hath done unto us; and the great goodneſs towards the houſe of Iſrael, which he hath beſtowed on them according to his mercies, and according to the multitude of his loving kindneſſes, &c. Having thus at large told the Lord what he had done, the Prophet (in a holy zeal) contends with him about what he was doing (Verſ. 15.) Look down from heaven, and behold from the habitation of thy holineſs, and of thy glory; where is thy zeal, and thy ſtrength, the ſounding of thy bowels, and of thy mercies towards me, are they reſtrained? Doubtleſs thou art our Father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, &c. As if he had ſaid, That great Sea of thy goodneſs, hath ſent out abundant ſtreams of good things heretofore, and are all thoſe ſtreams now dried up, and the ſprings exhauſted? What's become of thy zeal and ſtrength, and compaſſions? Are they all ſpent and gone? Thus Job ſeems to plead here, thine hands have made me, thou haſt done thus and thus for me, and wilt thou now deſtroy me? According to this interpretation the latter clauſe of the verſe is rendered by an interrogation, Thine hands have made me and faſhioned me, and doeſt thou yet deſtroy me? What, thou my Maker deſtroy me! Remember, I beſeech thee (ſo in the next verſe) that thou haſt made me as the clay, and wilt thou bring me into duſt again? Thus by a ſpecification of the great outward benefits which he had received from the hand of God, he ſeems to aggravate his preſent ſorrows, and to ſollicite future mercies.

Thine hands.] Hands are often aſcribed to God, as was ſhewed, verſ. 3. Many things are made with the hand; the maker of all things is withont hands, and yet he is all hand. Hence all things that were made, are ſaid to be made by the hands of God; not only the forming of man, but the forming of the Heavens and the Earth, is the work of his hand, Pſal. 102. 25. Pſal. 95. 5. Both are put together. (Iſa. 48. 13.) Mine hand alſo hath laid the foundation of the earth, and my right hand hath ſpanned the heavens. Whereſoever the great works of God are expreſt, a hand uſually is expreſt as the inſtrument working them, yet his hand wrought the leaſt as well as the greateſt, a worm of the earth; as well as man upon the earth, or the Angels in heaven.

The heads of men have run into great variety of opinion about theſe hands forming man.

Ambroſ. in Hexā. Hom. 11. Baſil, &c.

Firſt, Many of the Ancient underſtand by the hands of God, The Son of God, the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity, and the holy Spirit of God, who is the third; Thine hands have made me, that is, the Son and the holy Spirit, who were aſſiſtant to, and of council with the Father of the Creation of man, And God ſaid, Let us make man in our image, after our own likeneſs, Gen. 1. 26.

Others expound hands literally and formal'y, not as if God had hands (that's below their conceit) but thus, it hath been ſaid of old, that when God at firſt formed man, the Son took upon him an outward ſhape, or the ſhape of a man; and ſo (ſay they) Chriſt (not made man, but) in the form of man, formed man.

Cauſis ſecundis veluti quibuſdam manibus utitur Deus ad producendas res ſublunares, Aquin.

Thirdly, The hands of God are all ſecond cauſes, which God uſeth to the production of any effect. All hands work for God, they work for him, while they are ſet a work againſt him; and ſo may be call The hands of God. Mans making ſince the Creation, is not an immediate work; the Creation of the firſt man was. Yet it is ſo much the work of God ſtill, that every man is the work of his hands, as well as the firſt man. All inferiour cauſes concurring to the making of man, are the hands by which God maketh man.

Fourthly, The hands of God, are generally taken for the power and wiſdom of God. The hand of power acts, what the hand of wiſdom doth contrive. As the hand is often put for power, ſo to put any thing into the hand of another, is to put it into his power. That grant which was made to Satan at the beginning of this book, runs in this ſtrain, Behold, he (meaning Job) is in thine hand (that is, thou mayeſt do with them what thou wilt) only ſave his life. (Ch. 2. 6.)

The Schoolmen determine the hands of God to be the underſtanding and the will of God, which they call, the executive power of God; by theſe he determines what ſhall be done, and doth what he pre-determines. The very decree and purpoſe of God, is called the hand of God (Act. 4. 28.) Of a truth againſt thy holy child Jeſus, whom thou haſt anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate with the Gentiles and people of Iſrael were gathered together for to do whatſoever thy hand, and thy counſel determined before to be done. Gods hand was the ſoveraign power of God over-ruling thoſe evil inſtruments to fulfil his holy counſels, while they intended only to fulfil their own wicked counſels.

Tu pro tua poteſtate tuoque jure. Bez.

We may beſt interpret Job in the fourth ſenſe, thine hands have made me and faſhioned me, that is, I am made and faſhioned by thy power and wiſdom, I am a piece of thy forming. None but the only wiſe, and all-powerful God could produce ſuch an effect as I am.

Have made me and faſhioned me.

Here are two words which ſome diſtinguiſh by referring the one to the body, the other to the ſoul. We need not be ſo accurate about theſe words. But thus much is plainly noted in them, that the Lord was exceeding accurate about this work, the faſhioning of man. Both words have their ſpecial elegancies.

עצב In ſua prima ſignificatione denotat dolore afficere.

The firſt which we tranſlate made, ſignifies more then to make, it ſignifies to make exactly and curiouſly. It is a word proper to Artificers who work, or ſhould work with an equal mixture of diligence and knowledge, of pains and skill: Artificers mingle their heads and their hands in every thing they undertake, and beſtow more ſtudy then toil upon their works.

Panis anxietate magna & labore partus.

This word is alſo tranſlated to grieve, vex, or put one to trouble. The perverſe carriage of the people of Iſrael toward the Spirit of God, is expreſſed by it (Iſa. 63. 10.) They rebelled and vexed his holy Spirit. And that bread of ſorrows, that is, bread gotten by ſorrowful or hard labour is delivered in this term (Pſ. 127. 2.) See a further explication of the word. Chap. 9. verſ. 27.

Deus non ſe fatigavit in homine condendo, ſed de Deo Scriptura hominis more loquitur, quaſi ſumma cura & anxietate ad eum formandum uſus eſſet Deus, ut nihil ad ejus perfectionē deeſſet. Mer.

God is not put to any pain at all in making man, he doth all his works with infinite delight and eaſe. Nothing is hard to him who can do all things: Omnipotency never meets with any difficulty. But God is expreſt in making man by a word, ſignifying ſolicitouſneſs and painful care, implying that man is made as thoſe things are, upon which man beſtows greateſt pains and care. Man doth not look like a peice of work ſlubbred over ſlightly, or clapt up in haſte, The moſt wiſe God, who ſhewed his manifold wiſdom in the work of redemption, ſhewed much of his wiſdom in the work of creation; he made man (as we ſpeak) in Print.

Manus tuæ dolore afficiunt me, quæ fecerunt me. Jun.

A learned tranſlator renders, thy hands put me to pain, which have made me; as if Job had complained here of the pain which God put him to after he had made him, rather then exalted God for the pains he ſeemed to have taken, when he made him. But we may better keep to our rendering, Thine hands have made me, and,

Faſhioned me.] The making of man importeth his being: The faſhioning of him, the outward formality of his being. Man receives not only his nature, but his figure from God. The word ſignifies to trim or poliſh, to do a thing curiouſly and compleatly (Gen. 1. 31.) God ſaw all that he had made, and behold it was very good. He ſaw all with delight and higheſt content; for, he had put all into a compoſure of moſt exquiſite comlineſs and perfect beauty. A due and proper faſhion is the eſſence of comlineſs. Thine hands have not only made me, but faſhioned me, and that not in part only, but as it followeth, יחר כנוב Alludere videtur ad figuli rotam Pined.

Artifices opus pene abſolutum curioſè circumſpiciunt, ut ſi quid oculis ingratum deprehendant, corrigant. Sanct.

Together round about.] This is no Pleonaſme or ſuperfluity of ſpeech; for though when a thing is made and faſhioned, it is ſuppoſed to be made round about, yet here to ſhew the exactneſs of God in making man, Job ſpeaks as if God had reſolved to have all of his own doing, and would not truſt the leaſt part of this work into the hand of any other, thine hands have made me and faſhioned me together round about. Which words are ſay ſome, Firſt, An alluſion to the art of a Potter, who formeth and faſhioneth earthen Veſſels, turning them often about and about upon his wheel. Or it may be an alluſion to a Statuary, or to a Painter, who having a curious coſtly peice in hand, goes about it, and views it round on every ſide: that if any thing ſute not his eye, his fancy, or the rule of art, he may correct it.

Dicit in circuitu, quod corpus videtur animæ eſſe in circuitu, ſicut veſtimentum veſtito, aut ſicut domus habitatori. Aquin.

Secondly, Others conceive that this round about, is only a circumlocution for the body, becauſe the body encompaſſeth the ſoul round about, as a garment doth the body, or a houſe the inhabitant.

Totum dicit ut ad ſingula corporis membra referatur. Idem eſt quod Latinus dicit intus & extra, intus & in cute, à capite ad pedes.

Quantus, quantus ſum magna Dei cura & artificio elaboratus ſum. Pined.

Ὅτι ὅλον ἄνθρωπον ὑγιῆ ἐποίησα.

Thirdly, Together round about, is (as was touched before) me in every part, or all me. When ſome took offence at Chriſts healing of a ſick man upon the Sabbath-day, he anſwers, Are ye angry at me, becauſe I have made a man every whit whole on the Sabbath-day? (Joh. 7. 23.) or that I have made the whole man whole, not leaving any unſound limb about him? There is a like phraſe (Luk. 11. 40.) which may illuſtrate this; Ye fools, did not he that made that which is without, make that which is within alſo? That is, did not he that made man, make him together round about? Did not he make whatſoever is man? So Job's together round about, is, as if he had ſaid, Thou haſt made me within and without from head to foot; thou haſt made me all that I am; how great, how good, how ſtrong, how beautiful ſoever I am, I am made by thee. Thou (as David ſpeaks (Pſal. 139. 5.) haſt beſet or formed me (ſo the Hebrew) behind and before, aud laid thy hand upon me.

Per circuitū omnia etiā illa intelligamus quæ hominem cingunt, ſc. facultates, liberos, familiam univerſam.

Fourthly, By together round about, we may underſtand all without man, which man hath about him. Thou haſt made and faſhioned not only my body, but my eſtate, my honour, my friends, my children (children round about the Table, Pſal. 128. 3.) Thou haſt given me all that I have about me; whatſoever I am, I am made and faſhioned by thine hands; So the phraſe is uſed, Chap. 19. 9, 10. He hath ſtript me of my glory, and taken the crown from my head, he hath deſtroyed me on every ſide; or, he hath deſtroyed me round about, that is, all that he hath made round about me, he hath taken away from me; he hath ſtript me of all he once cloathed me with. Mr. Broughton tranſlates much to that ſence; Thou haſt faſhioned me and made me in every point, that is, Look whatſoever I am conſiderable in, under what notion ſoever I may be taken, Thou haſt made me and faſhioned me in all. Hence obſerve, Firſt, The making of man now, is the work of God, as well as the making of the firſt man was.

Natura nihil aliud eſt quam divinorum operum ordo. Brent.

Job doth not ſay, The Lord did once make and faſhion man, but, thine hands have made me: He aſcribeth his own making to God, as well as Adam's. The ſtructure and frame of Nature is the work of God, not of Nature. Nature and natural cauſes are nothing but the order in which God worketh; God turneth or changeth, ſtops or ſets them forward as he pleaſeth. Second cauſes work purely at the will of God, though means be uſed by man, yet the effect is Gods. Corn groweth in the field by the hand of God. You will ſay, What then doth the husbandman? What doth the earth? What doth the Sun and Rain? Do not all theſe work? All theſe are nothing but the order wherein, and by which the hand of God makes the Corn to grow; for let all thoſe ſecond cauſes work as hard as they can, yet the Corn grows not unleſs God ſpeak the word: His ſteps, not the husbandmans, drop fatneſs. It is he, not the Sun or the Rain, which makes the vallies ſtand thick with corn, to laugh and ſing. As in ſpirituals, ſo in naturals, he that planteth, and he that watereth, is nothing, but God that giveth the encreaſe. The Pſalmiſt ſpeaks excluſively of man, as to the point of mans making, and he puts an emphaſis upon it, as if a man did not take notice enough, if at all, of this, that in this man is nothing; Know ye, that the Lord he is God, it is he that hath made us, and not we our ſelves. There may be a great deal of Grace acted in acknowledging God to be the author of Nature; yet I conceive the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks there rather of Gods making us in Grace, then in Nature.

Secondly, Obſerve, Job recounting what God had done for him, brings in, Thy hands have made me and faſhioned me; then,

Our making and natural conſtitution are to be reckoned amongſt the great benefits received frem God.

Pſal. 139. 14. I will praiſe thee, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made. The making of man is a wonder; though the frequency of it makes the wonder little obſerved, yet the wonder is not (in it ſelf) the leſs. David, who had ſerious and holy thoughts about natural things, confeſſeth, I am fearfully and wonderfully made. A Heathen had three reaſons for which he uſed eſpecially to thank God. One of them was this, becauſe he had made him a man. If men who have but the light of nature, can ſee ſo much of God in nature, how much of God ſhould we ſee in nature, who have the light of Grace to ſee it by?

Thirdly, From the words put together, Thine hands have made me, and faſhioned me together round about, obſerve,

The whole faſhion and fabrick of man is from God.

From which General take theſe Conſectaries.

See more of this point before at v.3. of this Chapter.

Firſt, Then do not undervalue the body, it is the work of God; He hath faſhioned it round about. We alwayes look upon and value our bodies too much, when we are proud of them; but we can never look upon or value our bodies too much, while we are thankful for them; and that we may be ſo, we ought to view every room of this houſe of clay, from ſtory to ſtory, from the Garret to the Cellar, from the Crown of the head to the Sole of the foot, that we ſeeing the wonderful works of God, may have our hearts enlarged in his praiſes. Some have put ignoble titles upon the body of man, calling it a priſon, or a ſhackle. The body is not a priſon, it is a palace; it is not a ſhackle, it is an Organ, a fit inſtrument for the ſoul to uſe and act by. If at any time the body be unuſeful to the ſoul, that proceeds from ſinful corruption, not from its natural conſtitution.

Τὸ σῶμα τῆς ταπεινώσεως ἡμῶν.

But the Apoſtle (Phil. 3.21.) calleth our body a vile body, or the body of our vileneſs. Mans body is not vile, as God made it (ſo it is a ſtately ſtructure) but as ſin hath made it. The Apoſtle calls it vile, not abſolutely, and in it ſelf, but relatively. The body cloathed with Mortality, is vile, compared with the body when it ſhall be cloathed with Glory, and that Glory like the Glory of the body of Chriſt, as is aſſured us; Who ſhall change our vile body, that it may be faſhioned like unto his glorious body. The words carry an alluſion to thoſe who changing old and broken veſſels, deſire to have them wrought in the beſt and neweſt faſhion. The body of Chriſt is the richeſt piece of Gods work, and this ſhall be the pattern of ours; as here upon earth the ſpirits of Believers are of the ſame faſhion with Chriſts (the ſame mind is in the Saints which was in Chriſt, there is but one draught of Grace (in the main) upon the ſouls of all holy men, and that is a copy of Chriſts, his being the original) ſo in heaven the bodies of all believers ſhall be of the ſame faſhion with Chriſt. There ſhall be but one draught of Glory in the main (for degrees do not vary the kind) upon the body of Chriſt, and the bodies of all his members. In reference to this future change of the body, the body in its preſent ſtate, is vile.

Secondly, Hence it follows, That as we muſt not undervalue the frame of mans body in general, as imperfect; ſo we may not deſpiſe any for their ſpecial bodily imperfections. It is God who hath made and faſhioned them round about. It is ſaid (2 Sam. 5. 8.) that the blind and the lame were hated of David's ſoul. Yet to hate any for defects in the body, is a very great defect in the ſoul; and to contemn any for natural blemiſhes, is a ſpiritual blemiſh. How then could David hate the blind and the lame, and not ſin? or are we to number this among his ſins? There are two expoſitions of thoſe words, upon either of which we may clear the difficulty.

Firſt, That when David ſent to ſummon that Fort, the Jebuſites, who were the Defendants, truſting in the ſtrength of the place, told David in ſcorn, that he muſt firſt conquer the blind and the lame; as implying that blind and lame ſouldiers were Garriſon good enough to deal with his great Army upon the advantage of ſuch a Fortreſs.

Secondly, The blind and the lame may rather be the Idols and ſtrange gods which the Jebuſites worſhipped, of whoſe protection they were not the leſs confident, becauſe the Jews counted them blind and lame. As if they had ſaid, even theſe gods, which you call blind and lame, ſee well enough what ye are doing, and will come faſt enough, and too faſt for your eaſe, to our aid and ſuccour. Theſe blind and lame gods were juſtly hated of David's ſoul, but he had learned better then to hate men who were made lame or blind by God.

Thirdly, Seeing all men are faſhioned round about by the hands of God, then as we muſt not deſpiſe any for their bodily imperfection, ſo not envy any for their bodily perfections. Some are as much troubled to ſee another have a better body, or a more beautiful face, as many are (alike ſinfully both) to ſee another have a better purſe, or a more plentiful eſtate then themſelves.

Fourthly, Let not the thing formed ſay to him that formed it, Why haſt thou made me thus? If thy earthly Tabernacle be not ſo highly, ſo ſtrongly built, if the Materials of it be not ſo pure, or not ſo exactly tempered, if thou haſt not not ſo good a conſtitution, ſo elegant a compoſition, if thou art not ſo adorned and poliſhed as ſome others are; yet be not diſcontented, the hands of God have made and faſhioned thee round about. It is a great honour to a Veſſel, that he made it, though he have made it (in this ſence) a veſſel of diſhonour.

Fifthly, If God hath faſhioned our bodies, then we muſt not put them out of faſhion. It is dangerous to deface the work of God, to undo that which God hath done, to unmake that which God hath made; how ſad is it that any ſhould pull down a building of Gods own ſetting up, without warrant from God? Self-murder, or the murder of another, is an high affront to God, and ſhould have a ſevere revenge from man. He that ſheds his own blood, takes revenge upon himſelf: And whoſo ſheddeth mans blood, by man ſhall his blood be ſhed; for in the image of God made he man (Gen. 9. 6.) As what God hath joyned by a civil, ſo by a natural band, let no man put aſunder.

Laſtly, If thou art made and faſhioned by God, then let God have the uſe of all thou art. Let God dwell in the houſe which he hath ſet up. Let thy body be employed for God; he that made it, hath moſt right to it. Every thing in man ſhews forth the wiſdom and goodneſs of God towards man, let every thing in man ſhew forth obedience and ſubmiſſion unto God. This was the ground of David's prayer (Pſal. 119.73.) Thy hands have made me, and faſhioned me, give me underſtanding, that I may learn thy commandments; as if he had ſaid, Lord, I would uſe this body, this ſoul, this all, which thou haſt made, for thy glory, therefore give me underſtanding that I may learn thy will; I would not do the will of another, while I dwell in thy houſe, and am thy tenant at will. I would not imploy thoſe members which thou haſt given me, to fulfil the Law of ſin, or the commands of Satan. The Apoſtle is clear upon this argument in reference to redemption (1 *Cor.*6.19.) Ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price; therefore glorifie God with your bodies, and in your ſpirits, which are Gods; Now as in the work of redemption we are of God by Grace, ſo in the work of creation we are of God by Nature. The reaſon holds in both; glorifie God with your bodies, which are not your own, but Gods. It is uſual in letting out of houſes to put a clauſe in the Leaſe, that the houſe ſhall not be imployed to ſuch and ſuch uſes, but only to ſuch as are expreſſed in the Indenture. Surely the Lord who hath built and furniſhed theſe houſes, hath taught us how to imploy them, and what trade to exerciſe in them, even the trade of holineſs. Take heed you do not let out any room or corner of a room in this houſe for ſin to trade in, or for the work of iniquity. This is to let out a houſe of Gods making to the Devils uſing.

Yet thou doeſt deſtroy me.

בלע Abſorbere eſt morſicatim deſtruere. Coc. Deglutio ſignificat omnimodam exterminationem, rerumq; omniũ profundiſſimũ exitium. κατεπόθη ὁ θάνατος εἰς νῖκος.

The word ſignifies to ſwallow up; and to ſwallow up with greedineſs, Pſalm 52.4. Thou loveſt all devouring (or ſwallowing) words; words which ſwallow down thy neighbours credit, and devour his good name, as one morſel. The Holy Ghoſt expreſſeth our final victory over death, by a word which reacheth this ſence (1 *Cor.*15.54.) Death is ſwallowed up (or drunk down) in victory; death is drunk up at a draught. Chriſt called his ſufferings (by which he got this victory) a cup. The Apoſtle uſes the ſame word again (2 Cor. 5.4.) That mortality might be ſwallowed up of life. When this mortal ſhall have put on immortality, death ſhall be ſwallowed up in victory, that is, there ſhall be a compleat victory over death, and not only ſo, but mortality ſhall be ſwallowed up of life. In heaven there ſhall be no death, nor any thing like death, nothing bearing any the leaſt reſemblance of it's image, or letter of it's ſuperſcription, nothing of mortality ſhall be found or felt there: There mortality ſhall be ſwallowed up of life; here Job complains that his life was almoſt ſwallowed up of mortality. Yet thou doeſt deſtroy, or ſwallow me up: As thou haſt already ſwallowed up my eſtate, ſo thou ſeemeſt reſolved to ſwallow up my very breath. When Joab beſieged Abel, a wiſe woman out of the City cryed unto him, Thou ſeekeſt to deſtroy a City in Iſrael, why wilt thou ſwallow up the inheritance of the Lord? 2 Sam. 20. 19. Job ſaw a great Army of afflictions encamping about him: and he ſeems to cry out to the Lord of thoſe hoaſts, why ſeekeſt thou to deſtroy thy ſervant? Why wilt thou ſwallow me, who am the work of thy hands?

Diſtinctio Hebræorum magis poſtulat, ut verba præcedentis, ſimul, circumquaq; cum his jungantur, & abſorbiſti me. Merc.

Grammarians obſerve from the exacteſt reading of the Hebrew, that the former words [Together round about] ſhould be joyn'd with theſe [Thou doeſt deſtroy me] Thine hands have made me, and faſhioned me, and yet thou doeſt deſtroy me together round about; that is, Thou makeſt an utter end, a total conſumption of me.

Licet ſenſus non multum diverſus ſit, interrogatio tamen ſenſũ reddit valde acrem, & incitatum. Merc.

Again, Theſe words are read by ſome with an interrogation, Thine hands have made me and faſhioned me, and doeſt thou yet deſtroy me? The queſtion doth not alter, but quicken the ſence, and render it more preſſing and pathetical; Wilt thou deſtroy me thus exactly, whom thou haſt made ſo exactly? The (yet) in the Text ſounds out an admiration. As when God (Amos 4.) had brought many judgments upon Jeruſalem, and found them ſtill impenitent, he concludes the narrative of every one, with, Yet have they not returned unto me; As if he had ſaid, What a wonder is here? So Job repeating the favours of God to him, concludes with a yet thou doeſt, or doeſt thou yet deſtroy me? As if he had ſaid, What a wonder is here? How unſearchable are thy judgments, O God, and thy wayes paſt finding out? Thus he ſets what God then did, in oppoſition to what he had done, that ſo the conſideration of former mercies might provoke him to remove or mitigate preſent judgments. Doeſt thou deſtroy me who haſt made me? Hence obſerve, Quem diligentiſſimè feciſti, diligentiſſimè deſtruis.

First, That to mind God of making us, is an argument to ſtay his hand from breaking us.

See more of this point, v. 3.

It repented the Lord (ſaith Moſes, Gen. 6.6.) that he had made man, and it grieved him at the heart. This repentance and grief did not ariſe from his making of man; but from that neceſſity which his own juſtice and honour laid upon him to deſtroy man whom he had made; as it follows in the next words; And the Lord ſaid, I will deſtroy man whom I have created. The words ſhew the reſolution of God, not his propenſion; it went to his heart to do it. If God repented and grieved (underſtand both by a figure) becauſe he had made man, whom he muſt deſtroy, then it cannot but be a grief to him to deſtroy that which he hath made. It is as eaſie to the power of God to undo, as it is to do: but it is not ſo eaſie to his will to undo, as it is to do.

Secondly obſerve, Afflictions deſtructive to the outward man, may be the lot of the beſt men.

God never deſtroyes that ſpiritual creature, which the hand of his grace hath made and faſhioned: but he doth ſometimes deſtroy the natural creature of thoſe who are ſpiritual.

Thirdly obſerve, A good man will make honourable mention of the goodneſs of God to him, while he is under greateſt evils.

Job writes the natural hiſtory of Gods power and wiſdom in his conſtitution, while deſtruction was knocking at his doors. Though God will deſtroy what he hath made, yet he ought to be glorified for what he hath made. The praiſe of God for faſhioning us, is never ſo comely, as when he is putting us out of faſhion.

Fourthly obſerve, God doth that ſometimes which is moſt improbable he ſhould do.

He acts ſtrangely in wayes of mercy, and ſtrangely in wayes of judgment. He ſaves thoſe whom we expect he ſhould deſtroy, and he deſtroyes thoſe whom we expect he ſhould ſave. The Kings of the earth, and all the inhabitants of the world would not have believed that the adverſary and the enemy ſhould have entred into the gates of Jeruſalem, (*Lam.*4. 12.) and who would have believed that the adverſary and the enemy, ſorrow and deſtruction ſhould have entred into the gates of Job? God comes with ſuch afflictions upon his people now, as make him to be admired by all the world. Chriſt will come with ſuch mercies at the laſt, as will make him to be glorified in his Saints, and admired in all them that believe (2 Theſ. 1. 10.) Chriſt will exceed, not only our unbelief, but our faith.

In the former verſe Job pleaded with God, as his maker; he proceeds ſtill in the ſame argument, and re-enforceth it from a ſpecial intimation of the matter out of which he was made, clay.

Verſ. 9. Remember, I beſeech thee, that thou haſt made me as the clay, and wilt thou bring me into duſt again?

זכר Recordatus eſt, memor fuit, odoratus fuit, quando de ſacrificiis uſurpatur. Odoretur omnia munera tua. Jun. Zachar, mas aut à memoria qua magis pollet quã mulier, aut quia memoriam & nomen familiæ conſervat. Buxtorf.

Remember, I beſeech thee.] Job ſpeaks heartily, his ſpirit was in a heat. Remember, I beſeech thee. The original word is applied to a ſenſitive act, as well as to a rational (Pſal. 20.3.) The Lord remember, or ſmell all thy offerings. Memory is the ſavour or ſent of things preſerved in the mind. The Hebrews expreſs man, or a male child, by a word of that root, and they give two reaſons of it. Either, firſt, becauſe man is of a ſtronger memory then the woman. Or, ſecondly, becauſe the man-child preſerveth the memory of the family, and is a monument of his fathers honour, his name being carried on from generation to generation; in oppoſition to which, women or females are called Naſhim, which word implieth forgetfulneſs, becauſe their names and titles are ſwallowed up in their husbands, and forgotten when they are married.

Memory or the act of remembring is improperly applyed to God. For remembrance is of things paſt, but to God all things are preſent. Memory is the ſtore-houſe wherein we lay up ſeveral notions, and keep records of what hath been done, which by an act of the underſtanding we review and fetch out again. All things are ever open before God. He needs not turn leaves or ſearch regiſters, he needs not ſo much as ſtrain a thought to recal what is paſt; that which was from the beginning, and ſhall be to the end, yea, to that which hath no end, eternity, is alwayes before him. God is ſaid to remember, or to forget, when he acts like a man, who remembers or forgets; but there is no act either of forgetfulneſs, or of remembrance in God.

Remembring implieth two things in God.

Firſt, A ſerious attention to the perſon and conſideration of the thing which he formerly ſeemed to ſlight, or lightly to paſs by. We alſo remember by minding and thinking upon what is preſent, as well as by recalling what is paſt.

Secondly, To remember, notes a ſpeedy ſupply of our wants, or actual deliverance out of dangers. God remembers us, when he favours us; he remembers us, when he pities us; he remembers us, when he relieves us; Who remembred us in our low eſtate, Pſal. 136. 23. that is, who brought us out of our low eſtate. The needy ſhall not alway be forgotten (Pſal. 9. 18.) not alway, no nor at any time; the Lord doth not at all forget any, much leſs ſuch needy ones, as that Scripture intends. The meaning is, they ſhall not alway be undelivered, their eſtate ſhall not lie for ever unconſidered, and their cry unattended to. God will not deal with them, nor ſuffer others to deal with them, as if he had forgotten them. Hannah was long under that affliction of barrenneſs, and when the Lord gave her conception, it is ſaid, He remembred Hannah (1 Sam. 1. 19.) his thoughts were ever upon her, and upon her petition; but when he granted her petition, then he remembred her indeed. As we then remember God when we obey his commands: ſo God remembers us then, when he fulfils our requeſts. Remember, I beſeech thee.

As it is our duty to remember the Lord: ſo it is our priviledge that we may put him in remembrance.

It is a priviledge, and a very great one to be a remembrancer to the King of heaven. The Prophet deſcribes ſuch an office (Iſa. 62. 6.) Ye that make mention of the Lord, or nearer the Hebrew, Ye that are the Lords remembrancers, keep not ſilence, and give him no reſt. Great Princes have an officer called their Remembrancer, and they need remembrancers. It is at once their honour and their weakneſs to have them. They cannot retain all buſineſſes, and preſerve a record within themſelves of all affairs within their Kingdoms: It is an honour to God that he hath Remembrancers, but it is his greater honour that he hath no need of them. Himſelf is the living record of all that hath been done, or is to be done. Knowledge is above memory, and he that knows all things is above remembrancers. God is willing we ſhould ſpeak to him after the manner of men: but we muſt not conceive of him after the manner of men. We muſt not think he hath forgotten us, though we may beſeech him to remember us.

There are four things which the Saints uſually move the Lord to remember.

Firſt, His own mercies; Remember, O Lord, thy tender mercies, was David's prayer (Pſal. 25. 6.) Hath God forgotten to be gracious? was David's queſtion and infirmity (Pſal. 77. 9.) Yet God acts ſometimes, as if he had forgot his nature, or had need to be minded to do what he is. God can no more forget himſelf, then deny himſelf; no more forget to be gracious then ceaſe to be: yet he gives his people leave, yea a charge, to move him to do, what he cannot but do, what he is reſolved, yea what he is ready to do. Mercy pleaſeth God ſo much, that he often appears diſpleaſed on purpoſe, that we may remember him of his mercy. He delights we ſhould deſire, what he delights to grant.

Secondly, The Saints uſually mind God of his Covenant. God is ever mindful of his Covenant (Pſal. 111. 5.) yet he loves to be minded of it. His Royal title is, The God that keepeth Covenant for ever; yet he loves to be deſired not to break it. Thus Jeremy begs for the Jews, the Covenant-people of God; Do not abhor us for thy name ſake, Do not diſgrace the throne of thy glory; remember, break not thy Covenant with us, Jer. 14. 21. The Pſalmiſt prayes upon the ſame ground, Have reſpect to the Covenant, for the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty; As if he had ſaid, Lord, Thou haſt made a Covenant to preſerve and protect thy people, but now they are oppreſſed; The dark places, that is, places full of ignorance and wickedneſs (which are ſpiritual darkneſs) are full of cruelty: Holy knowledge hath no ſuch enemy as ignorance. Or, the dark places are full, &c. may be thus underſtood, there is no ſuch obſcure corner or by-place in the land, but their malice ſearcheth it out for the vexation of thy people. We are ſo far from having liberty to ſerve thee publickly in the light, that we feel the cruelty of bloody minded men, though we do it ſecretly or in the dark. Now Lord it is time for thee to remember thy Covenant.

Thirdly, The Saints uſe to put God in remembrance of the rage and blaſphemies of his and their enemies. Thus the Church of the Jews cries unto the Lord (Pſal. 137. 7.) Remember, O Lord, the children of Edom in the day of Jeruſalem, who ſaid, raze it, raze it, even to the foundation thereof. When a man is wrong'd who intends revenge, he will ſay to the party wronging him, well, Remember this, or, I ſhall remember you for this. Revengeful men have ſtrong memories: ſo hath the God to whom vengeance belongeth. He will certainly remember the ſinful, revengeful cry of Edom againſt Jeruſalem, though the ſins of Jeruſalem did cry to him for vengeance. The Pſalmiſt is as earneſt in another place, urging the Lord to remember for his own intereſt, as here for the intereſt of his Sion (Pſal. 74. 18.) Remember this, that the enemy hath reproached, O Lord, and that the fooliſh people have blaſphemed thy Name. As if he had ſaid, Pray, Lord, take a note of this, make a memorandum of this, That the enemy hath reproached thy Name; God will remember it, if any of his ſervants are reproached, much more when himſelf is.

Fourthly, The Saints remember God of their own frailty, and that two-fold. Firſt, Natural; Secondly, Spiritual. Remember how ſhort my time is, wherefore haſt thou made all men in vain? (Pſal. 89. 47.) Man is a frail ſhort-liv'd creature, and it is ſome comfort to him, that God knows he is ſo. That which Job puts the Lord in remembrance of, is his natural frailty; ſome underſtand it alſo of his ſpiritual; Remember, I beſeech thee.

That thou haſt made me as the clay.

The LXX reads it, Thou haſt made me clay. The word ſignifies cement or morter, which are mixt of earth and water, Thou haſt made me as tempered clay. When the original of man is deſcribed, it is ſaid, The Lord formed man duſt out of the ground, or, of the duſt of the ground, (Gen. 2. 7.) here Job ſaith, Thou haſt made me as the clay, or, Thou haſt made me of the clay; the ſence is near the ſame, whether we take clay for the matter out of which man was made, or according to which man was made, or the ſimilitude according to which man was made. Job ſpeaks of himſelf with reſpect to creation: for, according to the ordinary courſe of generation, man is not made of clay. The firſt man was made of clay, and of him all men are. We derive our pedigree from the dirt, and are akin to clay. Job might ſay, and ſo may any man, Thou haſt made me of the clay. However Job was, and man now is made as the clay; that is, frail, brittle and weak. We are compoſed of materials, which will quickly crack and break. When the Holy Ghoſt would deſcribe how eaſily Chriſt can ſhatter to pieces all the oppoſites of his Kingdom; it is ſaid, He ſhall daſh them in pieces like a potters veſſel: A potters veſſel will not bear blows, eſpecially not the blows of ſuch an inſtrument, as is there ſpoken of, an iron rod: He ſhall break them with a rod of iron (Pſal. 2. 9.) we may break a potters veſſel with a little wand, or a weak reed, how then ſhould it endure the weight and hardneſs of an iron rod? The Spirit of God ſeems to delight in this alluſion, and therefore takes it up often. Read, Iſa. 45. 9. Iſa. 64. 8. Rom. 9. 21. We have the ſtate of the Jews, deſcribed under this notion (Jer. 18. 4.) The Lord bids Jeremy go down to the potters houſe, he obeys, and found the potter working a work on the wheel, And the veſſel that he made of clay, was marred in the hand of the potter, ſo he made it again another veſſel, as ſeemed good to the potter to

to make it. Then, the Word of the Lord came to him, ſaying, Cannot I do to you as this potter? ſaith the Lord, Behold, as the clay is in the hand of the potter, ſo are ye in my hand, O houſe of Iſrael. I can form you, and I can break you, I can put you into what condition I pleaſe, and ye ought not to be diſpleaſed at it. A potters veſſel is an emblem of the ſtrongeſt Kingdoms; How much more of the ſtrongeſt men?

That we are made of clay, intimates three things, at all which Job ſeemeth to aim, when he ſaith, Thou haſt made me as the clay.

Firſt, The excellency of mans frame. He is not thruſt together like a rude lump or maſs of earth, but curiouſly wrought (Pſal. 139. 15.) To make a veſſel of clay is an artificial work, not a natural. It requireth much pains, but more skill. Whence Job argueth, Thou haſt made me as the clay; Thou haſt ſhewed thy heavenly wiſdom in ſhaping and contriving me, as a veſſel of honour for thy uſe; And wilt thou bring me into duſt again? The remembrance of that love and care which God hath laid out upon us in our conſtitution, is an argument moving him to pity and compaſſion, as was ſhewed at verſ. 3.

Secondly, That God hath made us of clay, ſhews our utter inability to contend with God, and to ſtand againſt his ſtroaks: It is, as if Job had ſaid, Lord, Surely thou forgetteſt of what mettal I am made, thou thinkeſt I am made of a hard Rock, or of invincible Adamant, that I am compounded of Iron, and other the ſtrongeſt materials; Alas, Lord, there is no ſuch matter, I am made but as the clay; A great deal of power and wiſdom appeared in making me, but a little power will ſerve to ruine me; I am no ſooner toucht but crackt. Why then doeſt thou plant all thy Ordnance, and diſcharge ſo many volleys of ſhot againſt me? Lord, What am I? Am I a wall of braſs, or a bulwark of ſtone? Thou knoweſt I am but a wall of clay, a paper wall, a potters veſſel, a little moiſtened earth. Will any man prepare Cannon to batter a cottage, or a beetle to kill a flie? Thy providence needs not make ſuch proviſion againſt me, or handle me ſo roughly: that which is weak calls for tender uſage, and that which is weak may laſt long, if tenderly uſed; a glaſs with care will continue many ages. Deal gently with thy ſervant, Remember, I beſeech thee, thou haſt made me as the clay.

Thirdly, That we are made as the clay, ſhews our eaſineſs to be overcome by temptation, and our obnoxiouſneſs to ſin. Sin is (in its kind) as ſpiritual, as grace is; yet our ſinful corruption is figuratively called, the fleſh. One reaſon (I conceive) of which may be this, becauſe fleſh, taken properly, is an occaſion of ſin. As the ſenſitive part is a ſervant, ſo a ſnare to the rational, much more to the ſpiritual. The fleſh is at once the organ, and the burthen of the ſpirit. The Apoſtle calling Saints to run the race of holineſs with patience, gives a very ſutable advice, Let us lay aſide every weight, that is, all carnal cumber; he that would ſhew himſelf light of foot, will not take a burden upon his back, he caſts off his very garments; to which the next words of the Apoſtle ſeem to allude, Caſt off every weight, and the ſin which doth ſo eaſily beſet us: So a garment doth, eſpecially a long garment, which in running daggles and folds about our heels. The reaſon why our ſinful corruption is compared to ſuch a garment, is becauſe it is ſo much aſſiſted by this body of clay, the fleſh which is as a long garment to the ſoul, hanging about it, and beſetting it on every ſide.

εὐπερίστατος ad circumagendū proclivis: Metaphora ducta à laciniosis & talaribus veſtibus, quæ currentibus in ſtadio non ſunt aptæ.

From which ſence Job ſeems thus to move the Lord, Suppoſe I have ſinned (he had ſaid, Verſ. 7. Thou knoweſt I am not wicked, but ſuppoſe I have ſinned) and have had my failings, yet, Lord, Remember thou haſt made me as the clay, I am not a pure ſpirit, as Angels are, I have a body of earth about me, which clogs and hinders me in every duty, which many wayes endangers me unto every ſin. God himſelf takes up this as an argument to ſpare ſinful man (Pſal. 78. 39.) when the people of Iſrael rebelled againſt him, He many a time turned his anger away, and did not ſtir up all his wrath. What ſtaid him? The next words give a reaſon; for he remembred that they were but fleſh; that is, weak and very ſubject unto ſin. This argument prevails again, (Pſal. 103. 14.) Like as a father ſpareth his children, ſo the Lord pitieth them that fear him; Why? For he knoweth their frame, he remembreth that they are duſt. As if the very matter out of which man was firſt made, though without ſin, were ſome diſadvantage to him in the reſiſting of ſin. It was a diſadvantage before man had any ſin in him, how much more is it now when moſt men have nothing at all in them but ſin, and the beſt have very much. That which is born of the fleſh (ſaith Chriſt, John 3. 6.) is fleſh. His meaning is, corrupt nature can produce none but corrupt acts. It is a truth alſo, that our pure nature, becauſe it was conſtituted (as of other parts, ſo) of fleſh (the ſoul like a ſparkling Diamond, being ſet in clay) was thereby rendered more prone to fleſhly or ſinful acts. Natural fleſh (in its beſt ſtate) is more apt to bring forth ſpiritual fleſh (namely ſin) then a ſpirit is. And that's a reaſon among others, which ſome give, why God was ſo irreconcilably angry with the Angels which fell, why he did never ſo much as mention them in a way of mercy, or diſcovered a thought of them for good ſince their fall (I ſay) one reaſon given is this, Becauſe God could not remember that Angels were made as the clay, or formed out of the duſt; They were created ſpirits, pure ſpirits, they had no clogs of fleſh and blood about them, no fogs, no miſts vapouring up from a ſenſitive part to cloud their intellectual. They had the more power to continue pure, becauſe they were free from any earthly and elementary mixtures. Their ſin was compound of more evils, becauſe their nature was ſo ſimple. Angels having no tempter without them, no fleſh about them, turned themſelves away from God, meerly upon the freedom of their own wills. As every good action is by ſo much the better, by how much it hath the freer concurrence of our wills: ſo is every evil action ſo much the worſe. The ſin we commit is the greater, by how much we have had the leſs provocation to commit it. The ſin of our firſt parents in eating the forbidden fruit, was aggravated in it ſelf, becauſe God gave them ſuch plenty and variety of other fruits to eat: but it was leſſened in compariſon of the Angels ſin, becauſe they had more provocation to ſin, then the Angels had. The bait of the temptation againſt our firſt Parents, was laid in their conſtitution, which being corporal and earthly, muſt needs be delighted with earthly objects. The forbidden fruit was pleaſant to the eye, there the fleſh took it; And it was pleaſant to the taſte, there the fleſh took it again. Thoſe provocations man had over and beſides that of the Angels, a hope or a deſire to mend his condition, and to become like unto God. A body of earth hath a ſutableneſs to all earthly allurements. Every like hath a natural tendency and motion towards its like. This moves the Lord to pity ſinful man, though man muſt not hence plead impunity for ſin. The meaſure and degrees of ſin upon ſuch actings are abated, but the acts do not therefore put off the nature of ſin. A ſinner in duſt and clay cannot be excuſed; yet is not ſo much polluted, and more to be pitied then a ſinning ſpirit. And that's a third notion in which we may expound Job, beſeeching God to remember, that he hath made him as the clay.

Angeli idcirco irremiſſibiliter peccaverunt, quia tanto robuſtius ſtare poterāt quanto eos carnis commixtio non tenebat. Greg. Moral. in loc.

I might write many things in this clay out of which man was made; but I have met with other paſſages already of the ſame ſubject, eſpecially in Chap. 4. verſ. 19 in thoſe words, Whoſe foundation is in the duſt; which Text being near of the ſame importance and interpretation with this in hand, I ſhall rather refer the Reader thither, then inſiſt upon the ſame deduction and inferences a ſecond time. Take only this in general. Our reflection upon the matter out of which we are extracted, ſhould leſſen us to low and modeſt thoughts of our ſelves: for what is lower then the earth. We ſay, He that lieth upon the earth, hath not whence to fall; It is as true, He that riſeth out of the earth, hath nothing in himſelf whence he ſhould be lifted up.

Materia ex qua orti ſumus nobis ad modeſtiā magiſtra eſſe debet, quid enim luto ſive argilla vilius? Sanct.

Remember that thou haſt made me as the clay, and

Wilt thou bring me into the duſt again?

To be brought to the duſt, is firſt a circumlocution or deſcription of death, Pſal. 30. 9. Shall the duſt praiſe thee? ſhall it declare thy truth? That is, ſhall I praiſe thee when I am among the dead? What profit is there in my blood, when I go down to the pit? Not that profit ſure; I cannot bring thee in the tribute of praiſe, when my life's gone out.

Secondly, To be brought to the duſt, is a deſcription of any low and poor condition, Pſal. 22. 29. All they that be fat upon the earth (that is the great and mighty) ſhall eat and worſhip; All they that go down to the duſt (that is, the mean and baſe) ſhall bow before him. As if he had ſaid, rich and poor, high and low, the King and the Beggar, have a like need of ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt, and muſt ſubmit unto him, that they may be ſaved; for as it there follows, None can keep alive his own ſoul. The captivity of the Jews in Babylon, is expreſſed under thoſe notions of Death, and of dwelling in the duſt, Iſa. 26. 19. To ſhew how low they were brought; even ſo low, that no power but his who can raiſe the dead, could work their deliverance.

Job ſaw himſelf brought to the duſt of a low condition, of poverty and of diſgrace, and he feared he ſhould be brought to the duſt of death and of the grave. That's the meaning of this expoſtulating Query. And wilt thou bring me into the duſt again? He was not at all brought out of the duſt of his affliction, and therefore he could not ſay of that, Wilt thou bring me into the duſt again?

The words are read three wayes.

1. } As an { Aſſertion.
2. } As an { Interrogation.
3. } As an { Admiration.

Firſt, Many Interpreters give them as a plain Aſſertion; Remember that thou haſt made me as the clay, and thou wilt bring me into the duſt again.

Secondly, Others read them (as we) with an interrogation; Remember that thou haſt made me as the clay, and wilt thou bring me into the duſt again?

Thirdly, Some heighten them into an admiration; Thou haſt made me as the clay, and (what?) wilt thou bring me into the duſt again! What a wonder is this? Could I have expected ſuch a ſudden change as this!

Quoad naturam viliſſimus ſum, quoad judicium tuum morti addictus, ut in pulverem revertar, utrumq; debet te commovere, ut parcas mihi in vita. Coc Particula & pro ſic ſumenda eſt; & futurum potentiale eſt, decentiã, vel debitũ, vel jus, vel poteſtatem denotans, q. d. ſicut me tanquam cementum compegiſti, eadem poteſtate cum volueris, in terram reduces, nulla mihi illata injuria. Bold.

Take the words as a direct aſſertion, Thou wilt bring me into the duſt again: So they may have reference to the Decree of God concerning man, as thoſe before had to the creation of man. As if he had ſaid, By creation and natural conſtitution, I am frail and weak, made of the clay; by thy purpoſe and decree I am appointed unto death; Thou wilt bring me into the duſt again, therefore ſpare me for the ſhort time I have to live.

Some change the Conjunction [And] into the Adverb of Likeneſs [So] to note a right, power or priviledge; and the Text runs in this form, Remember, that as thou haſt made me of, or as the clay, ſo thou maiſt (it is thy priviledge, none can contradict thee in it, and thou doſt me no wrong in it, thou maiſt) as thou haſt purpoſed, bring me to the duſt again. Though it be common and natural to all creatures mixt of Elements, to be reſolved and turned back into that out of which they were made, that is, to die, yet to man it is more then natural; there is a decree upon it, beſides the naturality of it: Man dieth by a Statute-Law of Heaven. To die is a penalty inflicted upon man for ſin; for he had not been under a neceſſity of dying, if he had not ſinned. And therefore though God formed man (as the holy Story informs us, Gen. 2. 7.) out of the duſt of the earth; yet ſo long as man ſtood, he never ſaid to him, To duſt thou ſhalt return. God only put a ſuppoſition, that in caſe man did fall, he ſhould ſurely die. But when man had fallen by ſin, then he hears what he was, and what he muſt be; For duſt thou art, and unto duſt thou ſhalt return (Gen. 3. 19.) As if God had thus beſpoken ſinful man; Thy body was framed out of duſt, and now I charge this burden upon thee, thou ſhalt return to the duſt again.

It is a Queſtion (and I ſhall touch upon it) Whether death were natural to man or no? Whether man were made mortal, or whether he made himſelf mortal? Some affirm, That death was natural, not accidental or occaſional to mankind. They argue for this Opinion;

Firſt, thus; Adam died not the death of the body, or a natural death when he had ſinned; therefore the death of the body was not inflicted for ſin upon his perſon and his poſterity, but was ſeated in, or a conſequent of his nature.

I anſwer, Though Adam died not preſently a natural death, yet he was preſently made ſubject or liable unto death; the ſentence was paſt upon him, though the ſentence was not executed upon him. A Malefactor who is caſt at the Bar, is a dead man in Law, though he be repreived from the preſent ſtroke of death.

Again, Though death it ſelf did not inſtantly ſeize upon him, yet the ſymptoms of death, and tokens of mortality did. Fear and ſhame, pains and diſtempers, ſweat and wearineſs quickly ſhewed themſelves as ſo many harbingers or forerunners of his approaching diſſolution: we ſee and feel death in theſe before we ſee or feel death it ſelf. Theſe bid us prepare our bodies for the grave, and our ſouls for heaven.

Secondly, Others reaſon thus, Chriſt hath delivered his people, the elect, from all that puniſhment which the ſin of Adam did contract and deſerve; but Chriſt hath not delivered his elect, his own people, from turning to the duſt. Godly men die as well as the ungodly, Believers as well as Infidels; therefore (ſay they) the death of the body was not procured by ſin.

I anſwer, Whatſoever is an evil in death, Chriſt hath delivered his people from; he hath taken away all that from death, which is puniſhment or annoyance, though death be not taken away. Chriſt hath freed us from the effects of ſin, as he hath freed us from ſin it ſelf, that is, from their prevalence and dominion over us, not from their preſence or being in and upon us. Hence the Apoſtle (1 Cor. 15.) triumpheth over death; O death, where is thy ſting? O grave, where is thy victory? As if he had ſaid, Death once had a power over man to ſting him to death; death once had a victorious power, and would have been the great conqueror, riding in triumph over all the poſterity of Adam; but now death had neither ſting nor ſword to uſe againſt Believers, it hath nothing of victory over the Saints: It is now but a ſleep, a ſleep in Chriſt, a reſt from labour, a putting off the rags, the worn rags of mortality, that we may be dreſſed in the robes of glory. The evil of death is removed, and that which remains of death (the ſeparation of ſoul and body) proves the greateſt good to both, it being but a preparatory to their everlaſting union.

Thirdly, It is argued, That death and corruption were natural to man, becauſe the matter out of which man was made, was dying and corruptible; for that which is made, muſt follow the nature of that Principle out of which it is made. The effect cannot be (ſay they) more noble then the cauſe; nor the ſubject conſtituted, more durable then that which goes into its conſtitution.

Omne principiatum ſequitur naturam principiorum.

To clear up an anſwer to this, we muſt diſtinguiſh of a threefold immortality.

Firſt, A primitive, ſimple, independent, eſſential immortality; this is proper and peculiar to God; in which ſence the Apoſtle affirmeth, He only hath immortality (1 Tim. 6. 16.)

Secondly, There is a derivative, dependent, eſſential immortality. Some ſubſtances have no ſeed of corruptibility, nor of death in them: Being either ſeparate from all matter which is the ſeat and root of corruption, as the Angels; or united to matter, yet ſo as not being produced from it, or having any affinity with it, ſuch are the ſouls of men. Whole man in his creation was not immortal either of theſe wayes; a part of man was, but man was not created immortal. Man was of a middle ſtate and condition, neither altogether ſo mortal, nor altogether immortal, but capable of either.

Μέσος ἦν ἄνθρωπος τῶν δύω ὁ γέγονεν· οὐ θνητὸς ὅλος οὔτε ἀθάνατος, δεκτικὸς γὰρ ἑκατέρου. Græc. Int.

Thirdly, There is an immortality by the power or gift, by the mercy or juſtice of God. The power and juſtice of God ſhall give an immortality to the bodies of the damned in hell, they ſhall ever live a dying life, who were dead all the while they lived. They who have ſlighted the mercy of God, ſhall be upheld by his power, to endure his juſtice to all eternity; wicked men would have ſinned with delight for ever upon the earth, if they could have lived for ever upon the earth; and they ſhall live for ever with pain in hell to ſuffer for their ſin.

The power, goodneſs and mercy of God ſhall much more give immortality to the bodies of the Saints in glory; they who have had a will to delight in obeying God that ſhort time they lived on earth, ſhall have a power to live for ever in delight, praiſing God in heaven.

The body of man in the ſtate of innocency, had an immortality by the gift of God, yet with condition that he did ſubmit to that Rule which God gave him to live by. Do this and live, was the Law of Adam's life. Adam had not an impoſſibility to die, but a poſſibility not to die; this was the ſtate of immortality in the ſtate of innocency. Man had not fallen into the grave, if he had not fallen into tranſgreſſion. His life was made as long as his obedience; if he had not turned from God, he had not returned to the earth.

Adamus habuit potentiam non moriendi, non impotẽtiam moriendi.

Adamus peccans non ſolum potuit mori, ſed nõ potuit non mori.

Death

Quicunque dicit Adamum primum hominem mortalem factum, ita ut ſive peccaret, ſive non peccaret, moreretur in corpore, hoc eſt, de corpore, exiret, non peccati merito, ſed neceſſitate naturæ, Anathema ſit. Conc. Mel. can. 1.

Death was conveyed in by ſin, and our poſſibility not to die, was not only loſt, but changed into a neceſſity of dying. So then man is brought to duſt, not becauſe his nature was ſubject to corruption, but becauſe ſin hath corrupted his nature. When he abuſed the liberty of his will, he was ſubjected to this neceſſity againſt his will. By an irreverſible ordinance of Heaven, It is appointed unto all men once to die, Heb. 9. 27. Job ſpeaks to that point of Gods Law concerning man, Thou haſt made me as the clay, and thou wilt bring me into the duſt again.

Thus the words are taken as an aſſertion of the power and priviledge of God, to unmake and pull down man, whom he had made and ſet up.

If we read the words by way of interrogation or admiration; ſo Job ſeems to intend them, as an allay to mitigate the preſent ſeverity of the Lords proceeding with him; Thou haſt made me of the clay but a while ago, and wilt thou bring me into the duſt again? O ſpare me a little before I go hence, and ſhall be ſeen no more! It will not be long before there muſt be an end of me, O let me have a more comfortable being and breathing while I am here!

When Satan provoked the Lord againſt Jeruſalem, to deſtroy it, the Lord anſwered (Zech. 3. 2.) Is not this a brand pluckt out of the fire? As if he had ſaid unto Satan, Art thou moving me to throw this people into that fire of affliction out of which they were ſo lately ſnatcht? Jeruſalem was in the fire but a while ago, and ſhall I caſt it in again? Job pleads in the ſame form, though not in the ſame matter; I was clay but the other day, and Lord, ſhall I to duſt again to day? Let me ſee ſome quiet dayes before I ſee the end of my dayes. Gild over this clay of mine with the ſhinings of thy face upon me, before thou rendereſt me duſt again.

I have more then once had occaſion to touch this Argument, and ſhall therefore paſs it here.

Job having thus ſet forth his natural conſtitution, in the matter of it, as he made of clay, goeth on to deſcribe himſelf more diſtinctly: Firſt, In his conception of his whole body. Secondly, In the formation and delineation of his parts.

Verſe 10. Haſt thou not poured me out as milk, and crudled me like cheeſe?

Lacti ſimile initio ſemẽ, poſtea admirabili Dei opere non ſecus ac caſeus concreſcit & conſolidatur, ut membra paulatim confirmari incipiant.

Under the modeſt ſhadow of this Verſe, that great natural myſtery of mans generation and conception is contained. The former word ſignifies not only the powring forth of Liquids, but the melting and diſſolving of the hardeſt metals, Iron, Braſs, &c. that they may be fitted to run, or be powred forth, Ezek. 22. 21, 22. And as this ſignifies the ſoftning and melting of that which is hard, ſo the next word (which we tranſlate crudled) ſignifies the hardning or thickning of that which is ſoft and fluid. Moſes uſeth it in deſcribing the miraculous dividing of the Red Sea, Ex. 15. 8. The floods ſtood upright as an heap, and the depths were congealed in the heart of the ſea. The Prophet Zephany uſeth it for the ſetledneſs and reſolvedneſs of a people in ſin (chap. 1. 12.) The Lord (ſaith he) will puniſh the men that are ſetled (we put in the Margin curdled or thickned) on their Lees. I might from theſe proprieties of the original words, illuſtrate that ſecret of mans original. But foraſmuch as the Spirit of God hath drawn a curtain, and caſt a vail of Metaphors over it, therefore I intend not to open or diſcover it. Ancient Philoſophors have ſpoken of theſe natural operations in a like Language, and under theſe ſimilitudes: I ſhall only ſay in general, that theſe two expreſſions, Firſt, Thou haſt poured me out as milk. Secondly, And crudled me like cheeſe, are appliable to that ſpecial contribution which God hath charged upon each Parent, towards that great work, the continuation of their own kind, and the raiſing up of a poſterity in their place, to ſerve himſelf, and their Generation. Hence learn, Firſt, That, Man hath reaſon to be humbled at the means and manner of his Original.

What hath he to be proud of in this world, who, that he might be prepared for his coming into the world, was powred out as milk, and curdled as cheeſe? Let not man be high-minded, whoſe beginning was ſo low and homely. Hence learn,

Secondly, Our natural conception is from God. Men (in a ſtrict ſence) are called the fathers of our fleſh, and God the father of Spirits (Heb. 12. 9.) Yet God hath the chief title to the fatherhood of our fleſh, as well as the ſole title to the fatherhood of our ſpirits. Thou haſt powred me out as milk, and thou haſt crudled me like cheeſe; here is no mention of his Father, none of his Mother; but as if the Lord had wrought all by an immediate power, he aſcribes the whole effect to him. Thou haſt powred me out as milk, &c. We are alſo his off-ſpring, as the Apoſtle tells the Athenians out of their own Poets, Acts 17. 28.

Nihil de genitoribus aut ſeminibus naſcitur, ſi ea non operetur Deus. Aug. in Pſal. 118.

Thirdly, This gives caution to all whom the Lord hath called, or ſhall call to the ſtate of Marriage, to be holy in that eſtate. Marriage is honourable (Heb. 13. 4.) and the bed undefiled, but whoremongers and adulterers God will judge: No wonder if God have a reſpectful eye to the undefiled in that relation, and a revengeful eye upon the defilers of it; ſeeing as his own authority inſtituted it, ſo his own power acts ſo eminently in it. Our conception, our formation, our birth and production, are all aſcribed to, yea, aſſumed by God himſelf. Of which ſecond act the next verſe gives us a noble and an elegant proof.

Verſe 11. Thou haſt cloathed me with skin and fleſh, and fenced me with bones and ſinews.

Semen in utero mulieris, primis ſeptem diebus conglobatur, coagulatur, fitque ad capiendam figuram idoneũ. Gel.

Gel. l. 7. de Sem. ex doctrina Hippocr.

Job proceeds like a great Philoſopher, about the production of man. For when by that former work of Nature, the matter is poured out and crudled, God by nature makes a further progreſs, and prepares for another work, the forming and faſhioning of that unſhapen lump, into the parts and lineaments of an organical body. Some Naturaliſts undertake to tell us exactly what is wrought the firſt ſeven dayes, and what the next, when the Brain, Heart and Liver are formed, and when the Fleſh, the Bones and Sinews. The ancient and learned Phyſitians have diſtinguiſhed this whole work of God, in perfecting mankind, into four periods. The firſt is, while the matter or principles out of which man is made, being mingled together, retain their own form. The ſecond is, when thoſe principles are groſſed into a rude fleſhly maſs. Theſe two periods Job hath taught us long before Galen and Hippocrates, in the former verſe, under thoſe notions of pouring out as milk, and crudling as cheeſe. The third period is, when a repreſentation is made of thoſe principal parts, the Brain, the Heart and the Liver, together with the threads, and (as ſome allude) the warp of mans conſtitution, or, as others, the lines and ſhadows of a man, ſuch as a skilful Artiſan makes with a ruder pencil, when he is about to draw a curious picture. The fourth period is, when both the ſimilar and organical parts are compleated, and alſo beautified with proper and lively colours. Theſe two latter periods are deſcribed by Job in this verſe, and in the beginning of the next.

Thou haſt cloathed me with skin and fleſh.

The original word for skin, comes from a root ſignifying naked. We commonly ſay he is naked, who hath nothing upon him but his skin. And Job, who here ſaith, Thou haſt cloathed me with skin, ſaid, chap. 1. 20. Naked came I out of my Mothers womb, and naked ſhall I return thither: That is, with nothing but my skin. He that wears only skin and fleſh, hath no artificial cloathing, but he hath a natural cloathing. We are dreſt in garments taken out of the Wardrobe of God and Nature before the world puts a rag upon us. Thus man is born naked, yet cloathed; unarmed, yet fenced.

Thou haſt cloathed me with skin and fleſh, &c.] Which ſome interpret in reference to the ſoul, which is covered over, and encloſed with the skin and fleſh.

But this cloathing of skin and fleſh refers rather to thoſe inward, more noble and tender parts, the Heart, Liver, Brain and Bowels; theſe are encloſed with skin and fleſh, leſt they ſhould take cold: Theſe are fenced with bones and ſinews, leſt they ſhould take hurt. Hence death is called an uncloathing. Death ſtrips us, not only to the skin, but of the skin. We that are in this Tabernacle, do groan, being burdened, not for that we would be uncloathed, 2 Cor. 5. 4. that is, not that we would put off this garment of skin and fleſh, this natural cloathing, but we would have a ſupernatural cloathing upon it, even a veſt of glory put upon theſe veſts of frailty. This Scripture in Job is of the ſame language with that of Paul, Thou haſt cloathed me with skin and fleſh.

It is ſaid of a virtuous woman (Prov. 31. 21.) That ſhe is not afraid of the ſnow for her houſhold, for all her houſhold are all cloathed with Skarlet, or double garments. The great and moſt wiſe God hath prepared ſuch cloathing for mans inward parts, that he nedes not fear ſnow or cold, he hath provided double garments, two ſuits, skin and fleſh. Fleſh is an under-garment, and skin is an upper garment; fleſh covers the bones, and skin covers the fleſh. Anatomiſts obſerve, That man hath two diſtinct coats of skin upon his fleſh, or mans skin is a lined garment, yet differing from other garments; for here the lining is uppermoſt. This uppermoſt skin, or as ſome call it, the ſcarf-skin, is without ſenſe, you may thruſt a needle through it without pain. There was great reaſon it ſhould be ſo, that it might defend the skin under it from external injuries, as alſo attemper the exquiſite ſenſe thereof, and ſo become the medium or mean of touching; for all ſenſation is made by ſome mean: and it is either altogether hindered, or much diſturbed by the immediety of the Object and the Organ. Hence when this cuticle or ſcarf-skin is off or broken, the gentleſt touch upon that bared part, breedeth much pain, but ſpoileth the true ſenſation. Under this curtain or ſcarf-skin, the true and proper skin lieth. The Greeks call it δέρας, becauſe it may be flayed off, or δέρμα, quaſi δέμα, a band, becauſe it compaſſeth or knitteth together the whole body. This skin is a ſeamleſs garment, yet it hath divers out-lets made for the relief and eaſe of Nature; ſome of which are obvious to ſenſe, others called pores, are both innumerable and imperceptible.

To this double veſture of skin, fleſh is added, as having according to Job's Philoſophy, an immediate conjunction or contiguity with one another. But our Philoſophers in their profeſſed deſcriptions of mans Anatomy, place two parts between the skin and the fleſh, namely, fat and the fleſhly Membrane. Concerning which, they who pleaſe may conſult the writings of learned Naturaliſts. I ſhall not ſtep out into ſuch digreſſions.

Further, As God hath given ſuch a cloathing of skin and fleſh, ſo he hath given us armour under that cloathing. Thou haſt fenced me with bones and ſinews.

The word which we tranſlate fenced, is the ſame uſed (ch. 1. 10.) Where Satan tells the Lord that he had ſecured the ſtate of Job, ſo that he could not come nigh it. Haſt thou not made an hedge about him? The Devil made many aſſaults againſt Job, but he could not batter down that hedge, it was Cannon-proof. As the ſtate, ſo the body of Job was fenced; if we look upon the Skeliton of a man, we ſhall ſee the proportion of an armour, breſt and back formed up with bones and ſinews.

Bones are for ſtrength, and ſinews for motion; bones being firm and ſtiff in themſelves, are moveable by ſinews. There are other parts of the Body which concur to the making up of this Armour, Griſtles, Muſcles, Ligaments, Membranes, all which ſerve for motion, faſtening and defence, as well as Bones and Sinews: but theſe being the principal and moſt known, are here expreſſed for all the reſt.

Ὀςέα τῷ σώματι ςάσιν καὶ ὀρθότητα καὶ εἶδος παρέχοντα. Hip.

Bones give the body ſtability, ſtraightneſs and form. They are as the carkaſs of a Ship, whereto the reſt of the parts are faſtened, and by which they are ſuſtained. They are as the poſts, pillars, beams and rafters of a houſe, by whoſe knittings and contignations the whole building is both proportioned and ſupported. And though the bones are for number very many, and in their forms exceeding various, ſome thick, ſome thin, ſome plain, ſome hollow, ſome of a greater, others of a leſſer bore, yet are they ſo connect and fitted together by articulation or by coalition, by contiguity or continuity (as the Anatomiſts ſpeak) that they all appear as one bone, or pack of bones.

Sinews or Nerves derive their pedigree from the Brain, and are the Organs by which the animal ſpirits are conveyed, and flow into the whole body, and with them both ſenſe and motion. Sinews have ſo much of ſtrength in them, that the ſame word is put to ſignifie both ſtrength and ſinews, and to do a thing ſtrongly and vigorouſly, is to do it (nervoſe) ſinewouſly. It is wonderful which Naturaliſts write of the conjugations and uſes of the ſinews; to whoſe Labours I refer the ſtudious Reader for further ſatisfaction. I have given enough to ſhew what this Text calls me to, That God hath indeed cloathed man with skin and fleſh, and fenced him with bones and ſinews.

Some have quarrelled with the wiſdom and goodneſs of God, for turning man altogether naked and unarmed into the world. This Scripture is enough to confute the unreaſonableneſs of that quarrel. Job thankfully acknowledgeth that he was both cloathed and armed, though not in the ſence of theſe complainers. It is more honourable for man to make himſelf artificial Cloathing and Arms, then to have had none but natural; God hath given man reaſon to invent, hands to prepare, and a tongue to call for thoſe things which by a Law of Nature are impoſed upon other creatures; the power of reaſon, and the skill of the hand are a better ſafeguard to man then any the beaſts have, and can provide whatſoever man wants to ſecure him either from cold or danger. And though the body, as now it ſtands, be but (as it were) the Sepulcher of that which God at firſt created, though we lie open to ſo many diſeaſes and deaths, that the ſoul may well be ſaid to inhabit an unwalled and an unfortified City, yet man hath great cauſe for ever to extol the bounty of God in thoſe ſtill continued ennoblements of this earthly manſion, his mortal body. Yea, the noble ſtructure and ſymmetry of our bodies invites our ſouls not only to thankfulneſs, but to admiration. One of the Ancients ſtileth man A great Miracle: Another, The Miracle of Miracles: A third, The meaſure of all things: A fourth, The pattern of the Univerſe, The worlds Epitome, The world in a ſmall Volume, or, A little world. They alſo have diſtinguiſhed the whole frame of the Body into three Stories, in alluſion to a like frame obſervable in the world. Firſt, The ſuperior, which they call intellectual or Angelical, becauſe they conceived it to be the habitation of Angels or Intelligences. The ſecond or middle part they call Cœleſtial or Heavenly, the ſeat of the Sun and Stars. The third, Elementary, in which all corporeal creatures are procreated and nouriſhed. This diviſion of the world is eminent in man, for he alſo is a building of three Stories. The Head, which is the Seat of Reaſon, the manſion, the Tower of wiſdom and underſtanding, is placed higheſt: The Breſt or middle venter is the Celeſtial part, wherein the Heart, like the Sun, is predominant; ſome have called the Sun The heart of the world, and the Heart, The Sun of mans Body, by whoſe luſtre, beams and influences, all the other parts are quickned and refreſhed; hence we ſay, when the heart holds, all holds. The third part of the Body, or the lower Venter, containing all parts neceſſary for the nutrition of individuals, or the propagation of the Species, carrieth a clear reſemblance with the elementary or loweſt parts of the Univerſe.

There are five things in particular, which as ſo many Rounds of a Ladder, may help us to raiſe our thoughts higher in the duty of holy admiration about this work of God.

Firſt, That God frameth up this goodly and beautiful Fabrick out of ſuch mean and improbable Materials. To conſider out of what ſtuff our bodies are made, advanceth the honour of him who made us. Man can make his work (except the form) no better then the matter out of which he formeth it. But as the form of mans body is better then the matter, ſo the matter becomes better then it was before it received that form.

Secondly, The matter out of which God maketh man, is originally homogeneal, or but of one kind, yet there is a ſtrange heterogeny or variety in the very ſubſtance, as well as in the ſhape of the ſeveral parts; which are therefore divided by the Surveyors of this Building into parts ſimilar and diſſimilar. Is it not incredible to meer Reaſon, that one Lump ſhould be ſpread out into thin, tender skin, wrought into ſoft fleſh, extended into tough ſinews, hardened into ſtrong bones; that one piece ſhould make an outward Jerkin or Caſſock of skin, an under garment of fleſh, Columnes and Rafters of bones, Bands and ties of ſinews; that the ſame ſhould make veins, like channels, to carry, and blood like water, to be carried into every part, to moiſten and refreſh it? When an Artificer buildeth an houſe, he requires more materials then one, he muſt have

Quomodo ex re tantula & ſibi ſimili, tam varia & diſcrepantes partes extiterunt; hæc profecto eſt ſtupenda omnino opificis noſtri ſapientia & vis ad quicquid efficiendum. Merl

Stones and Timber, Iron, Lead, &c. to compleat his Fabrick; but the Lord frameth all the parts, rooms and contrivances of the Body out of one and the ſame Maſs. Thou doſt not know (ſaith Solomon) how the bones do grow in the womb of her that is with child (Eccleſ. 11. 5.) Who can know by a meer rational demonſtration, how a ſolid ſubſtance ſhould grow out of that which is ſo fluid? And that parts materially, as well as figuratively unlike, ſhould ariſe out of a like matter?

Thirdly, The work of God in framing of man is internal, as well as external. A Statuary or an Engraver will make the Image or Pourtraiture of a man, but his work is all outward, he cannot make Bowels, or faſhion a Heart within, he cannot cut out Veins, Bones and Sinews. The greateſt wonders of Creation are unſeen. God hath packt many Rarities, Myſteries, yea, Miracles together in mans Cheſt. All the vital Inſtruments and Wheels whereby the Watch of our life is perpetually moved from the firſt hour to the laſt, are locked up in a curious internal cabinet, where God himſelf prepared the pullies, hung on the weights, and wound up the Chime by the hand of his infinite power, without opening of any part; as our own learned Anatomiſt elegantly teacheth us in the Preface to his ſixth Book.

Fourthly, The dimenſions, proportions and poyſe of mans body are ſo exact and due, that they are made the model of all ſtructures and artificials. Caſtles, Houſes, Ships, yea, the Ark of Noah was framed after the meaſure and plot of mans Body. In him is found a circulate Figure, and a perfect Quadrate, yea, the true quadrature of a Circle, whoſe imaginary Lines have ſo much troubled the Mathematicians of many Ages.

Fifthly, In every part uſefulneſs and commodiouſneſs, comlineſs and convenience meet together. What beauty is ſtampt upon the face? What Majeſty in the eye? What ſtrength is put in the arms? What activity into the hands? What muſick and melody in the tongue? Nothing in this whole Fabrick could be well left out or better placed, either for ornament or for uſe. Some men make great houſes which have many ſpare rooms, or rooms ſeldom uſed; but as in this houſe there is not any one room wanting, ſo every room is of continual uſe.

Was ever clay thus honoured, thus faſhioned? Galen gave Epicurus an hundred years to imagine a more commodious ſituation, configuration or compoſition of any one part of the Body: And ſurely if all the Angels in Heaven had ſtudied to this day, they could not have caſt man into a more curious mould, or have given a fairer and more correct edition of man. This clay cannot ſay to him that faſhioneth it, What makeſt thou? Or this work, he hath no hands (Iſa. 44. 9.) The Lord hath made man ſo well, that man cannot tell which way to be made better. This work cannot ſay, he that wrought me hath no hands, that is, I am ill wrought; as to ſay, you have no eyes, you have no ears, are reproofs of negligence and inadvertency, both in hearing and ſeeing: So when we ſay to a man, ſurely you have no hands, our meaning is, he hath done his work either ſloathfully or unskilfully. But this work of mans body ſhall not need to ſay unto God, he hath no hands; he hath given proof enough, that hands and head too were employed about this work. Let us make it appear that we have hands and tongues, and hearts for him, that we have skin and fleſh, bones and ſinews for him, that we have ſtrength, and health, and life, and all for him, ſeeing all theſe are alſo derived from him, as appears in the next words, Thou haſt granted me life and favour.

Job having thus deſcribed the natural conception and formation of his body, deſcendeth to his quickning and preſervation. When God had formed man out of the duſt of the earth, he then breathed into him the breath of life, and man became a living ſoul; and thus when God had formed man in the womb, given him Skin and Fleſh, Bones and Sinews, then he gives Life and Breath, and all things neceſſary to the continuation of what he hath wrought up to ſuch excellent perfections. Our divine Philoſopher teacheth us this Doctrine.

Verſe 12. Thou haſt granted me life and favour, and thy viſitation hath preſerved my ſpirit.

This Verſe holds out to us the great Charter of God to man, conſiſting of three Royal Grants. Firſt, Life. Secondly, Favour. Thirdly, Viſitation. The bounty of God appears much in granting Life, more in granting Favour, moſt of all in his grant of gracious viſitations. Thou haſt granted me life, &c.

The Letter of the Hebrew is, Thou haſt made or fitted for me life and favour. The Soul is the ornament of the Body, Life the luſtre of our Clay. Thou haſt not thrown or hudled my life into my body, thou haſt put it in exquiſitely and orderly. The frame of the body is an exquiſite frame; but the frame, the faculties and powers, the actings and motions of the ſoul are far more exquiſite: The Inhabitant is more noble the Houſe, and the Jewel then the Cabinet. As the life is better then meat, and the body then (artificial) rayment (Mat. 6. 25.) So the life is better then the body, which is to it a natural rayment.

Thou haſt granted me life.

Life is put Metonymically for the Soul, of which it is an effect, as the Soul is often put for the Life, whereof it is a cauſe.

We tranſlate in the ſingular number, Life; the Hebrew is plural, Thou haſt granted me lives. But hath a man more lives then one? Some underſtand Job ſpeaking not only of corporal, but ſpiritual life; as our natural life is the ſalt of the body, to keep that from corrupting; ſo ſpiritual life, or the life of Grace, is the ſalt of the ſoul, to keep that from corrupting.

Secondly, Thou haſt granted me lives, that is, ſay others, temporal life and eternal life.

Thirdly, Lives may be taken for the three great powers of life. Man hath one life conſiſting of three diſtinct lives: For whereas there is a life of vegetation and growth, ſuch as is in Trees and Plants; and a life of ſenſe and motion, ſuch as is in the Beaſts of the Earth, Fowls of the Air, and Fiſhes of the Sea; and a life of reaſon, ſuch as is in Angels, whereby they underſtand and diſcourſe; theſe three lives, which are divided and ſhared among all other living creatures, are brought together and compacted into the life of man. Whole man is the Epitome or ſum of the whole Creation, being enriched and dignified with the powers of the inviſible world and of the viſible put together, under which notion we may expound this Text, Thou haſt granted me lives; a threefold life, or a threefold acting or exerciſe of the ſame life. Thou haſt granted me lives.

Hence obſerve, Life is the gift of God.

With thee is the fountain of lives, the well, or the vein of lives (Pſal. 36. 9.) The Pſalmiſt alludes, either firſt, to waters which flow from a fountain, and ſo doth life from God. Or ſecondly, To Metals; With thee is the vein of lives. As all mineral veins, the veins of Gold and Silver, of Lead and Iron, &c. lie (as it were) in the boſom and bowels of the earth; ſo doth life in God. There is not the leaſt vein of this Quickſilver in all the world, but comes from him. Or thirdly, The Pſalmiſt alludeth to the veins of the body, which as ſo many rivers and rivulets derive their blood from that Red Sea the Liver. God hath a Sea of life in himſelf, and all that live are fill'd with life from him. This is one of his royal titles, The living God; He is the living God, not only ſubjective, becauſe he liveth; but effective, becauſe he enliveneth and quickneth all living creatures; From him we receive life and breath (Acts 17. 25.) In him we live, and move, and have our being, verſ. 28. In him we live, &c. that is, by him, or through him, as the ſame Apoſtle teacheth (Rom. 11. 36.) The ſame power giveth us being, and maintains it. This is true, yet the context carrieth the Prepoſition (In) further. For the Apoſtle having aſſerted, verſ. 27. He is not far from every one of us; ſubjoynes this as a proof, For in him we live, &c. Implying that man is, in a ſence, contained in, or inveſted with God. The divine nature cannot be circumſcribed with any thing, yet circumſcribeth all things: For which, Paul refers the Athenians to Heathen Poets, who ſpake this truth in a carnal language, yet ſuch as might be ſpiritualiz'd by a ſanctified underſtanding. The reſult of which is, That God is the author and conſervator of our lives. This glory is given alſo unto Chriſt, who is called The Prince of life, becauſe he hath life at command; The Son quickneth whom he will. Chriſt hath the power, not only of natural, but of ſpiritual and eternal life. He is the Prince of Lives.

Job ſpeaks in the language of Princes, Thou haſt granted, &c. As they make our grants of Lands and Offices, ſo God makes a grant of life. The civil godſhip of Kings and Magiſtrates appears much in this, that they can grant a forfeited life, either by reprieve for a time, or by pardon for ever. It is ordinary with men, to grant others Leaſes for their lives, but they cannot grant them life. Princes can grant an offender a Leaſe of that life which he hath, but no Prince can grant life to thoſe who have it not. That's Gods peculiar, Thou haſt granted me life.

And favour.] The word ſignifieth the pureſt, ſincereſt, and moſt tender kindneſs, the fulleſt favour, the moſt courteous courteſie, Gen. 21. 23. & 24. 49. Exod. 15. 13. Ruth 1. 8. Hebricians tell us, That it noteth an exuberancy of kindneſs, ſuch as breaks the bounds, and exceeds the ordinary laws of love. It is but a poor way of loving, to love only by rule and meaſure. There is no true love can act beyond the rule which God gives, but love quickly exceeds the rules of men. Hence the Jews call thoſe Chaſidem, who are not only juſt by ſtature, giving every man his right, paying every man his due, but noble, heroical, free-hearted and open-handed in their diſtribution of favours.

One Expoſitor by favour underſtands the ſeeds of grace and vertue, eſpecially of charity and mercifulneſs, which (ſaith he) ſeem to have been connatural to Job.

Virtutum quædam ſeminaria tribuiſti mihi, & preſertim miſericordiæ, quam ſibi innatam ipſe fatetur, Job 31. 18. Aquin.

Liberum arbitriū tribuiſti mihi. Cajet.

Another interprets favour by free-will. But I paſs theſe as perverſions, not expoſitions of Scripture: And ſhall repreſent what is both ſafe and ſutable.

Firſt, Some reſtrain this favour to that which he received in the womb before he was born, or the favour which he had to be born, which is to be reckoned among very valuable favours. Thou art he that took me out of the womb, was David's thankful acknowledgment, *Pſal.*22.9. The womb is to all infants a temporary priſon, and to ſome a grave. It is favour to have thoſe gates unlockt, and the little priſoner ſet ſafe at liberty.

Hebraiſmus eſt quando ex duibus, ſimul poſitis ſubſtantivis unum adverbialiter ſumitur alterumq; determinat. Bold.

Secondly, We may interpret it as an adjunct, or an adverb, ſhewing how the Lord granted him life. It is an uſual Hebraiſm to put the latter of two Subſtantives adverbially, Joſh. 2. 14. We will deal kindly and truly with thee, ſay the Spies to Rahab. The Original is, We will deal kindneſs and truth to thee; which is alſo rendered kindneſs in truth, or kindneſs truly, that is, thou mayeſt truſt us: we do not flatter thee, and we will not deceive thee. So here, Thou haſt granted me life and favour; That is, life by favour, or life favourably; importing, That the receit of life, is the receit of a great mercy; as if Job had ſaid, I could not deſerve that thou ſhouldeſt beſtow life upon me: When I was formed and faſhioned in the womb, it was thy favour to quicken me: Mercy put breath into thoſe tender principles, and firſt rudiments of my body. And ſeeing not only ſenſe and motion, are brought in by life, but reaſon alſo, and all the noble operations of it; Job had reaſon enough to ſay, Thou haſt granted me life, as a great, or with abundant favour.

Hence obſerve, Life is a ſpecial favour of God.

There are divers ſorts of creatures which have not the favour of life beſtowed on them, no not the loweſt degree of life. The Lord hath given man not only life, but the higheſt degree of life; that is a high favour. It was Satans argument (Chap. 2.) Skin for skin, and all that a man hath, will he give for his life; As if he had ſaid, What is a mans body to his life? What are his eſtate, his lands, his gold and ſilver? What are all theſe dead commodities to his life? Life is the moſt precious of natural bleſſings. A worm (under this conſideration) is a more noble creature then the Sun, becauſe a worm hath life, which the Sun hath not. The loweſt of a ſuperior order, is better then the higheſt of an inferior; Though the Sun be the excellenteſt of all inanimate creatures, yet it moves (though in heaven) in a lower orb, then any thing that lives groveling on the earth. A Leaf is more excellent then a Pearl or a Diamond, becauſe a Leaf hath a life in it, which theſe have not. That opinion of voluptuous Atheiſts or Epicures, delivered us by the Preacher, hath a truth in it; A living dog is better then a dead lion (Eccleſ. 9. 4.) For though (as that voice ſpake from heaven, Revel. 14. 13.) Bleſſed are the dead that die in the Lord, and though curſed are the living that live without the Lord: in which ſence the pooreſt dead Dog is better then the proudeſt Lion alive; Yet, conſider man only within the line and compaſs of natural life; then he that lives in the worſt condition, is better then he that once was in higheſt dignity, but now is dead. It is uſual in Scripture by a Dog to ſet forth the vileſt eſtate of man, and the moſt excellent by a Lion. When Mephiboſheth would ſhew how low he was in his own eyes, though the ſon of a noble Prince, he joyns theſe two, Dead and a Dog together; 2 Sam. 9. 8. What is thy ſervant, that thou ſhouldeſt look upon ſuch a dead Dog as I am? He calls himſelf not only a Dog, as Chriſt did the Woman of Canaan, and as ſhe acknowledged her ſelf to be; but to lay himſelf as low as lowneſs it ſelf, he calls himſelf a dead Dog, implying, That life giveth ſome honour, and caſteth luſtre upon every ſubject, which it inhabits, though it be the meaneſt. When Eſau was near periſhing with hunger (Gen. 25. 32.) he reſolves thus, I am at the point to die, and what profit ſhall this birth-right do to us? As if he had ſaid, ſhall I keep my birth-right, and loſe my life? My life is more precious. Thus he ſpake, and he ſpake profanely in it; yet there is ſome truth in what he ſpake; for if we take birth-right preciſely in the notion of a civil priviledge, ſo life is better then a birth-right; but he is called prophane Eſau, becauſe there was a ſpiritual priviledge in his birth-right, which he ought to have valued above his life. Any ſpiritual good thing is better then natural life; but life is the beſt of natural, and better then all civil good things. When the Prophet would expreſs how great a bleſſing a King was to his people, he called him, The breath of their noſtrils, Lam. 4. 29. and live for ever, was the higheſt apprecation given the Babylonian Kings. The moſt noble imitations of Art are about this piece of Nature; it is the ambition of a Painter to draw to the life, or to ſhadow the motions and actings of life. When we would commend a picture, we ſay, It is done to the life; How precious a favour is real life, the very ſhadow of which is of ſo great a price? He that layeth down his life, payeth the greateſt debt, whether to juſtice or to nature. Chriſt went to the higheſt price for, and ſhewed the greateſt favour to ſinners, when he parted, and pawned this jewel for them, his precious life.

This ſhould mind Parents, as to pray for quickning after conceptions, ſo to give thanks when the embryon is quickned.

Cheſed omnia beneficia Dei promiſcuè complectitur Coc.

Now if this natural life be ſuch a favour, What is ſpiritual and eternal life? Thou haſt given me life and favour, or life as a favour.

Non ſolum vitam dediſti, ſed cumulaſti bonis omnibus, quæ ad victū, honorem, & rem vitæ neceſſariam pertinent: Hoc nomine complectitur etiam omnia beneficia quæ ultra vitam Deus homini concedit, dum educandum eum inſtituendum, & informandū in lege ſua & timore curat. Merc:

Thirdly, By favour in conjunction with life, we may underſtand the accidents of life; that is, thoſe good things which accompany and accommodate our lives; Thou haſt given me life, not a bare life, nor a mear ſubſiſtence or being in the world, but with life thou haſt alſo given me favour, many mercies and comforts to make my life ſweet and pleaſant to me.

Beſides, favour takes in not only thoſe outward comforts of health, ſtrength, liberty, plenty, but thoſe inward ornaments of life alſo, good education, and inſtruction in knowledge both humane and divine. It appears Job had a fair portion of theſe favours. His was not a naked, but a clothed ſoul, a ſoul gilded and engraven all over with heavenly truths.

So that Job in this word reports the bounty and munificence of God towards him, in all the former additions and accompliſhments of his life. Many have lives which they ſcarce look upon as a favour. Some accidents of life, are more worth then the ſubſtance of it. Our well-being is better then our being. It may prove a deſirable favour to be rid of life. In which ſence Job ſpake of himſelf at the firſt verſe of this Chapter, My ſoul is weary of my life. His life was then a burden, but once a favour. Thou haſt granted me life and favour.

Fourthly, Job may here intend ſpiritual and eternal favour. Cheſed ſignifies the grace or favour of God in Chriſt (Pſal. 89. 33.) My loving kindneſs will I not take from him, nor ſuffer my faithfulneſs to fail. If he fail in duty I will chaſten him in mercy, I will not remove mercy from him. The Vulgar tranſlates, Thou haſt given me life and mercy, which ſome expound of that ſpecial mercy, the pardon of his ſin, and his waſhing from original corruption; As if Job had ſaid, I partake not only of life, but alſo of that which is better then life it ſelf, Thy favour or loving kindneſs, *Pſal.*63.4. The favour of God in ſpiritual things, (in pardoning ſin, in regenerating the ſoul, in ſending the holy Spirit) is the perfection of his favour. What is man without that favour which makes him a ſon of God, but even a beautiful, or at moſt, a rational beaſt? as David calls him, *Pſal.*49.21. And ſhould a man give thanks for outward favours only, without any reflection upon ſpiritual; a beaſt, could he ſpeak might give ſuch thanks. The life of ſenſe and growth is as a mercy, but beaſts and plants live thus: The life of reaſon is a greater mercy, but wicked men live thus; many are in Hell, unto whom God granted this life, and they would be glad God would call in his grant, and take it from them: But unto theſe three lives God adds a fourth to his Elect, even a life of grace through Jeſus Chriſt. This is the favour of favours, and the bleſſing of all our bleſſings; except this favour be granted with our lives, it were better for us never to have had a grant of our lives. It is more eligible not to have been born, then not to be born again.

Cheſed ſumitur pro venuſtate corporis. Coc.

There is a fifth Interpretation, taking the word Cheſed for corporal favour, or the beauty of the body, we ſay, ſuch an one is well favoured, he hath an excellent feature; the favour of man is ſeen in the feature of his face. Favour is the perfection of beauty; Some have a clear mixture of white and red, yet no favour. In this ſence the word is uſed (Iſa. 40.6.) where the Lord makes a proclamation, The voice ſaid Cry, and he ſaid, What ſhall I cry? All fleſh is graſs, and the goodlineſs thereof as the flower of the field; The word which we tranſlate goodlineſs, is Cheſed, All fleſh is graſs (man withers quickly) and Cheſed, the goodlineſs thereof; all of man, his favour, beauty, ſtrength, all theſe are as the flower of the field. Some read goodneſs for goodlineſs; the ſence holds, if we take it ſo: the natural, the moral goodneſs of man is but a flower. As no goodlineſs, ſo no goodneſs of man, except ſpiritual, laſteth long, and that laſteth long and long, even for ever. Grace is not as the flower of the field; that is, durable ſubſtance: that (as the Prophet ſpeaks there of the Word of God in verſ. 8.) ſhall ſtand for ever. The grace of God is as laſting as the Word of God, for his Word is the external ſeed or principle of grace. But all other goodneſs and goodlineſs of man how good, how goodly ſoever; his other beauty how beautiful ſoever; his ſtrength, how ſtrong; his favour, how well favoured ſo ever, is but as the flower of the field, which is either cut down while it is green, or ſoon fades while it ſtands.

Take favour in this ſence, and the ſence of the whole verſe is harmonious and ſound. Thou haſt granted me life; my body is formed and quickned, and more then ſo, Thou haſt given me favour, my body is full of beauty and comlineſs. The comlineſs of the body is a favour received, and many receive favour, becauſe they are comly. From either of which conſiderations we may call the comlineſs of the body favour, and it is no common favour, God denies this to many; he grants them the life of Nature, but not favour; yea, he grants many the life of Grace, but not favour. Beautiful ſouls are often ill-houſed; and filthy ſouls cleanly houſed; 'tis admirable when both beauties meet in the ſame man; Moſes was a goodly child (Exod. 2.2.) and a good man. As grace in the inward man is the beſt favour, ſo favour is graceful to the outward man. Thou haſt granted me life and favour,

And thy viſitation hath preſerved my ſpirit.

פקד Inſpectio n̄ ἡ ἐπισκοπή σοῦ. Sept. Viſitatio eſt Dominorum & ſuperiorum, cum ad Deum refertur, denotat providentiā. Pined.

Here is the third benefit of this Royal grant, The viſitation of God. One reads, Thy preſence. A ſecond, Thy aſſiſtance. A third, Thy inſpection, thy over-looking or ſuperintendency hath preſerved my ſpirit. The Hebrew word ſignifies, The viſitation of a ſuperior over an inferior, as when Maſters enquire into their Families, or Governors into their Colledges and Hoſpitals, to ſee whether the Statutes and Orders appointed by the Founders and Benefactors be obſerved. There is a threefold viſitation of God held forth in Scripture.

Firſt, A viſitation of condemnation. God viſits to take vengeance by deſtructive puniſhments, when warning is not taken, nor repentance ſhewed after corrective puniſhments. Shall not I viſit for theſe things, ſaith the Lord? Shall not my ſoul be avenged on ſuch a Nation as this? Jer. 5.9.

Secondly, A viſitation of correction (Pſal. 89.32.) If thy children forſake my law, &c. then will I viſit their tranſgreſſion with the rod, and their iniquity with ſtripes: Nevertheleſs my loving kindneſs will I not utterly take from him, &c. Though they break my Laws, yet I will not break my Covenant, they ſhall ſmart for it, but they ſhall not periſh for it. This is a fatherly viſitation.

Thirdly, A viſitation of conſolation. And this two-fold, Firſt, For deliverance out of an evil eſtate, and that either temporal; the Lord is ſaid to viſit his people Iſrael, when he delivered them out of Egypt (Exod. 4.31.) or ſpiritual and eternal; God hath viſited and redeemed his people, ſaith the bleſſed Virgin (Luke 1.68.) that is, he hath viſited his people, to redeem them from ſin and Satan, death and hell, by Jeſus Chriſt.

Secondly (Which is moſt proper to this Text) there is a viſitation, for protection in a good eſtate. When God (having cauſed our line to fall in a fair place) draws his line of providential communication round about us; So Mr. Broughton tranſlates, Life and loving kindneſs haſt thou dealt to me, and thy providence preſerveth my ſpirit. As if Job had ſaid, Thou didſt not only give me life and favour, but thou didſt protect me for many years in the enjoyment of thoſe favours. Providence was the hedge, not only of his outward, but of his inward eſtate, Thy viſitation hath preſerved my ſpirit.

The Verb which we tranſlate, hath preſerved, ſignifieth to preſerve, both by ſtrength and watchfulneſs. The Noun expreſſeth a Watch-tower, in Hebrew, becauſe a watchman ſtandeth upon his Tower, and looks round about him, to eſpy and give notice of approaching dangers. The Lord preſerveth both wayes, by his watchfulneſs, and by his ſtrength: his eye is wakeful enough, and his arm is powerful enough to preſerve us. He that keepeth Iſrael doth neither ſlumber nor ſleep (Pſal. 121.1.) the Creator of the ends of the earth fainteth not, neither is weary (Iſa. 40.28.) He that is thus wakeful can eaſily viſit, and he that is thus powerful, can eaſily preſerve thoſe whom he viſiteth.

Thy viſitation hath preſerved my ſpirit.

But how did the viſitation of God, preſerve the ſpirit of Job? Or what are we to underſtand by his ſpirit, which was thus preſerved?

The ſpirit of man is taken three wayes;

Firſt, For Life. Thus God keepeth us from death, while he preſerves our ſpirits.

Secondly, For the Soul. Thus God preſerveth our ſpirits, while he keeps us from falling into, or from falling in temptation; while he keeps our corruptions from prevailing, and our graces from decaying.

Thirdly, The ſpirit of man is taken for his Courage. Thus God preſerveth our ſpirits, while he keeps us from needleſs fears, and cowardly deſpondencies. Doubtleſs Job had experience of the viſitation of God preſerving his ſpirit in all theſe ſences; yet here he ſeems chiefly to intend the preſervation of his life, which God had granted him with favour, or of thoſe comforts which were granted him with his life. Hence obſerve, Firſt in general,

That what God granteth, he preſerveth.

It is a part of his grant, that he will preſerve. Should the Lord beſtow the greateſt ſtock of mercy upon us, and leave us to the wide world, he ſhould quickly loſe all; God is not like the Carpenter or the Maſon, who buildeth up a houſe, and then leaveth it to it ſelf, or to the care of others. The Lord ſurveyes what he builds, and keeps up what he ſets up; all would come down elſe. Providence ſucceedeth Creation, or Providence is a continued Creation. As ſoon as ever the Lord had made Man, and a Garden, He took the Man and put him in the Garden which he had made, to dreſs it, and to keep it (Gen. 2.15.) God putteth the creatures under mans charge, yet he keepeth all creatures in his own charge, and eſpecially man: A Garden without a man to viſit it, would ſoon be a wilderneſs. And man without God to viſit him would ſoon be, or be in a wilderneſs, either out of order, or in danger. Achiſh promiſeth David, I will make thee a keeper of my head for ever (1 Sam.28.2.) His meaning was, he ſhould be Captain of his guard. Great Princes have their guards, they have keepers of their heads. The great King of Heaven and earth is a guard to the meaneſt man, and the keeper of his head. God enquires of Cain for his brother Abel (Gen.4.) Where is Abel thy brother? What is become of him? Cain was angry at the queſtion, Am I (ſaith he) my brothers keeper? We ought to be one anothers keepers; our mutual viſitations ſhould preſerve one anothers ſpirits. Some are apt to think themſelves too good for the work: others, that the work is too hard for them. It is our comfort, and it may be our aſſurance, that God hath neither of theſe thoughts; The Lord is thy keeper: the Lord is thy ſhade upon thy right hand. The Sun ſhall not ſmite thee by day, nor the Moon by night. The Lord ſhall preſerve thee from all evil; He ſhall preſerve thy ſoul: The Lord ſhall preſerve thy going out, and thy coming in, from this time forth and for evermore (Pſal. 121. 5.) How large a writ or patent of protection is granted here? No time ſhall be hurtful, neither day nor night; which includes all times. Nothing ſhall hurt, neither Sun nor Moon, nor heat nor cold: Theſe include all annoyances. Nothing ſhall be hurt, Thy ſoul ſhall be preſerved, thy outgoings and thy comings in ſhall be preſerved: Theſe include the whole perſon of man, and him in all his juſt affairs and actions. Nothing of man is ſafe without a guard, and nothing of man can be unſafe, which is thus guarded. They ſhall be kept, who can ſay, The Lord is our keeper. And they cannot be kept, no not by legions of Angels, who have not the Lord for their keeper. None can keep us, but he, and he hath promiſed to keep us for evermore. Some men are weary of their offices, and ſome are put out of office; God is neither. In that Prophetical curſe againſt Judas, 'tis ſaid, Let another take his office (Pſal.109.8.) What office? It is this word, and notes there the office of looking to, or of preſerving the ſouls of others, we commonly call it, The cure of ſouls. Such is the office of all the Miniſters of Chriſt, That's Epiſcopacy by divine right; this in the Text is divine Epiſcopacy. That word which here in Job we tranſlate viſitation, and in the Pſalm now cited, office, is called Epiſcopacy by the Apoſtle (Act.1.21.) Chriſt is the great Biſhop or viſitor both of our ſouls and bodies. He is the œcumenical Biſhop. The whole world is his Dioceſs. He preſerveth man and beaſt. See more of this point, Chap.7. 20.

Præfectura ejus accipiat alter, id eſt, omnia quæ in ejus cura ſunt quæ ſub ſua poteſtate habet.

Again, For as much as this viſitation which extendeth to the whole man, is here in the letter determined upon the ſpirit, We may obſerve,

First, Taking Spirit for Life,

> That as our well-being, ſo our being in the world is at the daily diſpoſe of God.

The living God not only giveth, but maintaineth our lives. We live not by bread, while we are healthy, nor by medicines, when we are ſick; but by the Word of God. His viſitation doth all.

Secondly, Take Spirit for the Soul, then we are taught,

> That our ſouls are not independently immortal or incorruptible.

As the life of the whole man is not, ſo neither is the life of the ſoul, of, or in it ſelf, without ſupport from God. The Angelical ſpirits who were never married to bodies of earth, ſtand not meerly by Creation, but by Providence. The viſitation of God preſerveth thoſe ſpirits, how much more the ſpirits of men, which are eſpouſed to duſt and clay?

Thirdly, As ſpirit ſignifieth the ſoul, not only in it's natural, but in it's ſpiritual ſtate, or in the ſtate of grace; We learn,

> That our ſpiritual ſtock and treaſure are in danger, and would decay, if the power and care of God did not preſerve our ſpirits.

Grace cannot keep it ſelf, if left to its ſelf. We ſhould loſe, not only degrees of grace, but all grace, were it left in our own hands. But becauſe it is grace, therefore it is not left in our own hands, therefore it cannot be loſt. So the Apoſtle clearly (1 Pet.1.4.) We are kept by the power of God through faith unto ſalvation. The word ſignifies to keep, as a City beleaguered without by a ſtrong enemy, is kept by a Gariſon within. Man at the firſt had an excellent eſtate in ſpirituals; though it cannot be ſaid (properly) that he had grace (for that is in the hand of a Mediator) yet he had the image of God, and perfect innocency; but becauſe God did not viſit his ſpirit by freſh aſſiſtances, he was ſtript of all, and fell from the throne of his created glory. As God viſits our ſouls by preventing grace, to give us what we had not: ſo he viſits us by his preſerving and perſevering grace, to continue what he hath given.

Laſtly, Foraſmuch as (though God createth and careth for the whole man, yet) the viſitation of God is expreſſed only, as to the ſpirit; We may Obſerve,

> That God doth chiefly take care of, and provide for the ſpirit or ſoul of man.

When God formed the body of man at firſt, out of the duſt of the earth, and breathed into his noſtrils, the breath of life; it is not ſaid he became a living body, or a living man, But, man became a living ſoul. So here, the work of providence is not enlarged to the whole man, but reſtrained to his ſpirit; As if the Lord did ſcarce think our bodies either worth, or needing a viſit in compariſon of our ſpirits. And ſeeing God cares for nothing in us, ſo much, as for our ſpirits, ſhould not our care be chiefly for our ſpirits? The ſoul is (upon the matter) all man; ought not man to be moſt of all for his ſoul? Shall the thoughts of God be moſt buſied, his care and inſpection moſt fixed upon our ſpirits, and ſhall not ours? While Chriſt in a manner diſchargeth us for our outward man (Matth.6.25.) Take no thought for your life, what ye ſhall eat, or what ye ſhall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye ſhall put on; his meaning was, to charge us more deeply with the inward man; yet how many are there, whoſe outward man ſtands them in more coſt and care, in more thoughts and viſitations for one day, then their ſpirits or inward man doth for a whole year, yea, for their whole lives! Viſitations are frequent and ſerious for the preſerving of the body: but where ſhall we find ſerious thoughts of viſiting the ſoul?

Take this word further, If it be the viſitation of God which preſerveth our ſpirits, we ſhould often viſit God with prayer, intreating him to continue theſe viſitations. Prayer is our viſiting God, as providence is Gods viſiting of us, and we ſhould viſit God by prayer, not only (as they, Iſa. 26.) in trouble, but in our peace: we ſhould deſire him to viſit our eſtates, our families, but eſpecially our ſouls and ſpirits in their moſt flouriſhing condition. The Apoſtle uſeth it as an argument to keep us from diſtracting thoughts (Phil.4.2.) Let your moderation be known unto all men: The Lord is at hand. Be careful in nothing, but in every thing by prayer and ſupplication, let your requeſts be made known unto God. The Lord is at hand, let not your hearts be troubled. Viſit God in duty, who is at hand to viſit you in mercy. Though there be an infinite diſtance between God and man, yet God is not far from any man, and he is ever near ſome men; Let not us be ſtrangers to God, when we hear he maketh continual viſits to us. Thy viſitation doth preſerve my ſpirit.

Verſ. 13. And theſe things haſt thou hid in thine heart, I know that this is with thee.

Some read the firſt clauſe (which adds ſharpneſs to it) with an interrogation. And haſt thou hid theſe things in thine heart? Is it ſo with thee, or haſt thou dealt ſo with me indeed?

The heart of God, is the will, purpoſe or decree of God; Theſe are a vaſt repoſitory, wherein all things are laid up.

And theſe things haſt thou hid, &c.] What things? what is the antecedent to theſe things?

Firſt, Some ſay, His afflictions, Theſe things, that is, theſe afflictions, which thou haſt now laid upon me, were hid in thine heart: thou haſt ſhewed me many favours, while in ſecret thou didſt prepare rods for me.

Secondly, The antecedent to theſe things in mercy, life, favour and viſitation, ſpoken of before, ſay others; As if Job had ſpoken thus, This bill of bleſſings now read, theſe priviledges not reckoned up, were hidden in thine heart: thou haſt had gratious intentions towards me, while thou haſt been ſmiting me.

Scio quia univerſorum memineris Vulg.

I know all this is with thee.] That is, Thou remembreſt all this, and keepeſt a record of it by thee; The Vulgar makes this the Text, I know thou remembreſt all things, or all men.

Quaſi hæc mala velut in animo recondita in tempus opportunum aſſervaſſet, ut nec opinantem opprimeret. Atrox querimonia. Merl

Some (ſuppoſing the antecedent to be his afflictions) make out this harſh and unbecoming ſence; As if Job had thus uttered his mind to God, I now perceive thou haſt had coals of anger raked up in the aſhes, while thoſe warm beams of love did ſhine upon me; Thou haſt held out mercy in thy hand, but ſomewhat elſe lay in thine heart. This interpretation, in the common underſtanding of it, is moſt unworthy of God. It is the wickedneſs of men to ſpeak fair, and to do ſome courteſies, while cruelty and revenges are hid in their hearts. When Eſau (Gen. 27.41.) ſaw himſelf defeated of the bleſſing by his brother, He ſaid in his heart, the days of mourning for my father are at hand, then will I ſlay my brother Jacob: Here's the character of malice, he gave neither brother nor mother ill language, but he ſaid in his heart. The holy God never ſpeaks good to them, to whom he intends evil. The Creator needs not daub or pervaricate with his creatures.

I grant indeed that the Lord giveth wicked men many outward favours, and ſpeaks them fair in his works, but he never ſpeaks them fair in his word, Say, Woe to the wicked, it ſhall be ill with him, for the reward of his hand, ſhall be given him (Iſa. 3. 11.) Men are apt to flatter, but flattery is much an abomination to the Lord, as it is below him.

I grant alſo, That the Lord giveth his own people many favours, and ſpeaketh real kindneſſes to them while he hides affliction in his heart. What evil ſoever he brings upon them, he hath thoughts to do them good, and hath nothing but good for them in his thoughts.

We underſtand by thoſe hidden things, the mercies which Job with his laſt breath had enumerated: then the words import two things.

Firſt, An argument to move the Lord not to deſtroy him, or to aſſure his own heart that he would not. As if he had ſaid, Lord, I know thou remembreſt well what thou haſt done for me, what coſt thou haſt been at in making me at firſt, and in preſerving me hitherto; ſurely then thou wilt not pull all down in a moment.

Secondly, The words may import that the Lord in afflicting Job had uſed only a kind of ſacred diſſimulation. A diſſembler carrieth himſelf as if he had no intent to do what he is reſolved to do: It is uſual with men thus to diſſemble hatred, and ſo have ſome their love. He that purpoſeth much good to another, hideth it ſometimes under ſowr language and unkindeſt uſage. Joſeph had moſt endeared affection towards his brethren, yet he put a diſguiſe of anger upon it, acting the part of a ſevere man, who lieth at catch to find out advantages and pick quarrels. Joſeph uſed many ſtratagems of love, to entangle his Brethren, and wrapt up his good will in hard ſpeeches and rough carriages; nothing appearing leſs then what indeed he moſt was, a loving Brother, forgetful of nothing but injuries; Job ſeems to have had ſuch a conception of God, while he ſaith, Theſe things haſt thou hid in thine heart; and then his ſence riſeth thus, Lord, I know thou beareſt favour and good will towards me ſtill. The fire of thy love is not extinct, but covered. Thou doſt but perſonate an enemy, thou art my friend; thou draweſt a cloud betwixt me and the light of thy countenance, but thy countenance is ſtill as full of light towards me as ever; and though I ſee nothing but ſorrows on every ſide, yet I know mercies are hid in thine heart. Thus the words are an aſſertion of Job's faith and aſſurance that God loved him, while his chaſtenings lay moſt heavy upon him. Hence obſerve, > Firſt, That, The Saints while they are ſtrong in faith, are able to diſcern the favour of God through the clouds and coverings of his moſt angry diſpenſations.

This they can do, and when they can, they are arrived at a great height in Grace. To maintain our intereſt in Chriſt through diſadvantages, is ſtrong faith. The woman of Canaan (Mat. 15. 26.) knew her pardon and acceptance wer hid in the heart of Chriſt while he called her Dog, and would ſcarce vouchſafe to caſt an eye upon her. Faith did this, and Faith can do the like at this day: But every true Faith will not do it. There is a kind of miracle wrought in ſuch believing: So Chriſt concludes with that woman (ver. 28.) O woman, great is thy faith! Truth of grace is not enough for every work of grace; ſome works will not be done without ſtrength as well as truth. Weak faith is ready to ſay, Mercy is loſt, when it is but hidden, and that God means us no good, when we do not enjoy good. But the ſtrong Faith ſpeaketh on this wiſe, Lord, I know there is mercy in thine heart towards me, though I ſee nothing in thy face but frowns, and feel nothing from thy hand but blows. Let God do what he pleaſeth with me, I will not have a jealous thought of him, or ſuſpect his intentions towards me, whatſoever his actions be. Hence obſerve, > Secondly, We may gather arguments of ſupport in our greateſt ſufferings from the apprehenſion of concealed mercies.

The skill and holy ſubtilty of Faith can wind it ſelf in Gods boſom, and from what it finds lying ſecretly there for us, encourages us to bear what is openly laid upon us. Obſerve, > Laſtly, A Believer looks upon all his receipts, as coming out of the heart of God.

As he can look into his own heart, and ſee all the Commandments and revealed Counſels of God hidden there, ſo he can look into the heart of God, and ſee all the comforts he wanteth hidden there. Men of the world take their comforts only from the hand of God, Saints take theirs from the heart of God. It putteth the price upon every bleſſing, when we can look upon ſpecial love as the ſpring of it. Look how much of the heart of our friend we can ſee in a courteſie, ſo much true value there is in it. Hence it is uſual with man, when he would expreſs his freeneſs to thoſe who deſire a favour at his hands, to ſay, Yes, Take it with heart and good will, you have it with all my heart. We read of one, who complained he had received but a Golden Cup, when he ſaw another receive a Kiſs from a Noble Prince: A Kiſs is a better gift then a Cup of Gold. Love is the richeſt preſent. How happy then are they, who have the golden Cup and a Kiſs too? Much from the hand, and all from the heart, from the love of God.

Job having thus reviſed and read over the particulars of his former mercies received from the bounty and free love of God, revives his complaint about, and renews his deſire of deliverance from preſent ſorrows, in his next addreſs to God.

VERS. 14, 15, 16, 17.

If I ſin, then thou markeſt me, and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity.

If I be wicked, wo unto me; if I be righteous, yet will I not lift up my head; I am full of confuſion, therefore ſee thou mine affliction,

For it encreaſeth; Thou hunteſt me as a fierce Lion, and again thou ſheweſt thy ſelf marvellous upon me.

Thou reneweſt thy witneſſes againſt me, and encreaſeſt thine indignation upon me, changes and war are againſt me.

The connection of theſe words lieth ſomewhat in the dark, and this in evidence hath cauſed divers conjectures about it.

Firſt, Some make the connection with the thirteenth Verſe, I know (ſaith Job) that this is with thee; and here he declared what was with him, namely, that, If I ſin, then thou markeſt me; and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity.

Secondly, The connection is made by others with the twelfth Verſe, Thou haſt granted me life and favour, and thy viſitation hath preſerved my ſpirit; yet if I ſin, thou markeſt me, &c. As if Job had ſaid, Though thou haſt been pleaſed to make ſo many grants of favour, and haſt done all theſe things for me which were hidden in thine heart, yet I know thou wilt not bear with, or connive at me, if I ſin againſt thee: Thou haſt not given me theſe mercies, that I ſhould be emboldened to tranſgreſs the rule of thy juſtice; no, though thou haſt done much for me, Yet if I ſin, thou markeſt me, and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity.

Thirdly, A third goeth higher, and makes theſe words depend upon the third Verſe; where Job puts three Queries to God; the laſt of which is, Is it good unto thee that thou ſhouldeſt ſhine upon the counſel of the wicked? I know it is not (for 'tis like I might eſcape as well as another, yet) if I ſin, thou markeſt me, and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity; if I be wicked, wo unto me. Mine own experience proves thee far enough from ſhining upon the counſel of the wicked. Behold clouds and darkneſs are upon me.

There is a fair ſence in any of theſe connections; which to determine, is not eaſie; I ſhall leave all three before the Reader.

Verſe 14. If I ſin, then thou markeſt me.

If I ſin.] Sin ſtandeth here in oppoſition to wickedneſs; Thou wilt not ſhine upon the counſel of the wicked. And, verſ. 15. If I be wicked, then wo unto me; for if I ſin, then thou markeſt me. Sin is any tranſgreſſion againſt, or deviation (though but an hairs breadth) from the rule; If I fail, be it never ſo little.

Then thou markeſt me.] The Original hath three ſignifications, which occaſion as many different interpretations of the Text.

First, To preſerve, and that two wayes; firſt, By protecting from thoſe evils which others would bring upon us (Pſal. 141. 9.) Keep me from the ſnare which they have laid: That is, protect me from the danger which their ſnares threaten me with. So at the twelfth verſe of this Chapter, Thy viſitation doth preſerve my ſpirit. Secondly, It is rendered to preſerve by ſparing, or not bringing thoſe evils upon us which our own ſins have deſerved. So the Vulgar here, who to make out his ſence, puts the latter part into the form of an interrogation, If I have ſinned, and thou haſt ſpared me for a time, wherefore then doſt thou not acquit me from mine iniquity? As if the meaning of Job were this, When in former times I ſinned againſt thee, thou waſt pleaſed to remit of thy ſeverity, and deal gently with me, Thou didſt ſpare me as a Father ſpareth his Son that ſerveth him. Why is the tenour of thy diſpenſations ſo much changed from what it was, ſeeing thou art a God that changeth not; and I am but what I was, a weak and changeable man? Why I am I now charged with ſin, and not ſet free, as ſometimes (I have been) from ſorrow the fruit of it? Wilt thou deal with me, who ſin out of infirmity, or againſt my will, as with thoſe who are wicked, and have a will to ſin?

Si peccavi & ad horā pepercisti mihi, &c. Vulg.

Secondly, To prevent others from doing what they deſire, or our ſelves from what we fear (Pſal. 18. 23.) I was upright before him, and kept my ſelf from mine iniquity; as if he had ſaid, I have maintained ſuch ſtrict watch over my own heart, that I have prevented my ſelf from falling into that ſin which I was moſt ſubject to and in danger of, both in regard of my conſtitution and temptation. Taking this meaning of the word, the whole verſe is rendered thus, If, or, When I am ready to ſin, thou (ſtoppeſt or) preventeſt me, why then doſt then not acquit me from mine iniquity? As if he had ſaid, Lord, wilt thou deal with me as with a wicked man? Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked, for by thy preventing grace, thou haſt kept me from all wickedneſs, and ſtopt me from many ſins. Hence note,

> That, The remembrance of the power of God in keeping us pure from greater ſins, is an argument that he will ſpare us, though we have (through infirmity) fallen into ſin.

He that holds us from iniquity, will not deſtroy us for iniquity. Some are ſtopt from ſin, and ſtorm when they are ſtopt; theſe have no reaſon to think God will ſpare them becauſe he hath ſtopt them. Thouſands are ſtopt from ſin, who neither know what it is to ſin, nor that they have been ſtopt from ſin. Theſe cannot plead this point: As it is no virtue to endure what is not grievous to us, ſo no grace not to do what is not joyous to us when we do it. But to know we are ſtopt from a pleaſing ſin, and rejoyce at it, to ſee how our corruptions have been prevented, and to bleſs God for it, this is a great degree of grace. As there is a preventing grace, which beginneth with us, while we are ſtrangers from God, and are walking on in the wayes of ſin; ſo there is a preventing grace, watching over us after we are turned to God, leſt we fall into ſin. Experience of this may be a ſweet ſupport unto the ſoul, under the ſaddeſt afflictions, and in the darkeſt night of ſpiritual deſertions.

Thirdly, The word ſignifieth to keep in priſon, or in ſafe cuſtody. The Nown is a priſon in Hebrew. And thus the ſence is given three wayes, as an Aſſertion, as an Interrogation, as an Imprecation.

Firſt, As an Aſſertion, If I have ſinned, thou wilt, or, thou maiſt impriſon me, and not acquit me from mine iniquity. Hence obſerve,

> That, The beſt and deareſt of Gods ſervants may look for ſtraights, if they walk looſly.

The Lord will ſhut them up, if they preſume and take undue liberty, or grow licentious. They ſhall be either humbled or deſtroyed, who turn the grace of God (that is, the manifeſtation of his grace, either by his word or by his works) into wantonneſs. God will not cocker his own children, and dandle them ſo, as to forget to correct them, if they forget him and their own duty. If Iſrael ſin, Iſrael ſhall ſmart for it; and if Job ſin, Job muſt look to be laid in priſon for it. Thus he ſpeaks, acquitting God from ſhining upon the counſels of wicked men, ſeeing he will not ſpare, no not his own children, if they ſin againſt him.

Secondly, The ſence is given by an Interrogation; If I ſin, wilt thou therefore ſhut me up in priſon? Wilt thou not acquit me from mine iniquity? And ſo he pleadeth with God, as uſing too much ſeverity and raſhneſs againſt him; What, ſhall I be laid by the heels for every fault? Shall I be arreſted and clapt up in Irons for every ſin? Wilt thou impriſon me, and not acquit me from mine iniquity? They who are moſt wicked, deſerve no worſe then this; and ſhall I, if I do but ſin, receive ſuch meaſure? Where are thy compaſſions, and the ſounding of thy bowels? are they reſtrained? It ſhould ſeem ſo, elſe thou wouldeſt not thus reſtrain and impriſon me.

Valde durū videtur, ut ſi quid peccaverim perpetuò me in carcere, cuſtodiaq; arctiſſima detineas, neq; unquam peccati pœnas remittere velis. Pin.

An ſimulac pecco obſervas me, &c. Jun.

Thirdly, As an Imprecation; If I have ſinned, according as I am charged, impriſon me as long as thou wilt, and do not acquit me from mine iniquity: If I am ſuch a man as my friends judge me to be, I expect no favour: let me be poor and ſick ſtill, torture me, rack me, do what thou wilt with me. Like that of David, Pſal. 7. 4, 5. If I have rewarded evil unto him that was at peace with me, &c. Let the enemy perſecute my ſoul and take it; yea, let him tread down my life upon the earth, and lay mine honour in the duſt. I ask no favour, if I am ſuch a man as mine enemies have repreſented me; or if I have done that for which they chalenge me.

Verba jurantis & conteſtantis ſuam innocentiam; ſi peccavi, imprecor mihi duriſſimam cuſtodiam. Bold.

Fourthly, To obſerve and mark; and it importeth a critical, a curious obſervation; to mark exactly (Pſal. 130. 3.) If thou, Lord, ſhouldeſt mark iniquity who ſhall ſtand? But doth not the Lord mark iniquity? Doth not he take notice of every ſin acted by any of the children of men, eſpecially by his own children? Why then doth the Pſalmiſt put it upon an If? If thou, Lord, ſhouldeſt mark iniquity. 'Tis true, the Lord marks all iniquity to know it, but he doth not mark any iniquity in his children to condemn them for it: So the meaning of the Pſalm is, That, if the Lord ſhould mark ſin with a ſtrict and ſevere eye, as a Judge, to charge it upon the ſinning, no man could bear it. Mr. Broughton tranſlates, When I ſin, thou doſt watch me; watching is more then marking; as if the Lord had taken up a ſtand upon a high place, and did there compoſe himſelf to ſee what's done, or to make annotations upon the whole Text of mens lives all the world over. Hence obſerve, Refertur ad exquiſitam Dei obſervationem univerſarum humanæ vitæ actionū. Rab. Abr. Tygur, Reg. 70.

> That, God takes notice of the ſins and failings of his own people.

If I ſin, then thou markeſt me; and in the fourteenth Chapter, verſe 16. Thou numbreſt my ſteps, doſt thou not watch over my ſin? Thou numbreſt my ſteps; what ſteps? He meaneth not the ſteps of his outward, but of his inward man; or the ſteps of his outward man in order to the inward. There is a moral walking; Walk before me and be upright; walking is converſing or acting; ſo, Thou numbreſt my ſteps, thou telleſt my moral motions, the actings of my ſoul and body, what I do, and what I think;

Obſervas me ne unquam lateant peccata. Aug. Quoties peccavi id diligentiſſimè notaſti. Mer.

Doſt thou not watch over my ſin? And again (Chap. 31.4.) Doth not he ſee my wayes, and count all my ſteps? That is, how my converſation is ordered, both toward himſelf, and toward my neighbour? Thus the Lord counteth all our ſteps, we cannot ſtep aſide, or tread awry, but he obſerves us. There are two that keep a record of our lives.

Firſt, God, he followeth us up and down, as with Pen, Ink, and Paper, to write our actings.

Secondly, Our own conſciences (which are as God within us) keep a record too, they write our lives, and count our ſteps. Many cannot read the book of conſcience, and ſo know little that is in it: But a time will come (if conſcience be not purged by the blood of Chriſt) when they ſhall perfectly read all their ſins in the book of conſcience. And if conſcience, which is Gods Deputy, then, much more God, who is the Judge of conſcience, marketh us if we ſin. God needs not judge upon information, but upon his own obſervation. He will reprove every man whom he doth not pardon; And is able to ſet before us in order, whatſoever any of us have done. How then do ſome ſay, That God ſeeth not ſin in his Children? Job ſaith, that God marked his ſin; but according to this doctrine, he ſhould rather have ſaid, if I ſin, thou doſt not mark me. Some through ignorance ſin, and ſee it not, ſin and perceive it not; but no man (among all the multitudes of men) can ſin unſeen, or unperceived by God. If I ſin, then thou markeſt me.

And thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity.

לא תנקני Non purges me ut ſim immunis ab omni peccato

Will not the Lord acquit? Why have we a Goſpel then? What's the buſineſs of mercy? And where's the efficacy of Chriſts blood? Doth not this purchaſe, and do not they offer acquittances from iniquity? The words are interpreted three wayes.

Firſt, That Job ſpeaks from his unbelief, as if he could not ſee pardon through the thick cloud of his troubles, or have any evidence, that God had mercy in ſtore for him, while he endured ſuch plenty of miſeries.

Secondly, That he ſpake thus, upon a ſuppoſition of impenitency; As if he had ſaid, If I ſin and humble not my ſelf, thou wilt not acquit me.

Thirdly, That by iniquity he means his affliction, putting the cauſe for the effect: So, Thou wilt not acquit me for mine iniquity, is, Thou wilt not take away theſe afflictions, which are counted as the proceed or iſſue of mine iniquity.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, Sin is a debt.

Every acquittance ſuppoſeth an obligation. All men, as creatures, are in a debt of duty to God; and when they fail in that, they are in a debt of penalty, as ſinners.

Secondly obſerve, When ſin is pardoned, the ſinner is acquitted, his debt is taken off, and his bonds are cancelled.

Pardon is our diſcharge, our quietus eſt, ſealed in the blood of Chriſt. All Proceſs at Law, or from the Law, is then prohibited: there's no more to be ſaid, or done againſt us.

Again, The word ſignifies to cleanſe and purge, as well as to acquit; Note from it,

That as ſin defileth the ſoul, ſo pardon cleanſeth it.

Purge me with Hyſop, and I ſhall be clean; waſh me, and I ſhall be whiter then Snow, was David's prayer for pardon after his great defilement, Pſal. 51.7. If we confeſs our ſins, he is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins, and to cleanſe us from all unrighteouſneſs, 1 Joh. 1.9.

Fourthly, Foraſmuch as Job groaning under burdens of ſorrow, ſpeaks ſo often about the pardon of ſin, We learn,

That while ſin remaineth (to our ſence) unpardoned, the ſoul ſeeth no way to get out of ſorrows.

The removing of affliction is a ſign that ſin is forgiven, and the ſenſe of our forgiveneſs, is an argument that affliction ſhall be removed.

Fifthly, Taking the former words in conjunction with theſe, If I ſin (knowingly and wickedly, as they charge me) Thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity. Obſerve,

That a perſiſting ſinner, is an unpardoned ſinner.

There is abundant mercy for returning ſinners, but I know of none for thoſe that reſolve to go on in ſin. There is a promiſe of repentance, and a promiſe to repentance, but there is no promiſe which doth not either offer or require repentance; Repent, and thou ſhalt be ſaved, is the tenor of the Goſpel, as well as believe, and thou ſhalt be ſaved. Though many who are going on in their ſins, are overtaken by grace, yet there is no grace promiſed to thoſe who go on in their ſins. The holieſt are threatned with wrath, if they do; ſurely then, none are put into an expectation of mercy, if they do. The promiſes either find us repenting, or they cauſe us to repent. No ſinner is pardoned for repentance, nor without it. Job ſpeaks that language more clearly in the words following, which ſome make an expoſition of theſe.

Verſ. 15. If I be wicked, Wo unto me.

If I be wicked.] What it is to be wicked, hath been ſhewed, and the difference between a wicked man and a ſinner diſcovered, at verſ. 7. upon thoſe words, Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked.

Wo unto me.] The word is derived (ſaith one of the Rabbins) from a root ſignifying to howl: Great mourning is a kind of howling: and they who are in wo, are bid to howl (Iſa. 13.6. & 23.1, &c.) Wicked men howl rather then pray in their diſtreſs, becauſe of their extream worldly wo; They have not cryed unto me with their hearts, when they howled upon their beds, Hoſ. 7. 14.

There are legal woes, and there are evangelical woes. The Law cries wo, and ſo doth the Goſpel: Goſpel woes are the worſer of the two; for if the Law ſay wo to us, the Goſpel may ſay mercy to us; but if the Goſpel ſay, wo to us (as it doth to hypocrites, who abuſe, and to unbelievers, who refuſe mercy) where ſhall we have mercy? All woes may be underſtood in this place, Law woes and Goſpel woes, temporal woes and eternal woes, If I be wicked, then wo unto me.

Hence obſerve, Wo is the portion of wicked men.

Though they laugh, yet wo is their portion, yea they are therefore threatned with wo, becauſe they laugh (Luke 6.25.) Wo unto you that laugh now, for ye ſhall mourn and weep. Some wicked men are as merry, as if mercy were their peculiar. But we may ſay to their mirth, What doth it? Or if we ſhould ask them, What they do to make themſelves ſo merry: David will reſolve us what their courſe is (Pſal. 36.2.) The wicked flattereth himſelf in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found to be hateful. He that would be flattered, ſhall never want a flatterer; for if none will do it, he will do it himſelf. He ſpeaks well of himſelf, and therefore he thinks all's well. But uſually he hath ſome others ready enough to ſpeak well of him too. The true Prophets complained of the falſe for crying peace, peace, when there was no peace; for ſaying all is well, when they ſhould ſay all is wo. But though wicked men flatter themſelves, and though they get their neighbours to flatter them, yea though Miniſters flatter them, yet God will not flatter them; and at laſt their own conſciences will not flatter them neither. Conſcience will preach them a Sermon of woes at laſt, though poſſibly it hath been ſilent through ignorance, or ſilenc'd through malice for a long time.

As all the promiſes of grace and mercy, hang over the heads of the godly and ſincere; which way ſoever they go, a cloud of bleſſings drops and diſtils upon them. So clouds of wrath and blood hang over the heads of wicked men, dropping upon them, yea dropping upon them when they ſuppoſe the Sun ſhineth upon them.

Secondly, Conſider who ſpeaks this; If I (ſaith Job) be wicked, then wo unto me.

Hence obſerve, That, A godly man may put the worſt caſes to himſelf.

The Scripture puts ſuch caſes to godly men, therefore they may put ſuch to themſelves (Rom. 8.13.) If ye live after the fleſh, ye ſhall die, ſaith the Apoſtle, writing to the Saints. Though ſuch a ſuppoſition cannot be reſolved into this poſition, A godly man ſhall die, yet the ſuppoſition is true, If he liveth after the fleſh he ſhall die. So the Apoſtle of himſelf, and his fellow-Apoſtles, yea of the Angels; If we or an Angel from heaven, preach any other Goſpel unto you, then that which we have preached, let him be accurſed (Gal. 1. 9.) And as Paul propheſied a curſe upon any, either Apoſtle or Angel, who ſhould preach a falſe Goſpel; ſo a wo upon himſelf, if he ſhould neglect to preach the true Goſpel, 1 *Cor.*9.16. They who are above all curſes, may be threatned with a curſe. And they who ſhall certainly be preſerved from doing that which inevitably brings the curſe, may be told of a curſe in caſe they ſhould do it.

They put dangerous ſuppoſitions oppoſite to theſe, who ſay, Let a godly man be never ſo wicked, yet it ſhall be well with him; let him ſin as much as he will, yet it ſhall be well with him. The Spirit of God never puts ſuch ſuppoſitions. As the Scripture ſpeaks often to perſwade; ſo ſometimes to terrifie the godly from ſin, but never a tittle which may be an encouragement to ſin. It ſpeaks much to keep up their hearts in an aſſurance of pardon, in caſe they fall into ſin, and much more to keep down their corruptions, and to preſerve them from falling into ſin. Though there be a truth in it, that how much ſo ever a godly man ſinneth, he ſhall be pardoned; yet the Scripture uſeth no ſuch language, and the form of wholſom words teacheth every man rather to ſpeak thus, If I be wicked, then wo unto me.

If I be righteous, yet will I not lift up my head.

Theſe words ſtand in an elegant oppoſition againſt the former. Here are perſons and ſtates oppoſite: perſons, The wicked and the righteous; If I be wicked, if I be righteous: ſtates, Wo, and lifting up the head; If I be wicked, then wo unto me; If I be righteous, then will I not lift up mine head. He doth not ſay, If I be righteous I ſhall be happy, though that be a truth, but (which was more ſutable to his purpoſe) If I be righteous, yet will I not lift up my head.

Some put this into a dilemma, or double argument, by which Job would aggravate the greatneſs of his affliction; As if he had ſaid, Let me look which way I will, my caſe is very ſad, if I be wicked then wo be to me; If I be righteous, yet I am ſo full of ſorrows, that I am not able to hold up my head; But I rather interpret this latter part of the verſe, as a deſcription of Job's humility, in the beſt of his ſpiritual eſtate, then as any aggravation of the ilneſs of his temporal eſtate.

If I be righteous.] He ſpeaks not as if he doubted whether he were righteous or no. Job had ſhewed the ſetledneſs of his ſpirit in that aſſurance more then once before, but he puts the beſt of his caſe, to ſhew how low he was in his own thoughts, when he was at beſt. There is a twofold righteouſneſs; Firſt, Of Juſtification. Secondly, Of Sanctification, of ſincerity or uprightneſs: and ſo his meaning is, Suppoſe I am ſuch, as I have aſſerted my ſelf to be, and as God himſelf hath teſtified me to be, perfect and upright, yet I will not lift up my head; Some read I cannot, others, I dare not lift up my head.

I will not lift up my head.] Not lift up thy head, man, if thou wert righteous? Why, who in the world ſhall lift up their heads, if the righteous ſhall not? Are their any that have ſuch cauſe to lift up their heads as they? He might ſay indeed, If I were rich, or if I were honourable, yet I will not lift up my head; theſe are things which cannot, and therefore ſhould not lift up any mans ſpirit an inch from the ground: but to ſay, If I were righteous, I would not lift up my head, ſeems a degradation or an abaſement of righteouſneſs. To clear this, I ſhall open the phraſe a little.

To lift up the head of another man, is to advance him. Thus Pharaoh lifted up the head of his chief Butler, Gen. 40. 13. And the King of Babylon lifted up the head of Jehojakin King of Judah, and brought him forth out of priſon, Jer. 52. 21. In this ſence David calls God, The lifter up of his head, Pſal. 3. 3.

To lift up our own heads, is to prevail, and to get above preſſing evils victoriouſly, Judg. 8. 28. Thus was Midian ſubdued before the children of Iſrael, ſo that they lifted up their heads no more; That is, Gideon routed and made ſo compleat a conqueſt over the Midianites, that they were totally broken, and could no more inſult over Iſrael. The victory of Chriſt over all our ſpiritual enemies, is thus deſcribed, *Pſal.*110.7. He ſhall drink of the brook in the way; that is, of the waters of affliction and ſorrow, which either the wrath of God, or the rage of men gave him to drink, while he was in the way of perfecting the work of our Redemption; and becauſe he ſhall do this, Therefore ſhall he lift up his head, that is, he ſhall prevail by his paſſion, and overcome by dying, yea, he ſhall overcome death by a triumphant Reſurrection.

Again, There is a two-fold lifting up of the head; Firſt, A lifting up of the head with joy and conſolation (Luke 21. 28.) Secondly, A lifting up of the head with pride and oſtentation, Pſal. 83. 2. Lo thine enemies make a tumult, and they that hate thee have lift up the head; that is, they have proudly boaſted and vaunted themſelves. The latter is Job's ſence, If I be righteous, I will not lift up my head in pride; he might and he did lift up his head in joy, becauſe he knew himſelf righteous.

Attollere caput notat gaudium & fiduciam. Coc.

Once more, There is a lifting up of our heads in our ſelves, and a lifting up of our heads in Chriſt. Job diſclaims the former here, but he all along aſſumes the latter. We cannot lift up our heads too high, in the thoughts of Free Grace, nor hang them down too low, in the thought of our own Works.

Further, While Job ſaith, I will not lift up my head, he meaneth leſs then he ſpeaketh. In Scripture there is ſometimes leſs expreſſed then is intended, and ſometimes more. That of the Apoſtle (1 Cor. 15. 58.) Your labour ſhall not be in vain in the Lord, riſes in ſence higher then the expreſſion; our labour in the Lord ſhall not only not be in vain, but abundantly advantageous. This of Job, I will not lift up my head, falls in ſence below his expreſſion, for his meaning is, I will abaſe my ſelf before God, I will be ſo far from priding my ſelf, or walking (as the daughters of Jeruſalem are deſcribed by the Prophet, Iſa. 3. 16.) with a ſtretched forth neck; that I will rather hang down my head.

Non levabo caput h. e. demiſſo capite ac mente coram te ambulabo.

To hang or hold down the head, in Scripture noteth humbling and ſorrow; when Chriſt bids his people lift up their heads, with joy, becauſe the time of their Redemption was drawing nigh; it implied that their heads would hang down with ſorrow, while that Redemption was further off. The Jewiſh faſts are deſcribed (in part) by this poſture of ſorrow (Iſa. 58. 5.) Is it ſuch a faſt that I have choſen? A day for a man to afflict his ſoul? Is it to bow down his head as a bull-ruſh? Times of faſting are times of mourning, and then (it ſeems) they uſed to hang down the head, as a ſign of mourning.

Miſeri & infœlices capite demiſſo, & in terram dejecto ambulant. Sanct.

> Hence obſerve, That a godly man how upright and holy ſoever he is, walks humbly with God.

The more holineſs any ſoul hath, the more humility it hath. Humility is a great part of our holineſs; much more then is it an argument of holineſs. The Phariſee (Luke 18.) who thought that he was righteous, lifted up his head full high, he would not loſe an inch of his commendation, and therefore commends himſelf. He is his own reporter of what he had done, and who he was; but the poor Publican durſt not lift up his eyes to heaven, his ſpirit hung down as well as his head, yet he was the righteous man, and went home juſtified rather then the other. It is the ſcope and deſign of the Goſpel to make and keep us humble. God hath ſet up the way of ſaving us by faith, that he might take away boaſting, and that no fleſh might glory in his ſight.

Secondly, If Job would not lift up his head, though righteous, what ſhall we judge of thoſe, who lift up and carry their heads ſo high, though they are wicked? There is no reaſon any man ſhould be proud of his goodneſs; what a madneſs then it is for wicked men to be proud of, or in their naughtineſs!

Thirdly, Though Job was very thankful for, and joyful in, yet he durſt not lift up his head, or be proud of the white robes and coſtly raimen of imputed righteouſneſs. What then ſhall we ſay of them, who are proud of the dirty rags and filthy raiment of their own inherent righteouſneſs? A godly man walketh tremblingly, leſt he ſhould offend, therefore he ſaith, If I am wicked wo unto me: and he walketh humbly, when he doth not offend, theretherefore he ſaith, though I am righteous, yet I will not hold up my head. Job hath often breathed out the humility of his ſoul in former paſſages, therefore I ſhall not inſiſt upon it here.

I am full of confuſion, therefore ſee thou mine affliction.

Saturitas hæc reſpicit animæ ventriculū, qui tantā ærumnarum copiā vix potuit concoquere. Pined.

I am full.] That is, my mind is full. The ſpirit hath a ſtomach, or a capacious veſſel for the receiving either of good or evil, of joy or ſorrow. Job's ſpirit had received in as much evil and ſorrow as ever it could hold, and more then he could well digeſt.

קלון à קלה Quod eſt cremare, ignominia enim efficit pudorem, qui eſt πύρωσις τις in corde, & in vultu ſicut ignis. Erubeſcentes vultus habent flammantes. Sanct.

I am full of confuſion.] The word ſignifies ſhame and burning heat, becauſe ſhame appeareth with a burning heat or bluſh in the face, which is alſo called confuſion of face. Bluſhing puts the face into a flame. Some take confuſion here for ſhame, rendering the Text, I am full of ſhame, or of ignominy: which ignominy might ariſe two wayes; Either from that reproach which his friends caſt upon him, while they branded him for a wicked man, and an hypocrite; I am full of reproach, ſo full, that I might juſtly be aſhamed, yea confounded, if I were ſuch as they deſcribe me. Or from that reproach which his afflictions caſt upon him. Poverty is no ſhame to a begger, who was born poor; but poverty is a ſhame to a man who hath been rich, and lived in honour. The original word holds this forth moſt properly, being oppoſed to that which ſignifies weightineſs and honour, becauſe honour is a weighty thing, as this ſignifies lightneſs and ſhame, becauſe ſhame is a light thing, or a thing of nought.

Our Tranſlators rendering the word confuſion, ſeem to intend ſomewhat elſe beſides ſhame.

Confuſion notes a diſorder, and an uncompoſedneſs of ſpirit. When a man knows not what to do, or whoſe counſel to follow. When a man cannot make up his thoughts, or bring them to any iſſue: When the mind is like a skain of ravell'd ſilk which will neither wind nor draw, then we are in confuſion. And this I conceive was it, which Job chiefly intends, when he ſaith, I am full of confuſion.

Hence obſerve, Great ſorrows diſtract the mind, and bring a man to his wits end.

While we ſuffer much, we ſcarce know what to do. Trouble upon the ſenſitive part, troubles the underſtanding. Confuſion upon our eſtates, makes a confuſion in our minds. It is very hard to keep our ſpirits in order, while our houſes and buſineſs are out of order: every affliction makes ſome confuſion without us: and it is exceeding rare if affliction make not much confuſion within us. I (ſaith Job) am full of confuſion.

See thou mine affliction.] There is a two-fold ſight of affliction; Firſt, by a bare intuition, diſcerning it. Secondly by a gracious compaſſion, delivering us from it. The former ſight God always hath of all our afflictions; neither our ſins, nor our ſorrows can be hidden from him. The latter he ſometimes ſuſpends, and will not ſee, what he cannot but ſee. He will not ſee ſo as to relieve, what he cannot but ſee ſo as to obſerve. It is this ſecond kind of ſight, which Job entreats and prayes for here; See thou my affliction, that is, pity me in my affliction.

The word which we render affliction noteth weakneſs, and caſting down, or that weakneſs which ariſeth from caſting down, an oppreſſing affliction, which like ſome great weight lies heavy upon us.

Videt vexationem homo qui vexatur videt Deus qui eam reſpicit & propitius eſt. Druſ.

There are different readings; ſome thus, I am filled with affliction, and ſee my ſorrows. The Chaldee thus, I will ſatiate my ſelf with ſhame, and I will ſee my affliction. Man ſeeth his affliction by feeling it. Sight which is the chief ſenſe, is put for any ſenſe. And ſo the meaning is, Though I am righteous, yet I cannot hold up my head, or take any comfort, becauſe I am ſo full of confuſion, and ſee ſo much affliction; As if he had ſaid, Can a man at the ſame time mourn and rejoyce? Can a man lift up his head, while he hath ſuch a load upon his heart?

Hence obſerve, They who ſee much affliction, can hardly take in any conſolation.

Come to a godly man, under great outward or inward troubles; tell him of the love of God, of the pardon of ſin, of an inheritance among the Saints in light, as his portion; you can hardly faſten any of theſe things upon him: ſorrow within, keeps comfort out. As till ſin be caſt out we cannot act holily: ſo till worldly ſorrow, or the exceſs of godly ſorrow be caſt out, we cannot act joyfully. The Saints in a right poſture of ſpirit, are joyous in all their tribulations; and Chriſt is able to make conſolations abound, as tribulation doth abound; yet where there is abundance of tribulation, conſolation is uſually very ſcarce. Drops will hardly be received, where Rivers are offered and poured forth.

Satis habeas ignominiæ, & vide impotentiam meam. Coc.

Another reading of the word, repreſenteth Job beſpeaking God in prayer, mixed with complaining; If I were righteous, yet cannot I lift up my head: be thou ſatisfied with confuſion, and behold my affliction. So Mr. Broughton. As if Job had ſaid, Let it be enough, Lord, let it now ſuffice, give me ſome eaſe, that I may lift up my head a little before I lay it down for altogether. Thus David prayed (Pſal. 36. 11, 12.) When thou with rebukes doſt correct man for iniquity, thou makeſt his beauty to conſume away like a moth; ſurely every man is vanity; O ſpare me, that I may recover ſtrength, before I go hence, and be no more. When Nehemiah was humbling himſelf, and confeſſing his ſin, and the ſin of that people, he concludes according to this interpretation, (Chap. 9. 32.) Let not all the trouble ſeem little before thee that hath come upon us, on our Kings, on our Princes, and on our Prieſts, and on all thy People; as if he had ſaid, Lord, conſider that now we have been greatly puniſhed, though we have been puniſhed leſs then our ſins deſerve. Thou maiſt juſtly inflict more, but we are not able to endure more.

Rectius in imperativo, q. d. vide Domine quo ſim ſtatu, tū cognoſces ita eſſe ut dico. Merc.

Thirdly, We read imperatively, Therefore ſee thou mine affliction: So his meaning is, Lord, take notice of my ſad condition, I am full of trouble.

Hence obſerve, That when ſorrows are come to a great height it is time for us to pray, that God would caſt a compaſſionate eye upon them.

When we are paſt the cure and help of man, we are fitteſt objects for God. When the preſſures of the people of Iſrael were greatly encreaſed in Egypt, then the Lord himſelf ſaith, I have ſeen, I have ſeen (Exod. 3. 7.) and when affliction is boyl'd up to the height, then let us ſay, See Lord, ſee Lord. When the rage and blaſphemy of Rabſhakeh, both by ſpeaking and writing, reached even unto heaven; Then Hezekiah went and ſpread the letter before the Lord, (2 King. 19. 14.) As if he had ſaid, Lord, do thou read this letter, Lord, bow down thine ear and hear, Lord, behold and ſee, we are full of confuſion, ſee thou our affliction. And when the enemies of the Jews in Nehemiah's time fell to ſcoffing and jearing the work they had in hand, and them in the work, then that zealous Governour puts it unto God, Hear, O our God, for we are deſpiſed.

Secondly, Note, That when our afflictions are at the higheſt and greateſt, then the Lord is able to maſter and ſubdue them.

I am full of confuſion, ſee thou mine affliction; As if he had ſaid, It is in vain for me to ſhew my diſeaſes and my wounds to creatures, but I know I am not paſt thy cure, though I come thus late; or thus, I have ſhewed my wounds and my diſeaſes to the creature, I have made my moan to men, but they cannot help: Now I bring them unto thee, O ſee my affliction. All our ruines may be under the hand of God, he hath bread and cloathing for us, he can be our healer, when none can either in Heaven or Earth.

Laſtly obſerve, When our afflictions are at the higheſt, then uſually God comes to deliver.

When the waters of affliction ſwell over the banks, and threaten a deluge, then God turns the ſtream; when our ſores feſter and are ready to gangrene, then God applies his balſom. He ſeldom appears in a buſineſs which others can do, or undertakes that which is mans work. As in the ſore travel of women in child-bearing, other helpers undertake it not, till (as they ſpeak) it be paſt womans work; ſo God ſeldom meddles eminently (he acts alwayes concomitantly) till our deliverance is paſt mans work, that ſo the whole praiſe of the work may be his. When danger is upon the growing hand, then deſire God to take deliverance in hand; then pray, and pray earneſtly, that God would ſee your afflictions, when you perceive them to be increaſing afflictions; ſo it follows in the next verſe, See thou mine affliction.

Verſe 16. For it increaſeth; Thou hunteſt me as a fierce Lion, and again thou ſheweſt thy ſelf marvellous upon me.

This Verſe with the next, are an elegant and pathetical deſcription of Job's yet growing and prevailing ſorrows; for having cloſed verſe 15. with an Aſſertion and a Petition, I am full of confuſion, therefore ſee thou mine affliction; he preſſeth and purſueth both in theſe words, For it increaſeth; Thou hunteſt me as a fierce Lion.

גאה: In bonum, elevatur, eminuit; in malum, intumuit, ſuperbiit; de inanimatis, crevit, auctus fuit.

For it encreaſeth.] Mr. Broughton renders, How it fleeth up! The Hebrew word is taken ſometimes in a good, and ſometimes in an ill ſence. In a good ſence it ſignifies to be lifted up, or be eminent in excellency. In an ill ſence, it ſignifies to be lifted up or exalted with pride. The word is applied alſo to things without life, and then it ſignifies to augment by addition or increaſe.

The Vulgar takes it in that ill ſence, as noting pride and high-mindedneſs, tranſlating by the Nown, thus, For pride thou doſt catch me as a Lion; or thou doſt hunt me as a Lion, becauſe I am proud. A Lion is a ſtout creature, and may be an emblem of pride.

Another gives a ſence near that. When it lifteth up it ſelf, then thou hunteſt me as a fierce Lion. When what lifteth up it ſelf? When my head lifteth up it ſelf; he had ſaid in the former verſe, If I be righteous, yet will I not lift up my head; for if I do lift up my head in pride, then thou wilt hunt me as a fierce Lion; I ſhall be ſure to ſmart for every proud thought and high imagination. Both theſe Tranſlations render the meaning of Job thus, If I ſhould plead my own righteouſneſs and innocency before thee, as thinking therein to lift up my head, and ſo ſhould wax confident in my ſelf, I ſhall preſently pay for it; for I perceive that thou art preparing thine inſtruments againſt me, as men do againſt fierce Lions and wild ſavage beaſts, to hunt, catch and deſtroy me. Here is a truth in theſi, God doth reſiſt the proud: If any head lifteth it ſelf up againſt God, God can quickly lay ſuch an head as low as the ground. But in Hypotheſi, or in Job's caſe, I cannot conſent to it, as a truth ſuting this Text.

A third Tranſlation puts it by an Interrogation; I am full of confuſion, ſee thou mine affliction; Can it be lifted up? That is, Can my head be lifted up, when I am ſo full of ſorrow and confuſion? Whatſoever my righteouſneſs is, I am not in caſe now to ſtand upon it; 'tis no time for me to talk great words: Can I lift up mine head when thou preſſeſt me with ſuch a weight of affliction? Grean afflictions will keep down the greateſt ſpirits, or break them down. Affliction will make the ſtouteſt heart ſtoop, and the higheſt head to bow.

But take the word according to our reading, as it referreth to his afflictions; it increaſeth, that is my affliction increaſeth, and ſo a double expoſition is given.

Firſt, As if Job had ſpoken his wiſh or his deſire; I am (ſaid he before) full of confuſion, ſee thou mine affliction. O that mine affliction might increaſe, and that I might be fuller of confuſion! O that my troubles might be ſtrengthened upon me; and that I might be weak enough to ſee an end of my troubles! I am yet too ſtrong for death; O that thou wouldeſt quickly diſpatch me! more weight, deeper wounds, harder blows would be welcome. As if here again Job had aſſumed and renewed that complaining deſire mentioned (chap. 6. 7, 8.) O that I might have my requeſt! and that God would grant me the thing that I long for! (What was that?) Even that it would pleaſe God to deſtroy me, that he would let looſe his hand, and cut me off. But I ſhall let this paſs; Job hath ſpoken theſe wiſhes plainly, and in the Letter too often; I will not charge him with another from a queſtionable interpretation.

Rather take the words declaratively, not for a wiſh of greater future afflictions, but for a manifeſtation of the greatneſs of his preſent afflictions; ſo we expreſs them; I am full of confuſion, ſee thou mine affliction, for it increaſeth. This is a clear and a fair ſence: Job intending to deſcribe his eſtate more fully, ſheweth it ſtill upon the encreaſe, waxing worſe and worſe, greater and greater. As if he had ſaid, mine are a pile or heap of afflictions, and ſtill more are piled up and heaped on.

There is an elegancy in it, as taken in the other ſence, for pride or lifting up. See my affliction, it waxeth proud. For as the waves of the Sea are called proud waves, when they ſwell and encreaſe; ſo an affliction encreaſing and ſwelling, may be called a proud affliction. Some afflictions, like a great Sea, riſe above us, and ſtand over us; or like a cruel Maſter, domineer and inſult upon us. Job's afflictions were proud ones, they came upon him with a kind of authority, as if they would lay him at their very feet. Hence obſerve,

Effert ſeſe afflictio mea Eleganti autem figura dicit, quod ſeſe efferat. Elationem & ſuperbiam morbo & dolori tribuit, cum totum hominē poſſidet. Mer

They who have endured very great afflictions, may yet find their afflictions greatning and encreaſing.

He had ſaid before, I am full of confuſion; and yet here he ſaith, My affliction encreaſeth. When we think we have as much as our backs can bear, yet (poſſibly) more weight may be laid on. When we hope our affliction is upon the declining hand, that thoſe waters are upon an ebb, and the fire ſlacking, then they may flow higher, and the furnace may be heated ſeven times hotter then before. The Lord threatneth obſtinate and rebellious ſinners (Lev. 26.) I will puniſh you yet ſeven times more for your ſins. Though I have brought ſuch calamities upon you, that ye have been ready to ſay, ſurely now God hath done his worſt, we are in as bad a caſe as we can be; no, ſaith the Lord (who hath infinite wiſdom to find out wayes of afflicting, as well as of ſhewing mercy) I will puniſh you yet ſeven times more for your ſins; no man knows how much more God can puniſh him: His judgments in the executing of them, as well as in the laying of them, are paſt finding out. We know not the beginning of them, neither do we know when they will end. Now as the Lord afflicteth ſome ſeven times more for the puniſhment of their ſins, ſo others ſeven times more for the trial of their Graces. Sufferings are ſent in perfection, to make us more perfect through ſufferings. Afflictions ſwell with pride, to abate the ſwelling of our pride, or to ſhew how thoſe ſwellings are abated into humility. God hath unſearchable riches and treaſures of chaſtenings, as well as of wrath or of love. And as when we think we have received as much mercy as God can give us, he can yet give us more, and make our mercies ſevenfold greater to our apprehenſions then before; ſo alſo he can diſpenſe himſelf in the matter of affliction.

For it increaſeth.] This increaſe is ſet forth by an elegant ſimilitude. Though ſimilitudes prove nothing, yet they much illuſtrate what is already proved.

Thou hunteſt me as a fierce Lion.

Thou hunteſt me as the ramping Shakal: So Mr. Broughton. The word Shakal, ſignifies a fierce aſſaulting Lion; or, as we ſpeak, a Lion rampant. Some tranſlate a Lioneſs, others a Leopard, ſpoken of in the fourth Chapter. We may take it in general for any fierce, cruel and ſavage beaſt, of the one kind or of the other.

Effert ſe dolor meus, ut Leo, nequaquam cedēs. Merc.

Thou hunteſt me as a fierce Lion.] For Thou, ſome render (It) referring to his affliction; For it increaſeth, and it hunts me (my affliction hunteth me) as a fierce Lion. Sorrows are compared to a fierce Lion. Afflictions hunt and follow, they tear and deſtroy like a wild beaſt. Like a Lion, or like the young Lion, roaring on his prey (as the Prophet ſpeaks, Iſa. 45.) when a multitude of ſhepherds is called out againſt him (Chriſt is compared to ſuch a Lion there) will not be afraid of their voyce, nor abaſe himſelf for the noiſe of them. Such were the afflictions of diſtreſſed, deſpiſed Job, they braved him to his very face, and would not withdraw or turn away from him, notwithſtanding all the outcries and loudeſt lamentations which he made againſt them.

Capior ſicut Leo ad occiſionem. Sept.

Tendis mihi & expandis rete, non ſecus ac ad feram capiendam. Rab. Sil.

Secondly, The compariſon is laid between the Lion and Job; Thou hunteſt me as if I were a Lion: So divers of the Ancients, and the Septuagint underſtand it: I am taken or catched like a Lion: As if Job had ſaid, Lord, thou uſeſt me as a wild beaſt, thou hunteſt me as thou wouldeſt hunt a Lion or a Bear, thou ſetteſt thy nets and toils, thou makeſt ſnares and pits (as Nimrods do in the hunting of Lions and other wild beaſts) Thou dealeſt with me as if there were no taking, no taming of me, but by ſevereſt and rougheſt wayes: Thou dealeſt with me, as if in my proſperity I had been like a fierce Lion, oppreſſing and preying upon the poor; or, as if in my affliction I had provoked thee to reſolve, that thou wilt never leave off to afflict me, till thou haſt deſtroyed me; Thou hunteſt me as a fierce Lion: How are they hunted? Lions are not uſually hunted to be preſerved, 'tis rare to hunt Lions ſo, but becauſe they are hurtful and deſtroying creatures, therefore they are hunted that they may be deſtroyed, and do no more hurt; as if he had thus expreſſed himſelf, Thou, Lord, ſeemeſt to adjudge me not only as an unuſeful and unſerviceable creature, but alſo as a dangerous and a noxious creature, as a natural brute beaſt made to be taken and deſtroyed (2 Pet. 2. 12.) yet I cannot aſſent that Job (though under the darkneſs of a ſore temptation) had ſuch dark thoughts of God, as if he had no other end in afflicting him, but to make an end of him.

Non caplor ad vitam, ut animalia quæ ſitent habiti in deliciis. Bold.

I rather expound him in a third ſence, that the compariſon is made between God and the Lion; Thou, O God, like a Lion, doſt hunt me. Conſent of Scripture is cleareſt for this interpretation, which often repreſents God in afflicting his people, under the notion of a Lion, as will appear in the proof of the obſervation ariſing from it; which is,

> That, The Lord ſeemeth ſometimes to put off all his pity and compaſſion towards his people.

So the Church complains (Lam. 3. 10.) He was unto me as a Bear lying in wait, and as a Lion in ſecret places. God threatned by the Prophet Hoſea (chap. 5. 14.) I will be unto Ephraim as a Lion, and as a young Lion to the houſe of Judah; I, even I will tear and go away. I will afflict them fiercely and terribly. Again (Hoſ. 13. 7.) I will be unto them as a Lion, as a Leopard by the way, will I obſerve them. Hezekiah ſpeaks the ſame Language (Iſa. 38. 13.) I reckoned till morning, that as a Lion, ſo will he break all my bones. As when man dealeth cruelly with his brother, he is a Wolf to him, or a Lion to him (Pſal. 17. 12.) Man acting of beaſtly luſts, is all the metamorphoſis or change of men into beaſts, which Heathen Poets have ſo much fancied, or the Holy Scriptures ſo often mentioned. Now, I ſay, as man acting cruelly upon man, is called a Lion, ſo alſo is God. When God would ſhew the abatements of his wrath, then he ſaith, I am God, and not man (Hoſ. 11. 89) How ſhall I give thee up Ephraim? &c. Thus he debates, by and by he votes and reſolves negatively, I will not execute the fierceneſs of mine anger; I will not return to deſtroy Ephraim; for I am God, and not man. But when he would ſhew the higheſt workings of his wrath, then he denies to ſhew himſelf ſo much as man: Thus old Babylon and Chaldea are terrified (Iſa. 47. 1.) Come down and ſit in the duſt, O virgin Daughter of Babylon, &c. Why ſo? Babylon had ſet ſo long upon the Throne, that ſhe knew not how to think of ſitting in the duſt; yet ſhe muſt: for (verſ. 3.) I will take vengeance, and will not meet thee as a man. How then? I will meet thee as if I were a beaſt, or a Lion; Thou ſhalt find no kind of humanity at all from me, not only not the kindneſſes and mercies of a God, but not ſo much as the kindneſs and mercy of a man. Thus the Lord met with that Literal Babylon, and ſo at laſt he will meet with Myſtical Babylon. And as he will be to all his proud enemies, a deſtroying and devouring Lion; ſo he appeareth often to his own people; he ſaith even to Jeruſalem, and to Zion, I will not meet you as a man, when you are carnal and walk as men. The uſual dealings of God with his people are full of compaſſion; In meaſure (peck-peck) when it ſhooteth (or when thou ſendeſt it) forth, thou wilt debate with it; He ſtayeth his rough wind in the day of the Eaſt-wind (Iſa. 27. 8.) He will not bluſter againſt and ſtorm his people, when their enemies ſtorm againſt them; he alſo meaſures out their afflictions, and marks what is fit and proportionate to their ſtrength, and for their good, as a Phyſitian meaſures and weighs all the ingredients which he mingles in a potion for his ſick Patient: ſo the next words intimate; By this therefore ſhall the iniquity of Jacob be purged, and this is all the fruit to take away his ſin. Yet at another time he afflicteth without meaſure, as if he intended to kill rather then to cure, and to take away their lives, rather then to take away their ſins. I grant his greateſt afflictions are as exactly meaſured and weighed as the leaſt. God knows to an hairs breadth, the length and breadth, and to a grain, the weight and burden of the longeſt, broadeſt and weightieſt affliction; but when he afflicts greatly, he is ſaid to afflict without meaſure, becauſe things unmeaſurable, or which cannot eaſily be meaſured, are very great. And if ever the Lord afflicted any of his (in this ſence) without meaſure, ſurely he afflicted Job ſo, who thus cries out, Thou hunteſt me like a fierce Lion.

And again thou ſhewest thy ſelf marvellous (or wonderful) upon me.

Again.] We render it as an Adverb; others, as a Verb, Thou returneſt, and ſheweſt thy ſelf wonderful upon me. The ſence is the ſame in both, noting the continued or repeated acts of his affliction. Thou art ſtill wonderful againſt me. As if Job had ſaid, Lord, thou no ſooner ceaſeſt, but thou beginneſt again; thou no ſooner takeſt off thy hand, but I feel it again; if thou granteſt me a little breathing, and withdraweſt from me, thou returneſt again; if thou giveſt over the chaſe a while, thou purſueſt it again with as loud a cry, with as fierce aſſaults as ever; my ſorrows know no intermiſſion, my pains know not only no period, but no pauſe, I have ſtorm upon ſtorm, grief upon grief, here much and there much, I am alwayes and every where again afflicted; though already half-dead with affliction. Hence obſerve,

One would think that light ſhould follow darkneſs, and day ſucceed the night, that though ſorrow continue all the night, yet joy ſhould come in the morning, that after wounding; we ſhould have healing, and after ſickneſs, health. So they promiſed themſelves (Hoſ. 6. 1.) Come, and let us return unto the Lord, for he hath torn, and he will heal us; he hath ſmitten, and he will bind us up. Yet many have felt wounding after wounds, and ſmiting after blows; darkneſs hath went after darkneſs, and their ſorrow hath had a ſucceſſion of greater ſorrows. It was a ſpecial favour to Paul, when Epaphroditus was reſtored (Phil. 2. 27.) He was ſick nigh unto death, but (ſaith he) God had mercy on him, and not on him only, but on me alſo; and why? Leſt I ſhould have ſorrow upon ſorrow. God would not do what ſome of his enemies thought to do, add affliction to his bonds; therefore he healed Paul's helper, and kept him alive, in whom he ſo much delighted. Sorrow upon ſorrow is a mournful bearing, and yet many a precious Saint hath born that coat. The promiſe to the Church is, That her peace ſhall be as a River, and her proſperity as the waves of the Sea (Iſa. 66. 12.) When the Church ſhall come to her full beauty, and attain a perfect reſtauration, then her peace ſhall be a continued peace, ſhe ſhall have peace upon peace, everlaſting ſucceſſions of peace; a River being ſupplied and fed with a conſtant ſtream, the waters that flow to day, will flow again to morrow; peace like a river is peace, peace, or perpetual peace. Sions peace ſhall not be as a Land-floud, ſoon up, and as ſoon down again; but as a River: and (which yet heightens it) her proſperity ſhall be as the waves of the Sea. If the wind do but ſtir upon the face of the Sea, you ſhall have wave upon wave, waves rolling and riding one upon the back of another. Such ſhall be the proſperity of Zion on earth for a time, and ſuch it will be for ever in heaven; there peace ſhall be as a river to eternity, and proſperity as the waves of the Sea, joy upon joy, and comfort upon comfort, riding and rolling one upon the back of another. As it ſhall be thus with the peace of the Church at laſt, ſo it may be with the afflictions of the Church or of any member of the Church at preſent. Their afflictions may be as a river, and their ſorrows as the waves of the Sea, coming on again and again, renewed as often as abated.

Who hath heard of ſuch a thing as this? Thou ſeemeſt to deſign me as a preſident to poſterity, or to ſhew in my example what thou canſt do upon a creature; Thou ſheweſt thy ſelf marvellous upon me. As Moſes ſaith concerning Korah, Dathan and Abiram, when they murmured and mutinied againſt

The Lord to manifeſt his extream diſpleaſure againſt thoſe mutiniers, did (as it were) deviſe a new kind of death for them; If theſe men die the common or the ordinary death of all men, then the Lord hath not ſent me. Theſe men have given a new example of ſin, and ſurely God will make them a new example of puniſhment. Job ſpeaks the ſame ſence, Thou ſheweſt thy ſelf marvellous upon me, thou wilt not be ſatisfied in afflicting me after the rate or meaſure of other men: All the Saints ſhould do ſome ſingular thing, and many of them ſuffer ſome ſingular thing. The Apoſtle aſſures his Corinthians (1 Cor.10.13.) There hath no temptation taken you, but that which is common to man. Job ſeems to ſpeak the contrary. A temptation hath taken me, which is not common to man.

Further, Theſe words, Thou art marvellous upon me, have reference to God who ſent thoſe afflictions, as well as unto the afflictions which he ſent: As if he had ſaid, Lord, thou acteſt now beſides thy nature and thy cuſtom: thou art merciful, and thou delighteſt in mercy; thou art good, and thou doſt good; how or whence is it then, that thou art ſo fierce againſt me, and poureſt out ſo many evils upon me? I could (not knowing thee as I do) have believed, though it had been told me, that thou wouldeſt have been ſo rigorous and incompaſſionate; if a profeſſed enemy had done this, he had done like himſelf, and had been no wonder unto me; but now as thou haſt afflicted me, till I am become a wonder unto many; ſo thou, O Lord, art become a wonder unto me, and to all who hear how thou haſt afflicted me. Meek Moſes made himſelf a wonder, when he broke out in anger. Every man is wondered at, when he doth that which he is not enclined to do, or not uſed to do. Is it not a wonder to ſee the patient God angry, the merciful God ſevere, the compaſſionate God inexorable? Thus, ſaith Job, Thou ſheweſt thy ſelf marvellous upon me. Hence obſerve,

First, That, Some afflictions of the Saints are wonderful afflictions.

As God doth not often ſend his people ſtrange deliverances, and work wonders to preſerve them, ſo he ſends them many ſtrange afflictions, and works wonders to trouble them. And as many puniſhments of ſin upon wicked men, ſo ſome trials of Grace upon godly men, are very wonderful. The Lord threatneth the Jews (Deut. 28. 59.) That he would make their plagues wonderful, he would make ſtrange work among them. And he ſaith of Jeruſalem, I will wipe it as a man wipeth a Diſh, wiping it, and turning it upſide down, or wiping it, and turning it upon the face thereof (2 Kings 21. 13.) To ſee a great City handled like a little diſh, or a ſtrong Nation turned topſie-turvy (as we ſay) or the bottom upwards, is a ſtrange thing. It is an ordinary thing to ſee Cups and Platters turned upſide down, but it is not ordinary to ſee Kingdoms and Nations turned upſide down. To wipe Jeruſalem as a diſh, was to do that which was never done before. Some expound that place of the frequency of affliction, that God would ſmite them again and again; as they that make clean a diſh, wipe it over and over, that no filth may ſtay in it. The Seventy and the Vulgar tranſlate, I will blot out Jeruſalem as they uſe to blot out a Table-book that is written all over: He that hath a Table-book full of writing, and would write more, takes a cloth or a ſpunge, and blotteth out what was written; and that he may throughly wipe his Table-book, he rubs it often with his ſpunge, to get the Letter clear out. Thus God threatned to do with Jeruſalem, He would wipe or blot out her golden Characters and honourable inſcriptions, till nothing of Jeruſalem, but her ſhame and her ſin, ſhould remain unblotted out. Was not the judgment brought upon Jeruſalem a wonder? when the Prophet ſaith (Lam. 4. 12.) The Kings of the earth, and all the inhabitants of the world would not have believed it. The Apoſtle ſpeaks thus of his own, and of his fellow-Apoſtles afflictions (1 Cor. 4. 9.) We are made a ſpectacle (as upon a Theater) unto the world, and to Angels, and to men. All begin to wonder at us, what the matter is, what ſtrange creatures we are, whom the Lord ſuffers to be thus uſed. The people of God are often a gazing-ſtock to the world, in regard of what they do, and not ſeldom in regard of what they ſuffer.

Delebo Jeruſalem ſicut deleri ſolent tabulæ. Vulg.

Θέατρον ἐγενήθημεν.

Secondly obſerve, That, When God doth greatly afflict his own people, he goes out of his ordinary way.

He ſhews himſelf marvellous or wonderful; a man is never marvelled at, when he goes his old pace in his old path. God loves to have his hand in the honey-pot, therefore it is ſtrange to ſee him give his people a bitter cup to drink, or feeding them with wormwood or with gall. Judgment is the ſtrange work of God (Iſa. 28. 21.) The Lord ſhall be wrath in the valley of Gibeon, that he may do his work, his ſtrange work; and bring to paſs his act, his ſtrange act. And if every work of judgment be his ſtrange work, a work he delighteth not to be converſant in, what then are great and ſore judgments? Though the Lord be infinitely pleaſed in the executions of judgment, yet becauſe (if a more may be conceived in infinity) he is more pleaſed with mercy; therefore judgment is called his ſtrange work, his ſtrange act. To ſee a Prince renowned for clemency and pity, paſſing a ſevere ſentence, is a ſtrange ſight. We ſay he hath ſhewed himſelf marvellous, he hath gone both againſt his practice and his nature, his cuſtom and his inclination. To ſee any man do what he uſeth not, hath ſomewhat of wonder in it; much more, to ſee God do ſo. When he taketh up his Rod, we begin to ſtart; how much more, when he taketh up his ſword, when he hunts thoſe like a Lion, whom he dearly loveth, and uſes thoſe as wild beaſts, who are his precious children? When he ſmites them with rigor, whom he carrieth in his own boſom? Theſe, theſe are acts which repreſent him to admiration; as many acts of his power and mercy cauſe the Saints to cry out admiringly, yet joyfully, Who is a God like unto thee? So ſome acts of his viſible ſeverity cauſe others of them to cry out admiringly, yet ſorrowfully, Why, O God, doſt thou in appearance ſo unlike thy ſelf?

Verſe 17. Thou reneweſt thy witneſſes againſt me (or, thou bringeſt new witneſſes againſt me) and encreaſeſt thine indignation upon me; changes and war are againſt me.

This ſeventeenth verſe is but a further amplification of what he had ſpoken before, ſetting forth the greatneſs and frequent returns of his trouble.

Thou reneweſt.] The firſt day of the Month is called Chodeſh in the Hebrew, from the word here uſed, becauſe then there was a New Moon, or a change of the Moon; ſo, Thou reneweſt, thou makeſt a change; I have many new Moons, but they are all and alwayes at full in ſorrow; Thou reneweſt

Chodeſh, Novilunium primus dies menſis, quo quaſi Luna innovatur.

Thy witneſſes.] The Septuagint ſaith, thy examinations; ſo it is an alluſion to the trial of a Malefactor, who is examined by the Judge, and if he deals not plainly in confeſſion, then his examination is renewed. Thus ſaith Job, Thou ſendeſt (as it were) new examiners with more Articles and additional Interrogatories, as if I had concealed ſomewhat, and had not told thee my whole heart.

We tranſlate (and ſo the word moſt properly beareth) witneſſes; the ſence is the ſame. As ſome Malefactors are often examined, ſo more evidence, and new witneſſes are brought againſt them; though in the mouth of two or three witneſſes every word ſhall be eſtabliſhed, yet where there are more witneſſes then two or three, there is more eſtabliſhment.

Again, As they who are of a wrangling and unquiet diſpoſition, will never ſit down in a Suit, when by the examination of ſome witneſſes, they have brought the matter to a trial, and are caſt; yet this doth not ſatisfie them, they will have their Writ of Errour, and bring the matter about in another Court. Thus (ſaith Job) as if the Lord were reſolved this Suit ſhould never have an end, He reneweth his witneſſes againſt me. When I think all is concluded and agreed between us, I am as much to ſeek as ever; he brings all about again: So that after all my travel, I am as far from an end, as I was at the beginning; I am where I was, and am like to continue there; for I ſee the Lord renewing his witneſs againſt me.

Non tam videtur de inſtauratione plurium teſtium quæri, quam de ſententiæ ferendæ dilatione & mora. Pin.

The doubt is, what or whom he meaneth by theſe Witneſſes?

Philippus in loc.

One ſaith, Theſe witneſſes were Devils. Satan accuſed him at firſt, and he is not alone either in tempting or accuſing, he can ſoon have a Legion to joyn with him in any deſign of wickedneſs. But I paſs that opinion.

Secondly, Others ſay, The Witneſſes were Job's three Friends; they all teſtifie againſt him; Eliphaz began, and Bildad was his ſecond, Zophar ſtood ready to follow; all againſt Job.

Pœna unius peccati, quaſi de ſtatione decedente, aliam quaſi ſuccenturiatam ſuffecturus es. Coc.

Thirdly, By Witneſſes, moſt (and they moſt clearly) underſtand his afflictions; Thou reneweſt thy witneſſes, that is, thou bringeſt new troubles to teſtifie againſt me. When one affliction hath ſpoken at thy Bar againſt me, thou calleſt for the teſtimony of another, and of another, and when there will not be another, I know not, unleſs it be when I am not. When Naomi was become Marah (her former pleaſures being turned into bitterneſs) ſhe ſaith (Ruth 1. 21.) The Lord hath teſtified againſt me. Job is very expreſs in the point, at the ſixteenth Chapter of this Book, verſe 8. Which may be a Commentary upon this; Thou haſt filled me with wrinkles, which is a witneſs againſt me; and my leanneſs riſing up in me, beareth witneſs to my face. Afflictions bring in evidence, and teſtifie many wayes.

They ſometimes witneſs for us, evidencing our Graces, our Faith, Patience, Sincerity and Submiſſion to the hand of God; they are witneſſes alſo of our Adoption or ſpiritual Sonſhip (Heb. 12. 8,) If you be without chaſtiſement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye Baſtards, and not Sons. It is no good ſign to be free from ſufferings. Hear ye the Rod, ſaith the Prophet Micah; as we ought to hear it, calling us from ſin; ſo we may hear it calling us as Sons. Chaſtenings ſpeak our Priviledges, as well as our Duties.

They often witneſs againſt us;

Firſt, That ſin is ſeated in us, and hath been acted by us. If we had no ſin, we ſhould know no ſorrow. Though ſome afflictions are not ſent out directly againſt ſin, yet every affliction is both a conſequent and a teſtimony of remaining ſin. The bundle of Rods at our backs, ſaith, there is folly and ſin bound up in our hearts; and when once we are purged from ſin, we ſhall hear no more of any affliction, of any rod. We ſhall be paſt ſuffering, as ſoon as we are paſt ſinning.

Secondly, They are witneſſes in ſpecial, of that great ſin, the pride of our hearts and lives. If there were not ſwellings and impoſtumations of pride in our ſpirits, we ſhould not feel ſuch lancings. Paul himſelf acknowledges that they were growing upon him, if God had not taken a ſevere courſe to keep them down: Leſt I ſhould be exalted above meaſure through the abundance of revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the fleſh; the meſſenger of Satan to buffet me (2 Cor. 12. 7.) Hence afflictions are called humiliations, both becauſe an afflicted perſon is humbled or laid low by the hand of God; as alſo, becauſe afflictions are ſent to humble and lay us low in our ſelves. Now, if one ſpecial buſineſs which affliction hath with us, be to humble us, then doubtleſs affliction witneſſeth that there is pride in us. That which is ſent to remove an evil, ſhews the preſence of it.

Thirdly, They are witneſſes, by bringing to our remembrance the acting of forgotten ſins. Affliction is a help to memory. That which we forget we have done or ſpoken, witneſſes coming in, make us remember; ſo alſo do our troubles. When the Brethren of Joſeph had been put in ward three dayes, and heard him demand one of them to be left as an hoſtage in priſon till they brought Benjamin, this diſtreſs cauſed them to ſay, We are very guilty concerning our Brother, in that we ſaw the anguiſh of his ſoul, when he beſought us, and we would not hear, therefore is this diſtreſs come upon us (Gen. 42. 21.) The guilt of that ſin was about twenty years old, but they felt not the ſmart of it till themſelves ſmarted for it; their impriſonment ſet their memories at liberty, and when they ſaw themſelves in danger to become bondmen to the Egyptians, they had witneſs enough of their ſelling Joſeph for a captive to the Iſhmaelites.

Fourthly, Afflictions witneſs obſtinacy and reſolvedneſs in the wayes of ſin, or that afflicted perſons or Nations turn not for ſin. Every wound will open its mouth as a witneſs, and every ſtroak will bring an evidence againſt the impenitent. The troubles which God brought upon Ahaz, witneſſed emphatically (2 Chron. 28. 23.) This is that King Ahaz, who in the time of his diſtreſs, did treſpaſs yet more againſt the Lord. If we are not bettered by our diſtreſſes, our diſtreſſes teſtifie that we are naught; how much more when we are worſe in our diſtreſs? As all good things which we have received, ſo all evils which we have ſuffered, will riſe up in judgment againſt thoſe who ſtill continue evil.

Fifthly, Afflictions witneſs two things concerning God. Firſt, That he hath an eye upon us, and care of us. He will not let us want any thing that is needful for us, no, not affliction. Due chaſtiſement given a child, is an argument that his Father loveth him, and looks to him. Secondly, They are witneſſes of Gods fatherly diſpleaſure. Some ſay, God cannot be diſpleaſed with his Children, becauſe his love is everlaſting. But will any man ſay, A Father doth not love his Child becauſe he corrects him? Yet a Father never correcteth his Child but when he is diſpleaſed with him: Parents may not ſtrike unprovoked, and 'tis rare that God doth ſo. A man may be much diſpleaſed with, and much love the ſame perſon at the ſame time; and 'tis very uſual for God to do ſo. Afflictions never teſtifie any the leaſt hatred of God againſt his people, but they often teſtifie ſome, and ſometimes great diſpleaſure againſt his people.

Laſtly, Afflictions upon the godly, are reckoned very ſufficient and credible witneſſes by the world, that either they are not godly, or that ſurely ſome great ungodlineſs hath been acted by them. How many precious men have been caſt upon this evidence, for traytors and rebels againſt God? Job's friends took this for proof enough that he was wicked. They could not be perſwaded he was good, becauſe he endured ſo many evils. As the High Prieſt cried out againſt Chriſt, What further need have we of witneſſes? Behold now ye have heard his blaſphemy: So ſaid Job's friends concerning him; What need have we of further witneſs? Behold we have ſeen his miſery. What do theſe loſſes in his eſtate, and ruines upon his family? What do theſe ſores upon his body, and ſorrows upon his ſoul, but publiſh unto us (what he hath kept cloſe and concealed) the prophaneneſs of his ſpirit, and the hypocriſie of his former profeſſion? Job perceiving his friends making uſe all along of this proof, as of their chiefeſt and ſtrongeſt Medium, might well complain to God, upon the renewal of every dayes affliction, Thou reneweſt thy witneſſes againſt me.

And encreaſeth thine indignation upon me, or, Thy indignation encreaſeth upon me.

In the beginning of the Verſe, his own afflictions did increaſe, but here the indignation of God. Indignation is more grievous then affliction, and the indignation of God is the moſt grievous indignation.

The word ſignifies wrath, diſpleaſure, fierce, fiery wrath, hot conſuming diſpleaſure. כעש

Increaſeth.] There is a double increaſe here noted. רב First, Extenſive. Secondly, Intenſive; an increaſe both in multitude and magnitude: As if he had ſaid, I have more troubles in number, and more in weight.

Indignation is here put for the effects of indignation; neither the wrath, nor the love of God do ever encreaſe in him, but in their exertions, or in putting them forth towards us. Hence obſerve,

First, That, A godly man may conceive himſelf under the indignation of God.

The Church ſtoops to it (Micah 7. 9.) I will bear the indignation of the Lord, becauſe I have ſinned againſt him.

Secondly obſerve, That, The more we ſee of the indignation of God in any affliction, the ſorer is the affliction.

As the love and ſmiles of God comfort the Saints more then all the outward comforts he heaps upon them; a little with much ſenſible love, is to us a huge mercy: So the disfavour and frowns of God troubles the Saints more then all the troubles which he heaps upon them. A little with much ſenſible disfavour, is to us a heavy croſs. Let trouble increaſe, yet if diſpleaſure abate, the ſpirit of man will bear and ſtand under it, though his fleſh and outward man fall under it. Though the Furnace ſhould be heated ſeven times hotter, yet if the Lord do do but let down one beam or ray of his love into the ſoul, all that burning fire will be but like a warm Sun. But when the ſcorchings of indignation mingle with affliction, this is dreadful. The anger of a fool (ſaith Solomon) is very heavy; yet that is not ſo much as a feather to a milſtone, or a mountain, compared with the anger of God. And though believers are freed from that anger and indignation which he darts upon his enemies, yet they to ſenſe, yea and to their preſent opinion, may be dealt with as enemies. And though the indignation which God pours upon his own people, and that upon the wicked, be as different as their ſtates are; yet the one may be under as much temporary pain and ſorrow as the other is. For as an hypocrite may for a time taſte as much of the goodneſs of God, and feel as much joy in his ſervice, and ſometimes more, then a man who is godly and ſincere; ſo alſo may one who is godly and ſincere taſte more of the diſpleaſure of God for a time, and feel as much ſorrow in his ſufferings, and ſometimes more, then a wicked man.

Pœnæ militant in me. Vulg.

Job concludes with the ſame thing, in a different habit of words. Changes and war are againſt me. I have variety of afflictions, a multitude of afflictions, and afflictions in their ſtrength, theſe three things are implied in thoſe two words, Changes and war; he had variety of afflictions, for changes were upon him. He had many and ſtrong afflictions, For war was upon him. One ſtrong man cannot make a war, nor many weak ones. And it is as ſtrange that this ſhould be called a war, which was but againſt one weak man. The Roman ſtories cry up the honour of a man, who alone upon a narrow paſs made a ſtand againſt a whole army, till ſupplies came; what ſhall we ſay then of Job, who ſingle and alone maintained his ſtanding againſt many armies, and held out a long war? Changes and war are upon me.

The firſt word which ſignifies Changes, ſignifies alſo deſtruction or cutting off. Some render it ſo here, excision or cutting off (by which he meaneth death) is upon me. The other word which we tranſlate War, noteth alſo a ſet or an appointed time, as was ſhewed at Chap. 7. verſ. 1. Is there not an appointed time to man upon earth? So ſome tranſlate it here, putting all together thus, Exciſion (or death, the cauſe being put for the effect) is upon me, and a determined time of my life.

Mr. Broughton tranſlates, Changes and ſtayed army have I. Taking in both interpretations of the word, ſo his ſence may be expreſſed in this tenor, Lord have not I a ſetled and determined time to die? Why then are ſuch extream afflictions prepared againſt, and charged upon me, as if by thoſe thou wouldeſt haſten my death, and bring me to my grave ſooner then thou thy ſelf haſt appointed? I ſhall die at the time thou haſt determined, though thou ſhouldeſt not diſtreſs my life, and even force out my breath with ſuch preſſing extremities.

Hunc ſenſum amplectuntur Aben-Ezra. Rab. Sal.

Further, taking the latter word for a preſcribed time: ſome conceive Job carrying an alluſion to thoſe who are ſurprized with Fevers and Agues: they have changes, ſome well dayes, and ſome ſick dayes, yet the Fever returns upon a ſet time, or in a conſtant recourſe, till the diſtemper is checked; As if he had ſaid, My afflictions are like Fever fits; though I have ſome intermiſſion, yet I find a regreſſion, the fit comes upon me again; Changes, at ſet times are upon me.

Exerceor contrariis & interſe compugnantibus malis, vel potius variis & ſibi invicem ſuccedentibus malorū agminibus. Merc.

But rather, according to the letter of our tranſlation, Changes and war are againſt me; that is, I am exerciſed with variety of wars. The word imports any kind of change, change of times, or change of things; it ſignifies alſo change of garments (Judg. 14. 12.) That notion of the word, hath an elegancy in it in reference to Job's condition. He was a man cloathed with affliction, ſorrow encompaſſed him as a long mourning cloak; and Job had changes of his rayment, he went not alwayes in one ſuit, though his ſuits were ſtill of one colour, for he went alwayes in blacks.

Again, We may interpret this change, of his change from one eſtate to another, from joy to ſorrows, from peace to trouble, from plenty to want, from coſtly robes to filthy rags. Time was when Job went in ſcarlet and fine linnen, and, if he pleaſed, might have fared deliciouſly every day; but when he ſpake this, he was in another ſtate and habit, cloathed with ſackcloth, and lying in the duſt. It is ſaid of wicked men (Pſal. 55. 9.) Becauſe they have no changes, therefore they fear not God. Every creature is ſubject to change, and have ſome changes every day; God only is unchangable. Yet ſome men ſeem to have no changes; and though they cannot be free from natural changes one moment, yet they may be free from many years civil changes: they may be ſo far from ſuch changes as Job felt, from good to evil, that all the changes they are acquainted with, may be only from good to better, from ſtrong to ſtronger, from rich to richer: that's the intent of the Pſalm; They have no changes from joy to ſorrow, from health to ſickneſs, from riches to poverty, from honour to diſgrace, therefore they fear not God; their hearts were hardned, becauſe their eſtates proſpered.

Agmen quoddam malorum, ut etiā dicitur lernæ vel Ilias malorū Merc. Vexationes turmatim me invadunt. Druſ. Sagittandi & militandi verba ſæpe & eleganter in ſcripturis declarant Dei contra impios per flagella conflictum.

So then, theſe changes import, either divers ſorts of afflictions, or divers returns and charges of the ſame afflictions. The ſecond word carrieth that alluſion, Changes and war are upon me; that is, ſuch changes as there is in war, when firſt one Regiment charges, and another ſeconds, and ſo Regiment after Regiment, Company after Company, File after File, now the right Wing, and then the left, at laſt the Reſerve. Thus the Lord ſeemed to bring up his Bands and Troops of afflictions to aſſault Job in turns and changes, till his whole Army had aſſaulted and skirmiſhed with him. Thoſe Military terms of ſhooting and warring are frequent figures in Scripture, ſhewing how God conflicts with ſinful, weak man, after the manner of men. Obſerve hence,

First, That afflictions are at the command of God.

He marſhals and diſpoſes them, as Armies are by their Generals in times of war. He can ſay to one affliction, as the Centurion to his Souldiers, Go, and it goeth; to another, Come, and it cometh; to a third, Do this, and it doth it. All Armies of ſorrow are led by God in chief: They charge whom he pleaſeth, and where he pleaſeth, high or low, Perſon or Nation: if he gives the word, they fall on preſently, nor will they return till he orders their retreat.

Secondly note, That the Lord hath variety of wayes and means to afflict and try his people.

Changes and war are againſt me. The Phyſitian hath variety of medicines for his ſick patient; if one removes not the diſtemper, he changes and tries a ſecond. There is nothing ſo full of changes, as war, not only in regard of the uncertainty of events, but variety of means, new forces being raiſed, and new ſtratagems uſed, from day to day. Haſt thou but one bleſſing? ſaid Eſau to his Father Iſaac. The hand of man may be ſtraitned to one bleſſing, or one blow; but the hand of God is never ſtraightned. As he hath ſtore of bleſſings, ſo of blows, and can give both out, both in degree and kind diverſified; if one Army of evils doth not humble and conquer us to his obedience, he can quickly leavy a new one. All creatures will come in to his help, if he do but ſet up his ſtandard, or give command to beat his drum. He changed his Armies ten times againſt Pharaoh: Pharaoh had indeed changes and war upon him, yet no change wrought in him: therefore the war was changed, till he was deſtroyed. This war with Job was not a deſtroying one, but it was a terrible one, ſo terrible that he cries out in the language of his former complaints, Wherefore then haſt thou brought me forth out of the womb?

VERS. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22.

Wherefore then haſt thou brought me forth out of the womb? O that I had given up the ghoſt, and no eye had ſeen me!

I ſhould have been as though I had not been, I ſhould have been carried from the womb to the grave.

Are not my dayes few? Ceaſe then, let me alone, that I may take comfort a little.

Before I go whence I ſhall not return, even to the land of darkneſs, and the ſhadow of death;

A land of darkneſs, as darkneſs it ſelf; and of the ſhadow of death, without any order, and where the light is as darkneſs.

THeſe five verſes are the concluſion of Job's reply to Bildad; there are four things remarkable in them.

Firſt, He complaineth that ever he lived a day or an hour in the world, at the beginning of verſ. 18. Wherefore then haſt thou brought me forth of the womb?

Secondly, He wiſheth that he had died ſpeedily: ſeeing he could not have that (ſuppoſed) happineſs not to be born into the world, his next requeſt is, that he might not have ſtayed long in the world; he would not have appeared as a man, no nor as a child, but that birth and burial might have been contiguous, not knowing the diſtance of a day, *Verſ.*18,19. O that I had given up the Ghoſt, and no eye had ſeen me! I ſhould have been as though I had not been, I ſhould have been carried from the womb to the grave.

Thirdly, He ſheweth that however he had been diſappointed of both thoſe votes, yet he could not live long; As if he had ſaid, Though I have found much trouble in the world, yet I ſhall not much trouble the world, the time of my departure is at hand, I have lived moſt of my dayes already, and all my dayes are not many, Verſ. 20. Are not my dayes few?

Fourthly, He entreateth and ſueth that the few dayes (of thoſe few dayes which he had to live) might be good dayes, Are not my dayes few? Ceaſe then, and let me alone, that I may take comfort a little, before I go whence I ſhall not return, &c.

Sui obliviſcitur ut ſuprà,vi doloris. Merc.

The eighteenth and nineteenth verſes carry a ſence very like to that which hath been opened at Chap. 3. of this Book, where Job complained of his birth, and was troubled that he had the favour of a being (becauſe he found ſuch an ill-being) in the world. His paſſion runneth out here into a vehement expoſtulation, Wherefore haſt thou brought me forth out of the womb? As there, Why died I not from the womb? Verſ. 11.

Job puts the Queſtion, and demanded an account of God, Why he came out of the Womb? There are three ſorts of queſtions.

Firſt, Such as ariſe from a deſire of neceſſary information: 'Tis good to ask that we may learn.

Secondly, Such as ariſe from a needleſs curioſity: 'Tis not good to ask what no duty enjoyns us to learn.

Thirdly, Such as ariſe from pure paſſion, or rather, from mudded perturbation,not ſo much deſiring information from others, as to vent our ſelves. 'Tis very ill to ask when we care not to learn. Such is the queſtion here put (ſay ſome) a paſſionate queſtion, ariſing from the fume and vapors of a diſtempered mind, deſiring to ask, rather then to be anſwered, Wherefore haſt thou brought me forth out of the womb? As if he had ſaid, Was I born only to be an object of evil? Came I into the world to be made a ſad ſpectacle to the world, to Angels and to Men? Have my dayes been lengthened out on purpoſe, that my troubles might be lengthened? Such a troubled ſence there is in theſe words. The complaints of Saints may ſometimes look like the blaſphemies of wicked men.

Job complaineth of his birth, and ſeems forgetful of all former benefits.

> Hence obſerve, When we want the mercies we would have, we grow angry with the mercies which we have had.

Dum ita agis mecum, fit ex beneficio tuo non beneficium. Ccc.

David ſpeaks it to the praiſe of God, Thou art he that tookeſt me out of my mothers womb (Pſal. 22.) Job ſpeaks it as a dammage to himſelf, Wherefore haſt thou brought me forth out of the womb?

> Secondly obſerve, We are ready to think we live to no end, if we have not our own ends.

That's the voice of nature, and ſo far as nature prevails in us, it ſpeaks in us.

> Thirdly, Man is apt to ſay, there is no reaſon for that, of which he ſeeth not the reaſon.

When we are at our wits end, and at our reaſons end, we think there is an end of all wiſdom and reaſon, as if neither God nor man could give an account beyond ours, or anſwer, when we are non-pluſt.

Yet we may conceive Job had a further ſence, which yields a more mollifying meaning of theſe words; for though he (as all the Saints in the Old Teſtament) was much in the dark about the benefit of ſufferings, which the Goſpel hath now more clearly revealed to us, and called us unto; yet he might have ſome other intendment in theſe expoſtulations: We may charitably ſuppoſe him troubled that he was in a condition of life, which (as he conceived) hindered the main end of his life, the glorifying of God; Wherefore haſt thou brought me forth out of the womb? As if he had ſaid, Lord, I am in a ſtate, wherein I know not how to honour thee, and then what is my life worth unto me? Thy juſtice is greatly obſcured towards me; many are ready to ſay, for my ſake, that ſurely thou art a hard Maſter, leaving them to reap evil who have ſowed good, and paying thy faithful and moſt active ſervants their wages in ſufferings. And as for mercy, I taſte little of that; comforts are dainties with me: my cup is bitter, my ſorrows are multiplyed: Now when neither juſtice nor mercy move viſibly towards me, how ſhall I glorifie thee? And wherein can my life be uſeful or advantagious to thee? Am I not like a broken veſſel, a veſſel wherein there is no pleaſure? Wherefore then was I brought forth out of the womb?

Nunc in me juſtitia tua obſcuratur, & ego non ſentio fructū gratiæ tuæ; quâ in re ergo gloriæ tuæ inſervire poteſt vita mea? Ccc.

This Expoſition teacheth us, That,

> A godly man thinks he liveth to no purpoſe, if he do not live to the praiſe and glory of God.

God hath made all things for himſelf, and it is the deſign of the Saints to be for him. While that end is attained they can eaſily part with all their own; and where that is croſſed, they cannot be pleaſed in the attainment of any of their own. The intereſt of Chriſt is not only their greateſt, but all their intereſt. Any ſtop of, much more a diſſervice to this, cauſeth an honeſt heart to cry out with Job, and ('tis eaſie to conceive) it cauſeth Job to cry out, Wherefore then haſt thou brought me forth out of the womb?

O that I had given up the Ghoſt, and no eye had ſeen me!

Facilem & ſine dolore mortem innuit.

O that I had given up the Ghoſt!] The original ſignifies uſually a gentle and an eaſie kind of death. Giving up the Ghoſt, is not a pulling or a violent rending of life away from us, but our laying it down, our ſurrender or willing reſignation of it. Some read this clauſe, not as we Optatively, O that I had given up the Ghoſt! but declaratively, Wherefore haſt thou brought me out of the womb? for then I had quickly given up the Ghoſt. But rather take it as a wiſh, O that I had given up the Ghoſt!

And no eye had ſeen me.] That is (ſay ſome) I would I had died before I had been born, for then no eye had ſeen me. Or more generally thus, O that I had died ſpeedily, ſo ſpeedily that I might have gone out of the world, before I was obſerved to have been there: Who delights to ſee the dead? Eſpecially a child dead-born, or dying as ſoon as born? Sarah was the delight of Abraham's eyes, whilſt ſhe lived, and yet aſſoon as ſhe was dead, he gives any money for a ſepulchre to bury her out of his ſight. Or again, Job that he might ſhew how little he regarded life, diſregards that which is moſt deſirable in life. Man naturally deſires, To ſee, and to be ſeen; to know, and to be known. That which carries a great part of the world, is an affectation to be pointed at, and taken notice of, as Som-bodies in the world. He that liveth unſeen in the world, is as a man out of the world, or as one buried alive. To be in priſon is a great puniſhment, becauſe a priſoner liveth out of view; he cannot freely ſee or be ſeen. Job wiſhes no eye had ſeen him, rather then his eyes ſhould have ſeen ſo much evil, or that others ſhould have ſeen him in the midſt of ſo many evils. Hence obſerve, Innatum eſt omnibus ut cognoſci ſe velint, & ſtudio teneantur res alias cognoſcendi.

> Firſt, That undue and unreaſonable queſtions, are uſually followed and fruited with undue and unreaſonable wiſhes.

Having put the queſtion, Wherefore haſt thou brought me forth out of the womb? See what a wiſh comes upon it, O that I had given up the Ghoſt, and no eye had ſeen me! He that takes undue liberty to ſpeak or do, knows not where he ſhall reſtrain himſelf. They who alwayes act as far as they may, ſhall often act beyond what they ought. And they who act at all beyond what they are directed, are often carried beyond what themſelves intended.

> Secondly obſerve, Man had rather not be ſeen at all, then to be ſeen miſerable.

To be ſeen, is a great part of the comfort of this life; but who would not gladly exchange it for eaſe in obſcurity? It is an honour to be ſeen, but who would be ſeen cloathed with diſhonour? When Chriſt is propheſied of, as the great pattern of patience and ſelf-denial, it's ſaid, He hid not his face from ſhame and ſpitting, Iſa. 50. 6. To be a ſpectacle of miſery, is to ſome worſe then their being miſerable. They would count it a piece of their happineſs, to be unhappy in a corner; and their troubles half removed, if they might ſteal their troubles. As to be in a good eſtate, and to know that we are ſo, makes our eſtate better to us: So to be in an ill eſtate, and to be known that we are ſo, makes it to ſome tempers a great deal worſe. As the hypocrite hopes when he ſins, that no eye ſees him: ſo many wiſh when they ſuffer, O that no eye had ſeen me!

Verſ. 19. I ſhould have been, as though I had not been, I ſhould have been carried from the womb to the grave.

Some read this verſe alſo as a wiſh; O that I had been, as though I had never been! O that I had been carried from the womb to the grave.

He confirms what he had ſaid, by a further declaration of his condition, in caſe he had not been brought forth out of the womb, or had died before he had been ſeen in the throng of the world; Why, what then Job? Then, I ſhould have been as though I had not been, and my afflictions ſhould never have had any being: ſo ſpeedy a death had quitted me of all the evils of my life. I ſhould not have ſipt or taſted, much leſs have drunk ſo deep of this cup of ſufferings. It is ſaid of Abortives who die in the womb, and of ſuch as die immediately after they are born, They are, and they are not; they who live but a moment in nature, ſhall live for ever. A life here leſs then a ſpan long, will be eternity long: yet as to the world, ſuch a life is no life, ſuch a being no being. Lawyers ſay, They who die before, or as ſoon as they are born, are reckoned as unborn; they make no change in ſtates, they never had a name, or an intereſt in the world, and ſo they go for nothing in the world. The Prophet Obadia (verſ. 16.) threatens Edom, That they ſhall be as though they had not been; that is, they muſt periſh, and their memorial with them. Some are ſo thruſt out of the world, that they ſhall be, as if they had never been; and ſome come into the world ſo, that their being was, as if they had never been.

Eſt & non eſt Octimeſtris partus, Hippocr.

Abortivus pro non nato cenſetur in jure.

A ſhort life is by common eſtimation no life.

As in heaven, where we ſhall live for ever, we ſhall be, as if we had ever been: So on earth, ſome live ſo little, that they are as if they never were: That which hath an eternal duration and ſhall never end, is as if it had ever begun; and that which is but of a ſhort duration and ends quickly, is as if it had never begun. The reaſon why the fruit of ſin goes for nothing, is, becauſe the pleaſure of ſin is but for a ſeaſon, and that a very little ſeaſon; What fruit have ye of thoſe things, whereof ye are now aſhamed? That is, Ye have no fruit, or your fruit was nothing: we may ſay of all the pleaſures of ſin, their cradle is their grave, or more near Job's language, they are carried from the womb to the grave. So he ſpeaks next of himſelf,

I ſhould have been carried from the womb to the grave.

I ſhould have paſſed without noiſe or notice. There would have been little trouble with me in the world, I ſhould have made but one journey, and that a ſhort one. The ſpeech is proverbial: From the womb to the grave, is the motto of Infant-death. The Septuagint read it as an expoſtulation; Wherefore was I not carried out from the womb to the grave? It would have been a happineſs to me, either not to have been at all, or to have had a being but equivalent (in common account) to a not being. And thus it had been with me, if my firſt ſtep out of my mothers womb, had been into the womb of that grand mother the earth. Job is often upon the ſame point, renewing his deſires after death: he did ſo (as hath been toucht) at the third Chapter, and at the ſixth, and now he is as fierce and freſh upon it as ever.

Proverbiale eſt, ab utero ad ſepulchrum, cum quis ſimulac natus eſt moritur.

A godly man may often diſcover the ſame infirmity.

Whilſt the ſame ſtock of corruption remains in us, it is productive of the ſame corrupt fruit. There is a ſeminal vertue in the earth, look how often it is plowed and ſowed, ſo often it ſends forth a crop; there is a ſeminal vertue in the earthly part of man, which makes him to put forth evil, as often as occaſion plows, and temptation ſoweth his heart.

Verſ. 20. Are not my dayes few? Ceaſe then, and let me alone, that I may take comfort a little.

Are not my dayes few?] There is a difference in the reading: Many tranſlators joyn the Verb Ceaſe, with this clauſe: ſo that whereas we read, Are not my dayes few? Ceaſe then, and let me alone; they read, Will not my few dayes ceaſe? Then let me alone that I may take comfort a little. Mr. Broughton, and he hath a ſecond, varieth yet further, Will not he leave off a little in my dayes? Inſtead of applying the word few unto dayes, Are not my dayes few? They (taking in the Verb) joyn it to the act of God, Will not he leave off a little in my dayes? That is, Will not God forbear a little to trouble me? Will not he give me a breathing time in my dayes, which are but few? Surely he will, he will not be ſo ſtrict with me, I doubt not of a gracious anſwer to this humble petition.

יחדל Primo adjungunt colo. Numquid non paucitas dierum mearum finiatur brevi? Vulg. An non pauci dies mei ceſſantes, ſc. deficientes? Targ. Annon pauliſper diebus meis ceſſabit? Jun.

But rather follow our ſence, and let the firſt clauſe be a queſtion, Are not my dayes few? And then the next words are an inference or uſe which he makes from it; Ceaſe then, and let me alone, &c.

Are not my dayes few?] The queſtion doth affirm, Yes, my dayes are few. The ſence may be made out one of theſe three wayes, and not unprofitably by all three.

Firſt thus, As a juſtification of his former wiſhes and deſires to die: Have I not upon good reaſon wiſhed that I had never lived? Who can be in love with a ſhort life, and a long trouble? Are not my dayes few? Or,

Secondly, As an anſwer to ſuch as objected againſt him for wiſhing he had not lived: Do you know (ſaid they) what you have ſaid? Is life ſuch a ſmall matter with you? Or, do you underſtand what you deſire, when you deſire death? Is deformed death become a beauty in your eye? What ever you think of it, life is a precious Jewel; Yes (ſaith Job) I know very well what life is, and I know if I had died before I was born, I had loſt much life; What's the life of a few dayes? The life of eternity is worth the having and eſteeming; but why ſhould you think I have wiſhed away a matter of moment, when I wiſhed away this life? For are not my dayes few?

Whence obſerve, The loſs of a whole life in the world, is no great loſs.

We cannot loſe a great deal, when all is but a little; nor many, when we have but a few in all. He looſeth but a few dayes, who dieth the firſt day; then, what have we got, when we have lived according to the calculation of nature, many dayes? Job makes this an argument to ſatisfie others about his wiſh, that all his dayes had been cut off. May not we ſatisfie our ſelves by it, when a piece, or a part, an end, the worſt end of our dayes is cut off? What if we have abated ten or twenty of thoſe years which poſſibly we might have lived? Twenty years are but a few dayes; for, a whole life, conſiſting of three twenties and ten, is but a few dayes. This we are ſure of, that the few dayes we loſe on earth, ſhall never be miſſed in heaven; it will be no abatement to our comfort there, to think we lived but a little here; all the ſorrows of this life will be ſwallowed up in the next, and ſo will our ſudden parting with this life.

Thirdly, The cleareſt ſence of theſe words [Are not my dayes few?] is, that they are the ground of a petition for the mitigation of his troubles; As if he had ſaid, Lord, I have but a while to live in the world, my dayes are few, therefore do not think much that I ſhould have a little comfort and refreſhing in theſe my dayes; Conſider my life is ſhort, O that thou wouldeſt ſlack thy hand, and yield me ſome eaſe and comfort in this ſhort life. He had uſed this argument at Chap. 7. verſ. 16. Let me alone, for my dayes are vanity; here, Let me alone, for my dayes are few. The fewneſs of our dayes is one of the vanities of our dayes.

Are not my dayes few?] The Hebrew is, Is not fewneſs of dayes mine? Yes, That's my portion. Abſtracts often encreaſe, and ſometimes they diminiſh the ſence. Here the ſence is diminutive; as if he had ſaid, My dayes are ſo far from many, that they are fewneſs it ſelf: Mine are not encreaſing and growing, but declining and abating dayes. My dayes are going down, they are brought into a leſſer and a narrower compaſs every day. The Chaldee renders, Are not my dayes ceaſing? My dayes fade and wear out every day; Shew me how ſhort my life is (cloſer to the Original) how ſoon ceaſing I am; or, as others, What, or of what quantity mine age is, how tranſient, how temporary I am.

Paucitas dierum, i. e. pauciſſimi dies. Abſtracta ſignificationem incitant & acuunt. מעט Imminutionem decrementumque ſignificat, q. d. nunquam creſcit, ſed decreſcit, & ad anguſtias majores indies reducitur, & in perpetua conſumptione evaneſcit. Bold.

Ceaſe then, and let me alone.] Some read it in the third perſon, Therefore let him ceaſe from me, and let me alone; we in the ſecond, Ceaſe then, and let me alone. Job looks upon himſelf as one beſieged and ſtraitned with afflictions: Now (ſaith he) I beſeech thee raiſe thy ſiege, and draw off thy force from me; or if thou wilt not make a final peace with me, yet grant me a ceſſation, let me have a truce for a limited time, let me not have ſuch continual Alarms, or be forced to ſtand armed continually; let me reſt, ſaith the Septuagint: Iſſachar ſtooped to burdens, becauſe he deſired reſt. Some are ſo burdened, that they cannot reſt, how much ſoever they deſire it. Job deſires God to give him reſt, becauſe his dayes were few.

ישית ממני Deponat à me, ſc. flagellum aut ſupplicium. Deponat exercitus ſuos procul à me. Jun.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, It is an argument moving the Lord to forbear ſending us many troubles, becauſe we have but few days.

Thus David prayes (Pſal. 89.47.) Remember how ſhort my time is; wherefore haſt thou made all men in vain? Lord, I have but a few dayes, and ſhall my dayes be nothing but clouds and darkneſs? The ſame argument is uſed, Pſal. 39. ult. O ſpare me, that I may recover ſtrength, before I go hence, and be no more. I ſhall ſoon be gone, let me have ſome eaſe while I ſtay here.

Secondly obſerve, That, Except the Lord withdraw his hand, nothing in the world can give us eaſe.

Ceaſe then, and let me alone that I may take comfort; as if he had ſaid, If thine hand be upon me, in vain do friends comfort me; creatures offer me their help in vain. Ceaſe then, and let me alone.

From the matter of his Argument, obſerve,

The Life of man is ſhort.

It is a common Theme, and every man thinks he can declaim upon it, and ſpeak to it; but there are very few can live to, or act by it. A multitude of inſtructions ariſe to us from the fewneſs of our dayes: And did men know indeed that their dayes are few, their evil deeds would not be ſo many, and their good would be more.

Again, That mans dayes are ſo few, yields us not only many inſtructions, but many wonders. Is it not ſtrange that we who have but a few dayes in our lives, ſhould have ſo many afflictions in our lives? That we ſhould have few dayes, and many ſorrows? Is it not ſtrange that we ſhould have few dayes in our lives, and many cares about our lives: Many cares and few dayes, yea, many cares upon one day? Thou art careful about many things, ſaith Chriſt to Martha. Is it not ſtrange that we ſhould have ſo few dayes, and ſo many ſins? Few dayes, and innumerable ſins; ſo many ſins as no man can number them, and ſo few dayes, that a Child may number them? And is not this a wonder above all the reſt, that we ſhould have but a few dayes, and yet be gravell'd and puzl'd ſo as we are in numbring them? A little humane learning will ſerve to number our dayes, but we need a great deal of ſpiritual learning to number them. A little ſtudy in the Mathematicks will do it, but we need more then ſtudy, experience in Divinity before we can do it, unleſs God himſelf be our Tutor; He only can teach us ſo to number our dayes that we may apply our hearts unto wiſdom. We ſhall commence fools at laſt, if we have not one wiſer then the wiſeſt upon earth, to teach us this truth.

That I may take comfort a little.] The word which we tranſlate to take comfort, ſignifies ſuch comfort as they find, who being heated extreamly, and extream thirſty, come to drink at a fountain of ſweet waters. The Vulgar readeth it, Let me alone that I may mourn a little; yet taking in the former ſence, he ſeems thus to explain himſelf; If the Lord would let me alone, I would go and eaſe my ſelf with complaining; the waters of my head, the fountain of mine eyes would be a refreſhing to my wearied ſoul. Sorrows are ſometimes joyous, and moderate mourning gives the mind a reviving.

But rather, Take it in the general, Let me alone that I may comfort my ſelf, and that theſe ſorrows may abate; I deſire to rally, and recollect my ſcattered thoughts a while, and ſo take in ſomewhat of the ſweetneſs of this life before I die. Ceaſe from me for ſome refreſhing (ſaith Mr. Broughton) I do not expect much, Lord, let me have ſome before I go whence I ſhall not return.

Si dolorem amovere non vult, reſpirandi locum aliquem & ſpatium concedat. Mer.

Here obſerve one common principle of Nature,

Man deſireth his own good.

A well-being as well as a being. What is there in life for Nature to prize, if there be nothing but ſorrow in it?

Secondly obſerve, That, Great ſufferings make us very modeſt in our demands.

Job was in great affliction, and now a little comfort would go a great way with him. When the people of Iſrael were in bondage under Pharaoh and task-maſters, and had heavier burdens laid upon them, they do not ſo much as move for a total releaſe from their task, but modeſtly complain, There is no ſtraw given unto thy ſervants, and they ſay to us, Make Brick; as if they had ſaid, Let us have ſtraw, and we are willing to make brick. A poor man cries out for a halfpeny, for a farthing, not for hundreds or thouſands. He that is ready to ſtarve, will not ask good chear, or a plentiful feaſt, but let me have a cruſt of bread, or a little water. When Dives was in hell, what did he deſire of Abraham? Did he beg to come into his boſom? Doth he ſay, Lazarus is in a good place, let me come too; No, he deſired but a drop of water; and what was a drop of water to flames of fire? O how would it delight the damned in hell to think of a ceſſation but for one hour from their pain! What a joy would it be unto them, if it ſhould be told them, that a thouſand or ten thouſand years hence they ſhould have one good day, or that they might be let alone to take comfort a little! They who are low, make low demands. Think of this, ye that enjoy much comfort, and ſwim in rivers of pleaſure. Let not the great conſolations of God be ſmall to you, when you hear Job thus inſtant and importunate for the ſmalleſt; Let me alone, that I may take comfort a little.

But why is he in ſuch haſte for a little comfort? One ground is, in the former words, My dayes are few; and he backs it with a ſecond in the next; If it come not quickly, it will come too late. I am ready to take my laſt journey, Therefore let me take a little comfort.

Verſe 21. Before I go whence I ſhall not return, even to the Land of darkneſs, and the ſhadow of death.

Before I go.] That is, before I die. Death is a going out of the world: Chriſt intimates his death under this notion (John 16.7.) If I go, the Comforter will come. And I go from you, &c. Dying is a journeying from one Region to another. Death is a changing of our place, though not of our company. Before I go. Whither?

Periphraſis moriendi, qui moritur dicitur abire; unde abitionem pro morte veteres uſurparunt. Dr.

Whence I ſhall not return.] That's a ſtrange journey indeed. That which pleaſeth us in our longeſt journeys while we live, is a hope of returning to our own homes again. But when we die, we take a journey from whence there is no returning. Not return? Shall not man return when he dieth? Is death an everlaſting departure, an eternal night? No, Man ſhall return, but he ſhall not return to ſuch a life or ſtate as he had before. He is gone for ever out of this world, and out of all worldly intereſts. Job believed a reſurrection or a returning from the grave by the power of God, and he knew there was no returning by the power of Nature, or by the help of any creature, in that reference, we go whence we ſhall not return. So David ſpeaks of his dead Infant, I ſhall go to him, but he ſhall not return to me, 2 Sam. 12.25. When once we are ſhut up in thoſe Chambers of death, and made priſoners in the grave, though all the Princes in the world ſend warrants for our releaſe, we cannot get releaſed. The pertinacy and ſtiffneſs of the grave is ſuch as yields to none. We are faſt ſhut up, when we are ſhut up there. Love and the grave will hardly part with that which they have cloſed with, and are poſſeſſed of. The grave is one of thoſe three things which are never ſatisfied, or ſay it is enough, Prov. 30.15.

Fidē reſurrectionis non lædit. Pin.

And as it is inſatiable in receiving, ſo it is as cloſe in keeping; it will part with nothing. A grave is the Parable of a covetous man, he is greedy to get, and watchful to hold; when his money goes into his purſe, he ſaith, it ſhall not return: The grave hath a ſtrong appetite to take down, and as ſtrong a ſtomack to digeſt. Till God (as I may ſo ſpeak) by his mighty power gives the grave a vomit, and makes the earth ſtomack-ſick with eating mans fleſh, it will not return one morſel. At the Reſurrection this great Eater ſhall caſt up all again. And as they who take ſtrong vomits, are put into a kind of trembling convulſion, all the powers of the body being ſhaken; ſuch will the Prognoſticks be of the Reſurrection; there was an Earthquake when Chriſt aroſe, God made the Earth ſhake, and commanded it to give back the priſoner, becauſe it was not poſſible that he ſhould be holden of it. And when God ſpeaks the word, it will not be poſſible for the grave to hold us priſoners: till then it will. It was uſual among the Ancients, to ſay of a dead friend, He is gone, and he will come again; intimating a Reſurrection. Heathens not knowing nor believing it, call death, An eternal leave-taking or farewel, never to meet again.

Veteres Romani dicere ſolebant, abiit & reverſurus eſt, reſurrectionem carnis haud obſcurè innuentes. Ter. Salve æternum mihi maximè Palla. Æternumq; vale. Virg. Æneid. Valeant qui inter nos diſſidium volunt. Ter.

Obſerve from this deſcription of the grave,

That, The ſtatutes of death are unrepealable.

Death is an everlaſting baniſhment from the world; I ſhall go whence I ſhall not return. This may lie very ſad upon their ſpirits, who have not a better place then the world to go to, when they go from the world: To go whence we ſhall never return, and yet where we cannot endure to be a moment, is deepeſt miſery: Such a man cannot chuſe but ſet out with a ſad heart. And that's the reaſon why wicked men, whoſe conſciences are awakened, go ſo unwillingly to this ſleep, they know whither they are going, only they know they cannot return. Make ye friends ('tis Chriſt's counſel) of the Mammon of unrighteouſneſs, that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlaſting habitations (Luk. 10. 9.) Mammon of unrighteouſneſs, that is, ſay moſt Interpreters, Mammon gotten unrighteouſly; but ſurely Chriſt would not teach any to make men our friends, by that which makes God our enemy. They tranſlate better, who render it, Make ye friends of the falſe or unfaithful Mammon, that is, of that Mammon which will deceive and leave you ſhortly; therefore make you friends of it while you have it; that when ye fail, that is, when ye die, or go out of the world, they may receive you, that is, ye may be received into everlaſting habitations: leave not this habitation till ye have got intereſt in a better. The Saints arm themſelves againſt death by this argument; We know that if our earthly houſe of this Tabernacle were diſſolved, we have a building of God, an houſe not made with hands, eternal in the heavens (2 Cor. 5. 1.) We know there is no return to buildings made with hands; we muſt leave our Houſes for ever, our Lands for ever, and our Relations for ever; but we are aſſured of a building of God, an houſe not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. This ſupported their hearts, when their earthly houſes were falling.

Animula blandula, &c. quæ nunc abibis in loca. Adr.

Job having thus deſcribed death it ſelf, proceeds to deſcribe the grave, which is the place of death, or the Black Hall of the King of Terrors. Would you know what this place is, from whence there is no returning? It is, ſaith he (in the cloſe of this Verſe) even the Land of darkneſs and the ſhadow of death. And in the laſt Verſe, Verſe 22. A Land of darkneſs, as darkneſs it ſelf, and of the ſhadow of death, without any order, and where the light is as darkneſs.

This is the place where death dwells, or the ſeat of death; and here's a deſcription of it, which exceeds the Fancy of Poets, and the Rhetorick of all Heathen Orators. The Spirit of God riſeth to the height of eloquence, in diſcovering that unpleaſant Region.

This ſubterranean Geography gives a double character of it. 1. A Land of darkneſs. 2. A Land of the ſhadow of death; both which are aggravated by their additions. It is a Land of darkneſs, but not of any ordinary darkneſs; It is a Land of darkneſs, as darkneſs it ſelf. It is a Land of the ſhadow of death, not of an ordinary ſhadow of death, but of the ſhadow of death, 1. Without any order. 2. Where the light is as darkneſs.

A Land of darkneſs.] That is, abounding with darkneſs, a Land where darkneſs is the ſtaple, and the only commodity to be had. Darkneſs is the hangings and ornament of the houſe of death. The grave is elſewhere called A Land of forgetfulneſs (Pſal. 88. 11.) Becauſe there all things are forgotten. We read (Jer. 12. 5.) of a Land of peace, that is a land where peace abounds, a land in every corner whereof peace ſprings and groweth up. Canaan (Deut. 8. 8.) was called A good land, a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths, that ſpring out of the valleys and hills, a land of wheat and barlie, and vines, and fig-trees, pomegranates; a land of oyl-olive, and of honey: That is, a land where theſe good things were natural and plentiful: A land where Neighbour-Nations might furniſh themſelves, and fraight their ſhips with thoſe commodities. In ſuch a ſence Job calls the grave a land of darkneſs; as if he had ſaid, Would you know what the merchandize of the grave is? I will tell you, it is darkneſs, there you may have darkneſs as much as you deſire, and beſides that, nothing, how much ſoever you deſire it.

Cum ſepulchrum dicitur terra tenebrarum, ibi tanquã in nativo ſolo obſcuritas intelligitur provenire.

This ſhews the terror of death to a meer natural underſtanding. Many are afraid to be at all in the dark, how much more to be alwayes in darkneſs: As light is put for joy, ſo darkneſs for ſorrow. Darkneſs, whether ſpiritual or natural, is afflictive. Dark houſes are unpleaſant, what then is a land of darkneſs? The face of a man is darkened with ſorrow, and joy is the light of it. It hath been obſerved that ſome Great Princes have had light beaming out from their eyes. Auguſtus had ſo ſparkling an eye, that few could look upon him; his eyes caſt forth rayes like the Sun, dazling the beholders. Good, gracious Princes caſt out beams of favour upon their people, which refreſh them as the light. Death and the grave have no light in their face. Death looks black and grim, Hell is extreameſt darkneſs, and the pains of hell are chains of darkneſs.

Suetonius in Auguſto. c. 79.

And the ſhadow of death.

There is more then the ſhadow of death in the grave, death it ſelf dwells there. The words ſound an abatement of the ſence, but indeed they heighten it. The ſhadow of death is thick darkneſs, thickeſt darkneſs, the very ſtrength of darkneſs. This ſhadow is the ſubſtance of death, or death with addition of greateſt deadlineſs.

Terra cujus palpebræ ſunt ſicut caligo umbrarum mortis. Targ.

Job having given the land this dreadful name, A land of darkneſs, and of the ſhadow of death, makes it yet more dreadful by this further explication.

A Land of darkneſs, as darkneſs it ſelf.] Or, A Land of darkneſs, which looks like darkneſs. The word ſignifies wearineſs, reſtleſneſs, and vexation of ſpirit. To be in a dark condition, is to be in a weariſom condition. The Vulgar reads it, A Land of miſery. Some darkneſs hath a degree of light mingled with it, but this is pure or unmixed darkneſs, darkneſs in its proper hue, darkneſs it ſelf. When a man of skill acts skilfully, we ſay, he acts like himſelf; and when a wicked man doth very wickedly, we ſay, he doth like himſelf. The darkneſs of the grave looks like nothing but it ſelf.

Every evil the more like it is to it ſelf, the worſe it is. When the Apoſtle would ſhew ſin in its colours, he calleth it ſinful ſin (Rom. 7. 12.) Sin by the Commandment became exceeding ſinful; the commandment cauſed it to look like it ſelf. Sorrowful ſorrow, and painful pain are the worſt of pains and ſorrows. There is ſorrow which may conſiſt with ſome joy, and pain, which may cohabit with ſome eaſe; but he that hath ſorrow like ſorrow it ſelf, and pain like pain it ſelf, hath the extremity of both. Thus alſo every good, the more like it is to it ſelf, the better it is; holineſs like it ſelf, is the pureſt holineſs; grace like it ſelf, is the ſweeteſt grace. When a holy man works like himſelf, his work is beſt. God is ever like himſelf in all he doth; and every thing we do, is then beſt, when it is done moſt like to what God doth.

And of the ſhadow of death, without any order; or,
The ſhadow of death, and not orders.

The word which we tranſlate order, is frequent in the Rabbins; the holy Text hath it only in this place, and here, in the plural number, A Land of darkneſs, and the ſhadow of death, and without any orders, a land unordered. There's no government, no method in the grave And if it hath no order, then it hath nothing in it but confuſion, nothing but but diſorder. That the grave, or the ſtate of death is without any order, may be underſtood two wayes.

Hebræi ad vices diei & noctis, æſtatis & hyemis, &c. referunt. Expertem viciſſitudinum. Jun.

Firſt, Without order, becauſe it hath no changes, or viciſſitudes in it, there is no difference in the grave between night and day, Winter and Summer, hot and cold, wet and dry, between the riſing and ſetting of the Sun: This is the order which God hath ſet in Nature; and when the flood had put all things into a kind of confuſion, God promiſed, That ſeed time and harveſt, and cold and heat, ſummer and winter, day and night ſhould not ceaſe; that is, there ſhould be an everlaſting order continued in the creature. The dead know none of thoſe changes and viciſſitudes; as much of the vanity, ſo ſome of the comforts of this life conſiſt in changes; but all is alike in death.

Secondly, There is no order in going to the grave; men do not keep to a rule in dying, nor obſerve their ranks. The old go not always firſt, and then the young; the great before, and the mean following after. Death hath no maſter of the Ceremonies; but takes promiſcuouſly, here a child, and there a man; here a rich man, and there a beggar. And as there is no order in going thither, ſo none when we are there; the grave mingleth the duſt, and bones of one with another. We cannot diſtinguiſh the rich mans duſt from the duſt of the poor, nor the bones of Kings from thoſe of the loweſt ſubject. Though rich men are buried in more eminent places, and Kings under ſtately Monuments, though their Tombs differ from their inferiors, yet their bones do not. An old Philoſopher was obſerved ſearching a Cæmitery, and prying buſily among the Tombs, and being asked, what he looked for, anſwered, I come to ſee if I can find the duſt of rich men, and the bones of Princes, but I cannot ſee which is which; the duſt of the rich and of the poor, of Princes and peaſants, are all alike to my eye.

And ſeeing Job makes this an aggravation of the miſery of death that it is without order; We may obſerve,

That order hath an excellency, and a beauty in it.

The leſs order there is in any place or State, the worſe it is; and where is no order, there it is worſt of all. Civil order is the beauty of Common-wealths, and ſpiritual order is the beauty of the Church. The Apoſtle rejoyced to behold the order of the Coloſſians, as well as their faith, (Col. 2. 5.) His charge to the Corinthians is, Let all things be done decently and in order (1 Cor. 14. 40.) He had warned them (verſ. 33.) to take heed of diſorder, becauſe God is not the God of confuſion, but of peace. Where order is not kept, the peace cannot be kept. Death is evil, and that's without order; hell is worſt of all, and there is no order at all. It is a kind of death to ſee any diſorder, and a very hell to ſee all in diſorder.

חפע à radice יפע Floruit, ſplenduit, fulgorem & magnificentiam exercuit. Tenebreſcit, ſicut caligo. Mon. Quod in ea ſplendidiſſimum eſt, caligini ſimile eſt.

And where the light is as darkneſs.] Some read by the Verb, where it ſhineth like darkneſs, or thus, where it lighteth like darkneſs. The Vulgar paraphraſes rather then tranſlates, Where there is everlaſting horror. Job ſaid before, it was a land of darkneſs, and like darkneſs it ſelf: yet now he ſeemeth to affirm, that there is light in the grave: and if there be, how is that darkneſs like darkneſs it ſelf? His meaning is, that which looks moſt like to light in the grave, is darkneſs; and it is therefore darkneſs like darkneſs it ſelf, becauſe if you can imagine any thing to have a ſhew of light in the grave, that very light is as darkneſs. When the Apoſtle would invincibly argue the infinite wiſdom and ſtrength of God, he ſaith, The fooliſhneſs of God is wiſer then men, and the weakneſs of God is ſtronger then men (1 Cor. 1. 25.) God is only wiſe, only ſtrong; how then ſpeaks this Apoſtle of the fooliſhneſs or weakneſs of God? His meaning is, look what act ſoever of God appears to man, as having fooliſhneſs or weakneſs in it, even that fooliſhneſs is wiſer, and that weakneſs ſtronger then men. In what ſence Paul ſaith, The fooliſhneſs of God is wiſdom, the weakneſs of God is ſtrength, or (which is all one) the darkneſs of God is light; in the ſame Job ſaith, The light of the grave is darkneſs. For as God is wiſdom, and in him there is no fooliſhneſs at all; ſtrength, and in him there is no weakneſs at all; light, and in him there is no darkneſs at all: So Job ſuppoſeth of the grave, that in it there is darkneſs, and no light at all, while he affirms, the light found there is as darkneſs. Chriſt ſpeaks near this language of Job (Matth. 6. 23.) If therefore the light that is in thee be darkneſs, how great is that darkneſs! He had ſaid before, The light of the body is the eye; and if the eye be ſingle, the whole body is light; that is, if a man have right aims and pure ends, theſe will keep him right in all his courſe; but if his eye be dark, his ends baſe, how baſe will his actions be, how great his darkneſs? We may argue thus to the point in hand, if the light of the grave be darkneſs, how great is that darkneſs? The Prophet Amos ſets forth great changes in States and Kingdoms by prodigious changes in the Air, Lo, he makes the morning darkneſs, Chap. 4. 15. Again, He turneth the ſhadow of death into the morning, and maketh the day dark with night, Chap. 5. 8.

When either civil or moral good is turned into evil, we are paſt all hope of good; if once our light be dark, we muſt expect nothing but darkneſs. The beſt works of hypocrites will be found wickedneſs; how wicked then will they be in their worſt? If their holineſs be unclean, how unclean is their unholineſs? All their moral light is as darkneſs, and all their civil light ſhall be turned into darkneſs.

Some (eſpecially Popiſh) Interpreters underſtand this deſcription, not of the grave, but of hell. The ſame word in the Hebrew ſerves both hell and the grave. Death looks like hell, and bears much of it's image. What is there in hell, but the agonies and ſweat of death, the pangs and paleneſs of death, the chains and bonds of death? The ſtate of the damned in hell, is an eternal act of dying: And all that Job ſpeaks of the grave, is fulfilled there to the utmoſt. There is darkneſs, like darkneſs it ſelf, called therefore utter darkneſs; there is the ſhadow of death without any order, there the light is as darkneſs. But though the Text be true of hell, yet Job had nothing to do or ſuffer beyond the grave, and I ſhall carry his diſcourſe no further, keeping within thoſe confines: We may learn,

That death in it ſelf is no way deſirable.

Noſtri theologizantes ad infernũ referunt, ſed Job ad ſepulchrum reſpexit. Merc.

Is there any beauty in darkneſs, in thick darkneſs, where there is no order, in darkneſs, where the very light is darkneſs? One of the greateſt plagues upon Egypt, was three dayes darkneſs; what then is there in death (naturally conſidered) but a plague, ſeeing it is perpetual darkneſs?

If death be ſuch in it ſelf, and ſuch to thoſe who die in ſin, how ſhould our hearts be raiſed up in thankfulneſs to Chriſt, who hath put other terms upon death and the grave by dying for our ſins! Chriſt hath made the grave look like a heaven to his. Chriſt hath aboliſhed death, not death it ſelf (for even believers die) but all the trouble and terror of death, the darkneſs and the diſorder of it, are taken away. Chriſt hath mortified death, killed death, ſo that now death is not ſo much an opening of the door of the grave, as it is an opening of the door of heaven. Chriſt, who is the Sun of righteouſneſs, lay in the grave, and hath left perpetual beams of light there for his purchaſed people. The way to the grave is very dark, but Chriſt hath ſet up lights for us, or cauſed light to ſhine into the way. Chriſt hath put death into a method, yea Chriſt hath put death into a kind of life, or he hath put life into death of believers. All the gaſtlineſs, horror, yea the darkneſs and death of death is removed. The Saints may look upon the grave as a land of light, like light it ſelf; yea as a land of life, like life it ſelf, where there is nothing but order, and where the darkneſs is as light.

Job's reply to Bildad and complaints to God have carried his diſcourſe as far as death and the grave, he gives over in a dark diſordered place; God ſtill leaving him under much darkneſs, and many diſorders of ſpirit. As his great afflictions are yet continued, ſo his weakneſſes continue too. His graces break forth many times, and ſometimes his corruption: Both are coming to a further diſcovery, while his third friend Zophar takes up the bucklers, and renews the battel: upon what terms he engages with Job, how Job acquits himſelf, and comes off from that engagement, is the ſum of the four ſucceeding Chapters.

AN
WITH Practical Obſervations
UPON THE ELEVENTH, TWELFTH,
THIRTEENTH, AND FOURTEENTH,
CHAPTERS
Of the Book of
JOB.

To the CHRISTIAN READER; To thoſe chiefly of this City, who have been the movers, and continue the promoters of this Work.

I*N this Fourth Part I preſent you with* Job's third Diſpute: Eliphaz and Bildad having given their judgment upon his Caſe, Zophar undertakes him: How he mannaged his Arguments, and what anſwer he received, are (according to the meaſure of received light) diſcovered in this expoſitory Diſcourſe; I ſhall here only (by way of preface) propoſe a queſtion, and offer my apprehenſions towards the reſolution of it.

Whether Job and his friends, who were the interlocutors at this conference, ſpake (as the holy Prophets and other penmen of the holy Scriptures did) by inſpiration of God, 1 Tim. 3.16. or, as they were moved by the holy Ghoſt, 2 Pet. 1. 21.

That the Book of Job is a part (as the Apoſtle phraſeth it, Rom. 15.4.) of thoſe things which were written aforetime for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures, might have hope, is teſtified not only by the divine grandeur and majeſty of the ſtile, together with the intrinſecal excellency and efficacy of the matter, (in both which it declares it ſelf a glorious beam of his wiſdome, who is light and the father of lights) but alſo by the concurrent Teſtimony of, not a few, other Scriptures.

For, as the Hiſtory of it (that ſuch a man was) hath a full Prophetical teſtimony by Ezekiel (ch. 14. 14.) and an Apoſtolical one by S. James (ch. 5. 11.) Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have ſeen the end of the Lord: So the authentity and authority of it is clearly aſſerted by S. Paul, calling in and aſſociating the teſtimony of this Book with David's Pſalms, to that great Truth, that, The wiſdom of this world is fooliſhneſs with God.

For, Though it doth not argue a Book purely divine, becauſe ſome ſentence of it is quoted in Scripture (for ſo the Books of Aratus, Menander and Epimenides, Heathen Poets are) yet ſuch a manner of quotation as the Book of Job is honoured with, is an undoubted argument of it. While Paul quotes the writings of the Heathen, he ſlights thoſe Heathen writers, with, As certain alſo of your own Poets have ſaid; for we are alſo his offſpring, Act. 17.28. And again, One of themſelves, even a Prophet of their own, ſaid, The Cretians are alwayes liars, evil beaſts, ſlow-bellies, Tit. 1.12. He makes uſe of what another of them ſaid, without ſaying any thing at all of him, Evil communications corrupt good manners (1 Cor. 15.33.) But when he cites this Book, he doth it in the ſame form wherein moſt of the Books of the Old Teſtament are cited in the New, giving his citation the value of a reaſon, in reference to the point he was upon, with an emphatical cauſal particle, For it is written, he taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs, 1 Cor. 3. 19. Which are the words of Eliphaz, Job 5. 13. Now, as when God took the firſt-fruits, he conſecrated and ſanctified the whole kind of which thoſe firſt-fruits were a part; ſo where he takes any part of a Book as an authoritative Scripture-proof, he confirms that whole Book for Scripture.

And as this Book is there authoritatively cited by the Apoſtle Paul, ſo divers ſentences and branches of it are tranſplanted and engrafted by the penmen of other Scriptures into the body of thoſe Scriptures which God appointed and called them to pen. Pſal. 8.5. & 144.3. Lord, what is man, that thou takeſt knowledge of him, or the ſon of man, that thou makeſt account of him? are fully the ſame in ſence, and near the ſame in the letter with that of Job 7. 17. And the compariſon of man to a ſhadow (Pſal. 144. 4.) ſeems to be tranſcribed from the words of Bildad, chap. 8.8. That alſo of Pſ. 107. 4. He powreth contempt upon Princes, and cauſeth them to wander in a wilderneſs where there is no way, fell firſt from the mouth of Job, chap. 12.21,24. And the words of v.42. of the ſame Pſalm, The righteous ſhall ſee it and rejoyce, and iniquity ſhall ſtop her mouth, were ſpoken by Eliphaz, Job 5.16. & 22.19. The like obſervations may be made between Lev. 26.5. & Job 11. 19. between Deut. 10.17. & Job 34.19. between Pſ. 7.15. & Iſa 59. 15. compared with Job 15. 35. Now, as the calling out of ſome one ſentence of this Book for a Scripture-proof, ſo the frequent mixing of the language and phraſe of it in the Scripture, is a convincing argument that the whole Book is of God.

But doth not Job charge his friends as forgers of lies? chap. 13.4. If they were ſo indeed, how can we aſſert their diſcourſes for divine truths? For no lie is of the truth, 1 Joh. 2. 21. If they were not, how can we aſſert the diſcourſe of Job for truth, who was thus miſtaken? I anſwer, Firſt, Job ſpake rather paſſionately then poſitively.

Secondly, The lies he charged them with, were not erroneous aſſertions againſt the truth, but unkind aſperſions (flowing from a zeal for God) upon his perſon.

Thirdly, Job doth not charge his friends with lies ſtrictly taken, as if they had knowingly ſpoken any thing which was falſe, or as if they had ſpoken at any time purpoſely to enſnare him: his friends ſuppoſed and were confident that they ſpake truth not only in it ſelf (as indeed they did) but alſo to his ſtate, and their aim was to inſtruct or reclaim him, not to enſnare or entangle him by what they had ſpoken.

Laſtly, They ſpake no doctrinal untruths, though ſome of their applications were (as to this caſe) untrue.

And thus even the Apoſtles themſelves did fail ſometimes; for as Jobs friends applied their Doctrine to a Saint, as if he had been an hypocrite, ſo did they in their Epiſtolical writings apply their Doctrines to ſome hypocrites, as if they had been Saints.

But doth not God himſelf in the concluſion and determination of this diſpute, ſay expreſly to Eliphaz the Temanite, My wrath is kindled againſt thee, and againſt thy two friends, for ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, as my ſervant Job hath (ch. 42.7.) If they did not ſpeak right of God, how then were they taught of God what to ſpeak? I anſwer, Firſt, Some expound thoſe words (as the letter alſo ſeems to carry it) comparatively, not as if they had not ſpoken right of God, but not ſo right as Job had.

Secondly, That which they ſpake of God in his Nature, Properties and Works, was all right, only they had not ſpoken right of God about the intendment of his works and diſpenſations towards Job; they did not hit the meaning of God in that ſo clearly as God did; though (I conceive) Job himſelf was much in the dark about that point too, as Elihu laboured to convince him

To the CHRISTIAN READER.

It may be again objected, That Job and his three friends oppoſe each other, and maintain different opinions, how then can all be true? Muſt not one ſide be out, he or they? I anſwer,

Firſt, Job and his friends did agree in many points (as was ſhewed in the Preface to the ſecond part of theſe Expoſitions) and all thoſe principles wherein they agreed, are the undoubted truths of God. I know it to be ſo of a truth (ſaith he, ch. 9. 2.) And again, My eye hath ſeen all this, and mine ear hath heard and underſtood it, chap. 13. 1. In both theſe paſſages Job votes with his friends, and ſeals to the truth of many things which they had ſpoken; as if he had ſaid, Though I cannot agree with you in all, yet I will agree as far as I can: In theſe points you and I have no quarrel.

Secondly, Where they diſagreed, the difference was not thus wide, that his friends maintained an errour, and he a truth; but only thus, he maintained more truth, or truth more clearly then they did. They taught truth in all they ſpake, but not all the truth: As for inſtance, That, God afflicts for ſin, or, that ſin is the cauſe of affliction, is a truth, but not all the truth; or, not abſolutely and univerſally true; for ſome afflictions are not ſent for chaſtening and correction, but meerly for trial and probation: Again, they teach, that, God doth ſeverely puniſh wicked men in this life. This is true, but not univerſally and abſolutely true; for, as ſome godly men are troubled, ſo ſome wicked men proſper all their dayes.

Thirdly, Though the opinion which Job's friends held in oppoſition to him, was not throughout ſound and orthodox, yet their way of expreſſing it was. Remember, I pray thee (ſaith Eliphaz, c. 4. 7.) Who ever periſhed being innocent? or, where were the righteous cut off? Here Job oppoſed him, c. 9. 22. This is one thing, therefore I ſaid it, he deſtroyeth the perfect and the wicked. Eliphaz guided by the experience of Gods uſual adminiſtrations in thoſe times, held, that God doth not greatly afflict (for that he means by periſhing and cutting off) any godly man in this life. This was his miſtake; yet the words with which this Opinion is cloathed, contain a clear truth; and being an appeal to experience (Remember I pray thee) are very parallel to that of David(Pſ. 37. 25.) I have been young, and now am old, yet have I not ſeen the righteous forſaken, nor his ſeed begging bread.

Fourthly, Job's friends ſpake truth in theſi, or in the poſition all along, they only fail'd in hypotheſi, or in the application: yea, all their applications and inferences might have fitted ſome men in ſuch an outward condition as they ſaw Job in, but they did not fit Job, becauſe his inward condition was not ſuch as they cenſured it to be; and God left them under thoſe miſapprehenſions of his inward condition for the promoting of his own holy deſign in the full trial of Job's patience, while his friends wounded him deeper by theſe continual reflections upon his ſpiritual condition, then Satan or the Sabeans did by the breaches and irruptions they made upon his outward condition.

But doth it not abate the divine authority of this Book, if any thing in it be unduly ſtated and applied?

The Scripture reports many things, even of thoſe who wrote or ſpoke it hiſtorically, which are againſt the Scripture doctrinally. All that Moſes ſpake, was not right; for he once ſpake unadviſedly with his lips (Pſ. 106. 33.) And ſo did David, when he ſaid in his heart all men are liars, Pſ. 116. 11. And again (Pſ. 73. 13.) Verily I have cleanſed my heart in vain, and waſhed my hands in innocency. The Prophet Jeremy doth not only write a curſe upon his birth-day, but he curſes the man who brought tidings to his Father, ſaying, a man-child is born (Jer. 20. 14, 15.) Jonah prayed, take my life from me, when he ſaw that God ſpared the lives of the Ninevites: he was alſo angry for the death of a gourd, and ſaid, I do well to be angry even unto death (Jon. 4. 3, 9.) Theſe things are written in Scripture for our caution, not for our imitation; and they are diſcoveries, not of the wiſdom and holineſs of God, but of the folly and ſinfulneſs of man. Some ſuch ſad diſcoveries Job made in this Book, and ſome ſuch his friends made. ¶ But if ſome paſſages in this Book diſcover the weakneſs and miſtakes of the ſpeakers, how can we raiſe Doctrines and Obſervations from them? ¶ Every ſpeech and paſſage which the infinite wiſdom of God hath thought fit to put into this or any other Book of Scripture, hath in it ſomewhat for our inſtruction. That blaſphemy of the fool, which contradicts not only the truth, but the very being of God (Pſ. 14 1.) The fool hath ſaid in his heart there is no God, teacheth us this divine truth, that there are ſeven (that is, all manner of) abominations in the heart of man. We may draw uſeful inſtructions from the words of Judas the traytor, after Satan had entred into him, and filled his heart; yea, from the words of Satan in his temptations and propoſals unto Chriſt; much more may we from the ſayings of holy men, which are true for the matter (as all the ſayings of Job and his friends are) though there be a failing in the manner of ſpeaking, or in their references to a particular caſe. ¶ Nor is it unſafe to affirm, that even ſuch ſayings are from the inſpiration of God, which have an infallible truth in them, though they who ſaid ſo, did not underſtand them ſo. When the chief Prieſts and Phariſees ſate in Council, and debated the deſtruction of Chriſt the Saviour of the world, fearing the Romans would deſtroy them, and take away both their name and nation, Caiphas, who was high Prieſt that ſame year, ſaid unto them, ye know nothing at all, nor conſider that it is expedient that one man die for the people, and that the whole Nation periſh not, Joh. 11. 49, 50. This was wicked and bloody counſel, according to his intendment and meaning in giving it (for we muſt not condemn the innocent, though but one man, upon politick reſpects to preſerve the greateſt multitude or a whole Nation of men) yet there was a great truth of God in it, even the ſum and ſubſtance of the whole Goſpel; for it was not only expedient, but alſo neceſſary, that one man (Jeſus Chriſt the only Son of God) ſhould be put to death, that the whole Nation of the Jews, and all the Gentile Nations might not periſh eternally. Thus the Evangeliſt explains the cruel advice of Caiphas, in the next words v. 51, 52. This he ſpake not of himſelf but being high-Prieſt that year, he propheſied that Chriſt ſhould die for that Nation, and not for that Nation only, but that alſo he ſhould gather together in one the children of God that were ſcattered abroad. This ſence was far from the heart of Caiphas, though the words which bear it were uttered with his tongue. And thus if we (in ſome places) paſs by the particular meaning of the ſpeakers, and keep to the general meaning of what is ſpoken, we may make a ſavoury and an edifying conſtruction of every paſſage in this Book; in which, as there are abundance of holy truths, and as it were, a compendium both of Law and Goſpel, ſo (upon this account) there is no one ſentence in oppoſing any one truth contained and held forth in either. And therefore from all theſe premiſes I conclude the queſtion firſt propoſed affirmatively, That Job and his friends ſpake by the inſpiration of God, or as they were moved by the Holy Ghoſt.

I ſhall not entertain the Reader any longer at the Door or in the Entry of the Book; but commending this brief exercitation with the following expoſitions to the bleſſing of God, for a fruitful improvement of theſe and all other helps, which his gracious bounty continues or renews upon us for the furtherance of our faith and knowledge in, and of our obedience to the whole myſtery of his will revealed in his Word, I ſubſcribe my ſelf,

March 20. 1648.

Your affectionate Friend to love and ſerve you in the Lord,
JOSEPH CARYL.

AN
WITH Practical Obſervations
UPON THE
ELEVENTH, TWELFTH, THIRTEENTH AND FOURTEENTH CHAPTERS
Of the Book of
JOB.

CHAP. 11. Verſ. 1, 2, 3.

Then anſwered Zophar the Naamathite, and ſaid,
Should not the multitude of words be anſwered? and ſhould a man full of talk be juſtified?
Should thy lies make men hold their peace? and when thou mockeſt, ſhall no man make thee aſhamed?

IOB hath already ſtood two charges; the firſt from Eliphaz, the ſecond from Bildad. Here a third begins.

Then anſwered Zophar the Naamathite, and ſaid.

Sophar ſonat idem quod ſpeculator, & Naamathites pulchrun & jucundum. Greg.Phil.

Who Zophar was, hath been ſhewed at the eleventh verſe of the ſecond Chapter. His name Zophar imports a Watchman, and his additional title Naamathite, pleaſant or beautiful in the Original.

The matter of his anſwer may be conſidered;

Firſt, In the Preface,

Secondly, In the body of it.

The exordium or preface is contained in the three firſt verſes. The body of his anſwer in the following parts of the Chapter: wherein three things are cleare;

Firſt, A general propoſition, containing the matter in debate, or the poſition which Zophar puts upon Job, as his, and takes upon himſelf to confute, as erroneous. This he layes down in the fourth verſe, Thou haſt ſaid, My doctrine is pure, and I am clean in thine eyes.

Secondly, We have the confutation of this poſition enlarged, from the 5. verſ. to the 12.

Thirdly, Zophar having ſhewed Job his errour, and, as he hoped, convinced him of it, proceeds to give him counſel, and cloſeth the Chapter with inſtruction. He inſiſteth in the ſame method, and treads the ſame path that Eliphaz and Bildad had done before; firſt, chiding and reproving Job, then counſelling and adviſing him.

Zophars preface preſents us with a three-fold neceſſity, engaging him to this reply.

Quòd verboſus ad fucandam malam cauſam.

Firſt, From that multitude of words which Job had already heaped together for the colouring (as he judged it) of a bad cauſe, verſ. 2. Should not the multitude of words be anſwered? and ſhould a man full of talk be juſtified? Is it not high time that I ſhould ſpeak a little, when thou haſt had time to ſpeak ſo much?

Quòd mendax ad obſtinatè tuendam malam cauſam.

Secondly, He argues this neceſſity from the falſity of what Job had ſpoken, in the firſt clauſe of the third verſe, Should thy lies make men hold their peace? It is thy ſin, that thou haſt ſpoken lies; and it would be mine, if I ſhould not ſpeak againſt them.

Quòd irriſor ad contemnendas veras admonitiones illudendumq; Deo & hominibus.

Thirdly, From the ſcorn and levity of ſpirit, which Zophar ſuppoſed he ſaw frothing at the lips of Job, When thou mockeſt, ſhall no man make thee aſhamed? It were the ſhame of all men, if none ſhould. Thou art ſitting in the ſcorners chair, Shall I be afraid to raiſe thee up, or pull thee down?

So then, The preface may be formed up into this Argument;

Many words, and thoſe full of lies and ſcorn, muſt be undertaken and anſwered; no man can or ought to hold his peace, when he heareth ſuch diſcourſes:
But thy anſwer is full of words, and as full of lies and ſcorn;
Therefore I muſt undertake thee, I muſt anſwer.

Thus Zophar preſſeth upon his friend with violence, if not with virulence and ſourneſs of ſpirit: handling him more roughly, and pouring more gall and vineger into his wounds, then his former Antagoniſts had done. As his ſpirit grew warmer, ſo did his words; and in heat of arguing, he comes very near unto reviling.

Verſ. 2. Should not the multitude of words be anſwered?

The multitude of words] Zophar taxeth Job, as overcopious in language, as a man given to talk, and affecting to hear himſelf ſpeak. Eloquence of ſpeech, or elocution, is an excellent gift of God; but verboſity, and a love to flow out continually at the tongue, is the vanity of man; at once, a ſin in the ſpeaker, and a burden to the hearers. Paul was taxed for this at Athens, Act.17. The Athenians were the great wits of the world, maſters of eloquence; and when Paul came amongſt them, they encountred him, and ſome ſaid, What will this babler, this ſower of words ſay? verſ.18. So ſome give the notation of the Greek word, though others, with better reaſon, take it, as an alluſion to little birds, which pick up the ſeed ſown, and being of no great uſe, either for meat or muſick, are yet troubleſome enough with unceſſant, immelodious chirpings. Such an one thoſe Philoſophers cenſured Paul, This man ſpeaks many words, but he makes no muſick, no ear is taken with him, nor underſtanding enriched by him. Though all we ſpeak is in words, yet we muſt ſpeak more then words.

σπερμολόγος vel ἀπὸ τοῦ σπείρειν τοὺς λόγους, vel potius, παρὰ τὸ λέγειν, σπέρματα, quaſi ſeminilegas dicas, quod ſata in agris depaſcantur, metaphora ab aviculis ſumpta, quæ neq; magnopere ſunt eſui, neq; cantu delectant, ſed garritu perpetuo ſunt moleſtæ. Beza.

I ſhall lay down five particulars, whereby we may diſcern, when a multitude of words are ſinful, or when there is a multitude of ſins in a multitude of words: It is poſſible to ſpeak many words, and all few enough, and no ſin at all in them. They are ſinful,

1. When words are unprofitable, light, vain, frothy, words that have no nouriſhment in them: for as meat is to the palate, ſo are words to the ear, to the underſtanding. Words are the bread of the mind. Some words are nothing but wind, there's no food, no tack in them; you cannot pick one good bit out of a whole diſcourſe. He that hath ſpoken one ſuch word hath ſpoken too many: how much more when a multitude of them are ſpoken together? As it ſhews the nobleneſs of action, to do what is worthy to be ſpoken of, ſo of elocution to ſpeak what is worthy to be done.

Secondly, When words are beſide the matter, beſide the buſineſs in hand; when we ſhoot out arrows not eying the mark, arrow after arrow, and all from the mark, this is reprovable. If we ſpeak not to the point, we ſpeak to no purpoſe. Be clear to that, and the feweſt words, will make the fulleſt anſwer. Be off from that, and many words make not a word of anſwer.

Thirdly, When there is but a little matter in a great many words, when plenty of words have a ſcarcity, a dearth of matter in them. Some contract (as it were) the ſpirits of a point into a few words, and can give you much in a little, a large matter in a narrow compaſs. This is an excellent skill, though not alwayes fit: becauſe all are not able to apprehend what is couched and drawn up ſo cloſe together; all are not able to drink ſpirits, but muſt have them infuſed into, and incorporated with larger diſcourſes, and particular demonſtrations; they muſt have line upon line, and precept upon precept, that is a multitude of lines and precepts. Yet matterleſs words are reprovable, how many ſoever they be, and the more they be, the more reprovable they are, Shall not ſuch a multitude of words be reproved?

Fourthly, A multitude of words are ſinful, when they are affected; when a man delights to ſpeak much. A man may be that to himſelf, which Ezekiel was to his hearers, as a very lovely ſong of one that hath a pleaſant voice, and can play well on an inſtrument (*Ezek.*33.32.) Such will ſpeak often and long, not that they care to profit others, but for their own applauſe, or to pleaſe themſelves.

Fifthly, And laſtly, When we think to carry it by the multitude of words: 1. In reference unto man, to ſpeak a man or his cauſe down, to over-bear him with a croud or throng of words. Or ſecondly, in reference unto God (Eccl. 5.2.) Be not haſty to utter a thing before God, or concerning God, Why? For God is in heaven, and thou upon earth, therefore let thy words be few. There is an infinite diſtance between God and man. We are not able to comprehend, Who, or what God is; we cannot reach God, and therefore we ſhould be very careful and deliberate in ſpeaking to and of God, or about the things of God. The Apoſtle (*Rom.*8.31.) having ſet forth the great myſtery of the love of God to us in Chriſt, concludeth (as ſome conceive) like an Orator, What ſhall we ſay then to theſe things? As if he had ſaid, Here is a ſubject about which much might be ſaid, but we had need be very careful how and what we ſay about it, What ſhall we ſay to theſe things? No man, no not the tongue of an Angel is ſufficient to deliver and unfold theſe ſecrets: ſuch love, ſuch goodneſs are beyond words. The Moraliſt hath a grave and ſerious paſſage to this purpoſe, while he was falling upon a diſcourſe about the heavens, ſtars, and ſuperiour motions. When we enter into our Temples, we compoſe our ſelves to reverence; we look even to our garments, that they ſit comely about us; we (as it were) faſhion and ſhape every member into an argument of modeſty. How much more ſhould we do this, when we come to ſpeak of the ſtars, and heavens, but moſt of all, when we ſpeak of the nature of the gods, (The beſt Heathen Catechiſms ſpeak no better) Leſt we ſpeak any thing raſhly, or affirm any thing that is untrue. If an Heathen was thus taken up with the thought of heavenly bodies, and ſtrucken with a reverential awe, when he was to ſpeak about Idol-gods, how much more ought we to come to the Apoſtles ſtand, about the Divine things of the great and only wiſe God? What ſhall we ſay to theſe things? It is good for us to avoid a multitude of words in all things, eſpecially in things which are ſo high, ſo much above us. The Apoſtle admoniſheth (1 *Tim.*6.20.) Avoid prophane and vain bablings; There may be profane and vain bablings about holy and ſacred things: And that not only when we argue about them, but when we pray about them.

Cum in cælo Deus ſit, i.e. longiſſime à nobis, de divinis rebus ignorari neceſſe eſt. Hier. in loc.

In omne argumentum modeſtiæ fingimur.

This exceſs Chriſt reproveth in the prayer of the Phariſees, Mat. 6. 4. They think they ſhall be heard for their much ſpeaking, and that they muſt prevail with God for the things they deſire, becauſe they utter many words to maniſeſt their deſires. Thus to uſe many words in prayer is babling, not praying: And thus to uſe many words in preaching, is the uncomelineſs, if not the ſinfulneſs of preaching.

Paul, Acts 20. preached until midnight. There was a multitude of words, yet not too many words; his diſcourſe had not one of theſe evil ingredients; he did not ſpeak unprofitable things, or things beſide the matter, or a little matter in many words; he did not ſpeak, becauſe he affected to ſpeak, or becauſe he thought to carry it by ſpeaking. Thus, to pray long, or to preach long, is no fault: The greateſt multitude of ſuch words, is not one too many.

The Vulgar varieth from our reading, Shall not he that ſpeaketh much hear alſo? The Original will bear it: As if he had ſaid, Thou haſt ſpoken a great while, wilt thou not have the patience to hear thy friend? Wilt thou have all the talk thy ſelf? Thou haſt uttered a multitude of words, be content to receive a few. They who have ſpoken, ſhould be willing to hear and receive an anſwer. Much ſpeaking is then moſt offenſive, when we will not take our turns to hear. Some will have all the diſcourſe, all the argument themſelves, and when they have ſpoken long, will hardly endure another to reply a little. See how God hath diſpoſed the organs of the body: he hath given two ears, and but one tongue, which ſpeaks thus much, That a man ſhould be more ready to hear, then to ſpeak; and that's the Apoſtle James his rule, Chap. 1. 19. Let every man be ſwift to hear, and ſlow to ſpeak: not that he doth poſitively commend ſlowneſs of ſpeech, that is not his meaning; heavineſs of ſpeech is no vertue, nor any mans commendation: but he ſpeaks comparatively, Be ſwift to hear, and ſlow to ſpeak; that is, Be ye more nimble with your ears, then with your tongues; be rather willing to receive inſtruction, then forward to give it, rather attend the mind of others, then open your own. There is a time to keep ſilence, and a time to ſpeak, Eccleſ. 3.7. Every thing is comely in its ſeaſon.

Obſerve, From the whole reaſon, That

It is a duty to anſwer, when much hath been ſpoken.

Eſpecially, when we conceive any thing ſpoken againſt the truth. Solomons ſeeming contradiction aſſerts this duty, Prov. 26.4, 5. Anſwer not a fool according to his folly, leſt thou alſo be like unto him. Anſwer a fool according to his folly, leſt he be wiſe in his own conceit. One rule ſaith, Anſwer him not; and the other ſaith, Anſwer him. The meaning is plain to the point in hand; Anſwer not a fool according to his folly, leſt thou alſo be like unto him, that is, if he ſpeak fooliſhly and paſſionately, do not thou anſwer him paſſionately and fooliſhly too, for then thou ſhalt be as fooliſh as he, thou ſhalt be like or equal to him, as if thy ſpirit and his were caſt in the ſame mould. For the anſwer which a man giveth another is the meaſure of himſelf, the image of our minds is drawn with the tongue. But anſwer a fool according to his folly, leſt he be wiſe in his own conceit, that is, If he have ſpoken fooliſhly, do thou anſwer him wiſely and diſcreetly; let thine anſwer be according to his folly, but in thine own wiſdom. Thus to anſwer a fool according to his folly, is indeed to anſwer him contrary to his folly. Thus he muſt be anſwered, or elſe he is not anſwered: and if he have no anſwer, he will think that he is unanſwerable; that, all is oracle which he hath uttered, he will grow into proud and high conceits of himſelf, that ſurely he is a conquerour and invincible, becauſe no man takes up the bucklers, or appears in the field againſt him. Therefore anſwer him, Leſt he (whom all that know him, know to be a fool) be wiſe in his own conceit. Should not the multitude of words be anſwered?

And ſhould a man full of talk be juſtified?

This latter branch is of the ſame ſtrain with the former, and what I have obſerved there anſwers both, yet I ſhall open the letter of the Text, and ſhew the elegancy of the Original.

Should a man full of talk?] The Hebrew is, A man of lips. Mr. Broughton tranſlates it, Shall the lips-man be juſtified? He ſpeaks of Job, as if he were compoſed and made all of lips. When a man uſeth one member inordinately, he may be ſaid to have but one member. Denomination is given from that which is moſt, or acts moſt. Thus as he that is a great fighter, is called, A man of his hands: ſo he that is a great talker, is called, A man of the tongue, or a man of lips: as if he laid by the uſe of all the other parts of his body to imploy his lips, or were active only with his tongue. The Apoſtle ſpeaking of the variety of Church-members, under the notion of a natural body, ſubjoyns (1 Cor. 12.17.) If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the ſmelling? In like manner if the whole were lip and tongue, where were the eye, where the ear? As we may be ſaid not to have that which we uſe not; ſo to have only that, which we uſe too much.

Or ſecondly, The lips being a ſpecial inſtrument of ſpeech, and a help to pronunciation, are here put for ſpeech it ſelf, and ſo we explain it in our tranſlation, Should a man full of talk? A man of lips, is a man full of talk. And there is a natural reaſon for it too. As Phyſiognomiſts gather conjectures from the frame of the whole body, from the lines and lineaments of the face about the habits and diſpoſitions of the mind; So they draw arguments from the lips, whether a man be quick or ſlow of ſpeech. Some mens lips have a ſtamp of talkativeneſs upon them, and others of ſilence. Thus we may underſtand that of Moſes (Exod. 6.12.) When God was about to ſend him to Pharaoh, about the deliverance of Iſrael out of Egypt, he made many excuſes, and at laſt falls upon this, How ſhall Pharaoh hear me that am of uncircumciſed lips? But was Moſes of uncircumciſed lips? as to be of an uncircumciſed heart, ſo to be of uncircumciſed lips may intimate ſpiritual pollution and uncleanneſs. When the Prophet Iſaiah cried out at the viſion of the glory of God, Woe is me, I am a man of unclean lips (Iſa. 6.5.) it is, as if he had ſaid, I am a man of uncircumciſed lips. But though Moſes was humble enough in the acknowledgement of his own ſinfulneſs, yet his aim was to note the unfiledneſs of his ſpeech, not the defiledneſs of his nature. For as among the Jews, uncircumciſion was a ſign of all the natural uncleanneſſes of the ſoul, ſo of ſome imperfections upon, or belonging to the body. Thus Moſes called himſelf a man of uncircumciſed lips, becauſe he was not eloquent, but ſlow of ſpeech, and ſlow of tongue, (Exod. 4.10.) He was (according to the letter of the Hebrew) heavy-mouthed, or as we ſay, meal-mouthed; and this according to that idiom was to be of uncircumciſed lips, as if Moſes had pleaded thus, I have not a polite and curious language to win upon Pharaoh, My tongue has not been pared and ſmoothed for the Court-dialect, I that have kept ſheep ſo long, and have converſed with clowns and ſhepherds, How ſhall I ſpeak to a King? Pharaoh uſeth to have accurate Oratours about him, men of lips, but I am none. So then, according to this ſecond ſenſe, a man of lips is an eloquent man, a man ready, very ready and apt to ſpeak; a man whoſe tongue is the pen, that is, like the pen of a ready writer.

Si labium valdè deductum ſit, atq; etiam tenue loquacitatis atq; eloquentiæ ſignum eſt, ſicut etiam craſſiora labia loquendi ineptiam & difficultatem indicant.

Craſſiora habeo labia; quam ut coram rege expeditè & facundè loqui poſſim: circumciſione, i.e. extenuatione & expolitione labiorum indigeo. Pined.

Further, when Zophar calls Job a man of lips, he implyeth, That Job had carried himſelf in that diſputation, as if every member of his body had been a lip, or as if he had a lip in every member, that is, as if every member had ſpoken. According to that of Solomon, (Prov. 6.13.) He ſpeaketh with his feet, he teacheth with his fingers; his carriage, his poſture, his action, ſpeak and proclaim what is in his heart, or what his mind is, He ſpeaketh with his feet. When violent and paſſionate perſons are ſpeaking, you ſhall ſee, as it were, a lip in their feet, a lip upon their hands, a lip in their eyes, a lip in their brows, a lip in their arms, that is, they ſpeak with all theſe, they move their hands at you, and their heads at you, and their eyes at you, as if all ſpake. Theſe are men of lips.

Toti veluti linguæ ſunt; oculis, naſo; fronte, ore, manibus, cubitis, pedibus colloquuntur. Bold.

Should a man of lips be juſtified?] He ſpeaks not of that great work of grace, the juſtification of a ſinner before God; to be juſtified here is to be approved, to carry the cauſe, or prevail in arguing. He that prevaileth in any controverſie ſhould be juſtified: But ſhall a man of lips be juſtified? Muſt he needs be thought to ſpeak truth, becauſe he ſpeaks much, or in greateſt weight becauſe in greateſt number, Shall he be juſtified? We have the word in that ſenſe (Pſa. 51.4.) I will confeſs, &c. that thou mighteſt be juſtified, when thou ſpeakeſt, and be clear when thou judgeſt: That, when thou ſhalt judge and pronounce ſentence upon me, thou mayeſt appear in the opinion and eſteem of all the world to have done me right, or not to have wronged me at all; I aforehand confeſs my ſin, and condemn my ſelf. So we may interpret that (Job 13.18.) Behold now, I have ordered my cauſe, I know that I ſhall be juſtified, that is, I have laid my matters ſo well, and put my buſineſs into ſuch a fair ſtate, that I know I ſhall come off with credit, I know I ſhall be juſtified. And this is it which Zophar ſeems eſpecially to charge Job with, That he hoped to get the Garland, and beat all down before him with his lips, with the multitude of his words; as if he had ſaid, Thou haſt placed thy defence in windy words, and not in ſubſtantial truths; but this noiſe, this talk will ſtand thee in little ſtead, thou ſhalt find that the day will not be won with words.

Vincet cauſa, ut neceſſario habeatur veridicus quia multiloquus? Janſen.

Hence obſerve,

Good words cannot make a bad cauſe good.

Words ſometimes makes a good cauſe appear bad, and a bad cauſe appear good; but when the rubbiſh maliciouſly or ignorantly caſt upon the one, and the varniſh cunningly laid upon the other, are taken off, both will appear as they are, the one as good as it is, and the other as bad as it is.

Plerumq; pro differentium viribus & eloquentiæ poteſtate etiam perſpicuæ veritatis conditio mutatur. Min. Octavio.

Again, Shall a man of words be juſtified? He that ſpeaks much may ſooner enſnare then clear himſelf. In many words there are uſually many errours. Silence ſeldom brings repentance; and it is but ſeldom that much ſpeaking calls not for much repentance. They that ſpeak much, are in danger to offend much. To be ſure, He that hath nothing but words to hold him up, muſt needs fall. You cannot blow away, either a mans aſſertion or objection with your breath, but with your reaſon and authority.

In multiloquio non deeſt peccatum

Verſ. 3. Should thy lies make men hold their peace? and when thou mockeſt ſhall no man make thee aſhamed?

Zophar riſeth higher in language ſtill, reproving Job, not only for the multitude, but for the falſeneſs of his words.

בדא Significat aliquid ſeorſim aſſingere, machinari, cogitare, educere mendacium è cogitatione ad os. Rab. Mardoch. Objicit illi vitium, quod Græci λογοποιΐαν, i.e. Famigerationem vocant, quod eſt falſa fingere, & aliis narrare. Plautus vocat hos Geruli-figulos; Ammianus Marcel. Rumi-gerilos. We call ſuch Talebearers. Peſſimum genus hominum qui verba geſtarent. Sen. epiſt. 123. Montanus reddit Baddim, Nugatores: Galli appellant Nugatores Badins & Badaux.

Should thy lies?] The Hebrew word is of a large extent, ſignifying in the verb, to frame, faſhion, and form a thing out of a mans own mind; and ſo Zophar would faſten this upon Job, That the words which he had ſpoken were only ſhap't and wrought in his own ſpirit, he had received no ſuch thing from God, no ſuch thing was ever approved by God; the birth of all was but his own fleeting fancie, and ſickly imagination. So the word is uſed (*Nehem.*6.8.) There are no ſuch things done, as thou ſayeſt, but thou feigneſt them out of thine own heart; Thou wouldeſt put me in fear, and bear me in hand (ſaith that worthy of Iſrael to his enemy ſuborning falſe fears againſt him) that there are ſtrange plots laid, and many adverſaries combined againſt me: but I perceive it is thy plot to tell me of a plot. Thy information is but to make me afraid of that which is not, not to ſecure me from that which is. We read of the moneth which Jeroboam had deviſed of his own heart (1 Kings 12. 33.) It is the word of the Text. Lies are framed and faſhioned out of our own hearts, there is the ſhop wherein they are wrought. The heart is deceitful above all things; A deceitful heart is a fit ſhop to frame lies in, which are deceitful ware. Such Zophar ſuppoſed Jobs to be.

Secondly, Some read, Should thy toyes, thy trifling diſcourſes make men hold their peace? Should thy tatling, thy idle tales impoſe ſilence upon thy hearers?

בד Eſt admodum generale nomen apud Hebræos, ramum, membram, cogitationem ſignificans, quod cogitationes in animæ ſunt tanquam rami in arbore, huc illuc protenſi. Merc.

Thirdly, The word ſignifies the members of the body, and the boughs of a tree, and by a trope the thoughts and abilities of the mind, which are to the mind, as limbs to the body, and as boughs ſhooting from a tree. I will not conceal his parts, ſaith God of Leviathan, Job 41. 12. that is, What mighty members he is made up of. Some read the word ſo here, Should thy parts be conceal'd, or, Should men hold their peace at thy parts? As if he had ſaid, Thou thinkeſt that thou haſt mighty parts, that, thou putteſt ſuch Leviathan-like members, ſuch Goliah-like limbs of wit and knowledge, of judgement and eloquence, that all the hoſt of learned men needs muſt be afraid and tremble to deal with thee, or accept thy challenge. The weapons of the mind are more powerful, and ſometimes more terrible then the members of the body. An ignorant or ſlow-witted man, is no more able to argue with one that is quick and judicious, then a child is able to wreſtle with a Giant.

But the word is moſt uſually taken in the ſenſe we render it, for lies or falſhoods; So (*Iſa.*44.25.) He fruſtrateth the tokens of the liars, namely, of thoſe that tell lies of the ſtars, and ſay, The conſtellations have reported events to them, of which indeed there is not a letter written, nor a word to be ſpelled out of thoſe heavenly characters. Should thy lies make men hold their peace?

מתים Aliquando denotat viros notabiles & inſignes. Coc.

Make men.] The word may be limited to great and wiſe men, Should thy lies make wiſe men hold their peace? So ſome reſtrain it here; As if Zophar had ſaid, Indeed thy lies may cauſe ignorant men to hold their peace, they may deceive the ſimple, and catch the weak; but ſhould thy lies make men of parts and abilities, men of experience and underſtanding hold their peace? Thus the word is uſed (Deut. 2. 34. Pſal. 17. 14. Iſa. 3. 24.) to note illuſtrious and wiſe men, men of more then an ordinary pitch and meaſure in dignity, or in wiſdom.

מתים Eſt generale comprehendens viros, mulieres & parvulos. Hæc vox (à מות mors) exorta videtur, quod omnes ſimus morti ſubjecti, ita à Græcis βρότος, & à latinis mortalis uſurpatur. Mar.

Others take the word indifferently for any rank or ſort of men, one or other: or as we commonly ſpeak, for any mortal man. For it cometh from a root which ſignifies death, which is the laſt debt of all mankind; as the Greeks have a word for man in general noting his mortality, ſo have the Hebrews: becauſe all men carry about them the enſigns or ſymptoms of death continually, therefore they are called Mortals. So here, Should thy lies make any mortal man, or any man alive hold his peace? Be he high or low, knowing or ignorant, I tell thee the moſt ſimple man that goes upon the ground cannot hold his peace, when thou ſpeakeſt, and may well enough anſwer all that thou haſt ſpoken. Thus you ſee the ſenſe is heightned by the lowneſs of the perſons, who are ſuppoſed match enough for Job in this controverſie. What thou haſt argued, a woman, even the weakeſt among women, a child, even a little child, may confute and anſwer. We need not ſend for the great Rabbies and Doctors of the Law to deal with thee. Who can be ſilent, or ſpeak without ſucceſs? Should thy lies make men hold their peace?

Hold their peace?] No, They ſhould not: Should what thou haſt ſpoken falſly be received like an oracle of truth, againſt which no man may open his mouth or mutter? Should it be received as ſome Divine Revelation which all muſt admire, none queſtion? Muſt all the world of reaſonable men ſtand mute at theſe thy reaſonings? Haſt thou any hope that thy lies ſhall find ſuch entertainment, and go off at ſuch a rate of belief or admiration?

Holding the peace importeth greateſt reverence both to ſpeakers and actours, as alſo greateſt worth or weight in what is ſpoken or done. When the Lord ſlew the two ſons of Aaron by fire from heaven, Aaron held his peace, in token of ſubmiſſion, Levit. 10. 3.

הס Quam vocem Hieronymus interjectionem eſſe docet imperantis ſilentium. Vel eſt imperativum per apocopen ab הסה tacuit reverentiæ cauſa. Buxt.

And when providential actings ſpake aloud the deliverance of the Jews out of Babylon, the Prophet like a crier in a court, commands or proclaims ſilence (*Zech.*2.13.) Be ſilent, O all fleſh, before the Lord, for he is raiſed up out of his holy habitation. The Hebrew word Has (ſaith one of the Ancients) is an interjection, or rather a verb of the imperative mood, enjoyning ſilence or inhibiting ſpeech: we in our language uſe a word near that in ſound, when we would have any, or all, hold their peace, we ſay, Huſht: So ſaith the Prophet, Huſht, not a word, For the Lord is raiſed up out of his holy habitation; his meaning is, Yield all reverence, reſpect and fear, ſtand in awe, budge not, let the wicked ſilence their vain boaſts, and the godly their vain fears: Let neither the one or the other utter a word before the Lord.

Job deſcribing himſelf in his former flouriſhing eſtate, ſaith, Unto me men gave ear and waited, and kept ſilence at my counſel; after my words they ſpake not again (Chap. 29. 21.) that is, I was a man of ſo much authority and veneration, that when I ſpake, no man would offer to ſpeak after me, much leſs contradict what I had ſpoken; Thus it was once with Job: Now Zophar puts it as a matter of reproof. What? doſt thou think thy words, yea thy lies ſuch, as no man may examine, much leſs gain-ſay? Should thy lies make men hold their peace?

Again, As holding the peace, notes reverence, ſo favour and connivence. When we are willing to let an ill word ſpoken, or a thing ill done paſs, as if we ſaw or heard it not, we hold our peace at it. When the children of Belial ſaid of Saul, How ſhall this man ſave us? and they deſpiſed him, and brought him no preſents, the Text ſaith, But he held his peace, He was as if he had been deaf, 1 Sam. 10. 27. It is wiſdom not to ſee or hear, what we are not in a condition to redreſs. Connivence is better then complaint, when we cannot mend our ſelves, nor reduce others. In this ſenſe we may alſo take, Holding the peace here. Should any man favour or wink at thee? Should any man be afraid to ſpeak truth, when thou ſpeakeſt lies? Hence obſerve, Firſt thus, It is a duty to vindicate, or to be an advocate for oppreſſed truth.

Zophar ſpake true in the general, Lies muſt not make us hold our peace. It is a duty to plead the cauſe of truth, yea to be valiant for the truth. We muſt know no relations in truths caſe. Socrates is my friend, Plato is my friend, but truth is a better friend then both. Whoſoever dares ſpeak againſt truth, we muſt dare to ſpeak for it. 'Tis noble to ſhew our ſelves friends to truth, though we loſe friends by it; and enemies to errour, though we get enemies by it. There is a three-fold lie which we muſt not hold our peace at.

Firſt, There is a verbal lie, when a man tells a falſe tale, or bringeth up a falſe report, which is the lie of the ninth Commandment, Thou ſhalt not bear falſe witneſs: Hold not thy peace at ſuch a lie.

Secondly, There is a doctrinal lie, when a falſe poſition is averred to be the truth of God, and ſtampt with divine authority. Any erroneous Doctrine is comprehended under, and branded with this title, A lie; For this cauſe (ſaith Paul) namely, becauſe they received not the love of the truth, God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſion, that they ſhall believe a lie, (2 Theſſ. 2. 11.) He means a doctrinal lie, all the doctrine of that man of ſin, with which he hath deceived the world under the notion of truth, is but one great lie. We muſt contend earneſtly, even wreſtle for the faith once committed to the Saints againſt all thoſe lies.

Thirdly, There is a practical lie, of which the Apoſtle ſpeaks (1 Joh. 2. 4, 5.) He that ſaith, I know him, and keepeth not his Commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. This is a lie, not ſpoken, but done, when a mans actions contradict his profeſſion, or when his works unteach what he hath taught by word. The whole life of an hypocrite is but one continued lie. The firſt of theſe is a lie told, the ſecond is a lie taught, the third is a lie acted; and all of them are not only to be abhorred in our ſelves, but oppoſed in others. All lying is hateful to God, being moſt oppoſite unto God, who is the true God, and the God of truth. Lying makes us like the Devil, who was a liar as well as a murtherer from the beginning; the Devil told the firſt falſe tale, and preached the firſt falſe Doctrine; he is therefore juſtly called, A liar from the beginning. We may ſometimes forbear to ſpeak the truth, but we muſt never forbear to ſpeak againſt a lie, whether verbal, doctrinal, or practical. Should thy lies make men hold their peace?

And when thou mockeſt, ſhall no man make thee aſhamed?

This is the third charge, and it is higher then the former two: Multitude of words is ill enough; and lies are far worſe; but to mock is worſt of all. And which is yet more, The word which is here uſed ſignifieth the worſt kind of mocking, even that which is joyned with ſcorn and extream deriſion: it notes mocking not only with the tongue by uncomely ſpeeches, but mocking by the eye or hand with uncivil geſtures, or by the affected mimical poſtures of the whole body. The enemies of Chriſt are ſo deſcribed in that noble propheſie (Pſalm 22. 6.) I am a worm and no man, a reproach of men, and deſpiſed of the people; all they that ſee me laugh me to ſcorn, they ſhoot out the lip, they ſhake the head. The event fulfilled this at the death of Chriſt, Matth. 27. Such mocking Zophar chargeth Job with; thou doſt not only ſpeak lies, but thou ſetteſt them off with ſcornful geſtures.

Again, This word ſignifieth not only a light jeaſt, or a merriment, but that which hath virulency, and wears a ſting; not only that which hath ridiculouſneſs in it, but that which hath cruelty in it. That's the Apoſtles Epithete (Heb. 11. 36.) They had trials of cruel mockings.

Thus he reproves Job, as if while he lay in the duſt, and was groveling on the ground, he had like a mad man caſt fire-brands, arrows and death; or had behaved himſelf more like a fool in a play, then a mirror of patience; Deceiving his neighbour, and ſaying, Am not I in ſport? Prov. 26. 18, 19.

There is much labour among Interpreters, to find out what gave Zophar occaſion to break out in ſo much bitterneſs upon Job. I ſhall touch that in the cloſe. When thou mockeſt, Shall no man make thee aſhamed?] Some render, Shall no man confute thee? We may put both together. Shall no man by confuting thee put thee to ſhame? When a confident man is thorowly anſwered, he is aſhamed.

כלם Ignominioſo pudore ſuffundor gravius ſignificat quam בוש quod eſt in bonum aliquando, hoc ſemper in malum. R. D. Kimchi. Buxtorf. Significat eum qui conſcientia turpitudinis hominum oculos fugit, ut profligati milites, qui ſine Ovatione, taciti & clanculo redeunt Domum. Coc.

The word which we tranſlate, Make aſhamed, ſignifies the greateſt ſhame, as that before did the greateſt mocking. Higheſt ſhame is but a fit reward for higheſt ſcorn. Some Criticks in that language have obſerved, that the word is never taken, but in an ill ſence, for the moſt ſhameful ſhame, when a perſon is ſo aſhamed that he is confounded, and dares not lift up his head, or look another in the face. The Lord ſaith to Moſes in the caſe of Miriam, If her Father had but ſpit in her face, ſhould ſhe not be aſhamed ſeven dayes? (Numb. 12. 14.) The face is the table of beauty and honour; but when it is ſpit upon, it is made a ſink of ſhame. God did more then ſpit in the face of his undutiful Daughter Miriam, when he filled her face with the filthy ſpots of leproſie: Miriam muſt be greatly aſhamed, when ſhut out of the Camp and ſociety of Iſrael ſeven dayes. When David, over-paſſionately lamenting the death of Abſalom, blemiſhed the victory of that day, and ſoiled the beauty of that great deliverance; the Text ſaith (2 Sam. 19. 3.) that the Souldiery went home, as men aſhamed? Souldiers after a battel won are wont to come home gallantly, and in a triumph; but theſe victors gat them by ſtealth that day into the City, as people being aſhamed ſteal away when they flee in battel; they went ſneaking, as we ſay, home to their dwellings, ſcarce a man durſt lift up his head. Such a ſence is here intended, ſhouldſt not thou be made to hold down thy head, and cover thy face for ſhame, who haſt opened thy mouth in ſcorn, and in diſcovering thy own ſhame? Note from it, Firſt, Scornful geſtures and mockings are the height of ſinnings.

Zophar put this in the third place, as the higheſt ſtep in the gradation of Job's ſin. There is a walking in the counſel of the ungodly, and a ſtanding in the way of ſinners, before we ſit down in the chair of the ſcorners (Pſal. 1. 1.) The Vulgar reads it, In the chair of the malignants. When men once arrive at ſcorning and mocking, they are come to the uppermoſt form of ſinners. The chair of mocking, is the chair of malignity. That which is ſaid of a woman in a peculiar ſence, is true of any man in this ſence, When he hath loſt his modeſty, he hath nothing elſe to loſe. The Apoſtle Peter being about to ſhew the utmoſt evil of the worlds old-age or dotage in ſin, ſaith, There ſhall come in the laſt dayes ſcoffers (2 Pet. 3. 3.) There have ever been deceivers, but at laſt there ſhall come ſcoffers, ſaying, Where is the promiſe of his coming? For ſince the Fathers fell aſleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation. Julian was in his time counted, and ſtands upon record to this day among the greateſt of ſinners, An apoſtate from Chriſt; and did not the apoſtaſie of his heart break out chiefly at his lips? Did not the very ſpirit of malignity againſt the Goſpel of Chriſt, appear in mocking the Chriſtians? When he had taken away their eſtates, he ſaid, It ſhould not trouble you to be poor, your Maſter was poor, and he ſaid, Bleſſed are the poor. And when he had cauſed them to be ſmitten, Your Maſter (ſaith he) hath taught you, That whoſoever ſhall ſmite you on the right cheek, you muſt turn to him the other alſo. Thus he turned the holy counſels of Chriſt into prophane jeſts. The vileſt wickedneſs of the Jewiſh ſtate is expreſt thus, They mocked the meſſengers of God, and miſuſed the Prophets (2 Chron. 36. 16.) It is a great ſin not to hear the meſſengers of God, not to obey the truth that is brought in his name; but to mock his meſſengers is the dregs of ſin. When upon the aſcent of Chriſt into Heaven, many had received ſuch abundant inundation of the Spirit, That they ſpake with divers tongues the wonderful works of God; Some (ſaith the Text) were in doubt, ſaying one to another, what meaneth this? Others mocking, ſaid, Theſe men are full of new wine, (Act. 2. 13.) Others mocking, &c. Mockers muſt ſtand by themſelves, they are marked for wrath: We may warn all ſuch, as the Prophet doth (Iſa. 28. 22.) Now therefore be ye not mockers, leſt your bands be made ſtrong. If God make the bands of affliction and wrath ſtrong upon any, it will be upon mockers. They break the ſtrongeſt bands of duty, therefore their bands of miſery ſhall be ſtronger then they can break.

Reditus eccleſiis eripuit Sarcaſmis additis, ſe Chriſtianos expeditiores facere ad regnum cœlorum, quia Galilæus magiſter ipſorum dixerit, beatos eſſe pauperes, &c. Pezel. in Sleid.

Secondly, Obſerve, We ſhould not forbear to own, no not a mockt and a derided truth.

Chriſt will be aſhamed of that man, who ſhall be aſhamed of him, and of his words, in an adulterous and ſinful generation. When truth is honoured and applauded, it is eaſie to own it, but it is our greateſt honour to own a diſhonoured and a deſpiſed truth.

Thirdly, Mockers ſhould be put to ſhame.

Yea, Mockers ſhall be put to ſhame. They who caſt ſhame upon the truth, ſhall have ſhame caſt upon themſelves, they ſhall be buried in ſhame. They that lift up their heads againſt Chriſt, againſt the people and wayes of Chriſt, ſhall be made to hold down their heads, to hold them down for ever. When thou mockeſt, ſhall no man make thee aſhamed? If man do not, God will.

It is here enquired, why Zophar imputes theſe three faults. Firſt, Multiloquy. Secondly, Lying. Thirdly, and mocking unto Job. What occaſion had this poor man given for this accuſation?

For the firſt, nothing appears but this, which comes to nothing: Job ſpake a little more then his friend Eliphaz, and not much more then Bildad. The diſcourſe of Bildad is contained in one ſhort Chapter; Job lengthened out his anſwer in two, except this will make it out (which muſt be very poorly) I ſee not how he over-acted with his tongue, or failed in ſpeaking too much.

For the ſecond, Some faſten Zophars ſuſpition of a lie upon that in Chap. 10. verſ. 7. Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked. As if he had obtruded that upon the knowledge of God, which was not, and therefore was not to be known.

Thirdly, He is judged mocking at Chap. 10. verſ. 3. Is it good unto thee that thou ſhouldeſt oppreſs, that thou ſhouldeſt deſpiſe the work of thine hands, and ſhine upon the counſel of the wicked? But beſides theſe conjectures, Zophar himſelf gives the reaſon expreſly in the next words, For, Thou haſt ſaid, My doctrine is pure, and I am clean in thine eyes: As if he had ſaid, If thou thinkeſt that I charge thee unjuſtly, in ſaying that thou haſt ſcattered lies, and art a mocker; I will tell thee plainly, what renders thee guilty in my thoughts, Thou haſt ſaid, My doctrine is pure, and I am clean in his ſight. But how ſlender a foundation this poſition yields, to ſupport ſo heavy a charge (were it Job's (in terminis) in down-right words, which yet hath not appeared) I ſhall clear in the opening of thoſe words. But before I come ſo far, take two or three Obſervations, upon the Preface in general, as it contains this three-fold accuſation already opened.

Firſt, That it is no new thing for him that ſpeaks truth to be counted a lier, nor for him that ſpeaks ſeriouſly to be counted a mocker.

It was ſo with Job, There were ſome ſlips of paſſion in Job, but no error in his opinion, and yet he is called a lier; poor Job who lay upon the dunghil full of ſores, and bodily diſtempers, full of ſorrow and inward temptations, had little leiſure to mock and jear, his very wounds might ſpeak his denial of ſuch behaviour; yet he is judged a mocker. The Apoſtles were ſometimes counted mad men, beſides themſelves, and out of their wits; ſometimes cunning and crafty men, who went about to out-wit others. Paul is put to his plea in that common caſe (2 Cor. 6. 4.) as deceivers, yet true; we are lookt upon as a company of Mountebanks, as if our deſign were to cheat the people at once, of their purſes, and of their ſouls: We are eſteemed deceivers, as if we were hired to cry up an Impoſtor, rather then a Saviour, and to fill the world with fables, rather then ſollid truths; but truth of underſtanding is the commodity we deal in, and we deal in it with truth of heart. Again (2 Cor. 2. 17.) We are not as many, which corrupt the word of God. Even they who received the Word by immediate revelation, were ſuſpected of corrupting the Word, of mixing and mingling it with their own inventions, to ſerve turns, or to make it comply with their own intereſts. But (ſaith he) we are no corrupters, we make not our own markets of the Word, we do not put it off for worldly advantages or gain, we only make this advantage and merchandiſe of it, the gaining of your ſouls.

Secondly, Obſerve, A good man may cauſleſly charge thoſe that are innocent.

As we muſt not at all judge a man to be wicked, who is falſly charged, ſo we ſhould be very cautious how we judge a man wicked, who chargeth another falſly. This age is a charging age, The Tongue and Pen have made as hot charges as the Sword. Lier, Heretick, Schiſmatick, Deceiver, Hypocrite, are the common weapons of our paper war. It is a duty to give a meek interpretation of rigid cenſures, much more to be ſparing in our judgments upon rigid cenſures. A good man may paſs an ill ſentence upon thoſe who are and do good. So did Zophar upon Job, and yet upright in the main.

Prima ſemper irarum tela ſunt maledicta. Sal.

Thirdly, Obſerve, It is a dangerous thing to ſay that is a lie or falſe, which we are not able to make out for truth.

That was Zophar caſe, he could not bring both ends of Job's ſpeech together; he ſuſpects all was nought, becauſe he could not find what was good. Job was neither babler, nor lier, nor mocker, though Zophar thought him all theſe. We through the glaſs of our own notions, and eſpecially thorow that of our own prejudices, ſee things in ſtrange colours. We ſhould look upon every thing in its own likeneſs; we ſhould prove and try every thing to the bottom before we cenſure, as well as before we approve. That may be found ſerious, which at firſt weighs but light, and that a truth which we called a lie. Such caution was never more needed, nor leſs uſed then at this day.

VERS. 4, 5, 6.

For thou haſt ſaid, My doctrine is pure, and I am clean in thine eyes.

But, O that God would ſpeak, and open his lips againſt thee.

And that he would ſhew thee the ſecrets of wiſdom, that they are double to that which is: know therefore that God exacteth of thee leſs then thine iniquity deſerveth.

IN the three former verſes we had the Preface of Zophars ſpeech.

In this fourth, He layes down the opinion or poſition, which he oppoſeth and ſpeaks againſt in the fifth and ſixth, Thou haſt ſaid, My doctrine is pure, and I am clean in thine eyes. This Zophar interpreted as carrying a ſecret accuſation, and reflection upon the juſtice of God. In ſaying, Thou art innocent, thou ſaieſt, God is unrighteous. He that (being puniſhed) acquitteth himſelf, condemneth his Judge.

Thou haſt ſaid.] Or, Thou haſt confidently affirmed: The words imports more then a bare ſay-ſo; Thou haſt ſtrongly teſtified for thy ſelf, My doctrine is pure, and I am clean. That's the force of David's infirmity (Pſal. 116. 11.) I ſaid in my haſte, All men are liars. I ſaid, is, more then a conjecture, and more then a naked affirmation, even an aſſertion, and a confident aſſertion too. So is, Thou haſt ſaid. If another had ſaid it, we ſhould ſooner have believed it. A modeſt ſubmiſſion of thy doctrine to the judgment of thy ſuperiors, or of thy friends and equals, would become thee better. We have reaſon to doubt thy doctrine more, becauſe we ſee thy own hand writes the approbation, and thou art not only a witneſs, but the only witneſs in thy own cauſe. Hence Note, Dicere eſt affirmare & pro certo aſſerere.

When a man bears witneſs of himſelf, he layes himſelf open to jealouſies and ſuſpition.

Thou haſt ſaid, My doctrine is pure.] Thou ſhouldſt have expected the teſtimony of another. What do thy neighbours ſay of thee? What do thy friends ſay of thee? Do they ſubſcribe this certificate, That thy doctrine is pure, and thy life clean? Chriſt holds forth a divine prerogative, when he ſaith (Joh. 8. 14.) Though I bear record of my ſelf, yet my record is true. God may give teſtimony to himſelf, and Chriſt there ſpeaks in reference to his Godhead, as his next words intimate, I know whence I came, and whither I go. It is the priviledge of God alone to be a ſelf-witneſs. Hence that of Chriſt (Joh. 5. 31.) If I bear witneſs of my ſelf, my witneſs is not true. How ſhall we pacifie and reconcile theſe two Texts? In one Chriſt ſaith, Though I bear record of my ſelf, yet my record is true; and in another, If I bear witneſs of my ſelf, my witneſs is not true.

I anſwer firſt, Chriſt ſpeaks either by way of conceſſion; though I ſhould grant thus much to you, that if I bear witneſs of my ſelf, my witneſs is not true, yet I have further teſtimony (as he ſhews in the following verſe) There is another beareth witneſs of me, and ſo I can eaſily ſpare my own. Or,

Conceſſio Rhetorica. Bez.

Secondly, If I ſhould barely aſſert for my ſelf, I give you an occaſion to ſuſpect whether my aſſertion be true.

Thirdly, The word which we tranſlate true, is well rendred firm, If I bear witneſs to my ſelf, my witneſs is not valid or authentical; for another man may bear witneſs to his neighbour, and his witneſs not be true; but that which ratifieth a teſtimony (foro humano) is when it comes from a ſecond, or a third, In the mouth of two or three witneſſes, ſhall every word be eſtabliſhed, Deut. 19. 15.

But may we not bear witneſs to our ſelves?

In ſome caſes we may, in moſt we may not, eſpecially in theſe two.

Firſt, When we teſtifie for our ſelves out of an ambition to commend our ſelves, to ſpread our own plumes, and to grow up into the applauſe of the world: This is phariſaical boaſting of, rather then witneſs-bearing to our ſelves.

Secondly, When what we ſay or teſtifie is untrue. We muſt not bear falſe-witneſs, either for or againſt our ſelves. Zophar ſuſpects Job's ſelf-witneſs of both theſe errors, as aiming at ſelf-applauſe, and that by arrogating more to himſelf, then he was able to make out. He offends who affects to blazon himſelf by a worth which is really his; but he that blazons himſelf by a worth which is not his, multiplies offences. Some ſay they are Jews, and are not, but are the Synagogue of Satan, (Revel. 2. 9.) A Jew may offend, in ſaying, he is a Jew; but he that ſaith he is a Jew, that is, a true believer (for under thoſe old Teſtament terms, Goſpel-profeſſors are expreſt in the Revelation) and is not, that is, hath neither the inward power, nor the outward evidence of a Saint, his pretended piety is double iniquity. A Jew of Satans Synagogue, is the worſt Diſciple of his Synagogue, None are ſo bad as they, who only ſeem to be good. They are twice dead, who have but a name to be alive. The Apoſtle chides thoſe bitterly, who were Jews only in the letter, and in the fleſh (Rom. 2. 17, 19.) Behold, thou art called a Jew, and reſteſt in the law, and makeſt thy boaſt of God, and art confident that thou thy ſelf art a guide of the blind, &c. Thou that teacheſt another, teacheſt thou not thy ſelf? Thou who makeſt thy boaſt of the law, through breaking the law, diſhonoureſt thou God? To ſay our doctrine is pure, when it is defiled with error; to ſay our ſelves are clean, when we are either openly prophane, or cloſely hypocritical, adds to the impurity of our doctrine, and to the uncleanneſs of our lives. Moſt appear too too bad; but they are worſt, who would appear better then they are.

But do we not find Paul more then once maintaining his own integrity? Saith he not, I have lived in all good Conſcience before God untill this day, Act. 23. 1. Saith he not? I am not mad, moſt noble Feſtus, *but ſpeak forth the words of truth and ſoberneſs, Act.*26.25. When we are accuſed and called to anſwer, we may ſay, Our doctrine is pure, when it is; and that we are clean, when we are.

In ſuch a caſe, not to teſtifie the truth for our ſelves, is near as bad as to teſtifie a falſhood againſt another. And in any caſe to give a wrong teſtimony of our ſelves, is worſe then to give it of another. The ſin is the greater, by how much the perſon againſt whom we ſin is nearer to us: and every man is neareſt to himſelf.

Thou haſt ſaid; And what ſaid he? My doctrine is pure, and I am clean in thy ſight. Divers of the Ancients upon this place challenge Zophar of ſlander and calumniation, for faſtning this report or fame upon Job. One is very angry with him, How is it poſſible (ſaith he) that Job ſhould be imagined to riſe to ſuch a pitch of ſelf-confidence, or to ſpeak at ſuch a rate of ſpiritual pride, when he teſtifies (Chap. 9. 20.) If I juſtifie my ſelf, mine own mouth ſhall condemn me; if I ſay I am perfect, it ſhall alſo prove me perverſe. And though Job ſaid, I am not wicked, ye he ſaid not, I am clean. The difference is great between a denial of wickedneſs, and a preſumption of cleanneſs. Theſe two cannot expound each other: He that preſumes he is clean, denies he is wicked: Yet he that denies he is wicked, may be far enough from affirming, that he is clean. Such conſequences have more uncharitableneſs then logick in them, and can hardly expect ſo much charity, as to acquit them from ſlander.

Calumniatoris hæc verba ſunt, non veritatem & juſtitiam proſequentis. Beda. Non ita dixit, tantum dixit nihil impium feci. Hieron. In eadem ſententia ſunt Gregorius & Chryſ.

But I dare not put an intendment of ſlander upon Zophars account; that's too deep, and more then can be juſtified. For, though Job ſpake not thus, in ſo many ſyllables, yet to that effect he had ſpoken; words had paſt from him, which might give, at leaſt a colourable pretence for ſuch a charge. And Zophar ſeems (in one reſpect) to deal better with Job then his other friends; for he collects the matter upon which he minded to debate with him, and layeth it down in an entire propoſition, This is the thing thou haſt ſaid, My doctrine is pure, and I am clean in his ſight. When or where ſaid he ſo? Some ſettle it upon that (Chap. 6. v. 10.) I have not concealed the words of the holy One; that is, (as theſe expound) I have ſpoken truth, and all the truth. Others put it upon that (Chap. 10. 2.) Shew me wherefore thou contendeſt with me; which hath (ſay they) this ſecret intimation in it, That Job did not ſee any ſin in himſelf, and that he thought God himſelf could hardly ſhew him one, for which he contended with him. Thoſe words alſo at verſ. 7. of the ſame Chapter, Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked, are ſuppoſed an appeal to God himſelf to give teſtimony againſt him, if he could; Thou knoweſt, and I will ſtand to thy judgment, that I am not wicked. Theſe paſſages Zophar might conſtrue to the ſence given, As if he had ſaid, I am clean in thy ſight. And we find Job in his following diſcourſe (Chap. 31. 7.) ſpeaking out plainly, If my ſtep hath turned out of the way, and mine heart walked after mine eyes, and if any blot hath cleaved to my hands; then let me ſow, and let another eat, &c. If any blot hath cleaved to my hands; amounts to as much as this in the letter, I am clean in thy ſight. And as Zophar here, ſo Elihu taxeth him with it elſewhere (Chap. 33. 8, 9.) Surely thou haſt ſpoken in mine hearing, and I have heard the voice of thy words, ſaying, I am clean without tranſgreſſion, I am innocent, neither is there iniquity in me.

What then was faulty in Zophar?

This. He managed his diſcourſe more like an Accuſer; then a Comforter. He amplified and ſtrained the words of Job to a ſence which he intended not. He ſpake what might be cloathed with ſuch an interpretation; But, Charity thinketh no evil, and love would have made a better Comment. He never meant to raiſe himſelf upon his own innocency, or to ſtand upon his terms with God: How often had he diſclaimed and even proteſted againſt ſuch overweenings? Yet his friends impoſe that ſence upon him all along; and will make him ſay, what he never thought, and own what his ſoul abhorred.

Accuſatorum more amplificat, & interpretatione parum benevola, eo rem adducit, ut talia cenſeretur locutus Jobus. Sanct.

Take one Note from their miſtake, and then I ſhall give the ſence of the poſition more diſtinctly.

> Words are often miſconſtrued, and reckoned for more then the ſpeaker meant them.

Neceſſe eſt contentioſius loquaris, quod probare non poſſis. Quintil. Dedam. 18.

We are apt to put unſound gloſſes upon the Word both of God and man. Many report the matter ſpoken, falſly, and very few report the meaning of the ſpeaker truly. More quarrels and controverſies ariſe from the miſtake of words, then from difference of judgments. There is ſcarce a book written about any Tenet which is oppoſed, but the Author is forced to a great expence of time and pains for the clearing of his meaning from the miſtakes of oppoſites. Yea a man can hardly let a word fall in ordinary conference, but ſome miſ-improvement is made of it. When Peter asked Chriſt concerning John, Lord, and what ſhall this man do? Jeſus ſaith unto him, if I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Joh. 21. 22. Then went this ſaying abroad among the brethren, that that Diſciple ſhould not die; Howbeit Jeſus ſaid unto them, He ſhall not die; but if I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Falſe-witneſſes come againſt Chriſt, and what is their teſtimony? This fellow ſaid, I am able to deſtroy the temple of God, and to build it in three dayes, Mat. 26. 61. This was a mere miſtake of the words of Chriſt, *Joh.*2.19. where when he was demanded by the Jews, What ſign ſheweſt thou unto us, ſeeing that thou doeſt theſe things? He anſwered, Deſtroy this Temple, and in three days I will raiſe it up. How groſly did they corrupt this Text by their expoſition of it! Chriſt ſaid, Deſtroy ye, they made it, I am able to deſtroy; he ſaid, This Temple, meaning his own body; they ſay, the material Temple, or place of publick worſhip: So the Jews ſtumbled at his words, when they fell firſt from his lips, as their reply telleth us, Fourty and ſix years was this Temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days? The Evangeliſt explains him right in the next line, But he ſpake of the Temple of his body. It is to be bewail'd how ſuch miſ-underſtandings have troubled the Church and ſervants of God; and that ſo many have ſuffered upon ſuch miſ-underſtandings. The Wiſeman hath a Proverb, which reacheth this abuſe, though it be not direct to the point in hand, He that covereth a tranſgreſſion ſeeketh love; but he that repeateth a matter, ſeparateth very friends (Prov. 17. 9.) He aims at tale-bearers, who repeat what they hear upon deſign to breed jealouſies, and heart-burning among friends, or, according to the language of the times, to cajole the neareſt and the ſtrongeſt confidents. But we may apply it to the ſence before us, That uſually they who repeat a matter, ſeparate very friends; for who is it almoſt that repeateth the diſcourſe of another (eſpecially if he hath any prejudice againſt the party, or doth not meet fully in opinion with him) but he ſpoils it in repeating, and ſo ſeparates very friends? This was the fault of Job's friends, they repeated his words, but moſt of their repetitions, were perverſions or unkind Criticiſmes upon, rather then charitable reports of what he ſpake. And therefore he was forced (Chap. 23. 3.) to appeal unto God with whom he knew himſelf ſhould find candid dealing, and his words receive a genuine interpretation, O that I knew where I might find him, that I might come even to his ſeat; I would order my cauſe before him, and fill my mouth with arguments. As if he had ſaid, I have been often wronged by my friends in miſconceiving what I have argued, but were I to argue and plead it with God himſelf, I know he would deal fairly with me, and put a right ſence upon every word, he would make the beſt of what is not ſo well ſpoken, and nothing but good of what is well ſpoken; He would receive what is right, and rectifie what is amiſs. Let us now examine what Zophar judged Job to have ſpoken amiſs.

Thou haſt ſaid, My Doctrine is pure, and I am clean in thy ſight.

His ſuppoſed error was, that he thought his doctrine true, and this was his blot, That he thought himſelf clean. This thou haſt ſaid,

My Doctrine is pure.] That is, I am orthodox or ſound in judgment, both in my general tenets, and in what I have particularly maintained in the preſent diſputation concerning the providence of God in afflicting godly men, and in diſpenſing outward comforts to the wicked. Thou haſt ſaid thy doctrine, delivered upon both or either of theſe ſubjects, is pure.

לקח Accipere, doctrina dicitur ab accipiendo, i.e. diſcendo, nam diſcere eſt accipere. Druſ.

The original word which we render Doctrine, is derived from a root which ſignifies to take, or to receive. And that upon a threefold ground.

Firſt, Becauſe ſuch Doctrines are delivered upon the taking of mature deliberation, or gained by taking much pains for them.

Secondly, Becauſe ſuch Doctrines are in their own right to be received. Sound Doctrine is worthy to be received, it is worthy of all reverence and ready acceptation.

Metaphora ſumpta à venatione. Piſc.

Thirdly, Becauſe there is a power in ſuch Doctrines to take or catch thoſe unto whom they are ſpoken. Truth is full, not only of ſtrength, but of ſubtilty. Hence ſome conceive that the alluſion is to Hunters and Fowlers, who lay baits, and ſet traps to catch birds, or other game. So (in a good ſence) a man of wiſdom and underſtanding, publiſhing ſound Doctrine, layes a bait, with holy craft to enſnare and catch his auditors (Prov. 11. 30.) He that winneth ſouls is wiſe; it is this word. They who are godly and judicious catch ſouls, as a fowler catcheth birds: by laying out ſound, wiſe and faithful arguments, they take and ſnap men; they hold their ſpirits faſt, till they overcome and win them, even as the ſnare of the fowler takes the bird: Such are wiſe men indeed. The whoriſh woman (Prov. 7. 13, 21.) is ſaid, to catch or gain the young man (the word is the ſame in the original) by her fair ſpeech, her taking language. A whores doctrine is very taking, her lips drop enſnaring eloquence. As there is a power in ſinful counſel to take and enſnare; ſo much more in holy and wholſom counſel. The Apoſtle was a Craftsmaſter in this ſoul-trade (2 Cor. 12. 16.) Being crafty (ſaith he) I caught you with guile; I plaid the cunning mate with you, I laid a ſnare, and ſet a trap, but all for your good.

Further, The word ſignifies pleaſure and ſweetneſs, noting thus much, That purity of Doctrine is pleaſant, and gives much delight. As meats are to the taſte, ſo are truths to the underſtanding: nothing brings in greater contentment to any faculty, then a clear apprehenſion of the proper object. Sutableneſs is the ground of pleaſure. And the pleaſures of the intellectual part, are as much above thoſe of the ſenſitive, as the underſtanding it ſelf is above the ſenſes. A Philoſopher having found out a true and rational concluſion in Geometry, ran about the City, where he lived, as if he had been diſtracted with joy, ſaying, I have found it, I have found it. When God gives, and we by ſtudy and prayer find out the treaſures of divine truth, it is as the beginning of Heaven (Math. 13. 44.) The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto a treaſure hid in a field, the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof, goeth and ſelleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field. The ſtatutes of the Lord are right, rejoycing the heart, Pſal. 19. 8. To receive pure Doctrine is as much a pleaſure, as it is an honour; as much the delight, as the ornament of the mind. My doctrine is pure.

Pure.] The word ſignifies pellucid or clear, that which a man may look thorow as Glaſs, or to the bottom of it, as a Cryſtal fountain. Pure doctrine is like Glaſs or a Cryſtal ſtream, upon which you may not only look, but look thorow it, and to the bottom of it, and find all clear. Such a purity is here meant, My doctrine is pure. Purity of doctrine imports two things, Firſt, The preciouſneſs of doctrine; for that which is pure is precious, and every thing the more pure it is, the more precious it is in its kind.

Secondly, The unmixedneſs, the uncompoundedneſs of doctrine. Purity is oppoſed to mixture; pure is as much as ſimple or uncompounded; we read of the ſimplicity of the Goſpel (2 Cor. 11. 3.) which is nothing elſe but the purity of the Goſpel. The contrary whereof is corrupting or adulterating the word of God, by the addition of humane inventions, and our own fancies.

My Doctrine is pure.] Pure in both theſe ſences. It is precious and worth much: it is unmixed, nothing but it ſelf. I have not feigned and coyned it out of mine own brain. I have not embaſed it with an allay of inferior mettal; it is the ſincere ſimple Word of God.

Whence Note, True doctrine is pure doctrine.

True doctrine is pure two wayes. It is pure ſubjectively, and it is pure effectively. It is pure in it ſelf, and purifies us, Joh. 17. 17. Sanctifie them through thy truth, thy word is truth. Pure doctrine will purifie. Falſe principles breed falſe practices; crooked rules make crooked lives: That which is polluted is as apt to pollute, as that which is pure to purifie. The nature of things is ſtampt upon their effects. Truth is compared to the moſt excellent metals, and it excels them. The Apoſtle ſpeaking of all ſorts of doctrines built upon Chriſt the foundation, calls ſome gold, ſilver, precious ſtones: others, wood, hay, ſtubble (1 Cor. 3. 12.) The difference of doctrine is ſet forth under theſe Metaphors: Pure doctrine is gold, ſilver, precious ſtones: Falſe doctrine is wood, hay, ſtubble, theſe are combuſtible matter, they will burn, they will not bear the trial; whereas the Word of God, and ſo the truths that are bottomed upon that, are (Pſal. 12. 6.) Pure: How pure? As ſilver tried in a furnace of earth, purified ſeven times; that is, it is altogether pure, having not the leaſt droſs in it. My doctrine is pure,

And I am clean.] The word [Bar] undergoeth a three-fold interpretation among the Rabbins.

בר à ברר Mundum reddidit, terſit, polivit, diſcrevit, elegit. Hæc vox cũ filium ſignificat, chaldaica eſt, & in ea ſignificatione tantum, Pſal. 2. 12. Prov. 31. 2. reperitur. Piſc.

Firſt, It ſignifies clean or pure. So we tranſlate.

Secondly, It ſignifies a Son or man-child (ſo it is rather a Chaldee word) Prov. 31. 2. Pſal. 2. 12. Kiſs the Son: and from this word Bar, a Son, it is conceived that in our Northern parts, a child is called a barn; in the Latin, the ſame word denotes a young child, and pure or clean, and ſo it bears fair to the interpretation of the Text: becauſe howſoever a child is naturally all filthy and unclean, in regard of the guilt and pollution of original ſin; yet in regard of acts, a child is clean, he is white paper, as he hath no fair letters, ſo no blots upon him.

Thirdly, It ſignifies elect, choſen or preferred before others (Cant. 6. 9.) She is the only one of her mother, ſhe is (Bar, the word of the Text, the clean one, or) the choice one of her that bare her. But how is ſhe called the only one of her mother, and yet the choice one of her that bare her? if there be but one, how can there be any choice? The original is, She is the one of her mother, and ſuch an one, as if ſhe had ten thouſand to chuſe out of, ſhe could not chuſe a better; this would be her only child, her flower, how many ſoever ſhe might be ſuppoſed to have. If a man who hath many children likes one more then the reſt, he uſeth to ſay, There is my only Son, that's he. One as good as can be, is a choice one, though we have no more; yet properly a choice one, is the beſt among many. In this ſence the word is uſed (Nehem. 5. 18.) where the bill of fare for Nehemiah his Table is thus drawn up, He had ſix choice ſheep, &c. They did not take the flock as they came, but picked the beſt for the Governours Table. Thus the word carries a comparative ſence in it, pointing out not only one that is clean, but one elect before others for his cleanneſs, I am clean,

Te, O Deus, judice & teſte, te bene conſcio.

In thine eyes.] That is, Thou, O God, conſidering, trying and judging me, I ſhall yet be found clean. It is an high challenge, but we are not to take it ſtrictly; Job was no legal Juſticiary, he ſought not righteouſneſs in the works of the Law, but through faith in the Meſſiah: He ſpeaks here, as in other like places, one or all of theſe three wayes.

Firſt, In oppoſition to the opinion which men had of him: As if he had ſaid, In the ſight of men I am filthy and unclean, an hypocrite and wicked: my friends judge me ſo, but, I am clean in thine eyes.

Secondly, I am clean in thine eyes; that is, in the general bent of my ſpirit, in the common tenor of my heart and life; though I have my failings, yet my courſe is holy. Denomination is taken from the better and greater part.

Thirdly, I am clean, &c. that is, in reference to the ſpecial charge, which my friends lay upon me; they ſay I am an hypocrite, Lord, I am clean from that in thine eyes. Thus David (Pſal. 18. 24.) Therefore hath the Lord recompenſed me according to my righteouſneſs, according to the cleanneſs of my hands in his eye-ſight. The ſame Comment will ſerve David's Text and Job's. David was not in a conteſtation with the juſtice of God upon his own integrity, but upon a vindication of his integrity from the injuſtice and jealouſies of men.

Hence we may obſerve (which is a ſeeming contradiction)

No man is clean in God ſight: Some men are clean in Gods ſight.

No man is clean in Gods ſight, that is, in himſelf or of himſelf, Job 14. 4. Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Every man is hewen from a corrupt ſtock, and therefore is corrupt; Behold the heavens are not clean in his ſight, Job 15. 15. Yea he chargeth his Angels with folly, (Chap. 4. 18.) How great then is the folly of that man, who upon his own account diſchargeth himſelf of folly in the ſight of God?

Yet a believer may ſay he is clean in the ſight of God.

Firſt, Clean perfectly by the grace of juſtification. So believers in this life are, as having no ſpot or wrinkle imputed to them, though many ſpots and wrinkles remaining on them. The cleanneſs of Chriſt, is clean in the eyes of God; and that is the Saints cleanneſs. 'Tis theirs for their uſe, though not in their propriety,

Secondly, Clean alſo in the ſight of God through the grace of ſanctification; God gives and ſees, as a deſire of, ſo an endeavour after univerſal, practical cleanneſs, in them that are juſtified. A believers way in this world is clean from crimes, though not from ſins. If any man ſay he hath no ſin, truth is not in him; and if any man commit ſin, grace is not in him, 1 Joh. 3. 8, 9. Sin lives in a clean perſon; but he that is clean lives not in any ſin. And this is a cleanneſs in the ſight of God.

In the conjunction of theſe two, My doctrine is pure, and I am clean in thy ſight; we ſee the two heads of religion, or the two main hinges upon which all religion turneth. Firſt, Purity of doctrine. Secondly, Cleanneſs of practice. Holineſs of life and ſoundneſs of opinion, conſtitute a perfect man; Here's the character of a Chriſtian, in his compleatneſs. This was typified in the Old Law, by the Urim and the Thummim, ſet in the breſt-plate of the High Prieſt. Urim typed purity of doctrine; Thummim, cleanneſs of life. This Motto fitted not only the Prieſts of the Old Teſtament, or the Miniſters of the New, but befits every Chriſtian: Every believer ſhould bear this upon his breſt, Purity of doctrine, and cleanneſs of life. Chriſt checks the Phariſees (Matth. 23. 2, 3.) who had the former, but not the latter; they had purity of doctrine, but they wanted integrity and holineſs of life: they ſate in Moſes chair, and therefore he biddeth his Diſciples and the people, That all whatſoever they bad them obſerve, that they ſhould obſerve and do; but (ſaith he) do not ye after their works; take heed of treading in their ſteps: you may do their words, but not their works; why? for they ſay and do not; though they have purity of doctrine, they have not cleanneſs of life. It is an ill hearing, and a ſad ſpectacle, when theſe two are ſeparated. When purity of doctrine, and cleanneſs of life appear together in one perſon, happy is that man; and he is a fit inſtrument to make others happy: but where either of theſe appears alone, or with its contrary, as a companion, purity of doctrine with uncleanneſs of life, or cleanneſs of life with error and unſoundneſs of doctrine; it is dangerous to embark with, or come near ſuch; for themſelves are in great danger: Themſelves are in an ill condition, and they are fit inſtruments to make others worſe. Unſound doctrine frets like a Canker, and an unclean life is catching like a Leproſie. We are apteſt to take an unſound doctrine from thoſe whoſe lives are clean; and we are apteſt to imitate their unclean lives, whoſe doctrine is ſound.

From the latter branch, I am clean in thine eyes, Note,

Firſt, It ſhould not ſatisfie us that we are clean in the eyes of men, unleſs we can approve our ſelves to God alſo.

For as not he that commendeth himſelf, ſo not he that is commended by others is approved; but whom the Lord commendeth, 2 Cor. 10. 18. It is but cold comfort to be clean in the eye of our neighbours, that they give us a fair teſtimony; if in the mean time our own heart condemn us. Yea, what though we are (like that generation ſpoken of by Solomon) Pure in our own eyes, and have a plaudite in our own hearts, if we are impure in Gods eye. It is moſt deſirable to be a white in the eye of God: while we are white in his eye, we need not trouble our ſelves much, though we are black in the eyes of all the world. It is a ſmall thing with me (ſaith Paul, 1 Cor. 4. 3.) that I ſhould be judged of you, or of mans judgment; yea I judge not my own ſelf, but he that judgeth me is the Lord.

Secondly, Obſerve, What we are, and what we do, is all before the eye of God.

It is a common doctrine, that God ſees and takes notice of us. But as common as the doctrine is in the mouths of men, the uſe is rare in the hearts of men; yet there is no man ſo heightned in grace, but may make uſe of it. Chriſt himſelf made uſe of it, Pſal. 16. 8. (The words were ſpoken by David his figure, and applied to Chriſt, Act. 2. 25.) I fore-ſaw the Lord always before my face. Chriſt did not uſe this doctrine to keep or over-awe his heart from ſin (he was infinitely above that) but to ſupport his heart in ſuffering, as appears in the latter part of the verſe, he is on my right hand, that I ſhould not be moved. But to us it is uſeful both theſe wayes, and many other wayes. The neglect of this doctrine leaves us under the neglect of many duties, and opens a gap, yea floudgate unto every ſin. Durſt any mock God with out-ſide and bare profeſſion, if the heart had fed upon, and thorowly digeſted this truth; cleanneſs and uncleanneſs, ſincerity and hypocriſie are in the ſight of God? How often do men flatter themſelves with this vain hope, that their work is in the dark, and no eye ſees them? How often doth the Church-Atheiſt queſtion, like thoſe (Job 22. 13.) How doth God know? Can he judge thorow the dark cloud? Thick clouds are a covering to him that he ſeeth not, and he walketh in the circuit of Heaven. Sure he troubles not himſelf with what we do; and though moſt are ready to acknowledge in words, that God ſeeth them, they act as if God (like the Heathen Idols) had eyes, but could not ſee. It was that which Melancthon obſerved of the Italians, You (ſaith he) are very zealous to believe that God is in the bread, but you walk as if you did not believe God to be in Heaven. Bleſſed is he that condemneth not himſelf by the truths which he alloweth.

Thirdly, Foraſmuch as the original [bar] ſignifies not only purity, but elect and choſen, Obſerve, Clean and holy perſons, juſt and upright perſons, are fit for choice and election.

Men may not chooſe, as God chooſeth. God chooſeth out of a common maſs without reſpect to good or evil, as the motive of his election; he did not look upon mankind, and ſee one pure, and another impure; one clean, and another another unclean; and then chuſe the clean, and leave the unclean; No: (Rom. 9. 11.) before Jacob and Eſau were born, before they had done either good or evil; That the purpoſe of God according to election might ſtand, not of works, but of him that calleth; it was ſaid, Jacob have I loved, but Eſau have I hated; Gods election is not upon actions. He found them both in a like ſtate, yet he choſe Jacob: The reaſon of it is, becauſe he hath power, and a purpoſe to make them clean, whom he chuſeth. God elects to cleanneſs, but he doth not elect any, becauſe they are clean, or cleaner then others. The grace of election is not directed by, but directs and leads to the grace of ſanctification. But when men go to chooſing, they muſt not take this courſe, becauſe they have not this power: when men chooſe, they muſt chooſe upon fore-ſeen, or rather preſent works of holineſs and righteouſneſs. They muſt chuſe men fearing God, and hating covetouſneſs, for Magiſtrates. They muſt chuſe men apt to teach, ſober and blameleſs, for Miniſters. They who cannot make men fit, whom they have elected; muſt conſider who are fit, and then elect them.

Zophar having laid down Jobs opinion of himſelf, My doctrine is pure, and I am clean in thine eyes, (verſ. 4.) proceeds to the confutation of it in verſ. 5, 6. which we may give you in this argumentative form.

That perſon is not pure in doctrine, and clean in the ſight of God, whom though God hath greatly afflicted, yet he might juſtly afflict more:

But though God hath greatly afflicted thee, yet he might juſtly afflict thee more;

Therefore thou art not pure in thy doctrine, nor clean in his ſight.

The aſſumption is given in the cloſe of the ſixth verſe, Know therefore that God exacteth of thee leſs then thine iniquity deſerveth: and is prefac'd or led in by a wiſh, in verſ. 5. and part of verſ. 6. a wiſh that God himſelf would undertake Job, and diſpute with him.

Verſ. 5. But O that God would ſpeak, and open his lips againſt thee!

As if Zophar had ſaid, While I am about to ſpeak, I almoſt think it will be but loſt labour for me to ſpeak; yea, I think thou art beyond the ſpeaking of any man: thou art ſo obdurate and hardened in thy way, ſo wiſe in thine own conceit, ſo ſtiff to thine own principles, ſo unyielding to thoſe better counſels which have already been given thee, by thy grave, learned and godly friends, that I am much (and I conceive any man would be) diſcouraged to argue and debate the matter further with thee. And therefore I would willingly quit my hands of this task, and leave thee to God, I would gladly be eaſed of this burden, and turn thee over (as a man paſt cure by man) to the hand of Heaven. O that God would ſpeak, and open his lips againſt thee!

Or ſecondly, This Preface may have relation to thoſe ſecret hints, yea ſometimes explicite wiſhes of Job (declining the ſentence and cenſure of his friends) that God and he might ſpeak together. He only deſired the Lord to abate the dreadful ſplendor of his Majeſty, or not to clothe himſelf with dazling light, and amazing glory in that congreſs. And, Then (ſaith he) let him ſpeak and I would anſwer (Chap. 9. 15.) Again (Chap. 10. 2.) I will ſay unto God, Do not condemn me, ſhew me wherefore thou contendeſt with me? In both which paſſages Job ſeems to petition and preſs the Lord for a perſonal treaty; in anſwer to which requeſt, poſſibly Zophar might thus begin, My friend Job, It falleth now to my lot to ſpeak unto thee, but I ſhould (with all my heart) rejoyce, if God would grant the wiſh which thou haſt ſo often preſented to him, even vouchſafe to ſpeak unto thee himſelf. We have often heard thee appealing from earth to heaven, calling God to witneſs, that ſuch and ſuch is thine integrity. O that God would anſwer thee, and give thee a meeting! O that he would condeſcend ſo far as to confer immediately with thee! How glad ſhould we be of this? and we believe thou wouldſt be as ſorry; it will be little to thy eaſe, if God once take thee to task, thou ſhalt quickly find it otherwiſe with thee then thou dreameſt or preſumeſt; he would ſoon cool theſe heats, and aſſwage the ſwellings of thy ſpirit, by diſcovering himſelf in holineſs, and thy ſelf in ſinfulneſs. Thy creſt will fall, and thy courage come down as ſoon as ever he enters the liſt with thee, and doth but ſhew thee who he is, and what thou art. Either of theſe wayes the connexion lies fair, O that God would ſpeak and open his lips againſt thee!

Sane aliter rem habere intelligeres quam putas; non ita juſtus apparebis, ut tibi perſuades. Merc.

The Hebrew is, Who would give, or, O that ſome body would get God to ſpeak? The phraſe is optative, including an ardent deſire of obtaining, and therefore we tranſlate not, Who would give? but, O that God! As implying the great and inſtant importunity of Zophar to ſpeed his ſute, That God would ſpeak and open his lips againſt him.

Quis det Deum loqui?

Some too critically and over-curiouſly diſtinguiſh between the ſpeaking of God, and his opening of his lips. As if the one, namely ſpeaking, did import an immediate voice, when God reveals himſelf without the intervention of any inſtrument or ſecond cauſe: but the opening of his lips, a mediate voice, when God ſpeaks (though in an extraordinary manner, yet) by man or Angel, or any other creature, whoſe ſervice he is pleaſed to deſign for ſuch a manifeſtation of himſelf. God can give a lip to liveleſs creatures, and make any thing his tongue. He that made mans mouth to ſpeak, can make that ſpeak which hath no mouth; and ſo, may be ſaid to open his lips in whatſoever he uſeth to demonſtrate or diſcover his mind to us by. But I paſs this as a nicity, eſpecially becauſe Zophar imploring God to deal with Job immediately, and not by the ſervice of any creature, yet calls it, The opening of his lips.

Loquitur Deus per ſemet-ipſum; aperit vero labia cum vel hominum vel aliarum rerum opera tanquam inſtrumento utitur ad aliquid manifeſtandum. Aquin.

Speaking and opening the lips, are the ſame thing under different expreſſions, or the latter is but an expoſition of the former. Opening of the lips is ſpeaking, we ſpeak by opening the lips; only here is an hyſteroſis, a figure frequent in Scripture, when that which is firſt in nature, is put laſt in order, for opening of the lips precedes ſpeaking; here the method is inverted, O that God would ſpeak, and that he would open his lips againſt thee!

O that God would ſpeak!] The word carries more then common talking, it is here reſtrained to ſpeech in judgment, or to an exact diſcuſſion of the cauſe preceding judgment. Such is the meaning of that heavenly ſummons (Pſal. 50. 7.) Hear, O my people, and I will ſpeak (I will debate the matter, and plead with thee) O Iſrael, I will teſtifie againſt thee. Zophar prays for a day of trial, for a little day of judgment. O that God would ſpeak.

דבר Non ad quemlibet ſermonem, ſed ad eum qui in judicio habetur, vel ad diſceptationem ſpectat. Bold.

And open his lips.] To open the lips implieth grave and deliberate ſpeaking. The Hebraiſme is very frequent, Pſal. 78. 2. I will open my mouth in a parable. Parables are ſententious ſpeeches, ſpeeches filled with weight of wiſdom. To open the mouth in a parable is to have an active intenſion of the ſpirit, preparing and fitting the mouth to open. The mouth of a wiſe man is under cuſtody, leaſt the treaſures of his mind ſhould ſteal out, or be ſtoln out unobſerved. Precious things are not left open, they are under lock and key. He is a wiſe man that keeps a lock and a key at his lips: the lock of ſilence, and the key of ſpeech; or the key of diſcretion to ſhut and open the lock according to the true occaſions of ſpeech and ſilence. David prayeth, Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth, and keep the door of my lips (Pſal. 141. 3.) As we ſhould deſire the Lord to keep or watch the door of our lips, leaſt we ſpeak ſinfully; ſo we ſhould keep or watch our own lips, that we may ſpeak fruitfully and ſeaſonably. The Scribe which is inſtructed to the Kingdom of Heaven, is like unto a man which is an houſholder, bringing forth out of his treaſure things both new and old (Matth. 13. 52.) He hath a ſtore, a ſtock of knowledge laid up there, and he openeth not his mouth, or vents it, till occaſion ſpeaks. That counſel (Prov. 22. 17, 18.) fully reacheth this Hebraiſm of opening the mouth. Bow down thine ear, and hear the words of the wiſe; (what to do?) and apply thine heart unto my knowledge; (let thine heart draw in knowledge) let it be as a bed, or a repoſitory for the words of the wiſe to reſt on, or to be laid up in; for, it is a pleaſant thing (there's the treaſure) if thou keep them within thee, they ſhall withal be fitted in thy lips. If thou keep them within thee: As if he had ſaid, When thou haſt been a learner, and haſt gained a ſtock of knowledge, then, they ſhall be fitted for thy lips; that is, thy lips ſhall bring forth, ſhape and form, thoſe notions of truth into profitable and ſavoury diſcourſes, They ſhall be fitted to thy lips. Some ſpeak the words of wiſdom, but ſuch words are not fitted to their lips: It is (as the Proverb teacheth) The Aſs to the harp, or the Cat to the lute.

Aperire labia eſt ſapienter & cum pondere loqui; quaſi theſaurus eſſet in corde, cujus os & labia ſint velut oſtium ſub clave vel ſigillo, &c. Bold.

Words muſt be ſeated in the heart before they are fitted to the lips. Davids mouth did not ſpeak of wiſdom, till the meditation of his heart had been of underſtanding. Out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth ſpeaketh, both good and evil. And as a good man ſpeaks evil, ſo an evil man ſpeaks good unhandſomely, becauſe it is not in, nor with his heart.

Sincerius erit ſi in ſimplici fandi notione ſumatur hoc verbum quaſi Jobi dulciloquio ſimplex Dei loquela opponatur, ut hac illud facillimè confundi dicat.

Further, To open the lips is no more in ordinary acceptation, then to ſpeak plainly: and then it ſtands in oppoſition to thoſe eloquent orations, which (as Zophar ſuppoſed) Job had ſtudied to defend and ſecure himſelf againſt God; as if he had ſaid, If God would but open his lips, and ſpeak unto thee, one plain word might be enough to overthrow all the curious diſcourſes and ſet ſpeeches, enough to anſwer, and cut the ſinews of all the fine ſpun orations, and cunning ſophiſtry which thou haſt uſed in this cauſe. Let God ariſe (ſaith Moſes) and his enemies ſhall be ſcattered. Let God open his lips, ſaith Zophar, and thy mouth ſhall be ſtopt.

His verbis habita perſonæ & temporis ratione non levitèr pungitat Job. Bold.

Gen. 12. 1, 7, 13. c. 15. 1 c. 17. 1. c. 18 1. c. 21. 12. & 22. 1. 11.

Thirdly, The words may carry a redargution of Job, as a man whom God did ſo far neglect, that he would not afford him a word; As if his friend Zophar had thus reproved him, Thou haſt been calling upon God to ſpeak, and ſhew thee why he contendeth with thee, yet thou haſt not prevailed in thy ſute, he vouchſafeth thee never a word, but leaves thee ſtill to us. This (ſome conceive) hath a reproof in it, conſidering the times wherein Job lived; for then it was no very ſtrange thing (though it was an high favour) for God himſelf to ſpeak to the Saints his ſpecial favourites. God at ſundry times, and in divers manners, ſpake in time paſt unto the fathers by the Prophets (Heb. 1. 1.) And as he ſpake by the Prophets, ſo he ſpake by himſelf; God ſpake nine times unto Abraham, as you may obſerve upon diligent reading from Gen. 12. to 22. He ſpake alſo to others of the Ancients. And when God refuſed to open his lips and ſpeak to Saul, how pitifully doth he complain, I am ſore diſtreſſed, for the Philiſtims make war upon me, and God is departed from me, and anſwereth me no more, neither by Prophets, nor by dreams (1 Sam. 28. 15.) Saul took it not only as his diſparagement, but as his undoing, that God refuſed him conference. This refuſal (according to the preſent interpretation) Zophar layes in Jobs diſh, Thou haſt prayed that God would manifeſt himſelf to thee, and that's an honour which he hath done to many of his ſervants, in the Catalogue of whom thou writeſt thy name, and pretendeſt thy ſelf for one, but he hearkens not unto thee, though I wiſh he would. O that God would ſpeak, and open his lips againſt thee!

But what is the manner of Gods ſpeaking, and how doth he open his lips?

It is an alluſion unto men. Man is not able to underſtand the way of a ſpirit, but by what is common to man. A ſpirit hath no lips to open, nor any inſtruments of ſpeech: And to ſpeak ſtrictly, a ſpirit doth not ſpeak at all. God is ſaid to ſpeak, Formatas à Deo ſenſibiles & externas voces negare videtur. Baſil. in Iſa. 7. Quod non auſim admittere. Bold.

Firſt, When by his mighty power he forms and frames a voice, which is audible and perceptible by the ear, as unto Samuel, The Lord called Samuel, Samuel, at the laſt Samuel anſwers, Speak, Lord, for thy ſervant heareth.

Secondly, God ſpake to Moſes, Face to face, that is, familiarly and clearly. This was the higheſt degree of revelation, and drew neareſt to that which the Saints ſhall have in glory.

Thirdly, He ſpake alſo by many ſigns, eſpecially by Urim and by Thummim.

Fourthly, God ſpake when he intimated or hinted his mind to the ſpirit of man, by the inſtinct of his own Spirit. Moſt of the Prophets heard only an inward word, which is called, The coming of the word of the Lord unto them. As God only ſpeaks to the heart, while the word ſoundeth in the ear; So he often ſpeaks to the heart, when the ear hears no ſound. I will hear what God the Lord will ſpeak, for he will ſpeak peace unto his people, and to his Saints. (Pſal. 85. 8.) God ſpeaks peace when he ſends or gives peace, that is, all good things. God ſpeaks peace alſo, when he (as it were) by a ſecret Eccho, returns a word of aſſurance to the petitioners heart, that he will give peace. When Zophar wiſhes, that God would ſpeak, he means it of ſpeaking by audible voice, or face to face, not by ſigns or ſecret intimations.

Zophar being thus inſtant, That God would ſpeak, and open his lips againſt Job, teacheth us, Firſt, Some men are beyond the conviction of man.

O that God would ſpeak. We ſay of a ſick man, whoſe diſeaſe is deſperate, as in the plague, &c. The Lord look upon you, the Phyſicians have given you over, they can do no more, we leave you to the prayers of the faithful, and to the compaſſions of God: Some in ſpiritual diſtempers are ſo extreamly diſeaſed, that the ſoul Phyſician can do nothing upon them, they are paſt all his medicines and preparations, theſe we give up to the cure of God, who raiſeth the dead, and calleth thoſe things which are not, as if they were. I grant, that whatſoever healing or cure is wrought upon the ſoul of man by men, is from the Lord. Man and man ſtand upon even ground; Humane reaſon and humane reaſon are equal; and he that ſpeaks is often upon a lower ground (though he ſtand higher) then he to whom he ſpeaks, and is ſometimes weaker in humane reaſon: Now that which overcometh and convinceth muſt have an advantage, and come in power, elſe there can be no victory. An equal (in all points) cannot be a conquerour. Hence when the Prophets delivered their meſſages, they put Gods authority to the word, Thus ſaith the Lord: They knew all they ſpake could prevail nothing. But though God give the effect of mans word to every man, yet ſome men appear more untractable and unteachable by the Miniſtery of man then others, they ſit under it, and (poſſibly) have ſate under it long, yet nothing's done, their mindes are as blind, their wills as ſtubborn, their wayes as crooked as ever. Man is not any thing in the converſion of any man without God (1 Cor. 3. 7.) but ſome we refer wholly to God, having ſpent much ſtrength and time upon them in vain. Some men have out-ſtood, and are the reproach of all the prayers and tears, of all the counſels and admonitions of man: What can we do more or leſs then give up ſuch (as neer loſt men) to the work of God. O that God would ſpeak.

Secondly, Obſerve, which Zophar chiefly intends,

That if God once open his lips, and deal with a ſoul, he will quickly bring down his ſpirit and convince him.

Man cannot hold out againſt the ſpeakings of God. Man is not able to withſtand the immediate, no nor the mediate ſpeakings of God, 1 Cor. 10. 4. The weapons of our warfare are mighty through God; it is our warfare, but the conqueſt is from God. When he cloathes the word with his own power, and bids it go in his might, the ſtrongeſt holds of ignorance and unbelief, of obſtinacy and rebellion fall to the ground, like the firſt ripe figs ſhaken with the wind. When the unlearned or idiot comes into the aſſembly of the Saints, He is convinced of all, and is judged of all; for the ſecrets of his heart are made manifeſt, and ſo falling down on his face, he will worſhip God, 1 Cor. 14. 24, 25. What wrought this ſudden change? Was it the power of men? No, He will report that God is in you of a truth. The man perceived God was there, and upon that apprehenſion his heart was ſubdued, he falls down on his face and worſhips. When God works, the work is done. He works for us, and none can hinder; He works in us, and we cannot hinder. The arm of grace in the word of God is invincible. O that God would ſpeak.

Verſ. 6. And that he would ſhew thee the ſecrets of wiſdom, &c.

As if he had ſaid, 'Tis but reaſon that I ſhould call God to ſpeak unto thee, for the ſecrets and depths of wiſdom are hidden from and above our reaſon. The natural man perceiveth not any thing of God, and the ſpiritual man may be yet unable to perceive many of the things of God. O that God would ſhew thee the ſecrets of wiſdom.

Videtur Jobo impingere quaſi illi abſtruſam Dei ſapientiam ſe aſſequi gloriatus fuiſſet. Merc.

Zophar ſeems to meet with Job's ſeeming boaſt, that he was one of Gods familiars, and well acquainted with his will. The conviction riſeth thus, Thou haſt carried it as if thou wert of the Cabinet-councel in heaven, as if thou hadſt ſtood at Gods ſide, when he gave his orders and diſpatches concerning the affairs and motions of the whole world; thou takeſt upon thee, as if thou wert the favourite of the great King, and knoweſt his heart; But if God ſpeak to thee indeed, he will ſhew thee other manner of ſecrets then thou art yet acquainted with, thou ſhalt at once ſee that thou miſtakeſt much, and knoweſt little.

O that he would ſhew thee the ſecrets.] Or, The hidden things [of wiſdom.] Here we have Zophars argument diſtinct from his two friends. He deals with Job, not ſo much to convince him of his own ſinfulneſs, as of the myſteriouſneſs of divine wiſdom. Thou complaineſt and cryeſt out of the hand of God, of thy great afflictions: I tell thee there is a ſecret of wiſdom in this diſpenſation, I will plead no other juſtification of Gods proceedings, but only this, God is infinite in wiſdom, O that God would ſhew thee the ſecrets of wiſdom.

Every word, and all the works of God are full of wiſdom, and yet many of them are ſo plain and eaſie, that he that runs may read them: So plain and eaſie, that an Adonibezeck may run, ye fall and read them (Judg. 1.7.) As I have done, ſo God hath requited me. There was no myſtery at all in that. Senſe and reaſon have their leſſons, as well as grace and faith. But as there are ſome leſſons eaſie enough for ſenſe; ſo there are not a few hard enough for faith. And as ſome ſins of men are plain, very ſinful, yet very plain, while other ſins lie cloſe in the heart, and are not only an iniquity, but a myſtery of iniquity, or iniquity wrapt up in a myſtery (the whole body of Antichriſtian iniquity is a myſtery): So ſome leſſons of the wiſdom of God are plain, full of wiſdom, and full of plainneſs; we may read wiſdom upon the very letter of ſome words, and in the face of ſome works of God, while other leſſons of wiſdom are hard, ſo hard to be underſtood, that none can unriddle the meaning of them. And in this the Lord maintaineth his own honour, and keepeth ſtate; he will not have all he doth, or all he ſpeaks lie level to every apprehenſion, or to be a Text for every mans interpretation; he hath ſome knotty ænigma's and obſcure riddles to exerciſe the holieſt wits, the higheſt parts, the choiſeſt gifts of his people, yea and their patience too: they muſt ſtand waiting and expecting, yea admiring and wondering what God meaneth. 'Tis learned neſcience willingly not to know, what God is unwilling we ſhould know. They are as good Scholars who endeavour not to learn what he is not pleaſed to teach them, as they who have learned what he teacheth them. Though his ſecrets be with thoſe that fear him, yet we muſt fear to be among his ſecrets.

Sunt quædam abyſſi de quibus diſputare, quas ſcrutari, eſt ſeipſum præcipitare. San. Erudita inſcitia eſt, non ſcire velle quæ magiſter maximus nos voluit neſcire.

The ſecrets of wiſdom here eſpecially meant, are (I conceive) the ſecrets of providence; That's the ſubject upon which the diſpute runs: God in his actings toward mankind, hath many reſerves in his own breaſt and boſome, which no man is able, or ſhould adventure to give any reaſon or account of, beſides the dictate and meer good pleaſure of his own good will.

Once more, O that he would ſhew thee the ſecrets of wiſdom, is, as if Zophar had ſaid, Thou judgeſt upon the out-ſide, thou dwelleſt in the bark and rinde of divine diſpenſations, thou canſt not look into their heart, God alone can ſhew that to thee. The word which we tranſlate [Shew] ſignifies to interpret and expound that which is dark, myſterious and ænigmatical.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, Wiſdom is a ſecret, or hath a ſecret in it.

1. Then it is precious. That which is very common may be very good (as air and water) but it cannot bear any great price. 2. Then wiſdom muſt be ſought for, and ſought with diligence; If thou ſeekeſt her as ſilver, and ſearcheſt for her as for hid treaſures, (Prov. 2.4.) Wiſdom lies deep, as the veins of gold ſilver in the earth. Wiſdom is to be ſought as ſilver. Silver is not to be had upon the ſurface of the earth there you may find pibbles and flints, but if you would have ſilver, you muſt dig and Mine for it. Secrets are not ſeen at firſt ſight, nor found out upon the firſt ſearch; we muſt enquire and enquire, look and look, enquire and look often, and long for the ſecrets of wiſdom. We may buy gold too dear, and be at more charge to ſeek for ſilver, then the ſilver will be worth when it is found. But we cannot buy wiſdom too dear; and the leaſt vein of divine ſecrets, which we find, will not only bear all our charges in the ſearch, but enrich us alſo.

Again, The word is in the plural, O that God would ſhew thee the ſecrets of wiſdom. Hence note,

There are many ſecrets in wiſdom.

The Apoſtle (Epheſ. 3.10.) ſpeaks of the manifold wiſdom of God. His wiſdom is full of variety, it is of many ſorts and forms, of many folds and plights. The wiſdom of God is ſimple and uncompounded, it is pure and unmixed with any thing but it ſelf, yet it is manifold in degrees, kindes and adminiſtrations, There are ſecrets of wiſdom; when you have learned one ſecret, there are more to be learned. As there is not only a ſecret, but ſecrets, many ſecrets of iniquity lie in the heart of man; we may go from one room of the heart unto another (as the Prophet Ezekiel was carried from one place to another about the houſe of the Lord, Chap. 8.) to ſee greater and greater abominations. Thus you may go from ſecret to ſecret, from one ſecret of wiſdom to another, and when you have ſeen both, there are yet greater ſecrets to be ſeen, beſides thoſe which ſhall never be ſeen. Some works of wiſdom are unſearchable, and paſt finding out; they are alſo innumerable and paſt reckoning up. Some things are called ſecrets, becauſe they can hardly be known; other things are called ſecrets, becauſe they cannot at all be known. A third ſort are ſo ſecret, that it is our ſin to attempt, yea to deſire to know them. All the ſecrets of wiſdom are in God, yet ſome belong unto us; and they are called ſecrets, not becauſe they are not at all revealed, but becauſe they are obſcurely revealed. Some ſecrets in God belong to God alone; and they are called ſecrets, becauſe they are not at all revealed. That's the meaning of Moſes, Deut. 29.29. Secret things belong unto the Lord our God; but things revealed unto us, and our children for ever.

Thirdly, The ſpecial ſecrets of wiſdom here ſpoken of, being ſeated in providence, Obſerve,

The works of God are full of ſecret wiſdom.

As there are myſteries in the Word, ſo in the works of God. There are myſteries in the work of redemption, the whole Goſpel is a myſtery. The great myſtery of godlyneſs, 1 Tim. 3.16. Now as the work of redemption is full of myſteries, ſo are the works of providence; How many hath God poſed and put to a ſtand to read and pick out the meaning of his providential motions? why he afflicteth this man, why he proſpereth that; why affairs go ſometimes forward, and why at any time backward; why the deliverance of the Church proceeds no faſter, and why deliverance makes ſo many ſtops and ſtands, why ſuch inſtruments are laid aſide, and ſuch imployed, theſe poſe and gravel the underſtanding of man: nor can we give any account of them till we go into the Sanctuary, and inform our ſelves from the oracle of the Word about the order of the works of God.

Fourthly, Obſerve, God only can ſhew and teach us effectually the ſecret wiſdom of his works and of his word.

As we learned from the former clauſe, That a word of Gods ſpeaking humbles the ſoul: ſo here we learn, That a word of Gods ſpeaking enlightens the ſoul. God is the revealer of ſecrets, There is a God in heaven (ſaith Daniel, chap. 2.28.) that revealeth ſecrets. I cannot interpret the Kings dream, or ſpell the meaning of it, but there is one in heaven that can, his name is the revealer of ſecrets. If he ſhew them, we ſhall ſurely ſee them. Thou haſt corrected me (ſaith repenting Ephraim) and I was corrected; and if God inſtruct us, we ſhall be inſtructed. The dulleſt Scholar cannot but learn, if God vouchſafe to be his Tutour. He that made the underſtanding can make us underſtand. This is one of the articles of the new Covenant, Heb. 8.11. In thoſe dayes I will put my lawes into their minds, and write them in their hearts, and they ſhall not teach every man his neighbour, ſaying, Know the Lord, for all ſhall know me from the leaſt to the greateſt: God himſelf hath undertaken to be our teacher: though we are unapt, dull and indocible, yet, he hath promiſed to be at the pains to teach us. His teaching doth not acquit us from our attendance upon the teaching of man, but aſſures us that he will teach his, if man doth not: and that while man teacheth, he will make that teaching effectual and ſucceſsful. When he gives us the candle or light of his Spirit to read his Word by, we read and underſtand: And unleſs he give us the candle or light of his Spirit to read his works by, we cannot read them with underſtanding. We are as ignorant in the book of the creatures, as in the book of Scripture, until God inſtruct us; and if he inſtruct us, we prove knowing in both. What I do (ſaith Chriſt, John 13.7.) thou knoweſt not now; but thou ſhalt know hereafter: And what was the date of this hereafter? even the day of the Spirits operation in him. Ye have an unction (as the beloved Diſciple writes, 1 John 2.20.) from the holy one, and ye know all things. When the anointing teacheth, we have a qualified, a moderated Omniſcience. He knows all things (in this ſence) who knows as much as concerns him to know; and except the anointing teacheth us, we know never a Letter, either of what God hath written, or of what he is doing, as we ought to know. His ancient people the Jews, (Pſal. 106. 7.) underſtood not his works; and he reproves them by the Stork in the heavens, by the Turtle, Crane, and Swallow, by all the fowls of the air, as more learned and ſagacious in his works and providences, then the men of Iſrael. The ſtork in the heavens knoweth her appointed times, and the Turtle, and the Crane, and the Swallow obſerve the time of their coming, but my people know not the judgment of the Lord (Jer. 8.7.) My people do not underſtand when it is winter, and when it is ſummer; when it is a ſeaſon of mercy, and when of judgment. Some are ſick, their bodies are ſmitten; others are poor, their eſtates are ſmitten; a third ſort are diſgraced, their names are ſmitten; but they have neither ears to hear, nor hearts to underſtand unto this day. How ſenſleſs are thouſands at this day about the great things which God is doing among us? He works terrible things in righteouſneſs, but few learn either the righteouſneſs of their own wayes, or the righteouſneſs of Gods wayes. Few learn either what God hath done, or what themſelves ought to do. O that God would teach ſuch the ſecrets of his wiſdom!

That they are double to that which is.

The word double, is not here taken arithmetically or ſtrictly, as noting juſt two for one; but by double, is meant much or manifold; a certain exceſs being put for an uncertain: it is frequent, in the language of Scripture, to call thoſe things which exceed much, double; and but double, though they exceed very much, though they exceed ſeven fold, yea an hundred fold, Iſa. 40. 2. Speak comfortably to Jeruſalem, &c. for ſhe hath received of the Lords hand double for all her ſins. But doth it ſuit with the goodneſs of God, or his ſparing mercy, to puniſh his people much for ſin, or double for their ſin? Doth not Zophar in this verſe, argue Job into patience, and redargue his impatience, by telling him, That God exacted of him leſs then his iniquity deſerved; and did he exact of Jeruſalem double for all her iniquities?

I anſwer, God is ſo far from exacting double of his people for ſin in a way of ſatisfaction, that he taketh nothing of them, not a penny of them upon that account. Chriſt is the only pay-maſter for believers to the juſtice of God, and he hath paid double, yea, an hundred fold, in ſufficiency, for all their ſins. When the Church receives double, it is double, that is, full chaſtiſement for all her ſins, but ſhe makes no payment for any one of her ſins. So double deſtruction threatned upon the enemy, is full deſtruction, (Jer. 17. 17.) And when the Church is promiſed double honour for her ſhame, Iſa. 61. 7. and double liberty for her reſtraint and impriſonment, (Zech. 9. 12.) the Prophets give her aſſurance of compleat honour and perfect liberty.

In ſpelunca duplici, i. e. excellenti, pulchra & eximia. Bol.

Again, The word double is put alſo for that which is in any kind choice and excellent. The burying place which Abraham bought of Ephron, is called (from this word) the Cave of Machpelah; that is, ſay ſome, a double Cave, one for men, another for women, one within another; or, as others, a fair, beautiful Cave; to which ſence, the words of the children of Heth, at the ſixth verſe, ſeem to lead us: In the choice of our ſepulchers bury thy dead. That which is beſt or moſt, is double at leaſt. Thus the ſecrets of God, being very excellent, are double,

לתושיה

To that which is.] The word which we tranſlate, that which is, beareth a very various ſence, and ſo renders the Text very difficult.

Secundum legem. Pag. Et quod multiplex eſſet lex ejus Vulg.

Intellige legem Noæ datam. Hug. Grot. in loc.

Firſt, It ſignifies a Law or Rule preſcribed to live and walk by; Hence ſome tranſlate, They are double according to the Law. O that he would ſhew thee, that his Law is double, or that there is a great deal more in the Law, then thou apprehendeſt. Some reſtrain this to the Law given Noah, the ſeven precepts whereof are famous among the ancient traditions of the Jews. The firſt whereof, forbad the worſhip of ſtrange gods. The ſecond commanded to bleſs the Name of the true God. The third prohibited the ſhedding of innocent blood. The fourth was againſt the defilements of filthy luſts. The fifth againſt Theft. The ſixth concerned judgment and juſtice. The ſeventh ſaid, Thou ſhalt not pull a member from a living creature, and eat it.

Duplicia tibi conveniunt, i. e. duplo majora ſupplicia quam patiaris, juxta æquitatis normam. Merc.

But we need not reduce Zophar's text to theſe ſtraights; but enlarge it to the whole revealed will of God, which is often called the Law of God. The Hebrew particle affixed, noteth a relation; double according to, or, by the meaſure of the Law. As if he had ſaid, Thou haſt narrow thoughts of God, and of his ſecret wiſdom in afflicting thee; but according to law, thy afflictions might be double upon thee, God might make his little finger heavier then his loyns have been. To this ſence Mr. Broughton tranſlates; And that thou ſhouldeſt have double by juſtice.

Hence obſerve, There is more righteouſneſs in the law of God then man is able to comprehend.

As there is more mercy in the Goſpel then we are able to comprehend (no man ever ſaw into the depths of that mercy) ſo there is more holineſs in the Law, then we are able to comprehend: No man ever ſaw into the depths of that righteouſneſs. There is an infinite holineſs in the Law, (Pſal. 119. 96.) I have ſeen an end of all perfection, but thy Commandment is exceeding broad: He ſpeaks not in the concrete, I have ſeen an end of perfect things; but in the abſtract, an end of perfection, and of all perfection; I have come to the outſide, or to the very bottom of all (a man may ſoon travel through all the perfections that are in the world, and either ſee their end, or ſee that they muſt end.) But thy commandment is exceeding broad; that is, it is exceedingly broader then any of theſe perfections, I cannot ſee the end of it, and I know it ſhall never have an end. There is a vaſtneſs of purity and ſpiritualneſs in the Law. Some narrow it up into a ſmall compaſs; the Phariſees of old, with their poor impure ſpirits and groſs imaginations, ſtraightned the Law into their model, and made it very narrow: They thought no man brake the Law, which ſaith, Thou ſhalt do no murder, but he that cut his brothers throat: That no man brake the Law that forbiddeth Adultery, but he that actually defiled his neighbours wife, &c. But when Chriſt opened the myſteries of the Law, he ſhewed ſecrets of wiſdom there. His Doctrine aſſureth, That a luſtful thought is a violation of that Commandment, Thou ſhalt not commit Adultery: That an angry thought is a breach of that Commandment, Thou ſhalt not kill. Thus the Law is of a vaſt compaſs. I (ſaith Paul) was once alive without the Law (Rom. 7. 9.) I thought my ſelf a brave man, I was ſome body, my Conſcience never troubled me, I knew not my diſeaſe, while the Law ſtood aloof off, and I was without the Law, (Not that Paul had not the Law both written in his heart, and in his book; for as a Phariſee, he was brought up among the Commentators of the Law) but he was without it, or, he was but at the outſide of it (though I give it not for the proper meaning of the place, yet in that ſence alſo) he was without the Law; he had not travelled through the length and breadth of it: But (ſaith He) when the Commandment came, when it came in the ſpiritualneſs of it, and I ſaw, in ſome meaſure, what holineſs was couched there, I was then in a woful condition, I ſaw my ſelf a loſt man; then ſin revived, and I died; and (ver. 13.) Sin by the Commandment became exceeding ſinful; that is, when the Commandment was cleared to me, then I ſaw that I was extream ſinful, or felt the violent motions of my ſin. My ſin being diſcovered by that light, began to ſpit out its venom, either provoking me with freſh and unwearied aſſaults to commit it, or terrifying and vexing me for what I had committed. There is a multiplicity of purities in the Law, reaching the multiplicity of impurities and ſinful imaginations in us. The Law of God doth, though the Laws of men do not, nor can, take notice of, and deſcend to the leaſt Items and punctilio's. A man cannot ſo much as go a hairs breadth beyond that which is right, but the Law is upon his back; a man cannot have a wry thought, but the Law meets with it; and a godly man (who is ſpiritual, and hath a new nature in him) ſeldom hath a wrong thought, but he takes himſelf tardy in it, and finds ſomewhat in that holy and righteous will of Divinæ legis multiplicatio in eo conſiſtit, quod ad minima quæque ſe extendit. Aq. Lex Dei curat de minimis.

God, by which he can charge himſelf a ſinner. Whereas, they that are carnal, and ignorant of the Law, can run on in a thouſand ſins, and never tell themſelves of one, nor will they be convinced, when another tells them. A godly man hath a Preacher in his own boſom; if he do but ſtep aſide, or do amiſs, ſomewhat within will ſhew him a rule, and bring him a light to take meaſure of, and ſee his failings by. He (as the Apoſtle hath it, 2 Cor. 10. 6.) hath in a readineſs to revenge every diſobedience. He finds a weapon ready to his hand, in the Magazin of the word of God, to avenge every diſobedience of his heart; if but a vain thought ariſe, he hath ſomewhat ready to check it; ſuch is the variety and largeneſs of the Law, that it diſcovers and controlls every aberration. If God ſhew a Soul the ſecrets of wiſdom in the glaſs of the Law, he muſt confeſs that it is double to all he knew before, from the light of nature, or from the dictates of humane reaſon.

Præſcriptum rationis quod ſequi oportet in pœnis irrogandis Rab. Levi.
Infinitæ ſunt in mente Dei leges, rationes, & modi quibus utitur in mortalium regimine; qui ſenſus leniſſimus eſt. Bold.

Secondly, The word ſignifies an inward Law, as well as an outward; yea, the height and ſpirit, the extractions and quinteſſence of reaſon come under this notion. There is a reaſon, a preſcript of reaſon in God. He acteth by a rule within himſelf, his righteous will is his rule. He gives us a law to regulate our wills, but his own will is his law. We need give no other reaſon, that what he hath done is right, but this, that he hath done it. We have received one law from the mind of God, but there are infinite laws in the mind of God. Thus the ſence runs very clear; O that God would ſhew thee the ſecrets of wiſdom, that they are double (to what thou thinkeſt) according to the internal, eternal movings and thoughts of his own heart. Hence David's holy rapture (Pſal. 40. 5.) Many, O Lord my God, are thy wonderful works, and thy thoughts which are to us-ward, they cannot be reckoned up in order to thee: If I would declare and ſpeak of them, they are more then can be numbred. The works of God toward his people are many and wonderful, but his thoughts are more. The thoughts of God are the eternal purpoſes of his heart. He doth not think and then reſolve, but his thoughts are his reſolutions. His thoughts ſtand, he never loſt or laid aſide any one of them.

Duplo majora eſſe iis quæ exiſtunt Jun.
Vox Thuſiah complectitur omnes virtutes Dei, ejus ſapientiam & juſtitiam, quæ duplo, i. e. multo major & illuſtrior eſt quàm nobis videatur, vel noſtra ratio capere poſſit.

We tranſlate, That they are double to that which is: the word ſignifieth being, or the exiſtence of a thing; and ſo others render, O that he would ſhew thee the ſecrets of wiſdom, that they are double to thoſe things which exiſt: As if he had ſaid, The Lord hath revealed and made many things apparent, but the things which appear not, are far more then thoſe which do appear; the ſecret wiſdom of God exceeds what he hath revealed; he afflicteth thee according to what he hath revealed, but he might afflict thee more; if he ſhould proceed with thee according to the height of his ſecret wiſdom. Hence obſerve,

> That, The wiſdom of God which appeareth to us, is not half, or is but little in compariſon of that which is in God.

The Lord hath not brought forth all the treaſures of his wiſdom; he hath not ſtamped all his wiſdom upon any thing which he hath done, no nor upon any thing he hath ſpoken: It is not poſſible that a finite nature ſhould receive the whole impreſſion of an infinite wiſdom. Our receipts are but drops, he hath an Ocean of wiſdom in himſelf. We are narrow-mouth'd veſſels, we take in by little and little. We are veſſels of a ſmall and narrow gage; when we have taken in all we can, we have taken in but little. God gives us more then we receive, and he hath more then he hath given. As the ſecrets of ſin in man are double to thoſe which appear; no man ever ſinned out all the ſinfulneſs of his heart. Though thouſands have brought forth abundance, though they have acted many abominations, yet as Solomon ſpeaks, there are ſtill ſeven abominations in their hearts. Monſters and Prodigies of wickedneſs lie in thoſe dens and dark chambers, which the world never ſaw. Now as the ſecrets of ſin in man are double to thoſe which appear; ſo much more are the ſecrets of wiſdom in God. The great God of heaven and earth hath a ſtock, a ſtore of wiſdom by him, which no creature ever ſaw or looked into, or is indeed capable of. No man, but the Man-Chriſt, hath known ſo much as is poſſible to be known of God, and moſt of God is impoſſible to be known by man. We ſhould be aſhamed, that we know no more of what is revealed; and we ſhould adore what is not revealed to our knowledge. The wiſdom of God is divided into ſecret and revealed: mans portion is in things revealed; Gods portion is in ſecret things: God hath reſerved a far greater portion for himſelf then he hath given unto man; that which will ſerve man, will not ſerve the Lord; his portion is as much above mans, as himſelf is above man. This Zophar layes before Job, that he might convince and humble him. Why doſt thou cavil or fret thy ſelf through with impatience, at what God doth, ſeeing thou canſt not ſound the reaſon of what he doth? thou haſt not fathomed God; thou haſt not reported all that God is, or hath, The ſecrets of wiſdom are double to that which is.

His next words are an inference upon, or the uſe of this Doctrine.

Know therefore that God exacteth of thee leſs then thine iniquity deſerveth.

Thus he applies what he had ſpoken in general. God hath ſecrets of wiſdom, and they are double; What then? I infer this upon it, Know therefore (O Job) that God exacteth of thee leſs then thine iniquity deſerveth.. Obſerve from Zophar's method,

> That, Truths are to be applied and brought home to the Conſcience of the hearer, or to the buſineſs under debate.

Poſſibly Job might not have known the meaning of Zophar's diſcourſe, That God had ſecrets of wiſdom, and that the ſecret wiſdom of God is double to his revealed; he might be to ſeek what uſe to make of this: Therefore (ſaith he) know (here is the application) God exacteth of thee leſs then thine iniquity deſerveth.

Exacteth of thee.] The Hebrew Naſhah, ſignifies, to forget, to lend, and to exact what is lent; and from this fruitfulneſs of the Original, there ariſe ſundry interpretations of the Text. Many take the former ſence; as Naſhah, ſignifies, to forget, and they differ yet much in giving the meaning of the whole Sentence.

Firſt thus, Know therefore that God maketh or cauſeth thee to forget thine iniquity; as if he had ſaid, There is infinite wiſdom in God, and if he ſhould break forth upon thee in the full luſtre of his holineſs, and make thee remember all thy ſins, thou wouldeſt be ſwallowed up in the gulf of thy own ſinfulneſs. As no man can ſee the face of God and live, it is ſo glorious; ſo a ſinner cannot ſee his own face and live, it is ſo odious. As God in condeſcention to our weakneſs, ſhews us but the back-parts of his glorious ſelf, ſo but the back-parts of our ſinful ſelves. It is alwayes our ſin to forget our ſins, but it is often mercy in God to make us forget them. Know therefore that God makes thee to forget thine iniquity; that is, the Lord doth not ſet them in the eye of thy Conſcience, nor deals he with thee as if thou hadſt committed ſuch ſins, which yet he could bring to thy remembrance, and ſet them in order before thine eyes. So the interlineal gives it, Know that God doth cauſe ſomewhat of thine iniquity to be hidden from thee, or, to be a ſecret to thee. God doth not open the pack of thine iniquity, and ſhew thee all the wickedneſs that is in thine heart and life; God lets ſome of it lie hid, and be as a thing forgot, or a ſecret to thy ſelf.

Scito quod Deus latere facit aliquid de iniquitate tua. Ar. Mont.

Secondly, Others refer this forgetfulneſs to God himſelf, who is ſaid to forget the fault, when he remits the puniſhment. This comes up to the ſenſe of our Tranſlators; for when a thing is forgotten, then it is not exacted, or called for (Act. 17. 30) The times of this ignorance God winked at; he regarded not, he looked not after what was done; (that's the common expoſition of the Text) God did (as it were) forget the ſinfulneſs of thoſe times. As God is ſaid to forget ſin, or to remember it no more, when he fully pardons it; ſo he may be ſaid to forget ſin, when he doth not fully puniſh it. When meer ignorance hinders man from ſeeing, meer mercy hinders God from ſeeing. He is pleaſed to wink, when we cannot ſee. When men have not much underſtanding what to do, God hath not much memory of what they do; that is, he doth not ſtrictly reckon with them, or bring them to an account for what they have done. Though a ſin of ignorance is damnable in it ſelf, and may condemn the ſinner, yet the Lord puts a difference between ſins committed ignorantly and knowingly, in the dark and in the light; between thoſe which are committed againſt the light of nature only, and thoſe committed againſt Goſpel-light. Thus the preſent expoſition carries it;

Know,

Scito quod Deus remiſit tibi partem iniquitatum tuarum. Vatabl.

Oblitus, i.e. pœnam iniquitatis tuæ debitam diſtulit. Tyg.

Know, O Job, that God handles thee, as if he had forgotten or were ignorant of thine iniquity. Which interpretation a learned Writer makes his tranſlation of the Text; Know therefore, that God hath remitted part of thine iniquity.

A third renders, Know therefore that God hath deferred thine iniquity, he hath put it aſide for a time, and hath not called thee to a preſent anſwer. Deferring is a temporary forgetting; when a man doth willingly forget a thing, he intends not to take a ſtrict or ſudden account of it; as when he forgets unwillingly or through infirmity, he cannot take any account of it at all.

Scito quod oblitus eſt tui Deus propter iniquitatem.

There is yet a fourth interpretation given from this ſenſe of the word, Know therefore that God hath forgotten thee, becauſe of thine iniquity; and ſo the forgetfulneſs lies upon Job's perſon, and not upon Job's ſin; Thou complaineſt that God regards thee not, hears not thy cry, attends not to thy prayer, haſtens not in with relief and ſuccour in this thy ſad condition, Know that God forgets thee, and he hath reaſon to do ſo; He forgets thee becauſe of thine iniquity. God forgets thoſe who have forgotten him, Prov. 1.28. Then ſhall they call upon me, but I will not anſwer; they ſhall ſeek me early, but they ſhall not find me. But hath not the Lord promiſed to anſwer when we call, yea to anſwer before we call? Hath he not promiſed to be found of thoſe that ſeek him? yea to be found of thoſe who ſeek him not? Why then are theſe earneſt ſuitors rejected, unanſwered? The cauſe was in themſelves; They hated knowledge: therefore God would not know them: They would none of his counſels, therefore he would none of their prayers. God put them in mind, but they forgot him; therefore they put God in mind, and he forgot them: Know therefore that God hath forgotten thee, becauſe of thine iniquity. To obey God is to remember him, and none are ſo much remembred by God, as they who obey him; to ſin againſt God is to forget him, and none are forgotten of God, but for their ſin.

We tranſlate, God exacteth of thee [leſs then thine iniquity deſerveth.] The word ſignifies alſo to lend (as was toucht before) ſo we read (Deut. 15.2. Deut. 24.10.) in the Laws given to the Jews about releaſing; to exact leſs then due, is, to releaſe ſomewhat of what is lent. The Adverb leſs is not in the Original, no nor the verb deſerveth; our Tranſlators have added both in a different letter, to ſupply and clear their ſence upon the place, the words being only thus, Know that God exacteth of thee for thine iniquity. Mr. Broughton renders it roundly ſo, Know that the Puiſſant will call thee to an account for thine iniquity. Another learned Tranſlator gives it thus, Acknowledge at leaſt that God exacteth ſomewhat of thee for thine iniquity; as if he had ſaid, Do not think that all this evil is come upon thee without cauſe; for ſhame ſubmit, and confeſs that thy ſin hath deſerved ſome of it. Our rendring alludes to the dealing of a merciful Creditor with his Debtor, who is willing to be compounded with, for what is juſtly owing him; or, to the dealing of a merciful Magiſtrate towards a Malefactor, when he layes not the rigor of the Law upon him. Thus the Jews would not exact ſo much puniſhment of Paul, as they ſuppoſed his iniquity deſerved. The Law admitted forty ſtripes; they would not go to the utmoſt line of juſtice; they, to do him a courteſie, or to avoid the ſuſpition of cruelty (though this mercy was cruel) abated him an ace, and therefore gave him only forty ſtripes ſave one. The mercy of God to man, runs not like this, or any other mercy of man to man. When we ſay, God exacteth leſs then iniquity deſerveth, we mean, God hath not exacted half, no nor a tenth of what our iniquity deſerveth. He ſets down but fifty in his Bill of chaſtnings, for an hundred, which he finds in our Bill of tranſgreſſings: And this half which he exacteth, is not taken, either to ſatisfie himſelf, or properly to puniſh us, but to purifie us, that we may glorifie him. God exacteth ſo little, that he indeed exacteth nothing. The word is harſh, and hears ill among men; but God is ſo good to Iſrael, that we know not how to call him an exacter, but becauſe he doth not exact.

Agnoſce ſaltem exigere abs te Deum aliquid de iniquitate tua. Jun.

2 Cor. 11. 24.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, Every ſin makes us debtors to God.

We are in his books, and in his bonds for every tranſgreſſion. All men are in a debt of duty to God (as creatures) which if they pay not, they ſin, and ſo run into a double debt; a debt of duty, which they ſhould have performed, and a debt of penalty, becauſe they have not performed it. Tribulation and anguiſh upon every ſoul of man that doth evil; there is the penalty. Creatures owe God a duty, which they ought to pay; and ſinners owe him him a penalty, which muſt be paid, either by themſelves, or by their Surety. The Apoſtle uſeth that phraſe (Gal. 5.3.) Every man that is circumciſed, is a debtor to the whole Law. He is a debtor in regard of duty, becauſe he that thinks himſelf bound to keep one part of the Ceremonial Law, doth thereby binde himſelf to keep it all; where the parts are inſeparably united, we pull all upon us by engaging or medling with any one. And he that is a debtor in duty to keep the whole Law, muſt needs be a debtor in regard of the penalty; becauſe he is not able to keep any part of it. And that's the reaſon why Chriſt (who ſtood in the place of ſinners) was put to pay both theſe debts, that ſo he might fully cut ſcores with the Law. He paid the debt of duty, by fulfilling all righteouſneſs. He alſo paid the debt of penalty, by enduring all ſorrows; even the ſorrows of death it ſelf. We do but confeſs the debt, and God croſſeth the book, and cancelleth all our bonds. If we confeſs our ſins, he is faithful to forgive us our ſins, and the bloud of Chriſt cleanſeth us from all ſins, 1 Joh. 1.9. The red lines of his bloud are drawn over the black and abominable lines of our tranſgreſſions, and ſo the debt is diſcharged.

Secondly, Obſerve, If God exact not the whole debt of ſinners, it is mercy.

Zophar would have Job to know this, Thou haſt ſpoken hardly of God, becauſe he hath ſmitten and afflicted thee; but God doth not exact of thee what thine iniquity deſerveth; Is not this mercy? It is of the Lords mercies that we are not conſumed, Lam. 3.22. and verſ. 39. Wherefore doth a living man complain, a man for the puniſhment of his ſins? It is mercy if life be ſpared. Though a man be not left a rich man, a ſtrong man, yet if he be left a living man, yea though but a man, he hath no reaſon to complain, while he remembers he is a ſinful man, and is puniſhed for his ſin. It is mercy that we have not the whole debt laid upon us: If God defer any time, or remit any part, it is a favour; As Chriſt paid, ſo he paid all for believers: and the damned ſhall pay all in hell; there ſhall be no releaſing, no compounding of their debts. And becauſe they are not able to pay down the full ſumme at once, therefore they ſhall alwayes be paying. How rich is the grace which we have by Jeſus Chriſt, through whom God releaſeth all our debts! We muſt have paid all, if Chriſt had not paid all: Now he hath paid all, and we pay none at all. Chriſt having paid all for his redeemed ones, God doth not exact one farthing from them, much leſs the utmoſt farthing, as he will from the impenitent and unbelievers.

Thirdly, Obſerve, Afflictions are the deſert of ſin.

God exacteth of thee leſs then thy iniquity, or then thine iniquity deſerveth. Moſt are afflicted for their ſin; none had ever been afflicted, if they had not ſinned. The doctrine is true, though Zophar failed in his application. Job was a ſinner (the beſt of Saints on earth are ſinners) yet God afflicted Job for the trial and improvement of Grace, not for the purging or correcting of his iniquity, as hath been obſerved from thoſe words in the ſecond Chapter, Thou provokeſt me to afflict him without cauſe; that is, without ſuch cauſe as thou ſuggeſteſt, his iniquity or hypocriſie.

Fourthly, Obſerve, That, All the afflictions of this life are leſs then our ſins.

That's Ezra's confeſſion (Ezra 9.13.) After all that is come upon us for our evil deeds, and for our great treſpaſs, ſeeing that thou our God haſt puniſhed us leſs then our iniquities deſerve. Was it a touch, or ſome light ſtroke which God gave Jeruſalem? Was their wound but a ſcratch, or their affliction little? Read the Lamentations of Jeremiah, and you ſhall find how doleful, how ſad, how terrible a judgment was brought upon Jeruſalem; even ſuch, as was not done under the whole heaven: and yet Ezra ſaith, Thou haſt puniſhed us leſs then our iniquities deſerve. As all the good which we do in this life, is leſs then the leaſt of the mercies of God; ſo the leaſt evil of ſin which we commit, is greater then all the evils of puniſhment in this life. In the life to come God will make even with ſinners and with ſaints. Theſe ſhall receive as much good as Chriſt hath deſerved for them, and they ſhall receive as much evil as themſelves have deſerved: Both are here ſhort of their due, yea, and uncapable of their due. The Saints in this life, cannot hold ſo much glory as Chriſt hath purchaſed, (1 Cor. 15. 50.) Fleſh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God. The frame of nature, though purified and purged, is not receptive of heavenly glory. Thus alſo the frame of mans nature unpurified, is not receptive of ſo much puniſhment as ſin deſerveth. This fleſh and blood cannot enter into the Kingdom of hell. Therefore as the Saints ſhall have ſpiritual bodies, that they may be fit veſſels for the glory of heaven; ſo the wicked ſhall (in a ſence) have ſpiritual bodies too, that they may be fit veſſels for the miſery of hell. Their bodies ſhall not die, their bodies ſhall live without the ſupports of nature, meat and drink, ſleep or refreſhing. Thus they ſhall have an Angelical life; and all to this end, that they may be capable ſubjects of the fury and wrath of God, even of all that vengegeance, which he hath prepared, and will powr out upon thoſe who diſobey the Goſpel, and come not in to receive Jeſus Chriſt. We may ſay of wicked men, in this life, Verily they have their reward; they have ſeen the beſt of their dayes, the beſt of their ſtate; but how much ſo ever any wicked man is puniſhed, though he ſpend all his dayes groaning and ſighing, though he be poor and ſick, weak and pained, though he lie upon the rack of the moſt torturing diſeaſes, the Stone, Gout, &c. yet it cannot be ſaid of this man, He hath had his puniſhment. A miſerable ignorant man is ready to ſay, I hope I have had my puniſhment, my hell in this life: Alas! poor ſoul, thou maiſt be pained here and in hell too; thou maiſt go from rack to rack, from torture to torture; preſent puniſhments are but as a ſip of that cup, which ſhall be drunk to the bottom in hell; they are but as ſports to the pains there, and as painted fire to real fire. As the beſt of the Saints portion is behind, their works follow them, their reward waits for them; ſo the worſt of a wicked mans portion is behind; his ſins follow him, his works of ſpiritual darkneſs follow him into eternal darkneſs, his puniſhment waits for him; though his judgment be now aſleep, yet it will be awake, and never ſleep, no, nor ſlumber any more.

VERS. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11.

Canſt thou by ſearching find out God? Canſt thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?

It is as high as heaven, what canſt thou do? deeper then hell, what canſt thou know?

The meaſure thereof is longer then the earth, and broader then the Sea.

If he cut off, and ſhut up, or gather together, then who can hinder him?

For he knoweth vain man, he ſeeth wickedneſs alſo; will he not conſider it?

For vain man would be wiſe, though man is born like a wild aſſes colt.

THe three firſt Verſes of this context are an illuſtration, or a comment upon the ſixth. Zophar having breathed out his wiſh, O that God would ſpeak, and that he would ſhew thee the ſecrets of wiſdom, that they are double to that which is; proceeds to prove, that it is but need he ſhould; thoſe ſecrets being ſuch, as none can ſee, till they are ſhewed. This he ſets on rhetorically, with a vehemently negative expoſtulation.

Verſe 7. Canſt thou by ſearching find out God? Thou canſt not. Canſt thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? It is impoſſible. In the two following verſes, the eighth and the ninth, he purſues the ſame argument; advancing the wiſdom of God above the higheſt heavens, and carrying it below the loweſt parts of the earth: The utmoſt extent of things created is too narrow for the Creator. Mans natural wiſdom reacheth at the moſt, but to the utmoſt bounds of nature. But Gods wiſdom is as high as (that is, higher then) heaven, yea deeper then hell; the meaſure thereof is longer then the earth, and broader then the Sea.

From the vaſtneſs of Gods wiſdom, he deſcends to the abſoluteneſs of his ſoveraignty, at the tenth verſe, and gives an account, or an argument of both in the eleventh and twelfth.

Verſe 7. Canſt thou by ſearching find out God?

The word implies exacteſt diligence to find. Canſt thou by ſearching find? that is, Canſt thou find by all thy ſtudies and endeavours? There is a finding by chance or accident, as well as a finding by ſearch. Some cannot find what they ſearch for; others find what they ſearch not for, (Pſal. 116. 3) The ſorrows of death compaſſed me, and the pains of hell gat hold upon me, I found trouble and ſorrow. I found trouble which I look'd not for; I was not ſearching aſter ſorrow, but I found it. There is an elegancy in the Original (note that by the way) The pains of hell gat hold upon me, ſo we read; the Hebrew is, The pains of hell found me (one word ſignifies both) they found me, I did not find them. But no ſooner had the pains of hell found me, but I found trouble and ſorrow enough, and ſoon enough.

But uſually the word noteth a finding (as here) upon enquiring; Canſt thou by ſearching find? Canſt thou find out God by thy exacteſt ſcrutiny, by the trial of all thy wits, or by the improvement of all thy abilities? That which is eaſie, is found with little ſearch; that which is hardeſt cannot be found with all our ſearch. When God would ſhew the obviouſneſs and openneſs of the ſin of man, he ſaith, I have not found it by ſecret ſearch, but upon all theſe, Jer. 2. 34. Their ſins are evident to every eye. Here when Zophar would ſhew the myſteriouſneſs of the wiſdom of God, he ſaith, Thou canſt not find it by the moſt ſecret ſearch.

But you will ſay, Cannot God be found by ſearching? God is every where; the inviſible God is every where viſible. Senſe ſees ſomewhat of him; though Faith ſees moſt, (By faith Moſes ſaw him that is inviſible, Heb. 11.) Senſe ſhews ſomewhat of him to thoſe who have no faith. You might read much of God in the Book of Nature, if you had not the Book of Scripture to read. Thus the Apoſtle convinceth the Gentiles, (Rom. 1. 20.) The inviſible things of God, to wit, his eternal power and Godhead, are ſeen in things that are made: And how are they ſeen? What! by opening their bowels, or by looking into their heart? No, If you look but upon the face, the ſurface of the Creature, if but upon the rind, the outſide of the things that are made, even their external form and faſhion, their beauty and order draw goodly lines, and make fair repreſentations of God himſelf; even of his eternal power and Godhead. Do but pull up a graſs from the earth, or crop off a leaf from a tree, and you may ſee God upon it. How is it then ſaid, that you cannot find out God, no not by ſearching?

Præſentemque refert quælibet herba Deum.

I anſwer, Firſt, We may find God by ſearching, but we cannot find him out; that is, we cannot find the utmoſt of God; as the next clauſe ſeems to explain: Canſt thou find out the Almighty to perfection?

Secondly, God may be conſidered, either in his being, or in the manner of his being; in his working, or in the manner of his working.

In his being, God is eaſily found out: This notion lies uppermoſt, or riſeth up in every heart; it is a principle that lives in, and cannot be blotted out of a natural Conſcience: Thouſands deny God, but all (who have not quite put out the very light of nature) acknowledge there is a God. A Heathen ſaid, There is no Nation ſo barbarous, ſo untaught and ignorant, but confeſſeth there is a God. When man fell from God, this truth ſtood; as when Cities and great Buildings are overthrown by war, ſome Towers, ſome Pinacles ſurvive the violence; ſo amongſt the ruines and decayes of that perfect nature, which God made at firſt, the notions of a God remained. Atheiſts, who would not find God, find him againſt their wills, even whether they will or no. While they thruſt God out of their Converſations, he continues in their Conſciences. That God is, is ſo eaſily found, that it can hardly be loſt; it is found with ſo little ſtudy, that many who ſtudy much to loſe it, cannot.

But you cannot find out God in the manner of his being, or what a God he is: you cannot find out his power and wiſdom, his holineſs and his juſtice, his faithfulneſs and unchangeableneſs, with all your ſearch; you cannot find theſe diſtinctly in the book of Nature, nor underſtand them eaſily when you find them plainly deſcribed, and highly magnified in the book of Scripture.

Again, We may find out God in his working, or in his works; we may ſee ſuch works done, as ſpeak a God, ſuch, as all muſt ſay with the Magicians of Egypt, The finger of God is here: We may find this with a little ſearching, poſſibly without ſearching; we can hardly hide this from our eyes; yea, if we ſhut our eyes, we have much ado not to ſee it. Some cannot ſee, though their eyes are open; others ſhut their eyes, leſt they ſhould ſee (Iſa. 26. 11.) Lord, when thine hand is lift up, they will not ſee. Some workings of God are ſo eminent and evident, that if men were not wilfully blind, they muſt needs ſee them. That God works, that there is a divine power, carrying on the affairs of the world, is written as with a beam of the Sun. But if we conſider the manner of his working, there's a ſecret, that's myſterious: Providence hath ſuch various wayes, ſuch intricate turnings, that a ſearching man may be to ſeek about them. God doth not alwayes leave the Print of his footſteps, where he goeth. The way of an Eagle in the air, the way of a Ship in the midſt of the Sea, the way of a Serpent upon a Rock, are not ſo untraceable as many of the wayes of God.

Now foraſmuch as Zophar treating of the wiſdom of God, concludeth, That God cannot be found out. Having wiſhed, O that he would ſhew thee the ſecrets of wiſdom, he puts not the Queſtion thus, Canſt thou by ſearching find out the wiſdom of God? But, Canſt thou by ſearching find out God?

Hence obſerve, The wiſdom of God is God.

So alſo the power of God is God, and the holineſs of God is God. The attributes and qualities of God, are eſſential to God; there is no diſtinction between ſubſtance and quality in God. Man and his qualities are two things, man and his wiſdom, man and his holineſs are diſtinct. Many men are neither wiſe nor holy, yet men ſtill. But God and his wiſdom, God and his holineſs are the ſame; He could not be God, if he were either unwiſe or unholy. Once have I ſworn by my holineſs, ſaith God, Pſal. 89. 36. that is, I have ſworn by my ſelf, as the Apoſtle explains it, Heb. 6. 13. Becauſe he could ſwear by no greater, he ſware by himſelf.

Secondly, Obſerve, The wiſdom of God is unſearchable.

As they ſaid in the book of Judges, As the man is, ſo is his might; ſo we may ſay much more, As God is, ſo is his wiſdom. There is more wiſdom of God in making the leaſt thing, then we can make out. Then, what is there in God himſelf? If a man ſhould be examined about the meaneſt Creature, can he reſolve fully, why it is made of ſuch matter, why in ſuch a form? Can he tell why the colour is ſuch, or ſuch the qualities? why for ſuch uſes, and why unto ſuch ends? God hath beſtowed great skill upon ſmalleſt works.

Thirdly, Obſerve, God is unſearchable.

Canſt thou by ſearching find out God? It is not in vain to ſee God, but it is in vain to ſearch him. God is not far from any man (Acts 17. 27.) but he is far above all men. When a Philoſopher was asked by Hiero, What God was? I cannot anſwer ſuddenly (ſaid he) pray give me a day's time to conſider of it; when that day was ended, and the King demanded an anſwer, he deſired a ſecond day, and after that a third, till at laſt he gave it over, profeſſing he could not find out God. God exceeds and ſwallows up, not only the reaſon of natural men, but of ſpiritual. They who are enlightened by the grace of God, cannot ſee all the light that is i God, or all of God, who is light.

Fourthly, When Zophar ſaith, Canſt thou by ſearching find out God? He ſeems to imply,

That, There is a way to find out much of God, though we cannot find him by ſearching.

The beſt knowledge of God is from his own revelation, not by our ſtudy. Would you find out God? Do not think to do it by beating your brains, but by beating the Heavens. The knowledge of God cometh down from God; we know him when he makes himſelf known to us. And uſually he doth not make his fulneſs known to us, till we make our emptineſs known to him. We cannot find out God by reading, but we may by praying. If any man lack wiſdom (eſpecially this wiſdom to know God[illegible] let him ask of God, who giveth liberally, and upbraideth not. It was a good ſpeech of Luther, He hath ſtudied will, who hath prayed well: Prayer attains the key of myſteries, and faith enters into them. Hence, when Zophar had prayed, O that God would ſpeak, and that he would open his lips, and ſhew thee the ſecrets of wiſdom; he preſently concludes all ſearches about him ſucceſleſs, without him, Canſt thou by ſearching find out God?

Bene oraſſe eſt bene ſtuduiſſe. Luth.

Fifthly, If by ſearching we cannot find out God, then we muſt not boldly pry and preſs into the ſecrets of God.

Yet this ſhould not quench endeavour, but regulate it, and keep it in compaſs: This ſhould make us humble, but it muſt not make us idle. Though we cannot know all of God, yet we are bound to learn all that may be known. It will be as much our ſin not to deſire to know what we may, as to deſire to know what we may not. It is our duty to enquire and travel to the utmoſt of our line; we muſt not ſit down where we are, becauſe we cannot go as far as we would. As we muſt aim at, and labour after perfection in holineſs, though we cannot reach it; ſo alſo in knowledge. We muſt not reſt in any imperfect knowledge of God, becauſe we cannot know him perfectly. Which Zophar teacheth us in the next words;

Canſt thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?

This latter clauſe gives light to the former: For ſome may obſerve: Cannot we find out God by ſearching? Great difficulties whet and quicken induſtry, but a total impoſſibility not only dulls, but deads it: If we cannot find out God, why then do we ſearch? Yes, you muſt ſearch, and you may find; but you cannot find him out unto perfection by all your ſearchings.

The word, Perfection, in the Original, ſignifies the height, ſtrength, or utmoſt accompliſhment of a thing. A learned Author tranſlates it, the parts about the heart, or the cloſeſt lodges of the heart; which by a metaphor ſignifies our inward thoughts and moſt retired imaginations. As if he had ſaid, Canſt thou find out the inmoſt receſſes or ſecrets of Gods heart? Haſt thou ſeen what is laid up in the inner chambers of his Spirit? The heart of man is deep, only God can ſearch it; but O how deep is the heart of God? no man can ſearch it.

תכלית Quam Græci συντέλειαν *reddere ſolent, ſignificat finem vel conſummationē rei. Juxta A*pollinariū accipitur pro præcordiis quaſi dei præcordia, cordiſq; receſſus penetrare homini ſit impoſſibile. חקר ſignificat ultimum ſummumque. Coc.

I find a like interpretation given of the former clauſe, in anſwer to this: Canſt thou by ſearching find out God? rendring it thus; Canſt thou find out the laſt thing of God? The word (Hakar) which we tranſlate ſearching, ſignifies the chief and laſt of a thing. And ſo that Text of Solomon is expounded by the ſame Author (Prov. 25. 27) It is not good to eat much honey, ſo for men to ſearch their own glory, is not glory; ſo we render: he thus; It is not good to eat much honey, but the laſt of glory is glory; The ſence of which reading is to this effect. The beſt of temporal and outward things (honey it ſelf) if you eat much of them, will not be ſweet, you may eat honey till honey be loathſome to you; but glory, or heavenly things (he takes glory for the happineſs which man ſhall have with God in Heaven, not for the fame or reſpect which man hath with man on earth, which is the ſenſe of our tranſlation) glory (I ſay) or the ſtate of Heaven, is ſuch, that the laſt of it is glory; the longer you feed upon glory, the ſweeter it will be, the laſt bit will be as ſweet as the firſt; The manna which came down from heaven was loathed by the Iſraelites. But no Iſraelite ſhall loath the manna which he finds in heaven: The laſt of glory will be glory; the longer we eat, the more we ſhall delight; the more we taſte thoſe dainties, the more pleaſant will they be to our taſte. Taking the word (Hakar) in that ſence, it may be rendred, Canſt thou find out the laſt of God? And ſo it falls in with this, Canſt thou find him out unto perfection?

Unto perfection.] Canſt thou come to the uttermoſt of what God is? or of what God doth? Canſt thou know God, as we ſpeak (a capite ad calcem) from head to foot, from beginning to end, from firſt to laſt, within and without? Canſt thou take in all the excellencies and dimenſions of God? thou canſt not do it, man, wert thou more then a man; hadſt thou the underſtanding of an Angel thou couldſt not do it. How much ſoever thou art above man, below God, thou canſt not find out God unto perfection; God only knows God perfectly.

Inveniri poteſt demſed non ad plenum. Druſ.

Hence obſerve, Though much of God may be found out, yet all cannot.

We cannot find him out unto perfection. Finite cannot hold infinite. Some may conceit (but it is a meer conceit) that they can; as a Country fellow thinks, if he were upon ſuch a Mountain which bounds the Horizon, he could touch Heaven, and take a Star in his hand; but when he comes thither, Heaven is as far off as it was, and the Stars as much out of his reach, as they were, where he ſtood before: Such are the gueſſes of men about God: if they could attain ſuch a point, and be reſolved in ſuch a doubt, then (doubtleſs) they ſhould know all the myſteries of the Divine nature: but if they get thither, they are as far from the perfection of God as before; for how near ſoever we come to God, there is an infinite diſtance between us and God. Every Believer is near God in affection, yet is he ſtill infinite removes from his perfection. When we ſeem to come neareſt the perfections of God, God goes further off from us, and we are as much to ſeek as ever. When holy Auguſtine walked by the ſea-ſide, rapt in the meditation of God and of his wayes, he heard a voice, which bad him lade the ocean with a cockle-ſhell: We may ſooner drain the ocean with ſuch a little ſhell, or with a ſpoon, then the perfections of God with our largeſt underſtandings. The Lord beſpeaks Job (chap. 38. 22.) Haſt thou entred into the treaſures of the ſnow? There are ſecrets in Nature, which were never entred into by Art: The treaſures of the ſnow deſcend upon us, but we cannot aſcend into the treaſures of the ſnow: we cannot enter into natural things, how ſhall we enter into ſpiritual? how ſhall we enter into the God of ſpirits? Eye hath not ſeen, nor ear heard, neither have entred into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him, (1 Cor. 2. 9.) And if the things which God hath prepared for man, have not yet entred into his heart, can God, who hath prepared thoſe things, enter into his heart? Solomon puts the queſtion (Eccleſ. 11. 5.) Canſt thou know how the bones do grow in the womb of her that is with child? Even ſo (ſaith he) thou knoweſt not the work of God who maketh all. If natural queſtions poſe us, divine queſtions may amaze us. To know God here is eternal life; and yet we ſhall not know all of God in eternal life. It is our perfection to know God while we ſojourn here upon the earth; yet we ſhall not know God to the utmoſt of his perfection in Heaven: In Heaven we ſhall know him perfectly, but not unto perfection: Now we know in part, then we ſhall know as we are known; that is, we ſhall know much, we ſhall know abundantly: Now we ſee through a glaſs darkly, but then face to face (1 Cor. 13. 12.) that is, clearly, immediately, not by reflection, but by intuition. Then the curtains ſhall be drawn aſide; then all the clouds and dark vapours, which ſtand between us and truth, ſhall be ſcattered from before our eyes: Then, the beautiful face of truth ſhall be unveiled, there ſhall not ſo much as any doubt interpoſe between truth and our underſtandings. Thoſe perplexed queſtions, and fatal controverſies, which have troubled the peace of the Churches, and exerciſed, yea, vexed the greateſt wits to reſolve and compoſe them, ſhall have all their knots untied, and their fallacies diſcovered by the meaneſt Scholar in glory. And yet Zophar's denying queſtion may be put to the higheſt Graduate in glory; Canſt thou find out God unto perfection? As there ſhall be no ſeekers in heaven, ſo, no ſuch finders. Creatures ſhall there know ſo much of God as will make them perfectly happy, but to know God unto perfection, is more then comes to the ſhare of a creatures happineſs. 'Tis the perfect happineſs of God, to know himſelf unto perfection.

Cum acceſſeris, longius abit.

Zophar having by way of queſtion laid down this Poſition. That, man cannot find out God unto perfection, exemplifies it.

Verſe 8. It is as high as heaven, what canſt thou do? deeper then hell, what canſt thou know?

Altitudines cœli, Heb. Emphaſin continet plurale, more Hebræorum, maximam altitudinem ſignificans.

It is as high as heaven, what canſt thou do?] What is as high as Heaven? The Wiſdom of God is. Wiſdom is the ſoaring Antecedent to this Relative. The Hebrew is plural, It is as the highneſſes of heaven; take all the heights and elevations, all the ſpheres and ſtories of Heaven, climb the loftieſt pinnacles of Heaven, Wiſdom is higher, or high beyond them all: ſo it may be rendered from the original, high above the heavens.

Some Tranſlators give us the Text in this Interrogation, What wilt thou do in the height of the heavens? which ſounds like the Apoſtles caution; Be not high minded, but fear: or like David's humble acknowledgment (Pſal. 131. 1.) I do not exerciſe my ſelf in things too high for me: As if he had ſaid, Seeing thou canſt not mannage the height of the Heavens, ſurely thou canſt not digeſt the height of God who is above the Heavens: If thou ſhouldſt be put to give an account of things in Heaven, of the Sun, Moon and Stars, or of their motion, thou wilt be puzled. How then wilt thou be able to give an account of him who is higher then the Heavens, whom the Heaven of Heavens cannot contain? (1 Kings 8. 17. Iſa. 66. 1.) Who alſo buildeth his ſtories in the heavens, Amos 9. 6. Aſtronomers have left us the doctrine of the Heavens; they tell us of the nature and order, of the qualities and influences of thoſe ſuperiour bodies: but they ſpeak moſt by gueſs, or without book. There is no certainty in that knowledge, though ſome probability. Aſtronomers look up to Heaven, but they bring little of Heaven down to us. What wilt thou do in the height of heaven?

Quid facies in altitudine cælorum? Sept. Vatabl. Pag. Regia.

Further, when Zophar ſaith, The wiſdom of God is as high as heaven, he means, his Wiſdom is exceeding high. The higheſt Heaven being the higheſt of all things viſible, that muſt needs be higher then the higheſt of viſibles, which is higher then the Heavens; and becauſe thoſe things which are extream high affect us highly, therefore he gives Divine wiſdom the utmoſt line of the dimenſion. It is as high as heaven.

Deeper then hell, what canſt thou know?] The word Sheol, is taken for all that is deep or low, ſometimes it is put in ſpecial for the grave, here for the place of the damned. As we can do little in the height of Heaven, ſo we know little of the loweſt hell. Some of the upper part of the earth is to us yet (terra incognita) an unknown land: but all of the loweſt part of hell, is to us an unknown land: Many thouſands have travelled thither, but none have returned thence to make reports, or write books of their travels. That piece of Geography is very imperfect. It is deeper then hell, what canſt thou know? Heaven and hell are the greateſt oppoſites, or remoteſt extreams. (Matth. 12. 23.) Thou Capernaum, which art exalted up to heaven, ſhalt be brought down to hell: Heaven and hell are at furtheſt natural diſtance, and are therefore the everlaſting receptacles of thoſe who are at the furtheſt moral diſtance, Believers and unbelievers, Saints and impenitents. And as the height of Heaven, ſo the depth of hell is aſcribed to wiſdom, to ſhew the unſearchableneſs of it. O the depth (as well as O the height) of the wiſdom of God! how unſearchable are his judgments, and his wayes paſt finding out! (Rom. 11. 35.) We read of the deep things of God (1 Cor. 2. 10.) The Spirit ſearcheth all things, even the deep things, or the depths of God. Satan, who is full of ſubtilty and craft, hath his depths alſo, (Rev. 2. 24.) But unto you I ſay, as many as have not known the depths of Satan: That is, who have not approved nor practiſed the policies and devices which Satan inſpires his diſciples with, under the notion of profound wiſdom. Deeps of all ſorts lie far out of our view, and are hard to be found out.

Verſe 9. The meaſure (or the ſtature) of it is longer then the earth, and broader then the ſea.

The former verſe ſhewed us the height and depth of wiſdom; this, its length and breadth.

It is longer then the earth.] He ſpeaks popularly, or to the ſhorteſt and narroweſt capacity; man thinks there is nothing longer then the earth: The length of many parts of the earth is exceeding long; how long then is the whole earth? Mathematicians tell us, that the circumference of the earth is about twenty two thouſand miles, a vaſt length; and the meaſure is the ſame in the length of it from Eaſt to Weſt, or in the breadth of it from North to South: Every Sphærical body is of equal dimenſions. The meaſure of wiſdom is longeſt, being longer then the earth, which is the longeſt journey man ever travelled.

Populari modo loquitur, nam hoc ſpatio ac diſtantia vulgus nihil rarius concipit. Bold.

And broader then the ſea.] Latitude or breadth is uſually aſcribed to the ſea, as longitude or length unto the earth. The Pſalmiſt, in his meditations upon the works of God, calls it, The great and wide ſea, Pſal. 104. 25. Breadth is aſcribed to the ſea, becauſe of its huge extenſion. The ſea is a lower firmament: and as the upper firmament is called in the Hebrew, A thing ſtretched out, or ſpread forth. The upper upper firmament is one expanſion; ſo alſo is this lower firmament, the ſea. The ſea puts out long arms, and thence it is denominated broad. The breadth of a man is meaſured by his arms ſtretched forth, as his length is meaſured from head to foot: Thus the ſea ſtretching forth its mighty arms to imbrace the earth (we commonly call them, The arms of the ſea) carries away the name from all other creatures for latitude or breadth. There is nothing counted ſo wide and roomthy as the ſea. Such (and how much more no man knows) is the wiſdom and knowledge of God.

Here are four very different dimenſions met together, height and depth, length and breadth, yet they all mind and ſpeak the ſame thing, That the wiſdom of God is infinite; higher then all natural height, and deeper then all natural depth; broader then all natural breadth, and longer then all natural length. The Apoſtle ſpeaking of the love of God in Chriſt (Epheſ. 3. 18.) aſcribeth theſe four dimenſions to it, with which Zophar here adorns the wiſdom of God, That you may be able to comprehend with all Saints, what is the breadth and length, and depth and height, and to know the love of Chriſt which paſſeth knowledge. Many wits run riot in Geometrical notions about theſe moral dimenſions. And whereas Naturaliſts give us but three dimenſions of a body, longitude, latitude and profundity, the love and wiſdom of God have altitude added, which is a fourth. But all theſe dimenſions ſerve only to ſhew the immenſity both of the love and wiſdom of God.

Obſerve hence, Firſt, Mans inability to reach the perfection of creatures, ſhould convince him of his utter inability to reach God in his perfection.

For when Zophar affirms the wiſdom of God higher then heaven, deeper then hell, &c. He by a leſſer impoſſibility would convince us of a greater. Thou canſt not find out the height of heaven, nor the depth of hell; thou canſt not take the perfect length of the earth, nor the breadth of the ſea; therefore much leſs art thou able to take the height and depth, the length and breadth of God himſelf, or of his wiſdom.

Secondly, When he ſaith, that the wiſdom of God is higher, longer, deeper and broader then heaven, earth, hell and ſea; We may obſerve,

That God is preſent with all his creatures in all places.

The wiſdom of God is every where, therefore God is. Wiſdom is the eye of God, and God is ſaid to have ſeven eyes (that is, many eyes, or a manifold wiſdom) running to and fro through the whole earth, Zech. 3. 9. cap. 4. 10. There is one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all, Eph. 4. 6. God is above all, not only in regard of power and authority, but of inſpection and over-ſight. God ſtands aloft, as upon a watch-tower, beholding all that's done below, whether within or without; whether for or againſt the Church. There is no turning, no corner, wherein any can ſtand unobſerved; for as he is above, ſo he is through all, and in all: He is through all the world by his common providence, as well as in all his Saints by his ſpecial grace. In him we live, and move, and have our beings, Acts 17. Yea, he is preſent in all places, not only virtually and efficaciouſly, but eſſentially. It is not with God as with the Sun, the Sun is fixt in its orb, and from thence ſends forth its light and influence into all the world: We cannot ſay the Sun is every where, though the light and heat of the Sun are every where; the body of the Sun is only in Heaven. Again, it is not with God, as with a King, who ſits upon his Throne, and yet hath long hands, and many eyes, reaching all places of his Dominion, but it is by his Authority and Commiſſions only. A King is virtually preſent in many places at once, but not perſonally; whereſoever his reſidence is, there his perſon is, and no where elſe. Whereas Gods hands and eyes, his power and wiſdom extend over all perſonally. The Divine nature is as large and vaſt as the Divine power. Do not I fill heaven and earth, ſaith the Lord (Jer. 23. 24.) Once more, God is every where, not as the Air is every where: The Air is part in one place, and part in another, God is all in every place; God is wholly in the height of heaven, and wholly in the depth of hell, wholly in the length of the earth, and wholly in the breadth of the ſea. All God is in all things, and all God is without all things; he is without all things, and not ſhut out of any thing; he is in all things, and not included in any thing, ſo the Ancients ſpeak of this wonderful myſtery of Gods omnipreſence.

Eſſentia divina tota eſt intra omnia & tota extra omnia. Nuſquam incluſa, aut excluſa, omnia continens, a nullo contenta, nec propterea eſt immiſta rebus aut ſordibus inquinata. Aug. ep. 57. ad Dar.

Thirdly, Note, God is not only in, but above and beyond all creatures.

He is higher then heaven, and deeper then hell. (So the Hebraiſm) 2 Chron. 2. 6. Who is able to build him a houſe (ſaith Solomon) ſeeing the heaven, and heaven of heavens cannot contain him? God hath given a limit to every thing, but himſelf hath none. He that made all things, cannot be circumſcribed by the things which he hath made. Man makes a houſe, and there he dwelleth, his houſe ſhuts him in. God hath made a houſe big enough for all creatures, but not big enough for himſelf; The heaven, and the heaven of heavens cannot contain him, how much leſs this houſe which I have builded? ſaith the ſame Solomon. The heaven of heavens is the higheſt heaven, the chiefeſt heaven, the third heaven, the heaven compaſſing and containing all thoſe heavens which we behold. That heaven which containeth the heavens, cannot contain the God of heaven. (1 Kings 8. 27.) God is a ſphere, whoſe center is every where, and whoſe circumference is no where.

Fourthly, Obſerve, All that is done in the world, is done by the ordering or over-ruling hand of God.

God uſeth means, but himſelf is preſent with all the means he uſeth, and acts in every thing that acts; He that is every where can as well do all, as any one thing. A man who hath many buſineſſes to do at the ſame time in many places, cannot attend them all, and gives the reaſon, Do you think I can be every where? I was in ſuch a place, could I be in this too? Carnal minds think it a ſtrange doctrine to affirm, That God doth all things, and that there is not any motion in the creature, but God is in it. But what difficulty is there in this, when we have once digeſted this principle, That God is every where? He that is higher then heaven, and deeper then hell, &c. is ready at every turn to do what is done. Kings ſend their Vicegerents and Deputies, who do their work, while themſelves are abſent. Kings are not in the means and with the means which they imploy, and that's the reaſon why inſtruments work often ſo contrary to the mind of Kings: They not being actually preſent with them, cannot over rule and order them. But God being preſent with all inſtruments and ſecond cauſes that are awork in the whole world, orders them all by his ſovereign will. They who act againſt the revealed will of God, are yet order'd by his ſecret will. There is nothing done againſt the counſel and purpoſe of God, though many things are done againſt the command and appointment of God. For as he is with every hand that helpeth us, ſo he is with every hand that ſmiteth us; as he is with every tongue that bleſſeth us, ſo he is with every tongue that curſeth us. When Shimei curſed David, he knew God was with that tongue, and therefore he ſaid, So let him curſe, becauſe the Lord hath ſaid unto him, Curſe David, 2 Sam. 16. 10. We indeed pray to God Our Father in heaven. Heaven is the Throne of God, but Heaven it is not the Priſon of God; God is never ſhut up in Heaven, though his glory ſhine moſt in Heaven. But Moſes ſaith to Iſrael, Go not up, for the Lord is not among you, (Numb. 14. 42.) I anſwer, The Lord is not among a people when he doth not aſſiſt, proſper and bleſs them; but he is then among them, both, to obſerve what they do, and to puniſh what is done amiſs. Thus God is near thoſe who depart from him, as is further cleared in the next point.

Fifthly, Obſerve, God beholds all the good, and all the evil that is done in the world.

His wiſdom being higher then heaven, and longer then the earth, brings him in intelligence from all the quarters and corners of heaven and earth; our works are before him, and ſo are our words (Mal. 3. 16.) Then they that feared the Lord ſpake often one to another. What then? Did they whiſper ſo in one anothers ear, that no ear elſe heard them? No, the Lord hearkened and heard it; the Lord liſtened (as it were) at the key-hole, he was under the window; and what then? A book of remembrance was written before him; all was kept upon record. And when they who do not fear the Lord ſpeak one to another, when wicked men plot againſt the righteous, or conſpire againſt the righteous wayes of God; He hearkneth and heareth, and there is a book of remembrance kept of that too. Let them whiſper as ſoftly as they can, God can hear, and will record all their malicious ſpeeches, all their evil devices and contrivements againſt himſelf, or againſt his ſervants.

Sixthly, Obſerve, There is no avoiding or getting from the juſtice of God.

God is higher then heaven, and deeper then hell, &c. Some who have done wickedly in one place, eſcape the Law, by getting into another; they will be out of your bounds, and then they are ſafe: But who can go out of Gods bounds? (Amos 9. 3, 4.) Though they dig into hell, thence ſhall my hand take them; though they climb up to heaven, thence will I bring them down; though they hide themſelves in the top of Carmel, I will ſearch them, and take them out thence, &c. And, Pſal. 139. 7, 8. Whither ſhall I go from thy preſence? If I aſcend up into heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there; if I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermoſt parts of the ſea, even there ſhall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand ſhall hold me, &c. There is no avoiding the juſtice of God; for there is no avoiding the preſence of God. He hath power to arreſt and attach a malefactor, where-ever he finds him, and he can find him where-ever he is; though he fleeth, yet he ſhall not flee away, aod though he eſcapeth, yet he ſhall not be delivered, (Amos 9. 1.) that is, though he thinks he hath eſcaped, yet I (ſaith the Lord) will overtake him quickly, and my ſentence ſhall be executed upon him. Thus the workings of God, and his wiſdom, are compared unto, and exceed all the dimenſions of the creature; he is above and beyond all their perfections, therefore unſearchable, therefore not to be found out unto perfection.

Zophar, from the infinite wiſdom of God, deſcends to argue his Soveraignty, and the uncontroulableneſs of his power.

Verſe 10. If he cut off, and ſhut up, and gather together, then who can hinder him?

As if he had ſaid, The Lord is in all places, and whereſoever he comes, he is within his own Dominions; it is poſſible for the greateſt Prince in the world to travel out of the bounds of his own power. The chief Officer of a City hath great power within that City, but beyond he cannot meddle. Kings have great power within their own Dominions, but get into another Countrey, and they cannot touch you: Should a King act his authority beyond his limits, many would hinder him, no man would obey him. But whereſoever God acts his authority, he is in his own Kingdom; for all the world is his: therefore none can hinder him. This Zophar ſhews in three Acts of Soveraignty; If he, 1. cut off, 2. ſhut up, 3. gather together; who can hinder?

If he cut off.] The word ſignifies, to change and alter; to put things into another courſe, to paſs away, as well as to cut off and deſtroy; that which is cut off, is changed, and that which is deſtroyed, paſſeth away. We have an elegant gradation (Iſa. 8. 8.) and this word makes the firſt ſtep of it; He ſhall paſs thorow Judah, he ſhall overflow and go over, he ſhall reach even to the neck, and the ſtretching out of his wings ſhall fill the breadth of thy Land, O Immanuel. He ſhall paſs thorow; that is, the King of Aſſyria; who is compared to a mighty river, covering all its channels, and overflowing all its banks; he ſhall paſs thorow the Land like a violent torrent, he ſhall deſtroy and cut off much people in Immanuel's Land, that is, in Chriſts Land, who is God with us: Yet he will not ſuffer his people to be utterly cut off. The enemy, who once aſſociated and prevailed, ſhall aſſociate and be broken; for God is with us, verſ. 10.

And ſhut up.] The word is taken two wayes; ſometimes in a good ſence, ſo, If he ſhut up; is, if he ſecure any from danger, hiding them in his own pavilion of protection, Deut. 32. 36. The Lord ſhall repent himſelf for his ſervants, when he ſeeth that their power is gone, and there is none ſhut up or left: that is, when he ſhall ſee that none are out of the power of the enemy, none ſhut up in the City, none guarded and kept ſafe from danger; but all doors & places lying open to the deſtroyer; then God repents himſelf for his ſervants; that is, he changes his courſe (though not his decree) and haſtens to the reſcue of his people, thus expoſed to trouble on every ſide.

Again, The word is taken in an ill ſenſe; ſo, If he ſhut up, is, if he reſtrain mercy, and expoſe to miſery (Deut. 32. 30.) How ſhould one chaſe a thouſand, and two put ten thouſand to flight, except their rock had ſold them, and the Lord had ſhut them up? How ſhut them up? As into a priſon, or under durance; except the Lord had delivered them as priſoners, into their enemies hands, they had never come into their hands. The people of God are compaſſed about with ſuch priviledges, that they can never be overcome by man, till God withdraws his ſafe-conduct, and gives them to the robbers, and to the ſpoilers, till their rock ſells them, and their God ſhuts them up. It is an alluſion to ſtrong Cities or Forts, which are ſo built and mann'd, ſo victualled and provided with ammunition, that it is impoſſible to take them in by aſſault or ſiege, unleſs the Governor, or he that hath the power of the place, ſell, or betray them to the enemie. The People of Iſrael were ſo fortified with promiſes, yea, walled about with God himſelf, that except their rock had ſold them, except God had (as we may ſpeak with reverence to his eternal faithfulneſs) betrayed them into their enemies hands, they had continued impregnable. In this ſence take the word here, If the Lord ſhut up; that is, if he put men as in a priſon, or into the adverſaries hands, who can hinder?

Or gather together.] This act of providence is oppoſite to the former; by that, men are ſhut up as priſoners, and debarred of liberty; by this, they are gathered together, as friends, unto one ſociety. Scattering imports affliction; and gathering, a return out of affliction. The Apoſtle James dedicates his Epiſtle to the twelve Tribes ſcattered abroad. And when the Prophet Zephanie foretells the reſtauration of the Jews (chap. 3. 17.) he brings in God rejoycing over them with joy, reſting in his love, joying over them with ſinging, and ſaying (ver. 18.) I will gather them that are ſorrowful, I will ſave her that halteth, and gather her that was driven out. To gather, is to reſtore, whether to civil, or to ſpiritual ſociety.

There are two words in the Hebrew, noting Church-Aſſemblies, whereof this is one; yet it may be interpreted a Common-wealth-gathering, as well as a Church-gathering, of a civil, as well as of ſpiritual communion. The book Eccleſiaſtes receives its title (Koheleth) from this root. Two reaſons may be given of it; either becauſe that book of the Preacher is a collection of excellent obſervations: Solomon there gathered together and congregated many points of higheſt wiſdom. Or becauſe men ought to aſſemble, or congregate themſelves chearfully together, to hear, and drink in at the ear thoſe excellent inſtructions which Solomon gives in that Book. A learned Interpreter underſtands all theſe acts, of affliction; if the Lord cut off by ſword, ſhut up in priſon, gather together, and bundle men up as fewel to feed the flame of his fiery indignation, though he doth all or any of theſe things, who can hinder him? The Chaldee Paraphraſt tranſlates, though he gather together his armies, his military forces; though he muſter nations together in a warlike manner, to vex or deſtroy each other.

Si congregaverit exercitus aut copias militares. Targ.

Who can hinder him?] The Hebrew is, who can turn him away from his purpoſe? who can ſtop him? The Lord hath no peer, no ſuperior, none to check his counſels, or ſtay their executions; when he hath determined to do a thing, none can ſay, it ſhall not be done, or it ſhall be done another way; his power is ſupream, and he can do what he pleaſeth, without giving an account to any. The ſum of all is, that God may deſtroy, ſpoil, overthrow, burn, conſume if he will; he may do what he will with men and Kingdoms, and no man muſt open his mouth againſt him; or if any do, it is in vain, or at their own peril. Thus he anſwers Job, who complained in his afflictions, that the Lord had cut him off, and ſhut him up; that the Lord had gathered together armies of Caldeans and Sabeans to deſtroy him. Though he do, (ſaith Zophar) yet know the wiſdom of God is unſearchable, higher then heaven, deeper then hell; if he will take theſe courſes with thee, who can hinder him? why doſt thou complain, as if God had done thee wrong? whenas he hath right to do what he will, and he can will nothing but what is right.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, All the changes and troubles, the good and evil in the world, is from God.

If he cut off, if he ſhut up, if he gather together; he ſpeaks as if there were no hand of the Creature moving, in any of theſe things, but that God himſelf had done all: Come (ſaith David, Pſal. 46. 8.) behold the works of the Lord, what deſolations he hath made in the earth. See how the Lord hath made the earth deſolate; ſee how he drives the nations, and drives the inhabitants of the world. We have a great inſtance in this Kingdom; Behold the works of the Lord: ſee what deſolations he hath made in the North, in the Weſt; ſee how many houſes are burnt, how many towns impoveriſhed, how many families utterly ruined: Come, behold what deſolations the Lord hath made. Come alſo, and behold what habitations, what reformations he makes in the earth: where you ſee theſe things done, know it is God that hath done them, as the Pſalmiſt adds in the next words; He maketh wars to ceaſe unto the ends of the earth, he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the ſpear in ſunder, he burneth the chariot in the fire. Our eyes are uſually much upon ſecond cauſes, and little upon the firſt; this makes us angry and impatient: if we could ſee God more in what is done, and man leſs, we ſhould be much ſatisfied; or, at leaſt, leſs troubled; we ſhould poſſeſs our ſouls in patience whatſoever is done.

Secondly, Obſerve, God cannot be hindred of his purpoſe.

What he hath a mind to do, ſhall be done, though all the world ſay no; he gives no account of, nor can any reſtraint be laid upon his actions. If he caſt one into priſon, and enlarge another; enrich one, and impoveriſh another; give one honour, and lay reproach upon another; who ſhall ſay, What doſt thou? I have often met with this point of the Soveraignty of God, therefore I only touch it here.

Zophar, in the former words, moves Job to conſider the unſearchable wiſdom of God, and his unqueſtionable ſoveraignty; Canſt thou by ſearching find out God? &c. If he cut off, and ſhut up, and gather together, who can hinder him? Thou canſt not fadom the bottomleſs abyſs of his wiſdom, nor ſtay him in the reſolved actings of his power. He now proceeds to give the reaſon of both (for the connection may refer to either.)

Firſt, He gives a reaſon why a man cannot reach the wiſdom of God (ver. 11.) He is vain man. And as man ſhews his vanity in nothing more, then in his aſſayes and offers to find out the ſecrets of God; ſo his vanity renders him under an utter impoſſibility to find out the ſecrets of God.

Vanitas hominum aſſignatur cauſa cur ſecretorum divinæ providentiæ ſunt incapaces. Merc. *Probari videtur à So*phare cur Deus jure poſſit ſuccidere, &c. Quia omnium hominum vanitatem & ſecretiora dignoſcat peccata. Bol.

Secondly, He gives a reaſon why; If the Lord cut off, and deſtroy, and gather together; if he turn the world upſide down, why man cannot hinder him: He knoweth vain man; he knoweth that man hath no power to match his; vain man is weak man, and what can weakneſs do againſt ſtrength, impotency againſt omnipotency?

Again, man is vain, and therefore gives the Lord cauſe (if he ſhould deſcend to give a reaſon of himſelf, or of his actions) to cut off, to gather together, to ſhut up: Vain man is wicked man; he ſeeth wickedneſs alſo: ſo that if God would not act by his prerogative, man gives him ground enough, legal ground according to the line of humane underſtanding, to do what he doth. He knoweth vain man well enough, both what he is, and what he hath done.

All this Zophar intends againſt Job, as if he were the man whom God knew to be vain, and in whom he ſaw iniquity; yea, the brutiſhneſs of a wild aſſes colt, and was about to break and tame him by thoſe judgments. Zophar ſpeaks right in this, of mans nature in general; but his cenſure of Job, was erroneous. He was not a vain, but a holy man; neither did God ſee wickedneſs, but uprightneſs in him. Grace had changed his nature; and the Spirit in regeneration, had blotted out the image of a beaſt, and ſtampt him with that image, which is after God, in righteouſneſs and true holineſs. And as for his afflictions, they were not ſent to tame him, but to try him; not to break his headſtrong ſpirit, but to ſhew that he was already broken, and brought to hand; yea, led by the Spirit of God.

Verſe 11. He knoweth vain man, he ſeeth wickedneſs alſo; will he not conſider it?

He knoweth.] To know, is ſometimes taken for a pure act of intuition, or for the diſcerning of perſons and things, what they are. Sometimes it imports an act mixt, or made up with the underſtanding and affections; and then, to know, takes in both delight and approbation, Pſal. 1. 6. The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous; it is the way, which himſelf hath cut and chalked out for them; therefore he cannot but approve it (2 Tim. 2. 19.) The Lord knoweth who are his; yea, he knoweth who are not his too; but with a knowledge as different as the perſons; he knows the latter, and rejects them; he knows the former, and is pleaſed with them; I know Abraham (ſaith God) I, there s a man; I know what an one he is: he is a good man, and he is one I have in my heart to do him good. The Lord alſo knoweth vain man; there is nothing of vain man hidden from God, though there is nothing of vain man, loved or approved by God. He knoweth vain man, or men of vanity; ſo the Hebrew. We put it into an Epithite, vain man.

Vain man.] That is, inconſiderate, raſh, heady, haſty man. With all theſe ſences the original word is filled. When men go headlong, and without heed upon buſineſſes, when they move without ſteadineſs of ſpirit, or an inward ballaſt to keep their thoughts in a due and equall poyſe, they are vain men. The Law ſaith (Exod. 20. 7.) Thou ſhalt not take the Name of the Lord thy God in vain (it is this word) that is, Thou ſhalt not ſpeak raſhly of the things of God, or of God himſelf, without reverence and pre-meditation, who God is, and what the errand is thou dealeſt with God about.

Further, The word ſignifies craft, deceit, lying and falſeneſs, whether of heart or tongue. The Lord knoweth the falſeneſs, baſeneſs and corruption, as well as the inconſideratneſs and raſhneſs that lies in the heart of man; ſome render it ſo here, from the Letter of the Hebrew, The Lord knoweth men to be liars; or, thoſe men who are liars. Idols are expreſſed by this word, becauſe they are vain, lying, falſe gods, Jon. 3. 3. They that follow lying vanities (which may be either meant of worſhipping Idols, or of any ſinful way of practice) forſake their own mercy. So, Pſal. 62. 9. Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lie; to be laid in the balance, they are altogether lighter then vanity. Vanity is a light thing, but theſe men will prove the lighter of the two. The Citizen of Sion is one, that hath not lift up his ſoul unto vanity (Pſal. 24. 4.) unto falſe worſhip, or falſe wayes: he liſteth up his ſoul unto that which is holy, juſt and good, the righteous Law of God.

Novit homines mendaces. Pagn. Homines falſitatis. Caj.

In general, this word ſignifies any evil or ſin, eſpecially thoſe which refer to injuſtice, or our neighbours wrong, Pſal. 12. 2. They ſpeak vanity every one with his neighbour; that is, they ſpeak injuriouſly, every one deceiveth, or would circumvent and over-reach his neighbour. This is to ſpeak vanity with a neighbour (Pſal. 16. 4.) I have not ſate with vain perſons; who are thoſe? he expounds it in the next words; Neither will I go in with diſſemblers; that is, with men that make a fair ſhew to their brethren, whilſt their hearts are full of poyſon againſt them; who ſpeak one thing, and intend another; theſe are vain perſons, and how religious ſoever they may ſeem to be, their Religion is vain too.

The Lord knoweth vain man; or, he knoweth the vanity of men. Hence Note, Firſt, That, Man is naturally full of vanity, very full of vanity.

To be called a man of vanity, imports vaineſt vanity; as it imports, that God is full of truth, when he is called the God of truth; and that he abounds with comfort, when he is called the God of all comfort; ſo it is a Hebraiſm, noting how full of vanity man is, who is called a man of vanity; and how falſe he is, who is called a man of falſhood: So the Apoſtle ſhews how full of ſin that man is, how many thouſands he hath ſent to perdition, whom he calleth that man of ſin, the ſon of perdition, 2 Theſ. 2. 3. They who would have ſin, and the fruit of it, perdition, let them go to that man. He that would have vanity, needs muſt go to the heart of any man for it; there's enough, and too much of this to be had in the heart of the beſt, of the wiſeſt man. Generally man hath,

1. Much falſeneſs of ſpirit.
2. Much raſhneſs of ſpirit. And he hath a double raſhneſs.

Firſt, Raſhneſs, in not conſidering his end (Deut. 32.29.) O that they were wiſe, that they would conſider their latter end! Wiſdom looks to what is coming upon us; folly ſtayes upon what is preſent with us.

Secondly, Raſhneſs, in not conſidering the way or means that lead unto a good end. Many a man ſees ſuch an end, but goes a way quite contrary; he ſets up his reſolution for heaven, that's his end; but he walketh hell-ward. This alſo is vanity, and unleſs timely foreſeen and turned from, will prove the greateſt vexation of ſpirit.

Secondly, Obſerve, God is exactly acquainted with the ſtate of man.

He needs not enquire of others, or receive information from abroad; he knows vain man. In the former verſes, Zophar aſſerteth, That man cannot find out man by ſearching; here he ſhews, That God can find out man without ſearching. Man knoweth but little of God, therefore he adds, Canſt thou find him out unto perfection? But God knoweth all of man, and therefore finds him out unto perfection. That's the oppoſition, He knoweth vain man thorow and thorow. The darkeſt room in man, is light to the Lord (Jer. 17.9.) The heart of man is deceitful above all things; there's a depth in mans heart, and it is a depth of deceitfulneſs; hence the Prophet ſends a challenge to all men; Who can know it? Can you find any man able to find the bottom of man? the bottom of mans deceitful heart? The anſwer waves all mankind: God only takes it upon himſelf. I the Lord ſearch the heart. God can find out all the deceits and tricks of mans falſe heart; he can eaſily diſcern a wolf under ſheeps cloathing, and rotten bones in a painted Sepulcher; he can ſee a wooden poſt to be but a poſt of wood, though gilded over, and looking very beautiful; the Lord can do it, it is at once his work, and his priviledge, to know vain man.

Thirdly, Take the words in connection with what went before; He cutteth off, ſhutteth up, and gathereth together; for the Lord knoweth vain man. Hence obſerve,

That, God is led by his knowledge to do whatſoever he doth.

When we ſee ſo much confuſion, ſuch cutting off, ſuch ſhutting up, ſuch gatherings in the world, we are apt to think no account can be given of theſe things. Yes, God knoweth vain man; he doth not work at a venture: he ſees that in man, which juſtifies him in all the works he doth among all the children of men.

Further, From the connection, we ſee the cauſe of all troubles which are in the world, of cuttings off, and ſhuttings up, of deſtructions and devaſtations: The Lord knoweth vain man. It is the vanity of man, which ſubjects the Creature unto vanity, Rom. 8. The creature groaneth. We hear Creatures groan, Kingdoms and Nations groan, when God cutteth off, and ſhutteth up, and hudleth them together; but what cauſeth this doleful groan? Is it not the ſin of man? Vain man brings in all theſe vanities into the world. We may ſee the ſeed of all our troubles in our ſins: The nature of man gives you an account of theſe workings of God. There is war, there is famine, and there's the plague, there are diviſions, there are vexations, between man and man, friend and friend, kingdom and kingdom: All theſe breed in the heart of man. The Prophet (Jer. 4. 18.) ſpeaking of judgments then abroad, ſaith, This is thy wickedneſs, becauſe it is bitter. Troubles are alwayes bitter, often very bitter; but would you know whence this bitterneſs is, and how to call it? This wormwood is wickedneſs; you may read what you are, and what you have done, in what you feel and ſuffer. Mans ſufferings are ſo much from his ſin, that they are called his ſin.

He ſeeth wickedneſs alſo,

That's a ſecond ſtep.

He ſeeth.] To know, is an act of the underſtanding; to ſee, is an act of ſenſe. Theſe, in God, are not diſtinguiſhed; his eye is his underſtanding, his ſight, his knowledge. Zophar puts it under diſtinct terms, to ſhew the exactneſs of Gods knowledge; he knoweth vain man, and he ſeeth. That knowledge which we have by ſight, hath a threefold advantage of any other natural knowledge. It is,

Firſt, The Eaſieſt
Secondly, The ſpeedieſt } Knowledge.
Thirdly, The ſureſt

An eye-witneſs is far more authentick then an ear-witneſs is. God ſeeth; he doth not trouble himſelf to dig down into a matter by tedious enquiries, he needs no Committee of Examinations to make diſcoveries; he need not pump and fetch up the hearts of men; he ſeeth what waters are in the fountain; he ſeeth, he doth not learn. And what doth he ſee? He ſeeth

Videt non diſcit. Coc.

Wickedneſs alſo.] The word is ſometimes taken for internal wickedneſs, that ſtock and maſs of corruption, which lies cloſe within us; and ſo it falls in with the former expreſſion, the vanity of mans nature.

But beſides, It notes any external evil, and ſo there is a difference, The Lord knoweth vain man; what his nature is, and he ſeeth wickedneſs. All the actings of vain men, all the evil counſels and crooked conveyances of their lives, whatſoever wickedneſs they do, is immediately before his eye. The Lord knows the vanity that dwells in the heart, and ſees the wickedneſs that is acted by the hand.

In propriety, the word imports that which is without reaſon: wicked men are unreaſonable, or abſurd men; that's the Apoſtles character of them (2 Theſ. 3.2.) They can give no account why they are wicked, neither of the end they propoſe, nor of the means they uſe. There is no reaſon in what they do; nor can they give any true reaſon why they do it. Sin is an abſurdity both wayes: He ſeeth wickedneſs. Hence obſerve,

All the movings of the ſons of men in the wayes of ſin, are evident to God; He ſeeth them.

What we do, we do in the eye of Conſcience; and though Conſcience be now aſleep or blind, in the ſinners eye, yet Conſcience hath an open Eagle-eye upon every ſin. Now if conſcience ſeeth wickedneſs, God ſeeth it much more; If our heart condemn us (and that it could not do, unleſs it ſee us) God is greater then our heart, and knoweth all things, 1 John 3.20. Take heed of endeavouring to hide ſin from God, or of hoping you ſin unſeen. That was good counſel which one of the Ancients gave; It is beſt to ſhew that unto God, which we cannot hide from him. Shew your wickedneſs unto God, by confeſſing it; for you cannot hide it from God, by denying or excuſing it; He ſeeth wickedneſs alſo. There is yet a third act inferred upon the former two.

Will he not then conſider it?] Many a careleſs man knoweth and ſeeth his own wickedneſs, or the wickedneſs of others; but he layeth neither of them to heart: But do you think that God knoweth and ſeeth wickedneſs after the rate of careleſs men? Doth he know, and ſee, and not regard? No, he conſiders it. And Zophar is not ſatisfied to ſay, he conſiders it; but he puts it home ſtrongly with a Queſtion, Will he not conſider it? Yes, he will; certainly he will conſider the vanity and the wickedneſs of man, becauſe he knoweth the one, and ſeeth the other What is not known and ſeen, cannot be conſidered. One or both thoſe acts are precedaneous to conſideration; but ſome ſee and know what they never conſider; conſideration doth not alwaies follow thoſe acts. God looks weightily upon the world, he ſees judiciouſly, critically; he doth not look upon men to gaze at them, but to diſcern, try and judge them.

The Hebrew word ſignifies a clearneſs of obſervation, and a ſtrength of judgment about the things which are ſeen; or an act of diſcerning, ariſing from greateſt attention and meditation, Pſal. 37.10. Thou ſhalt diligently conſider his place, ſaith David; propheſying the utter ruine and abolition of a wicked man; though he flouriſh, yet it is but for a while; anon he is gone, and when he is gone, though thou diligently conſider his place, though thou ſit down and mark how this man lived, and what he was, yet ſcarce any footſteps of him will be found; It ſhall not be. The word is uſed to the ſame ſence (Lev. 10.10.) where Laws are given to the Prieſts, about diſcerning the defilements of the people; That they might put a difference between holy and unholy, and between unclean and clean. So to conſider, as to ſee a difference between perſon and perſon, ſtate and ſtate, is diligent conſideration. Thus God conſidereth; he he diſtinguiſheth man and man, the wayes of one man from the wayes of another; and the way of every man in it ſelf: He knoweth man, as a Judge knoweth, upon trial and examination of witneſſes, with all the circumſtances of the fact.

Zophar, in this ſeems to touch Job's ſuppoſed hypocriſie; as if he had ſaid, Poſſibly thou preſumeſt to impoſe upon God, or put him off with fair ſhews; but thou wilt be deceived: he trieth the ſpirits of the children of men, he weighs all their actions, he will weigh thee out to a grain, he will diſcover the leaſt error and variation from the Rule. Therefore never think by thy flouriſhes of profeſſion and out-ſide devotion, to deceive him. He knoweth vain man, and ſeeth wickedneſs; will he not then conſider it? Hence obſerve,

God doth not only know and ſee, but he takes deep conſideration of mens wickedneſs.

The Prophet calls the Jews to conſider their wayes (Hag. 1. 7.) as if he had ſaid, I know you have kept many faſts, you have confeſt your ſins, and often arraigned your ſelves in the ears of heaven, but all this while you have not conſidered them; Go now, and conſider your wayes. God conſiders your wayes, and will not you? Gods conſideration is not a bare knowledge of the fact. He conſiders the perſon who, the place where, the time when the fact was committed. He conſiders the means and admonitions, the warnings and cautions, the threatnings and the judgments which providence adminiſtred to prevent it. All theſe are brought into the reckoning, where there is (ſuch as Gods is) a full conſideration. Now conſider this, ye (inconſiderate ones) that forget God, leſt he tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver, Pſal. 50. 22.

Secondly, To conſider a thing, is to puniſh it; and ſo it anſwers the former Verſe: The Lord cutteth off, and ſhutteth up; he makes ſtrange work in the world. Why? He knoweth vain man, and he ſeeth wickedneſs alſo? will not he then conſider it? that is, Is it poſſible he ſhould know and ſee ſo much wickedneſs, and not puniſh it? As we ſay to thoſe under our power, concerning the faults which we know them guilty of; well, there will come a time, when we ſhall conſider this; that is, a time will come, when we ſhall puniſh you for this, you ſhall find and feel what you have done. Thus God conſiders the ſins of men. Hence note,

The evils which God knows and ſees, he will certainly puniſh.

Amos 3. 2. You only have I known of all the families of the earth, therefore I will puniſh you for all your iniquities. God knows all the families of the earth, as to know is a work of the underſtanding; but he knoweth only ſome, (and then he knew but one family of the earth, that of the Jews) as to know, is a work of the affections, fruited with works of ſpecial mercy: When the Lord ſaith to Iſrael, You have I known; he means, I have ſhewed you mercy, I have done you good above all the families of the earth, but now I will bring evil upon you. Abuſed mercy turns to wrath, and the greater the mercy abuſed is, the greater is the wrath. The Lord will not cocker his own children; his neareſt people, who lie in his boſom, ſhall have ſtripes for their ſins, and broken comforts for broken Commandments. Will the Lord thus conſider the failings and backſlidings of his profeſſed friends, and will he not conſider the wickedneſſes of his profeſſed enemies? When Jehu was upon the execution of Gods deſign againſt the houſe of Ahab, and had ſlain Joram his ſon, he thus beſpoke Bidkar his Captain, I remember how the Lord laid this burden upon him, ſurely I have ſeen the blood of Naboth, and the blood of his ſons, ſaid the Lord, and I will requite thee in this plot, 2 King. 9. 29. I have ſeen. God ſaw, and he ſaw with an eye of vengeance; He ſaw blood to requite it with blood, (Pſal. 10. 11.) The wicked hath ſaid in his heart, God hath forgotten, he hideth his face, he will never ſee it. There's ſelf-flattery at the higheſt: Hence the concluſion is ready, ver. 13. The wicked contemn God; he hath ſaid in his heart, thou wilt not require it. This is the language of a wicked heart. But what ſaith the heart of David, the next words are the language of his heart, Thou haſt ſeen it, for thou beholdeſt miſchief and ſpight, to requite it with thy hand: As the hearts of men differ, ſo do their opinions: an evil heart will not allow God to be a beholder of evil: a good heart is afflicted that he is not only a beholder, but an avenger of evil. Let no man deceive you, (ſaith the Apoſtle, Eph. 5. 6.) with vain words. (And let no man deceive himſelf, ſay I, with vain hopes) for becauſe of theſe things the wrath of God cometh upon the children of diſobedience. Diſobedience is the forerunner of wrath; where ſin opens the door, judgment will enter, (Pſal. 34. 16.) The face of the Lord is againſt them that do evil. The face of the Lord is either his anger or his knowledge; The face of the Lord is againſt them; that is, he ſeeth, and his wrath goeth forth againſt what he ſeeth. Seeing them, he is againſt them: They (perhaps) have caſt their own ſins, as well as the word of God, behind their backs: But God hath not caſt their ſins behind his back; his face is againſt them: and what to do? To cut off the remembrance of them from the earth. The anger of God is ſharp, ſharper then any two-edged ſword; it doth not only cut, but cut off; it cuts off branch and root, wicked men, and their remembrance from the earth. Then God remembers ſin indeed, when he doth not leave a remembrance of the ſinner. There was never any ſin committed in the world, but God conſidered it, to puniſh it. The ſins of believers are conſidered, and puniſhed upon Jeſus Chriſt; Juſtice went forth againſt Chriſt, he was arreſted for our debt, and diſcharged it with the full conſideration. Believers may tell God, that Chriſt hath given him conſideration for all their ſins. And God tells unbelievers that they muſt pay the conſideration themſelves. The holy God cannot ſee the unholineſs of man, and not conſider it. Man makes no great matter of ſin, but God doth. Man thinks himſelf good enough, though he be ſtark naught; and wiſe enough, though he be a very fool. The next verſe leads us unto that meditation.

Verſe 12. For vain man would be wiſe, though man is born like a wild aſſes colt.

For vain man.] The Hebrew word ſignifieth, hollow or empty, any thing which hath nothing in it; and ſo a perſon who hath (as we ſay) nothing in him. The French call ſuch perſons Fols, which comes near in ſound, to our Engliſh word Fools; but their language takes it up from the Latine word Folles, ſignifying a pair of bellows; becauſe the men they mean to decypher by it, are like a pair of bellows, ſending out nothing but a blaſt of wind or air. The word of the Text is of the ſame intendment with Racha, of which we read, Mat. 5. 22. He that ſhall call his brother Racha, &c. that is, an empty man, a man empty of worth and wiſdom, a man that hath no brains in him (as we ſay) or no goodneſs, ſuch a man as this is Racha; and he is Nabub too, an empty, hollow fellow.

He hath nothing in him, but that which is good for nothing. There is no natural vacuum (as Philoſophers ſpeak) in any part of Nature. Neither is there a moral vacuum in any man. But a thing or perſon is then ſaid to be empty, when void of that with which it ſhould be fill'd: that which hath not the filling, which of right or duty, which according to its own conſtitution, or the juſt expectation of others, it ſhould have, is empty. The ſtomach is empty when it hath no meat in it, though it be full of wind. Man is called empty, becauſe (though as full of evil as an egg of goodneſs, yet) he is not fill'd with good, he is not fill'd with God, with the knowledge of God, with love to, and faith in God. So the Apoſtle James beſpeaks him (ch. 2. 20.) But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead? As if he had ſaid, Thou empty man, thou that haſt but a boaſt of faith, thou whoſe faith is fill'd up with good words, not fruited with good works, wilt thou know (thou ſhalt, whether thou wilt or no) that thy faith is dead? Where there is life, there is operation; works are not the form, but they are the fruit of faith: they are not the eſſence of a living faith, but they are the evidence that faith lives; and he is to be numbered among the vaineſt of men, who ſpeaks of his faith, while his works are altogether ſpeechleſs, or ſpeaks nothing but unbelief.

When man fell from God, the Devil emptied him of that which he was full of, the Image of God in uprightneſs, and fill'd him with that which was but emptineſs, his own Image, in unrighteouſneſs. The nature of fallen man, in the beſt notion of it, is but white paper, in which nothing is written; in another notion, it is black paper, written, or blotted rather with evil. And though ſome notions and general principles (from which conſcience works to conviction) remain there, yet they are ſo weak and languid, ſo like ſparks covered over with, or rather buried in embers and aſhes, that they are ſcarce diſcernable; and are not only utterly unable without aſſiſtance to diſcern between common truth and error, good and evil, but quite dead to ſpiritual good. Hence, though man hath not loſt all, yet he hath as bad as loſt all, becauſe he hath loſt that which was beſt, or ſhould make him fit to act that which is good. Things which act not are but very little better, then thoſe which are not. Man having totally loſt all holy habits, and all power to act in, or toward holineſs, is not wronged, when he is called, vain empty man.

And as he is vain, becauſe empty of what he ought to have, ſo he is more vain, becauſe full of all that which he ought not to have. This empty fulneſs the Apoſtle deſcribeth (Rom. 1. 29, 30.) filled with all unrighteouſneſs, fornication, wickedneſs, covetouſneſs, maliciouſneſs, full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; with ſuch ſtuff as this he is filled, of this chaffe and cockle he hath good meaſure, preſſed down, and ſhaken together, and running over, to give into your boſom. The heart of man at the beſt of nature, is but like a Childs pocket full of ſtones, and balls, and bables. How empty is that heart which is thus filled? The underſtanding of man, which hath not one holy ſentence written in it, is yet written all over with unholy ſentences; his judgment and conſcience are defiled and fly-blown with falſe principles, with lyes and errors; and if there be any truth there, it is about ſuch things as make him little the wiſer, and never a whit the better. Vain man is empty man, unleſs to be full of vain things, or a fulneſs of evil things (which are worſe then emptineſs) may go for fulneſs.

Vir vanus cordabitur, vel cordatus efficiatur.

Would be wiſe.] There is an elegant Paranomaſia in the Hebrew, which our Language doth not admit: but the literal ſence runs thus, Vain man would have a heart. This gives us a further evidence, what this vain man is; he is a man without a heart. Ephraim was a ſilly Dove without an heart (Hoſ. 7. 11.) without judgment to know, and without courage to do the will of God: here, vain man would have a heart: He would be wiſe if he knew how. The heart is the ſeat of wiſdom; therefore we render it well, Vain man would be wiſe. Mr. Broughton thus, Vain man would be made hearty: And the Vulgar, Vain man is raiſed up to pride; or as our Proverb ſpeaks, Takes heart at graſs. As the heart is the throne of knowledge, ſo knowledge (unleſs ſanctified) is uſually a ſtep to pride: Bare knowledge is windy, it puffeth up (1 Cor. 8. 1.) They who are not edified by knowledge, are elated by knowledge. We have cauſe to be humbled, becauſe we know ſo little; and if we once know much, it is alwayes a temptation to, often a cauſe of pride.

Cor eſt ſedes ſapientiæ, unde pro ſapientia ponitur. Vir vanus in ſuperbiã erigitur. Vulg.

Quanto ſtupidiora ſunt bruta, tanto craſſiore pollent corde. Plin.

Cordare nihil aliud eſt, quam ingenioſum, ſapientem magnique conſilii virũ evadere.

But to our reading, Vain man would be wiſe, he would have a heart. Naturaliſts obſerve, That, thoſe creatures which have the thickeſt and groſſeſt hearts in bulk, are the moſt ſtupid and uningenious. But to have a great heart in a moral ſenſe, noteth greateſt wiſdom, nobleſt ingenuity, and (in Scripture language) pureſt holineſs, Prov. 15. 32. He that heareth reproof getteth underſtanding, ſo we tranſlate: The Hebrew is, He that heareth reproof poſſeſſeth a heart; or, getteth a heart. A man that will not be reproved, hath loſt his heart as well as his ear; have but a patient ear to hear, and you may get a heart to know: underſtanding and knowledge, yea and grace too, come in at the ear.

Vain man would be wiſe; and is not this a good woulding? Is it any part of mans folly, that he would be wiſe? What can be better wiſhed then wiſdom? Solomon's prayer was for a heart. When God gave him a blank from Heaven, and ſaid, Ask what I ſhall give thee: He ſaid, Give thy ſervant an underſtanding, or (according to the letter of the Original) an hearing heart, 1 Kings 3. 5, 9. And was Solomon called vain man, becauſe he would be wiſe? Was not his election highly approved by the only wiſe God? How then is it, that Zophar upbraids Job with this deſign, and cloſely taxeth him as a vain man, becauſe he would be wiſe?

I anſwer, To deſire to be wiſe is a great point of wiſdom: and whereas Zophar makes it a fault, That vain man would be wiſe, the faultineſs muſt be found in one or both of theſe ſences.

Firſt, When man would be accounted wiſe, and affects the reputation of wiſdom, more then the reality of wiſdom; when he doth not ſo much care to be wiſe, as to be thought wiſe. The name is better to him then the thing. Many have a great opinion of their own wiſdom, and would have others take up that opinion of them too. Wiſdom is the beſt thing. And theſe think themſelves well enough, if they flouriſh in the thoughts of others for wiſe men. The reputation of wiſdom pleaſeth them as much as the enjoyment of it. Thus, to have an itch to be eſteemed wiſer then we are, or wiſe when we are not, is the greateſt piece of folly. It is a loud vanity to affect an opinion of wiſdom among others, or to have an high opinion of our own wiſdom. Thus vain man would be wiſe, and it is his vanity that he would.

Secondly, Man is vain when he would be wiſe beyond his line, or in things above him, not in things about him, or fit for him. The ſcope of the place leads us to this Expoſition, Canſt thou by ſearching find out God! Canſt thou find him out to perfection? He is as high as heaven, &c. Though ſuch knowledge of God be too high for any man, yet vain man offers at it, and thinks he knoweth nothing, if he know not ſomething which he ought not to know. Man naturally deſires forbidden wiſdom; and his deſire is ſeven times ſtronger after it, as it is forbidden, then as it is wiſdom. Many will not hear Wiſdom when ſhe calls, who yet would be wiſe in that which they have no call to. An evil heart cannot deſire any good, but for the ſake of ſome evil that comes with it. The Devil tempted man to be wiſe in a way of ſin. The firſt ſin came in by an attempt to get forbidden wiſdom: When the woman ſaw, that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleaſant to the eye, and a tree to be deſired to make one wiſe, ſhe took of the fruit thereof, &c. Gen. 3. 6. But what was the wiſdom which the woman expected from the fruit of this tree? It was not wiſdom to know God, but to be as knowing as God: So the Tempter promiſed, Ye ſhall be as Gods knowing good and evil, ver. 5. To know God is eternal life; but a deſire to know, as God, brought in eternal death. The Apoſtle cautions, Not to be wiſe above that which is written; and adviſeth, Rom. 12. 3. To be wiſe unto ſobriety. There is an intemperance of the underſtanding, as well as of the affections. There are two extreams about wiſdom, neglect and affectation. One cares not to know what is neceſſary, what may make him holy, and bring him near to Chriſt. Another cares only to know unneceſſaries: His wiſdom and learning lies in canvaſing fooliſh and unlearned Queſtions, which Paul bids Timothy avoid, 2 Tim. 2. 23. He pleaſes himſelf with crotchets and curioſities, with meer notions and niceties; about theſe, his imagination waxes wanton, and runs riot, yea, mad. Or, he muſt be breaking open of Gods Cabinet, entring into his Counſels, prying into his Ark; he thinks he knoweth nothing worthy a man, unleſs he know that which is above man. Thus alſo vain man would be wiſe, and it is his vanity that he would.

Hic vertitur pullus tamen ejuſmodi eſſe conſtat, qui oneribus vehendis, & agrariæ culturæ aptus ſit.

Though he be born as a wild aſſes colt.] That is, like a wild aſs. As Son of man is not a young man, but a man; ſo the aſſes colt is not a young aſs, but an aſs, any aſs. The word is often uſed for aſſes under burthen, and fitted for uſe, which colts are not, Gen. 49. 11. Binding his foal unto the vine, and his aſſes colt unto the choice vine, there to take up their burden, and undergo their labour. So then, when he ſaith, Vain man would be wiſe, though born like a wild aſſes colt, his meaning in plain Engliſh is only this, man would be very wiſe, wiſer then man, he would be thought as wiſe as God, at leaſt he would ſearch out the wiſdom of God, and yet indeed he is a beaſt; and Zophar inſtanceth in the wild aſs among all beaſts, becauſe the aſs among beaſts, and the wild aſs among aſſes is furtheſt from wiſdom. Some beaſts have a kind of knowledge, and are very teachable, but the wild aſs is not guilty of either. A man of weakeſt parts and thinneſt intellectuals is in ſcorn (though not without blame) called an aſs; as a crafty man is (without blame) called a fox.

Ad majorem ſtupiditatem declarandam, פרא vertitur Onager, qui eſt aſinus ſylveſtris. Merc.

Man hath wit and ſubtilty for the world, and to contrive for his luſts, but being degraded from that dignity of a ſon of God, he walks more like a beaſt then a man towards God. Eccleſ. 3. 18. I ſaid in mine heart concerning the eſtate of the ſons of men, that God might manifeſt them, and that they might ſee that they themſelves are beaſts. That they might ſee; How ſhall they ſee it? They will not ſee it till they are ſhewed it, and ſcarce then. I ſaid in mine heart that God would manifeſt this to them, that they themſelves are beaſts. As whatſoever good we have, comes from God, not from nature, ſo it is from God that we muſt learn the badneſs of nature. Man is ſo much a beaſt, that he cannot know himſelf to be one, till God teach him. And we never learn to be men, till we have learned that we were beaſts. Man was made like unto God, but man hath made himſelf like unto a beaſt. In three reſpects man is born like a wild aſſes colt, or like a beaſt.

Firſt, In regard of his ignorance. Knowledge is proper to thoſe who have reaſon, yet ſome who have reaſon have ſcarce any thing which can be called knowledge. And though grace repair the image of God in knowledge, yet the beſt of men may confeſs with Agur, (Prov. 30. 2.) Surely I am more bruitiſh then any man, or (more near the Hebrew) then a man, and have not the underſtanding of a man. Wicked men are more bruitiſh then beaſts, and holy men are more bruitiſh then a perfect man. The beſt have ſomewhat of the beaſt in them, becauſe they have not the whole underſtanding of a man in them. David charges himſelf for one ſinful act, much more then is it true of a ſinful ſtate, So fooliſh was I, and ignorant, I was as a beaſt before thee, Pſal. 73. 22. His diſſwaſion carries the ſame meaning, Pſal. 22. 9. Be not as the horſe, or as the mule which have no underſtanding. And ſo doth his concluſion (Pſal. 49. 20.) Man that is in honour and underſtandeth not, is like the beaſts that periſh. Not as if he meant it of men quite rob'd of reaſon. This not underſtanding is to be reſtrained to the duty of their high place, and the providence of God in raiſing them to it. He that underſtands not who raiſed him to honour, and what his honour leads him to, is the more like or below a beaſt, becauſe he is ſo much above other men. Of all fools a fool in honour looks moſt unlike a man.

Secondly, Man is like a beaſt, or like that beaſt here expreſſed, for wantonneſs, luſt and vanity. The Church of the Jews in her defection to idolatry is compared to a dromedary and a wild aſs, (Jer. 2. 23, 24.) Thou art a ſwift dromedary, traverſing her wayes, a wild aſs (or, O wild aſs, ſo ſome tranſlate it) uſed to the wilderneſs, that ſnuffeth up the wind at her pleaſure; in her occaſion who can turn her away? All they that ſeek her will not weary themſelves, in her moneth they ſhall find her. The Prophet deſcribeth the ſpiritual wantonneſs of that people in their idolatrous and ſuperſtitious mixtures by the natural wantonneſs of the aſs, In her occaſion who can turn her away? ſhe is not to be medled with, when the fit's upon her. All they that ſeek her will not weary themſelves, they deſiſt from purſuing her, knowing they may tire themſelves, but not take her with all their travel, till ſomewhat hath tamed her; Then, In her moneth they ſhall find her. Not that the wild aſs (as an old Rabbin dreams) uſeth to ſleep one whole moneth of the year, and then the hunters uſed to catch her napping. I ſhall remit this among Jewiſh fables. But the moneth ſhe is to be found in, may be the moneth near her ſorrows, when her burden takes off her ſpeed, and makes her more eaſie to be brought to hand. Some read the text differently, yet the ſenſe is the ſame. All they that ſeek her need not weary themſelves: In her moneth they ſhall find her. As if he had ſaid, A little labour will ſerve to catch her, ſhe is to be had with eaſe, when or where her luſt is to be ſatisfied. Like this wild aſs were the people of Iſrael in ſpiritual wantonneſs, ſo ſet upon it, that none could turn them from it: The Prophets wearied themſelves in vain to reclaim them from that lewdneſs; So prone to it, that none needed to weary themſelves to get their good-will, they did even prevent wooing, and went up to the bed of love, or of myſtical fornication, with the Nations round about, as ſoon as they did invite, but with a glance of the eye. And as they were like the wild aſs for ſpiritual, ſo they, together with the moſt of mankind, have undergone as mean a compariſon for their proneneſs to, and violent purſuit of corporal wantonneſs and uncleanneſs.

Thirdly, Man is like a wild aſs, in regard of ſtubbornneſs and unteachableneſs. Wild aſſes are as untractable, as almoſt any creature. Naturaliſts tell us, They are all for liberty. The wild aſs is not uſed to burthens, or brought to hand; he or ſhe are not fed at rack and manger, they eat what the wilderneſs affords, and are not under any mans care or government. God himſelf hath given us this character of the wild aſs in this book (Job 39. 5.) Who hath ſent out the wild aſs free? (What maſter hath the wild aſs been apprentic'd to?) or who hath looſed the bands of the wild aſs? (from whoſe hand hath he received his Indentures, or been manumitted?) Whoſe houſe I have made the wilderneſs, and the barren land his dwellings. He ſcorneth the multitude of the City, neither regardeth he the crying of the driver. The horſe and ox muſt ſerve; the horſe travels, and the ox tills the ground: the ox is under a yoke, and the horſe hath a bit and bridle to keep him in ſubjection: but the wild aſs regardeth not the driver, he cares neither for his whip, nor for his whiſtle. He is altogether a ſtranger to diſcipline, and likes not to hear of any maſter but himſelf, or to be a ſervant to any but his own will. Such is the nature of man, Man is born like a wild aſſes colt; he loves to be free, or rather to be diſſolute, he cannot endure to be ſubdued to order; he would know no law but his own luſt, nor rule, but his own deſire. Every man is of himſelf, A ſon of Belial, A ſon without a yoke. Man is ſo much for ſinful liberty, that he cares not for true liberty. The liberty he ſeeks, makes him a bond-ſlave to corruption; Thus man is born a wild aſſes colt, he is ignorant, wanton and licentious.

So much for the words as we tranſlate.

Vir vacuus cordabitur, & pullus onagri, homo evadet. Pagn. Jun. Pullus onagri homo naſcitur. Sub eleganti ironia Sophar Jobum vellicat, vir vacuus ſapiens fiet quando pullus onagri homo evadet. Bold.

There is yet another reading of good uſe, and worthy our examination. 'Tis given out thus, So ſhall vain man be made wiſe, and the aſſes colt ſhall be born a man. This rendering may bear a double interpretation.

Firſt, It may be underſtood Ironically, as a ſcorn put upon Job, and upon all ſuch as Zophar ſuppoſed him to be, vain men. Vain man ſhall be made wiſe, when an aſſes colt is made a man; that is, He ſhall never, or very hardly be made wiſe; as if he had ſaid, It is as unheard of, and as ſtrange a thing that ſuch a man as thou, a man ſo proud and high in thine own thoughts, ſo vain in thy imaginations, that ſuch an one as thou ſhouldſt be made wiſe or holy, as it is for a wild aſs to be made a man. There is a truth in this poſition, if Zophars ſuppoſition had been true. For the diſtance between mans nature, and grace, is greater then that between mans nature and a beaſts: Bare reaſon is further from grace then ſenſe is from reaſon. It is as eaſie to change a beaſt into a man, or to make a beaſt underſtand reaſon, as to change a ſinner into a Saint, or to make a believer of an Infidel. Converſion is not the change of actions only, but of nature. This ſentence, Vain man ſhall be made wiſe, when an aſs is made a man, is of the ſame ſenſe with that Proverb among us, When the skie falls we ſhall have larks; or with this, Such a thing ſhall come to paſs when a black-more is waſhed white; or rather with that of our Saviour in the Goſpel, It is eaſier for a camel to go thorow the eye of a needle, then for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God, Matth. 19. 24. Rich men ſhall go to heaven, when a camel or a cable (ſo ſome read) paſſeth thorow a needle; that is, it is impoſſible they ſhould by any power of man; and therefore to eaſe the ſharpneſs of the ſpeech, Chriſt adds by way of explication, With God all things are poſſible. It is an hard thing, yea an impoſſible thing (without God) for a rich man to be ſaved, or for a vain man to be made wiſe. And it is thus hard to make a rich man happy, becauſe he thinks himſelf happy enough; and to make a vain man wiſe, becauſe he preſumes he is wiſe enough. Seeſt thou a man wiſe in his own conceit, there is more hope of a fool then of him, Prov. 26. 12. or in the language of this text, there is as much hope of a beaſt as of him. A man had better be ignorant, then conceited of his knowledge. An opinion of knowledge keeps out true knowledge. Not only inſtruction, but correction is loſt on ſuch Opinioniſts. (Prov. 27. 22.) Though thou ſhouldeſt bray a fool in a morter among wheat with a peſtel, yet will not his fooliſhneſs depart from him. He means it not of a natural fool, nor of one that is convinced of his fooliſhneſs, but of him (who is the great fool of all) that is in love with his own fancies and ſhadows of wiſdome: take ſuch a fool and beat him to pieces in a morter, that is, let him be afflicted, till he be almoſt deſtroyed, yet his folly departs not from him; you may as ſoon make a beaſt a man, as ſuch a fool to underſtand. There is but one greater enemy to real knowledge then ignorance, and that is a conceit of knowledge.

Flagellis eruditur, & quamvis excors & expers omnium ſcientiarum naſcatur, tamen per Dei gratiam redditur intelligens. Vatab.

Only he that can drive a camel thorow a needles eye, and make a beaſt a man; Only he that calls thoſe things which are not, as if they were, can make vain man wiſe, and him to be holy, who is not.

Secondly, This rendering, So ſhall vain man be made wiſe, and the wild aſs ſhall be born a man, ſheweth us the effect of thoſe afflictions, which God layeth upon man. He conſiders their ſins to puniſh and chaſten them; What of that? So ſhall vain man be made wiſe, &c. As if he had ſaid, The end of the chaſtening of God upon man, is to make him wiſe, or (as the Prophet ſpeaks, Iſa. 27.9.) By this ſhall the iniquity of man be purged, and this is all the fruit to take away his ſin, his vanity, that the wild aſſes colt may be born a man, or reborn. This interpretation gives us the very language of the new Teſtament, about the grace of regeneration, or a new birth, John 3.5,6. In which this wonder is continually wrought, A wild aſs is born a man. Hence obſerve,

That, afflictions bleſſed and made effectual by God, make a gracious change in man.

How many ignorant men have, with correction, received inſtruction? how many proud men have been made humble; and of carnal, ſpiritual? how many unruly ſpirits have been brought in compaſs, and ſtubborn ones ſubdued with a rod? The rod and the word work miracles, when God works with them. If God ſpeak to a dry rod, it ſhall bring forth theſe Almond-bloſſoms and heavenly fruits; and unleſs he ſpeak with the word, we continue dry, yea dead, earthly and unfruitful. Before I was afflicted, I went aſtray; ſaith David: David wandred like a ſheep, and was as a beaſt; affliction made him a man, and turned him home. Ephraim crieth out, Jer. 31.18. Thou haſt chaſtiſed me, and I was chaſtiſed; importing either the ſtrength of the affliction; when God will afflict, no man can ſtay his hand, or take off his blow: or the effect of the affliction; Thou haſt chaſtiſed me, and I was chaſtiſed; that is, I was bettered by my chaſtiſements. The Lord chaſteneth ſome, who are not chaſtiſed; there is no change made, they do not mend with beating. This I rather pitch upon, as the meaning of Ephraim's bemoaning affliction, Thou haſt chaſtened me, and I was chaſtened: and obſerve how he ſpeaks of himſelf under the notion of a beaſt; I was as a bullock unaccuſtomed to the yoke, I could not endure to come under diſcipline, I could not abide the yoke; or ſubmit unto thy will; Turn thou me, and I ſhall be turned; for thou art the Lord my God; But is this the language of a beaſt? No, when once the Lord had chaſtened him, he ſpake like a man, whereas before he ſpake and did like a beaſt, even like a bullock unaccuſtomed to the yoke; but now he hath the voice of a man, yea the voice of a Saint, Turn thou me, and I ſhall be turned, for thou art the Lord my God. O happy chaſtenings, which make ſuch changes! And chaſtiſings have many advantages to make ſuch changes, to turn beaſts into men. For,

Firſt, They imbitter the world to us, the world is ſuch a beaſt that it makes men beaſts, and when the world is taken out of our hearts, the beaſt departs from us, and is taken out of our hearts.

Secondly, Afflictions make ſin more viſible, judgements reallize the evil that is in ſin; and ſhew us the poiſon of that ſerpent.

Thirdly; Afflictions are proper to tame our wildneſs, and take down the loftineſs of our ſpirits. Nebuchadnezzar for his pride was (in a manner, in his manners he was before) turned into a beaſt. His outward ſhape was not changed, (The Poets Metamorphoſis was in morals, and ſo was this in the Prophet) but he lived like a beaſt, or he lead the life of a beaſt. Some for ſin are put to live like beaſts, and all men in ſin live like beaſts. Nebuchadnezzar living among beaſts, and like a beaſt, learned to be a man; For at the end of the dayes, ſaith he, I Nebuchadnezzar lift up mine eyes to heaven, and mine underſtanding returned unto me, (Dan. 4.24.) Thus Nebuchadnezzar was born a man, I do not ſay he was born an holy man, but a man he was born, His underſtanding returned unto him, and his Councellours and his Lords ſought unto him, they owned him then not only as a man, but as a Monarch. Afflictions civillize moſt, and they ſpiritualize many. They are more brutiſh then beaſts, who (as the Prophet deſcribes them, Iſa. 91.20.) continue like wild bulls full of the fury (and empty of the ſpirit) of the Lord, when they are entangled in theſe nets, or taken with theſe toils.

And becauſe there is ſo great a tendency in affliction to humble and purifie vain man from his ſin, therefore affliction is brought in as a great aggravation of the ſin of man. How beaſtly are they that will not return from their folly, when they are ſmitten and broken with judgements? Hence that iterated expoſtulation (Amos 4.) I have ſmitten you, &c. yet have ye not returned unto me, ſaith the Lord. God himſelf doth even wonder that the beaſt ſhould not turn man, when he had been ſo long under the burden, and had received ſo many blows. 'Tis ſeaſonable for us of this Nation, to conſider this point. We have been like wild aſſes colts, ignorant, vain, obſtinate, and unteachable; God hath conſidered theſe things, he hath written his obſervation of them in bloudy characters. O that this might be the fruit, that ſuch as have been empty, and without hearts, might learn wiſdom, that ſuch as have been wild aſſes, might be born men, yea good men. This would make all our loſſes gain to us, and our judgments mercies; ſuch a change as this would change our water into wine, and all our ſorrows into joy.

Thus I have done with the firſt part of Zophars ſpeech, wherein he reproves Job, and argues the matter with him. He is now ready to alter his ſtile, and inſtead of conviction prepares advices for him.

VERS. 13, 14.

If thou prepare thine heart, and ſtretch out thine hands towards him.

If iniquity be in thine hand, put it far away, and let not wickedneſs dwell in thy tabernacles.

IN the former part of this Chapter, Zophar confuted the opinion of Job, and reproved him for aſſerting and ſtanding ſo cloſely to it. In this he gives him counſel and direction; his counſel is contained in theſe two verſes. Toward the receiving of which he propoſeth not a few encouragements, in the words which follow. The whole may be formed up thus,

Eſt paraneſis, qua Jobum hortatur, ut ad Deum redeat ampliſſima illi boni pollicens. Merc.

> Thou oughteſt willingly to hear, and chearfully to obey that counſel, in the hearing and obeying whereof, thou ſhalt be freed from evil, and enjoy all deſireable bleſſings and good things.
> But if thou hear and obey my counſel, if thou prepare thine heart, and ſtretch out thine hands towards God, if thou put the iniquity of thy hand far away from thee, thou ſhalt be freed from all evil, and enjoy all deſireable bleſſings and good things.
> Therefore thou oughteſt willingly to hear, and chearfully to obey my counſel.

The concluſion of this ſyllogiſm is delivered in the thirteenth and fourteenth verſes. The aſſumption, (namely that, in preparing his heart, and praying unto God, he ſhould be bleſſed) is laid down, in the 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19. verſes; which is illuſtrated by the oppoſite and contrary condition of the wicked, at the twentieth verſe, But the eyes of the wicked ſhall fail, and they ſhall not eſcape, and their hope ſhall be as the giving up of the ghoſt.

If thou prepare thine heart.

The words are an hortatory ſuppoſition, and (as was toucht before) we may obſerve that the three friends of Job, caſt their diſcourſes in the ſame mould, and inſiſt in the ſame method. Their ſpeeches are all of one frame and piece, as if they had ſpoken by conſent, or had before-hand reſolved upon a joynt-mannaging of their arguments & proceedings. While they all hit the ſame nail, they hope at laſt to drive it home to the head. As I have ſhewed Eliphaz in the fifth, and Bildad in the eighth Chapter, ſo now I muſt ſhew Zophar, after he had ſufficiently, if not bitterly reproved Job, adminiſtring holy and wholſom advice and counſel.

If thou prepare thine heart.] As if he had ſaid, Come (friend) leave off thy complainings, and diſputings, leave off thy ſelf-juſtifyings and over-weenings of thy own worth; Be perſwaded at laſt to lay down thy weapons, and ſubmit thy ſelf, give over reaſoning, and fall to praying. Prepare thy heart to ſeek God.

The

Tu autem firmaſti cor tuum, &c. Vulg.

The Vulgar reads it, as a charge brought againſt him, and not as a counſel given to him, Thou haſt ſtiffened thine heart againſt God, and thou haſt ſtretched out thine hands toward him: As if Job had ſtill continued contumacious and obſtinate againſt God, after all theſe breakings. To firm or ſtrengthen the heart, is to harden the heart, or to be inſenſible under the hand of God. But rather take it according to our tranſlation, as a direction or counſel, If thou prepare thine heart, that is, if thou putteſt thine heart into order, or if thou fix thine heart, ſo the word is tranſlated (Pſal. 57. 7. & 108. 1.) My heart is fixed, O God, my heart is fixed, I will ſing and give praiſe. An unfixed, or an unſetled heart, muſt needs be an unprepared heart. Fixedneſs of heart is preparatory to preparation of heart. A fixed heart (and that only) is fitted to move towards, and to follow after God. It is very hard to aim right at that which is in motion, but it is harder for him that is in motion to aim right. The ſteady man hits the mark.

Paratum vel fixum eſt cor meum

Yet more diſtinctly conſider,

Firſt, What is here meant by the heart?

Secondly, What by the preparing or fixing of the heart?

Cor eſt primum vivens & ultimum moriens.

Firſt, The heart is not here taken in its natural capacity, for that part of the body, which Philoſophers call the firſt living, and the laſt dying in man. But by the heart (in a metaphor) we are to underſtand the ſoul, or the whole inward man: For as the heart is the principal part of the body, ſo the ſoul is the principal part of man, and the failings and wounds of the ſoul are to the whole man, like the failing or wounding of the heart in reference to the outward man.

Again, As the heart in Scripture ſignifies the whole ſoul or inward man, ſo it is put diſtinctly for thoſe noble faculties of the ſoul; Firſt, The underſtanding. Secondly, The will. Thirdly, The memory. And for a fourth, which is a reſult or compound of them three, The conſcience. The Apoſtle means the underſtanding, while he ſaith of the Gentiles, (Rom. 1. 21.) Their fooliſh heart was darkned: they had a knowledge of God in the creature, but they waxed wanton, and became vain in their imaginations; and therefore their fooliſh heart, that is, their underſtanding was darkned; God ſent them a ſpiritual cloud, becauſe they did not improve natural light. They who abuſe light are moſt uſually and moſt juſtly left in darkneſs. But to the point, the ſame Apoſtle attributes blindneſs of heart, that is, of underſtanding, to the ſame Gentiles, Epheſ. 4. 18.

Secondly, The heart expreſſeth the will, in that anſwer of Chriſt to the Lawyers Queſtion, Which is the great commandment in the Law? Matth. 22. 36. Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God (ſaith Chriſt, v. 37.) with all thy heart, with all thy ſoul, with all thy mind; that is, with thy will, with thy affections, with thy underſtanding, and with all of each of theſe. And as the heart of man is his will, ſo alſo is the heart of God. I have ſought me a man (ſaith God, 1 Sam. 13. 14.) after my own heart. He is ſuch a man as I would have, he is ſo much after my will, That he will perform all my wills.

Thirdly, The heart of man is his memory (Pſal. 119. 11.) Thy word have I hid in my heart: Memory is the repoſitory or ſtore-houſe of the Word, the treaſury of holy Truths, Mary hid the words of Chriſt there, Luke 2. 19.

Fourthly, The conſcience, which hath in it the light of the underſtanding, the motions of the will, and the recognitions of the memory, comes under the notion of the heart (Pſal. 51. 12.) Create in me a clean heart, O God; that is, purifie my conſcience, ſet that right; David's conſcience was extreamly out of frame, his ſin had reduced it back into a kind of chaos, this made him pray for a new creation: Ordinary repairs, or a little mending would not ſerve his turn. But if this Scripture convince not the heart, for the conſcience, yet that of the Apoſtle John doth beyond all exception. If our heart condemn us, God is greater then our heart (1 John 3. 20.) and ſo doth that of Job (Chap. 27. 6.) My heart (that is, my conſcience) ſhall not reproach me ſo long as I live. It is conſcience which chideth and reproacheth the ſinner, and tells him his own. It is conſcience that ſpeaks fair, and gives good words to thoſe who walk uprightly: My heart (ſaith upright Job) ſhall not reproach me; that is, I have walked in my integrity, therefore I am not afraid what conſcience can do, or ſay againſt me.

When Job is adviſed to prepare his heart, we muſt enlarge it to the whole inward man, not fix it upon any one of theſe faculties in oppoſition to, or exemption from the other. If thou prepare thine heart.

Dicit cor tuum, non labia tua, quod hypocritarum eſt, hortatur Jobum, ut ad Deum redeat non fictè & ſimulatè. Druſ.

Verbum כון ſemper accipitur in bonum.

This preparation conſiſteth in two things.

Firſt, In removing and ſweeping out the filth which is in the heart, Matth. 15. 19. Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, falſe witneſs, blaſphemies. Now, as it is the continual work of an evil heart to ſend out theſe; ſo it is the firſt work of preparing a good heart, to purge and caſt out theſe. They come out of the heart eaſily, but, O how hard is it, to thruſt them out! yet this muſt be done, or elſe nothing is done towards the preparation of the heart. If you were to prepare an houſe for the entertainment of a great Prince, what would you do? Would not your firſt care be to carry out the dirt, and waſh the floor; down with the cobwebs there (cries one) away with every unclean thing (ſaith another) Thus we begin to prepare our houſes for ſuch noble entertainments. Again, when you are to prepare a plot of ground to receive ſeed, what do you? Do you not firſt pick out the ſtones, pull up and bury the weeds, and then ſow? Thus the Lord dealt with his vineyard (Iſa. 5. 2.) He fenced it, and gathered out the ſtones thereof, and then planted it with the choiceſt vines. He gathered out the ſtones before he planted it, he would not ſet vines among ſtones. The firſt work in all preparations is to get out the rubbiſh, and remove impediments.

Secondly, The heart wherein Chriſt is to be lodged, muſt not be a mere vacuum, only ſwept and empty; holineſs doth not conſiſt in negatives, in removing and throwing out of evil, though that be a great part of it: Therefore the next part of preparation is the adorning and beautifying of the heart, the quickning and heightning of it to thoſe duties and ſervices which God calls for. If you entertain a Prince, or but a ſpecial friend, as you ſweep your houſe, and waſh away the dirt, ſo you put up your Arras hangings, lay on your Perſian carpets, ſet up your Ivory beds, uncover your rich ſtools, bring out your Plate and ornaments; till then the houſe is not prepared. Thus to the point in hand, the preparation of the heart conſiſts in the actings of grace, in opening of all your ſpiritual ſtores, in putting on the richeſt furnitures of the inward man, in being cloathed with the Spirit, in ſhewing forth the vertues of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. If you be not thus beautified, as well as emptied, you are unprepared.

It is ſaid (Matth. 12. 44.) That the evil ſpirit returning to his houſe, whence he came out, when he is come, findeth it empty, ſwept and garniſhed. No marvel if it were empty, for who would dwell in a houſe, which hath had the Devil for its Tenant? But how came it ſwept, and with what broom? How came it to be garniſhed, and with what furniture? Muſt a houſe be made clean to entertain an unclean ſpirit? Muſt it be ſwept to receive him, who hath fill'd the whole world with filth and rubbiſh?

This emptying, ſweeping, and garniſhing, is fit for ſuch a gueſt. A heart emptied and ſwept of goodneſs, a heart adorned and garniſhed with noiſom luſts (ſuch are the ornaments and garniſh there meant) is a heart prepared for the Devil. In this manner, but with the moſt contrary materials muſt the heart be prepared for God. It muſt be emptied and ſwept of ſin, it muſt be garniſhed with grace, before the King of glory enters in.

In theſe two acts, preparation of the heart conſiſts, and without both it is imperfect; if the room be not cleanſed, he who is of purer eyes then to behold any unclean thing, will not lodge in it. God and ſin cannot dwell together, What communion is there between light and darkneſs, between Chriſt and Belial? Neither is it enough (if it were poſſible) to caſt out ſin, and to put off the old man, unleſs you put on the new. Some attempt to put the new man upon the old. They are willing (in this ſenſe) to be cloathed upon, but cannot endure to be uncloathed. Holineſs upon unholineſs is the diſguiſe, not the habit of a holy man. Others would be uncloathed, ſo they might be ſpared this pains to be cloathed upon. It is eaſier with them not to do evil, then to do good. Evil laid aſide, and good not admitted or acted, acted, makes but half (if ſo much of) a good man. A due preparation of the heart conſiſts in putting off every evil, and in not doing any; in putting on all, and in doing every good.

This is the work which Job is adviſed unto. The ſum of all ſafe and wholſom counſel is contracted into this one ſentence, Prepare thy heart.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, God muſt have the heart.

He made the heart, therefore he deſerves it. He gives us his heart, therefore he deſerves ours. Whatſoever we give him without a heart, we give him nothing. There is only ſo much of value in what we do, as there is of heart in it. It is the voice of our hearts, not the muſick of our tongues that God regards, My ſon, give me thine heart. God muſt have your beſt piece, for he is the beſt of all.

Secondly, Any heart will not ſerve Gods turn, it muſt be a prepared heart.

He accepts not the beſt ſervice without a heart: How then ſhould he accept an evil heart, which can do him no ſervice, or none but ill? As a good heart is the beſt part of man, ſo an evil heart is the worſt; and there is no heart, but is one of theſe; that which is not good, is evil. and that which is not prepared, is not good. Therefore the heart, which is a gift fit for God, muſt be a prepared heart.

Thirdly, Our preparations for God muſt begin at the heart.

When Zophar would direct Job, he ſaith, If thou prepare thine heart; never think to cleanſe your hands before you cleanſe your hearts: who can ſweeten the ſtream, while the fountain is bitter, or make the fruit good, while the tree is evil? (Act. 15. 9.) He put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith: Where the holy Ghoſt begins, we muſt: They who agree not in purity of heart, ſhall differ for ever. They who agree in purity of heart, though they diſagree in opinion, ſhould put no difference (I am ſure not ſuch wide ones as now are) between themſelves. The truth is, where hearts are really purified by faith, their differences in opinion cannot be very wide: for they who are ſo wide that they cannot be ſaved, were never purified: When once the heart is purified, head and hand cannot continue very long, or very much unpurified. For though purifying begins alwayes at the heart, yet it never ſtayes there. Many a man hath purified his head from falſe principles (he is very Orthodox) and his hands from falſe practices (he is very honeſt) whoſe heart was never purified. But there is no man, nor ever was, whoſe heart is purified; but his head and hands, were, are, or ſhall be purified, even in this preſent life. A man whoſe heart is prepared cannot perſevere to the end in doing or holding evil; but the reaſon of all the evil both done and held in the world, is, becauſe the heart is not prepared. So it is ſaid of Rehoboam (2 Chron. 12. 14.) He did evil in the ſight of the Lord, Why? Becauſe he prepared not his heart to ſeek the Lord. Poſſibly he made ſome outward preparations, but he prepared not his heart. And when Simon Magus, who made ſuch haſte to be waſhed in the water of baptiſm (Act. 8.) did ſoon after appear ſo foul; where lay the fault? He had made ſuch an outward profeſſion, that the Apoſtle could not refuſe him, his tongue was as good, and 'tis like he ſhewed as fair a hand as the reſt did; why then did Simon Magus fail? The Apoſtle tells him (and us) the reaſon (verſ. 21.) Thine heart is not right in the ſight of God; he had waſhed his out-ſide, but his inwards were unclean. The heart is the worſt part of man, till it be mended, and then 'tis the beſt. Where moſt evil lieth, there we muſt begin to be good; all is good, when that is good which is the ſeat, the neſt of all evil. When Chriſt was coming into the world, to accompliſh that great work of redemption, he ſaith (Heb. 10. 5.) Lo I come (in the volume of thy book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God, a body haſt thou prepared me, &c. Chriſt needed not to have a heart prepared him, his heart was prepared from all eternity; there was never any, the leaſt unpreparedneſs in his heart, for he was holy in his temporal conception, and he was the holy Son of God, by an eternal generation; and therefore he doth not ſay, An heart haſt thou prepared me, no, he might ſay (in the higheſt ſence with the Pſalmiſt) My heart is ready, O God, my heart is ready. What needed he then to fit him for a ſacrifice? Only a body capable of ſufferings. He had a heart fit both to do and ſuffer, but he wanted a body: He was in the form of God, therefore a body, a ſute of fleſh and blood, ſuch as the Divine Nature never wore before, muſt be provided for him, and provided it was: God himſelf was at the whole coſt to make it (man contributed nothing) A body haſt thou prepared me, O God. But when man is called to do the will of God, he hath a body prepared, but he wants an heart. He hath but need to pray, Lord prepare an heart for me; if the heart be prepared, the body is. All the diſtempers and unſerviceableneſs of our bodies ariſe from the unpreparedneſs of our hearts. The heart carries the whole man with it; if once that be ready, all is ready.

Fourthly, Obſerve, God will not do us good, until we are fit to receive good.

Grace is free, yet grace prepares us for grace. As the mere favour of God beſtows the firſt grace upon us, ſo the exerciſe of grace fits us for further favour. If thou prepare thine heart, then, &c. In all the publick reformations recorded in Scripture, God calls his people to ſet their hearts right (1 Sam. 7. 3.) Put away the ſtrange gods, and Aſhtaroth from among you, and prepare your hearts unto the Lord. The want of this is complained of, as the cauſe of all their wants: Hence the Prophet prayeth (Pſal. 78. 8.) that they might not be as their Fathers, A ſtubborn and rebellious generation, a generation that ſet not their hearts aright. While our hearts are not right with God, no marvel if things go wrong with us. All the unevenneſs of our lives, whether in what we do, or in what we enjoy, ariſeth from the unevenneſs of our hearts. How can they expect to receive good, who are totally unfit to do good? The lips of the wiſe diſperſe knowledge, but the heart of the fooliſh (doth) not ſo: (or nearer the original) is not right, (Prov. 15. 7.) This latter Tranſlation expounds the former; for the reaſon why he cannot do ſo, is, becauſe his heart is not right. The lips of the wiſe diſperſe knowledge, they ſcatter or ſow the good ſeed of knowledge: but the heart of a fool is not right, therefore he cannot do ſo; and becauſe his heart is ſo unprepared to do good, he receives no good. This was the ſtop, or gave check to that good work of reformation (2 Chron. 20. 23.) much was done, Howbeit the high-places were not taken away; why what hindered? The people had not as yet prepared their hearts unto the God of their father; they were not ready for God. And that may be the very reaſon, why at this time we go on ſo ſlowly in duty, and why our mercies come on ſo ſlowly; we are not prepared for the God of our fathers; our pride, our envyings, our worldlineſs, and creature intereſts, are ſo great, and ſtick ſo cloſe to us, that we are unfit for the work God calls for at our hands, and for the mercy which we are waiting for at the hand of God.

Fifthly, How is it that Zophar ſaith, If thou prepare thine heart? he puts the work upon Job. Who is able to prepare his own heart? We may as well create a world, as convert our ſelves. We may as ſoon be our own Saviours, as our own preparers.

It is indeed Gods work to prepare the heart; yet Zophar gives good counſel to Job, when he ſaith, If thou prepare thine heart. The Pelagians of old, with their ſucceſſors in that perſwaſion, Papiſts and Arminians, miſ-interpret texts of like importance with this, to prove that the converſion of man to God begins at man; or that the grace of God is ſubſequent, or but a ſecundary to the ſelf-preparations of man. Whereas ſuch Scriptures ſhew us our duty, not our ability, what muſt be done, not what we can do. A natural man hath no ſtrength; a godly man cannot improve his ſtrength without aſſiſtance. Without me (ſaith Chriſt) ye (my Diſciples) can do nothing, Joh. 15. 5. Our preparations of heart do not at all begin at us, nor are they compleated by us.

Hence Obſerve, We may be called to do what is not in our power to do.

The Apoſtle exhorts, Work out your own ſalvation with fear and trembling (Phil. 2. 12.) He ſeems to give a ſtrange reaſon in the next verſe, For it is God that worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleaſure (v. 13.) Our inability to work doth not exempt us from working, we having a promiſe from God to make us able: we are commanded to do what we have not ſo much as a will to do, becauſe cauſe God is engaged to work in us both to will and to do; and that, not according to any prediſpoſitions of ours, but of his own good pleaſure. Our Maſter in Heaven ſhews us our duty, and then helps us to perform it: He calls us to prepare our hearts, and then prepares them for us. For they who have received grace, have not a full power to obey this call, and they who are in nature have none at all; yet it is not in vain to ſay to a man of the one eſtate, nor of the other, Prepare thine heart; though the latter be dead in ſins and treſpaſſes, yet it is neither improper, nor unprofitable to bid him turn from ſin, becauſe while we ſpeak to the ear, God ſaith he will ſpeak to the heart, and accompany the Word with his own power, yea, make the word of man the power of God unto mans ſalvation. And though the former cannot fully obey this call, nor prepare his heart without new actual concurrences, and freſh receits of grace, yet by ſuch invitations God awakens and ſtirs up thoſe old habits of grace, which lay ſlumbering, or unacted, and cauſeth ſuch to ſtir up themſelves, who were aſleep, or very unactive. The Prophet complained (Iſa. 64. 7.) That no man ſtirred up himſelf to take hold of God. As man muſt ſtir up himſelf, yet he ſtirs not, till God ſtir him; ſo man muſt prepare his heart, yet he cannot prepare it, till God prepareth him; Pſal. 10. 17. Lord, thou wilt prepare their heart, thou wilt cauſe thine ear to hear. It is not only the priviledge, but the purpoſe of God to prepare our hearts; yet if we deſire he ſhould, we muſt ſet our ſelves to prepare our own hearts. David in that gratulory prayer for the free oblations and contributions of the people toward the building of the Temple, thus beſpeaketh God, Keep this for ever in the imagination of the thoughts of the heart of thy people, and prepare their heart unto thee (1 Chron. 29. 16.) He bleſſeth God for the preſent preparation, he begs of God to continue their prepared hearts in a gracious frame; and yet as if nothing had been done, he prayeth for further preparation (Prov. 16. 1.) The preparations of the heart in man, and the anſwer of the tongue, is from the Lord. You ſee all is from the Lord, the root and the fruit, heart-work and tongue-work, our thoughts which are the moulds of action, and our words which are the image of our thoughts; God works at the bottom of the heart, and at the tip of the tongue, yet man muſt not ſit ſtill; that God works, muſt not make us idle: when we hear that God doth all, we muſt not take up reſolutions to do nothing, no, the Lord in ſpeaking thus, at once directs us what to do, and aſſiſts us to do it. Grace is as much magnified in working in us, as in ſaving us without works; that's the reaſon why we are ſo often called to duty, though we have no power. If thou prepare thine heart,

And ſtretch out thine hand toward him.

Or Spread thy palms to him, ſo the letter of the original.

אליו כפיך

The word which we tranſlate, Stretch out, ſignifies ſometimes an affected oſtentation, or the ſpreading of a thing to have it ſeen. Hence one of the Ancients expounds this place as a reproof upon Job, giving the meaning of it thus, Thou haſt ſtretched forth thine hands towards him, that is, Thou haſt vaunted of thy works of piety, juſtice and charity; thou haſt ſpread thy palms, yea thy plumes before God, and ſhewed him what work thou haſt done him. Some tell us that the word Phariſee, is derived from (Paraſh) to lay open, to unfold and ſtretch out: and there is a double reaſon given of it; Firſt, Becauſe the Phariſees wore the Law openly, with broad enlarged phylacteries: Or ſecondly, Becauſe they loved to do all their duties openly, they would pray in the open Streets, they gave alms with ſound of trumpet, and Chriſt tells them to their teeth, That all they did was to be ſeen of men; they kept their evil hearts cloſe, and durſt not let them be ſeen; but their good works they cared not who ſaw them, or rather their care was that all ſhould ſee them; thus they ſpread out their hands. Chriſt adviſeth in the matter of alms, to keep the hand cloſe, Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doth (Matth. 6. 31.) The right hand is the working and giving hand; our good works, eſpecially our gifts, ſhould be done in ſuch ſecrecy, that the left hand which is ſo near a neighbour, muſt not know what is done by the right. But the Phariſees made not only their left hand, that is their next neighbours, but Town and Country know what their right hands had done. He that deſires all ſhould be known, which his right hand doth, doth nothing at all with a right heart. It is dangerous to hide the talents which God lends us; but it is as much our duty to hide the talents (ſuch are gifts to the poor) which we lend to God, as it is to lend them. Theſe talents are beſt traded, when wrapt in a napkin, or buried in the earth.

Expandere manus eſt opera pietatis oſtentare & vaniloquentiâ dilatare. Greg.

Some conceive Zophar in theſe words taxing Job with vain oſtentation of his good deeds; Thou haſt ſtretched out thine hands, that is, Thou haſt told God ſtories of thy charity, of thine alms, &c.

Others interpret it thus, Thou haſt ſtretched, &c. that is, thou haſt carried thy ſelf inſultingly, furiouſly, madly toward God. Stretching forth of the hands, is a poſture of fury: an uncompoſed mind is often viſible in the uncompoſedneſs of an outward member.

Manuum expanſio pertinet ad habitum furentis. Phil.

But thirdly, waving thoſe two, ſtretching forth of the hands, as it is here given in counſel, hath a three-fold uſe in Scripture.

Firſt, It is a geſture of ſorrow, mourners ſtretch out their hands (Jer. 4. 31:) I have heard a voice as of a woman in travel, and the anguiſh, as of her that bringeth forth her firſt child. The voice of the daughter of Zion that bewaileth her ſelf, that ſpreadeth her hands, ſaying, Woe is me now, for my ſoul is wearied, becauſe of the murderers.

Secondly, It is a geſture of bounty or pity. Stretching out the hands, implieth a readineſs and willingneſs to receive to favour, or to ſhew favour (Iſa. 65. 2.) I (ſaith the Lord) have ſpread out my hands all the day unto a rebellious people; that is, I have expreſſed my willingneſs to entertain them, to pardon them, and to do them good. Open hands are the emblem of an open heart, and arms ſtretched out, of a readineſs to imbrace. When we ſtretch out our hands to God, it ſpeaks our willingneſs to receive his commands; and when God ſtretcheth out his hands to us, it ſpeaks his readineſs to pardon our ſins and ſupply our wants.

Thirdly, Stretching out the hands is a prayer geſture. As he that helps ſtretcheth forth his hand, ſo doth he that would be holpen. When Moſes went out from the preſence of Pharaoh, he ſaith, As ſoon as I am gone out of the City, I will ſpread abroad my hands unto the Lord, and the thunder ſhall ceaſe, &c. Exod. 9. 29. That is, I will pray unto the Lord, that the thunder may ceaſe, and I am aſſured it ſhall. So (1 King. 8. 22.) at the dedication of the Temple, Solomon ſtood before the Altar, and ſpread forth his hands towards heaven. Let us lift up our heart with (our) hands unto God in the heavens (Lam. 3. 41.) or according to the letter of the Hebrew; Let us lift up our hearts to our hands, to God in the heavens; that is, let our hearts be lifted up as well as our hands. Some lift up their hands while their hearts hang down in prayer. The Apoſtles charge (1 Tim. 2. 8.) clears it further, I will that men pray every where lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting. Heathens have obſerved and deſcribed this poſture of ſuppliants to their Idol-gods, bowing their knees, holding up their hands and praying.

Eſt habitus opem implorantis & orationis ſignum. Merc.

Ac ſupplex geminas tendens ad ſidera palmas Syl. Ital.

So that putting both together. Prepare thine heart, and ſtretch out thine hands towards him, are plainly this, Prepare thine heart and pray, or prepare thine heart to pray. The ſign is put for the thing ſignified, or the geſture uſed in that duty for the duty it ſelf in which it is uſed. There are four ſignifications which ſtretching forth the hands may have in prayer. I will touch upon that (only to ſhew the vanity of it) which the ſuperſtitious Papiſts do much inſiſt upon; we pray (ſay they) ſtretching forth the hands or arms, to expreſs the croſs of Chriſt; becauſe when a man ſtretcheth out his arms, his body makes the figure of a croſs. This they make one reaſon, why ſtretching out the hands, is appointed or accuſtomed in prayer. But how they who lived where ſuch a kind of death as crucifying was never heard of, as Zophar and Job did; and ſo many hundred years before Chriſt died upon the croſs; how they (I ſay) could in prayer form their bodies intentionally, to that which was never formed in their minds, the croſs of Chriſt, is beyond all conjecture, and is no point at all of faith. To paſs that, there are (I ſay) four ſignificancies in it.

Firſt, ſtretching out the hands towards God in prayer, implieth a reſignation of our ſelves to the will and work of God. It is as much as to ſay, Theſe hands of mine, which I have heretofore imployed about the work of the Devil, and the ſervice of ſin, now, Lord, I dedicate them and their work wholly to thy ſelf. They who give their hearts to God, will not ſtick at giving their hands. Holy prayer offers up the whole man to God, and deſires him to take the ſpoils of all. A godly man hath not a finger at his own diſpoſe. The hand being the great organ or inſtrument of action, the ſtretching out of our hands to God, may well imply our readineſs to act wholly at his direction. The ſureſt way to write our ſelves ſervants to God, is to give him our hands.

Secondly, Stretching forth of the hands, ſignifieth a holy ſtriving with God in prayer, or the earneſtneſs and ſtrong intention of our ſpirits in prayer. A man that ſtriveth with another, ſtretcheth out his hands, and takes hold of him. So did Jacob when he wreſtled with the Angel, he held him faſt, and would not let him go, till he had prevailed for a bleſſing.

Thirdly, Stretching out of the hand imports the lifting up of the mind to God in prayer. Prayer is the aſſent of the ſoul to God. We pray no more then we have communion with God in prayer. Unto thee, O Lord (ſaith David, Pſal. 25. 1.) do I lift up my ſoul. We ſhould not leave any thing of our ſouls, no nor of our ſelves here on earth, when we pray to our Father which is in Heaven. We ſhould then lock our hearts againſt worldly thoughts, and ſet them open to God only. Satan is very buſie to buſie the heart with temptations, while the tongue is uttering petitions. Let hands lifted up be witneſſes that the ſoul is, that it is in the mount, out of the noiſe and clutter of this world. How can we believe that God heareth us, when we do not hear our ſelves? or that he ſhould be mindful to grant what we aſk, when we do not mind what we are aſking?

Oratio eſt elevatio mentis ad deum. Quæ autem ſegnitia eſt alienari & capi ineptis cogitationibus cum deũ deprecaris, quaſi ſit aliud quod magis debes cogitare quam quod cum Deo loquaris? quomodo te à Deo audiri poſtulas, cum teipſe non audias? vis eſſe deum memorem tui cum rogas; cum tu ipſe memor tui non ſis? Cyprian. Ser. de Orat. Dominica.

Fourthly, Stretching out of the hands ſaith, that all our hope and expectation is in God. We ſtretch out our hands to him to tell him that we depend wholly upon him for help, mercy, favour and pardon; that unleſs he deliver us, we are loſt and undone for ever. When a child is in danger of falling, he ſtretcheth out his hands to his mother, or to any next him, crying for their help. If a man be fallen into the mire, or water, he ſtretcheth out his hands preſently; though himſelf cannot ſpeak, yet his hands lifted up ſpeak for hands to lift him up. The priſoner in war caſts down his weapons, and lifts up his hands to the victor for pitty and quarter. Thus hands lifted up or ſtretched out in prayer, beg mercy, and ſhew our dependance upon God for ſuccour. The lifting up of our eyes to God, is of the ſame ſignification: Unto thee lift I up mine eyes, O thou that dwelleſt in the Heavens; as the eyes of ſervants look unto the hand of their maſters, and as the eyes of a maiden to the hand of her miſtreſs, ſo our eyes wait upon the Lord our God till he have mercy upon us; Pſal. 123. 1, 2. In this poſture Chriſt prayed to his Father, Joh. 17. 1. Theſe words ſpake Jeſus, and lift up his eyes to Heaven, and ſaid, Father, the hour is come, glorifie thy Son. He lifted up his eyes as a ſign of confidence in, and holy boldneſs with his Father. This ſign is alſo given, with a hand ſtretched out in prayer, as Zophar gives in counſel; If thou ſtretch forth thine hands towards him.

Firſt, Obſerve, That as the heart muſt be prepared for all good duties, ſo eſpecially for prayer. If thou prepare thine heart, and ſtretch out thine hands towards him.

Prayer is a duty of greateſt weight, a moſt ſpiritual duty, it is our acceſs to God in Chriſt, it is our entring into the holieſt by the blood of Jeſus, Heb. 10. 19. And if ever we had need to look to the holineſs of our hearts, it is when we draw near unto the holy God, who is looking into our hearts. In prayer we deſire God to look into our hearts, and ſhall not we look into them our ſelves?

Secondly, Obſerve, Prayer is a ſpecial duty of repentance: And the confeſſion of our unpreparedneſs, is a ſpecial part of prayer.

Zophar thought Job had need enough to repent, and he that repents hath need enough to pray: repentance is our returning to God: prayer is our drawing near to God. I will ariſe (ſaith the prodigal Son) and go to my Father, and I will ſay unto him, Father, I have ſinned againſt Heaven and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy Son.

Thirdly, If thou prepare thine heart, and ſtretch out thine hands towards him;

Hence Obſerve, In prayer the whole man muſt be exerciſed.

Heart and hand muſt joyn in this duty. Not only the ſoul but the body muſt pray; hands muſt pray, knees muſt pray, and eyes muſt pray; Geſtures are ſpeaking in prayer, by theſe we pray when we hold our peace, and lift up a loud voice when we ſay never a word; kneeling or proſtrating the body ſpeaks humility; beating the breaſt, ſmiting upon the thigh, are ſignificative of ſorrow; lifting up the eyes and hands to Heaven, argue a fervent and attentive ſpirit. But as it is compleateſt duty to pray with hand and heart; ſo it is emptieſt hypocriſie, to pray with the hand and not with the heart. Theſe geſtures (take that caution) may ſoon degenerate; the body may be very active when the ſoul ſits ſtill or is eſcaped from the work. Some uſe much action, who uſe no affection in prayer; ſoul-prayer, though alone, is good, but wo to body-prayer when it is alone; how can it get warmth or heat when it is alone? Soul prayer is abſolutely neceſſary, body prayer is comely. Internal prayer pleaſeth God moſt, external prayer honours God moſt. What God hath joyned together, let not us (while we may keep them together) part aſunder.

Hi geſtus facile degenerant. Optimæ preces quæ minimum ſtrepunt & in abſcondito cordis ad eum effunduntur qui videt in occulto & rependit in aperto, qui non tam vocis quàm cordis auditor eſt.

And as the whole man ſhould be imployed in prayer, ſo eſpecially in that ſignal concluſion of it, Amen. Some of the ancient Hebrews teach us to gather up all our ſpirits into the Amen of prayer, becauſe prayer is (as it were) gathered all together, or ſumm'd up into Amen. The ſpirits of the whole prayer are contracted into it, and ſo ſhould the ſpirit of him that prayeth. Amen is a ſhort word, but it is in ſence as long as the longeſt prayer. Moſt ſay Amen, becauſe they uſe to ſay ſo, not becauſe they know what they ſay. Amen is often at the tongues end, but 'tis ſeldom at the hearts end. Formality and flatneſs of the ſpirit, pal's and unſpirits it in the ſpeaking. There are three things which the Rabbins have obſerved upon the ſaying of Amen.

Firſt, Your Amen (ſay they) muſt not be haſty. Secondly, It muſt not be maimed or defective. Thirdly, It muſt not be alone.

Firſt, It muſt not be haſty, without a ſetled conſideration of what we have prayed for. We muſt ſay Amen with our underſtandings. That's the Apoſtles argument for prayer in a known language: Elſe when thou ſhalt bleſs with the Spirit, how ſhall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned ſay Amen, at thy giving of thanks, ſeeing he underſtandeth not what thou ſayeſt? 1 Cor. 14. 16.

Ne ſit reſponſio τοῦ Amen raptamanca orba, in Notis ad Pirke Avorh.

Secondly, Amen muſt not be maimed, that is, without the proſecution and inſtance of our ſpirits, we muſt ſtretch out our hearts after it, and be ſwallowed up in God.

Thirdly, Amen muſt not be alone, or an orphan, that is, without faith, love, and holy confidence: for when we ſay Amen, we ſay Let it be done; and ſhall we ſay to God, Do all, and have no faith that any thing ſhall be done? Let not Amen ſtand alone as a poor orphan, which hath neither Father nor Mother, faith nor love, to ſupport and carry it on to the object of prayer, to the God hearing prayer.

Some Interpreters give it, as Zophars ſpecial aim, to remember Job that his prayers had been faithleſs and flat; that the ſpirits of his petition were exhal'd and gone. For whereas Eliphaz and Bildad had exhorted him to humility and patience, Job anſwers, he had prayed for both, as alſo that God would either end his pains or him; remove his ſorrows, or ſhew him the reaſon why they were continued. Zophar ſteps in upon this advantage: Thou haſt been praying indeed (ſaith he) but thy heart hath not been right, nor thy ſpirit fervent; thou haſt not prayed with a prepared heart, nor with a ſtretcht-out hand unto God; thou haſt prayed rather out of the bitterneſs, then out of the holineſs of thy ſpirit: Thy ſutes are the fruit of preſumption, not of faith; of unwarrantable boldneſs with God, not of an holy confidence in him; now I would have thee pray indeed. Prepare thine heart and ſtretch out thine hands, pray with all thy might, and then hearken what the Lord God will ſay.

This check (as ſome conceive) cauſed Job in his anſwer to Zophar, to complain, I am as one mocked of his neighbour, who calleth upon God, and he anſwereth him: (Chap. 12.)

as if he had ſaid, Zophar, you have mocked and upbraided me with my prayers, you thought I did not prepare mine heart nor ſtretch out my hands to God in prayer; you ſpeak to me as if you had felt me in a cold ſweat at duty, or had ſeen the image of pale death ſitting upon all my addreſſes unto God. But I am ſure I feel you too hot at reproofs, and ſee the image of an unfriendly jealouſie ſitting upon this your addreſs to me. You do but mock me while you ſay unto me, prepare thine heart and ſtretch out thine hand to God. Yet (in my thoughts) this counſel of Zophar is ſo holy and grave, that I ſee not how a gracious heart (ſuch Job's was) could interpret it as a mock, eſpecially conſidered in its connexion with the next verſe.

Verſe 14. If iniquity be in thine hand, put it far away, and let not wickedneſs dwell in thy Tabernacle.

He had exhorted him before, to prepare his heart and ſtretch out his hand; now he bids him prepare his hand before he ſtretch it out.

Si mendaciū ſit in manu tua. Targ. Intelligit rapinam aliorum bonorū facultatis male partas. Si qua defraudatio manu tua. Bez.

If iniquity be in thine hand.] The word Iniquity bears any ſin; yet the Chaldee ſpecificates it into a lye; if a lye be in thine hand. Others (which amounts to a lye) if deceit, wrong dealing, oppreſſion or any violence be in thine hand, put it far away from thee: any thing that deceives is a lye. Iſa. 44. 20. He feedeth of aſhes (that is, ſorrow is his food) a deceived heart hath turned him aſide, that he cannot deliver his ſoul, nor ſay, Is there not a lye in my right hand? As if he had ſaid, His Idol promiſed him better fare then aſhes, yet he is ſo much deceived, that he cannot ſee he is, or ſay there is a lye in his right hand. Oppreſſion is properly and uſually called the ſin of the hand. There are many ſins of the body, which are not ſins of the hand; all thoſe are, wherein the hand acts moſt, as in violence and wrong; in theſe ſins there is ſo heavy a hand, that they deſerve to be called ſins of the hand. And though the word may take in any kind of ſin, yet Zophar charges Job chiefly with that, as his other friends had done, more then once, before. That proclamation to repent, which the King of Nineveh cauſed to be publiſhed through the City, ran in this tenor, Let every one turn from the violence that is in their hands; and if you would know what that was, read the ſecond of Nahum, there we are ſhewed that Nineveh was a ſpoiling City, and the men thereof as Lions, tearing in pieces enough for their whelps, and ſtrangling for their Lioneſſes, they filled their holes with prey, and their dens with ravin; they cared not whom they ruined, ſo they might raiſe up their own eſtates. This is iniquity of the hand.

And ſecondly, We may underſtand it not only of outward and violent, but of any cloſe and ſecret wrong; carry it as covertly as you can, even like Juglers, who do that before your face which you cannot ſee; yet wrong dealing and wrong doing is iniquity, and the iniquity of the hand. Evil done by ſleight of hand, or cunningly, is as bad as that which is done by ſtrength of hand or violently.

Thirdly, If there be iniquity in thine hand, is as if he had ſaid, if thou haſt gotten any thing wrongfully, which ſtill remains in thy power, put it away, &c. To be in the hand, is to be in our diſpoſe; and we ſay commonly, ſuch a thing is out of my hand, when we have parted with it, or diſpoſed of it. So, if iniquity be in thine hand, is, if thou haſt deceived any man, and the matter be ſtill with thee, reſtore it, ſend it home to the right owner, away with it, put it far from thee.

Before I come to the other branch, take one Obſervation from this as it hath reference to the former counſel, Prepare thine heart, and ſtretch out thine hands towards God: if iniquity be in thine hand, put it far away from thee.

The hand muſt be cleanſed as well as the heart.

For as God cannot bear it, that we ſhould come with clean hands, a fair outward converſation, when our hearts are filthy; (ſuch Chriſt diſcovered the Phariſees, who were like platters waſhed on the out ſide, but unclean within; or like ſepulchers fairly painted, but full of dead mens bones and rottenneſs,) ſo neither can he bear it, that they whoſe hands (even to the eye of the world) are filthy and unclean, ſhould yet pretend, they have as good hearts as others, they mean well; as the one is groſs hypocriſie, ſo the other is groſs profaneneſs. Never brag of your good meanings, or that you have good hearts, when your hands are foul. I grant many have clean hands, while they have polluted hearts; but where I ſee polluted hands, I have great reaſon to think there is a polluted heart too: many appear better, but ſcarce any worſe then they are. The heart may keep in its filthineſs while the hands are waſhed; but if the heart be waſhed, the hand will not keep its filthineſs. It is very poſſible for a man that hath a clean heart to foul his fingers, but he will not wear them foul: He reneweth faith and repentance, he waſheth off the filth in that fountain which is always open for ſin and uncleanneſs. They whoſe conſtant way is evil, and yet ſay they have good hearts, deceive themſelves, but cannot deceive others. Their impiety is too plain to deceive the plaineſt ſoul in grace, that hears them ſay ſo. The preparation of the heart will be ſeen at the fingers ends: purity of ſpirit cannot conſiſt with impurity of life: if thou haſt iniquity in thine hand, put it far away from thee.

Put it far away from thee.] The Original is one word, but it is a ſtrong one; thruſt it away, remove it to the utmoſt diſtance.

Hence learn, Firſt, That, ſin muſt be put away.

There is no inmate or neighbour ſo bad as ſin, if it dwell nigh you it will undo you: it were better a Lyon and a Bear dwelt with you, or that you dwelt among Scorpions, then that you and ſin ſhould dwell together. Sin is a bad commodity, you will never gain by it, you will certainly break if it lye upon your hand; put it off at any rate, or rather whatever it coſt you, put it off. If iniquity be in thine hand, put it away. And not only ſo, But Secondly, Put it far away from thee.

We can never put ſin too far from us.

The Apoſtles rule is, Abſtain from all appearance of evil, that is, do nothing wherein ſin appears, or which hath a ſhadow of ſin, 1 Theſ. 5. 22. There is no holineſs in having a ſhew of goodneſs, but the very ſhews of ſin are evil. What the Apoſtle adviſeth for the avoiding of ſin, that it may not be committed, is as good adviſe for the putting away of ſin when it is committed: for as we are to go far from ſin by a holy care leſt we fall into it; ſo we muſt go far from ſin by a holy repentance after we have fallen into it. We ſhould put it ſo far from us, that there may be no returning. We ſhould put it as far from us, as the Eaſt is from the Weſt, which is the greateſt diſtance, not only menſurable, but imaginable. When God pardons ſin he puts it thus far from us (Pſal. 103. 12.) and ſo ſhould we (if it were poſſible) when we repent of it. The Original word in the Pſalm is that of the Text, and may be rendred thus, God hath put our ſins as far away from us, as he hath put the Eaſt from the Weſt. As the grace of God toward us will not ſuffer ſin in the guilt of it to abide near us; ſo the grace of God in us, will not ſuffer ſin in the pollution of it, to abide near us. Beſides, ſin is ſuch both in the nature and effects of it, as no wiſe man can deſire near him. Who would not put poyſon far from him? Who would not thruſt the Plague or the Leproſie far away from him? Who deſires the neighbourhood of a mortal enemy? Sin is all this and more to us, therefore put it far away.

Thirdly, Zophar having invited Job to pray, counſels him to put iniquity far away.

Note from it, We cannot draw near to God in prayer, except we put ſin far from us.

If ſin be not put far from us God will remove far from us: The holy God will not come near (unleſs to puniſh) the prayers of an unholy heart. You may ſtretch out your hands to Heaven, but you cannot reach Heaven, if any iniquity be in your hands.

Fourthly, Taking iniquity (as it hath been opened) for the violation of commutative juſtice, for wrong dealing and oppreſſion; Then Obſerve, ſorts; that which is ill got, will poiſon that which is well got. Moſes beſpeaks the Iſraelites concerning Corah, Dathan and Abiram, Depart I pray you from the tents of theſe wicked men, and touch nothing of theirs, leſt you be conſumed in all their ſins: it is dangerous to be a neighbour to wicked men; the tail of the ſtorm ſent upon them may fall upon our ſelves: it is more dangerous to keep wickedneſs in our own hands, the whole ſtorm will then fall upon us: It is very ſinful to get by wrong, but it is more ſinful to keep what is wrongfully gotten; yet how hardly are men perſwaded to part with it! It is eaſier to do an act of charity then of juſtice; Many are willing to give, but few are willing to reſtore; yet we are more bound to be juſt then to be charitable, and to reſtore then to give; and indeed no man can give till he hath reſtored, nor be charitable till he is juſt. That which is ſtollen is not fit for a gift either to God or man. God hates robbery both for almes and for burnt-offerings. They who are unable may be innocent though they reſtore not, but no man can be innocent who is unwilling to reſtore. Some have done iniquity with their hands, who have not iniquity in their hands. What they have taken from others, is taken from them, or ſpent by them. Theſe muſt ſhew, they have it in their hearts to reſtore all, though they have nothing in their hands to reſtore. How can we expect, that God ſhould remit our juſt debts, if we will not reſtore our unjuſt gains?

That which is ill gotten muſt be reſtored.

Let not wickedneſs dwell in thy tabernacle.

As the former clauſe reſpected the reforming of his perſon, ſo this the reforming of his family.

Habitat iniquitas in domo, quando in ea diu manet. Druſ.

Let not wickedneſs dwell.] That is, let it not continue there. But is it well if wickedneſs dwell not with us? may it ſtay a while with us? No, not a moment. As the Apoſtle Paul ſpeaks in reference unto thoſe falſe brethren, who came in privily to ſpie out their liberty in Chriſt, and bring them into bondage, unto whom we gave place by ſubjection, no not for an hour, (Gal. 2. 5.) So we muſt not give place to wickedneſs for an hour; it is not enough to ſay of wickedneſs, it ſhall not dwell or abide with us for ever; we will have it but for a week or a night, it may be but for an hour: no, it muſt not ſtay with us an hour, no not one moment, with our good leave and liking. When Zophar ſaith, Let not iniquity dwell in thy tabernacle, he means, haſten it away; and the reaſon why he ſaith, let it not dwell, is, becauſe no man can ſo watch his houſe and family, no nor his own heart, but ſin will ſometimes come in; he ſhall find ſuch ſtrangers there as he never invited, ſuch as he never looked for; he ſhall find them not only knocking at the door, but boldly drawing the latch, unlocking the door, and thruſting in; man cannot prevent this, either in regard of his heart or his houſe; but he may ſay, wickedneſs ſhall not dwell with me; as ſoon as he diſcovers it he may remove it, or chide it out of doors. Though we cannot keep evil out, yet we may thruſt it out; though we cannot hinder its coming in, yet we may hinder its ſtaying in; we need not make a bed, or provide a chamber for ſin: this requires ſome pauſe and conſideration. We examine men (if we know them not) whence they are, and whither they will, before we bid them welcome, or admit them to reſt under our roof. The Prophet rebukes the people of Iſrael (Jer. 4. 12.) How long ſhall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee? vain thoughts will offer themſelves, but why do you accept and entertain them, why do you ſpeak them fair? Let not wickedneſs dwell in thy tabernacle.

Tabernaculorum nomine puto loca ſacra intelligi, quibus tanquam ſacerdos præerat cum eſſet in proſperis, ubi munera iniqua acceptaſſe putavit Zophar. Bold.

In thy tabernacle.] Some underſtand it perſonally: The body of a man is his tabernacle, When the earthly houſe of this tabernacle (ſaith the Apoſtle) ſhall be diſſolved, (2 Cor. 5. 1.) So let not wickedneſs dwell in thy tabernacle, is, let it not dwell with thee, or in thy heart.

But ſecondly, Tabernacles were of two ſorts, Eccleſiaſtical, or Civil, either the place of Gods worſhip, or of mans reſidence. Some expound this Text in the former notion: Let not wickedneſs dwell in thy tabernacle, that is, take care to purge the worſhip of God from all idolatry and ſuperſtition: There was a publick worſhip in that age, as we may collect from the diſcourſe of Job's friends; here Zophar (according to this ſence) preſſeth Job to a reformation of worſhip (he being a publick perſon and the Prieſt) or accuſeth him, as having ſuffered abuſes to creep into it: at which Eliphaz ſeems to aim in his rejoynder (Chap. 15. 34.) For the congregation of hypocrites ſhall be deſolate, and fire ſhall conſume the tabernacles of bribery.

But I rather take tabernacle, for a civil dwelling, ſo, Let not wickedneſs dwell in thy tabernacle, is (by a Trope) as if he had ſaid, let not wickedneſs dwell in thoſe who dwell in thy tabernacle: A tabernacle is not a ſubject capable of good or evil, but as perſons abiding there are good or evil.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, He that cleanſeth himſelf, ſhould labour to cleanſe others alſo.

As it ſhould not ſatisfie us to be happy alone, ſo not to be holy alone. Grace is communicative and catching as well as ſin: A man that hath no wickedneſs dwelling in himſelf, would not have any man a dwelling for wickedneſs: having purified his own heart and hands, he labours as far as his line reacheth, to purifie thoſe about him. Chriſt gives this charge to Peter, When thou art converted, ſtrengthen thy brethren.

Secondly, In relation to our own tabernacles, Obſerve,

The governour of a family is to look to his family, to all under his charge, that wickedneſs dwell not among them.

It was the commendation of Abraham, and that which moved God to entruſt him with his ſecrets; I know Abraham that he will command his houſhold, and his children after him, and they ſhall keep the way of the Lord: and if Abraham would teach his houſhold the way and will of God, doubtleſs Abraham would not let that dwell in his houſhold, which was contrary to the way and will of God. When Jacob went to Bethel, with ſacrifice, he ſaid unto his houſhold and to all that were with him, put away the ſtrange gods that are among you, and be clean (Gen. 39.) Such was the reſolution of Joſhua, I and mine houſe will ſerve the Lord: And David who had the care of a whole Kingdom upon him, yet takes care that no wickedneſs ſhould dwell in his Court and Royal family, Pſal. 101. 7. He that worketh deceit ſhall not dwell in my houſe, he that telleth lies ſhall not tarry in my ſight. The ſins that dwell in our families, become ours, if we labour not to purge them out. A man is guilty of ſo much ſin as he might prevent by ſuch means as God hath afforded him, if he doth not. We have not ſatisfied our duties when we look to our ſelves only, but to all under our ſhadow or within our ſphere. Further, Family ſins bring family judgments, as well as national ſins bring national, or perſonal ſins perſonal judgments. Becauſe Eli ſuffered his Sons in ſin, and did not reſtrain them, therefore he ſuffered for their ſins; their ſins were charged upon his account, and he paid dearly for them. When we make other mens ſins our own, they will make us ſmart as much as our own: And the ſins of thoſe who are ours, may quickly be ours. Where the relation is nearer, the contagion is quicker. They are ſo, not only when we command and give them counſel to ſin, or take pleaſure in their ſin, but when we do not reprove them for ſin, or not improve all due means to prevent or remove their ſin.

Nota hic tria ad verā reſipiſcentiā neceſſaria, primò cordis preparationem, ſecundò orationem, tertiò iniquitatis propulſionem Merc.

Laſtly, Theſe two verſes preſent us with a platform of repentance in three ſpecial acts or requiſites. Firſt, Preparation of the heart: Secondly, Fervent prayer: Thirdly, The putting away, caſting out, or baniſhing of iniquity. Till the heart be prepared we cannot pray; untill iniquity be purged out, prayer is not accepted; unleſs all three be done we have not repented, or our repentance muſt be repented of. Except we repent thus we cannot be ſaved; and only that repentance is not to be repented of, which is unto ſalvation.

VERS. 15, 16.

For then ſhalt thou lift up thy face without ſpot; yea, thou ſhalt be ſtedfaſt, and ſhalt not fear.

Becauſe thou ſhalt forget thy miſery, and remember it as waters that paſs away.

IN the former context, Zophar gives Job good counſel; in this he gives him encouragements to follow that counſel. His encouragements are laid down more generally in theſe two verſes; and they are drawn into particulars in the words following to the end of the Chapter. There are three branches of this general promiſe in the fifteenth verſe.

Firſt, Thou ſhalt lift up thy face without ſpot.
Secondly, Thou ſhalt be ſtedfaſt.
Thirdly, Thou ſhalt not fear.

In the	Firſt	he promiſeth him	an honourable	eſtate.

	Third		a comfortable

Verſ. 15. Thou ſhalt lift up thy face without ſpot.

We had an expreſſion neer this at the 15. verſe of the 10. Chapter, where Job ſeems to ſpeak (as ſome expound) deſpairingly, If I be righteous, yet will I not lift up my head: or, as others, humbly, I will not lift up my head though I were righteous. Zophar anſwers him here: thou ſayſt, if thou wert righteous thou wouldſt not lift up thy head, but, I tell thee, if thou wert righteous (according to the counſel given thee) thou mighteſt lift up both thy head and heart, thou mighteſt take both courage and comfort, Then ſhalt thou lift up thy face without ſpot.

What the lifting up of the head, or of the face imports, may be ſeen(*ch.*10.15.) I ſhall here only add a threefold ſignification about lifting up the face; both phraſes being of near affinity.

Firſt, To lift up the face is a ſign of chearfulneſs, Job 22. 26. For then ſhalt thou have thy delight in the Almighty, and ſhalt lift up thy face unto God; that is, thou ſhalt lift up thy face unto God with delight. Joy is the light and life of the face; no marvel then, if we lift up our faces when God cauſeth us to rejoyce. A merry heart, ſaith Solomon (Prov. 17.22.) doth good like a medicine; and where that medicine works kindly, it ſets a man upon his legs, and makes him hold up his head like a man. God hath given man an erect countenance in the fabrick of nature; but his countenance is then moſt erect, when grace cauſeth him to rejoyce in God.

Non elevet faciem ad ſenem. Heb. Non mirabitur faciē ſenis. Sept.

Secondly, To lift up the face, is an act of reverence and reſpect. (Deut. 28. 50.) The Lord ſhall bring a nation againſt thee of a fierce countenance, which ſhall not regard the perſon of the old, ſo we tranſlate; the Hebrew is, which ſhall not lift up his face to the old, that is, which ſhall give no reverence to old men; the Septuagint render it thus, there ſhall come againſt thee a people of fierce countenance, who ſhall not admire the face of an old man; an old grave man, according to the common rules of civility, is to be had in admiration or high eſteem. Young ones ſhould lift up their faces to honour thoſe, whoſe faces hang down with age.

Elevare caput geſtus eſt erecti animi confidentis & nihil erubeſcentis. Pined.

Thirdly, (Which I rather take for the meaning of this text) lifting up of the face, implieth ſtrong confidence. Thus Abner ſpeaks to Azahel, Turn thee aſide from following me; wherefore ſhould I ſmite thee to the ground? How then ſhould I hold up my face to Joab thy brother? (2 Sam. 2. 22.) that is, how ſhall I come with any confidence or freedom of ſpirit, before Joab, if I ſhould ſlay thee? When Cain was rejected with his offering, (Gen. 4. 5,6,7.) the text ſaith, He was very wroth, and his countenance, or his face fell: which is directly oppoſite to lifting up the face. The falling of Cains face was in two things: Firſt, He fell from a chearful to a churliſh countenance, he lookt doggedly and ſourly; we ſay of ſuch a man, he hath a down look. Secondly, He fell from a confident, to a cowardly countenance. The fall of Cains countenance diſcovered the fear which fell upon Cains heart; he did not bring the firſt offering with his heart, and he had no heart left to bring another offering. The face varieth as the mind varieth. That is ſeen in the face which is out of ſight: The evidences of the heart are read there, and we may take the copy of a mans ſpirit in his countenance. Four things are chiefly ſeen in the face; Firſt, Pride: The wicked through the pride of his countenance will not ſeek unto God, (Pſal. 10. 4.) Secondly, Fear; Dan. 5. 6. Then the Kings countenance was changed, and his thoughts troubled him. That is, his thoughts being troubled at that dreadful apparition, his countenance changed. Thirdly, Envy and diſcontent, (Gen. 31. 2, 5.) Labans countenance was not toward Jacob as before; his face ſuffered an evil change, becauſe God made a good change in the eſtate of Jacob. Though Laban was a ſubtle man and a diſſembler, yet his envy at the proſperity of Jacob, was too big to be diſſembled. Fourthly, Guilt; and ſhame, the fruit of it, appear in the face; He dares not ſhew his face, whoſe wickedneſs ſtares in his face. The Lord ſaid unto Cain (Gen. 4. 7.) If thou do well, ſhalt thou not be accepted? The word which we tranſlate accepted, ſignifies properly to lift up, and ſo it may be rendred in that place; if thou do well, thou ſhalt have a lifting up, that is, thou ſhalt lift up thy face upon as good terms as thy brother Abel: uprightneſs hath boldneſs both with God and man. (1 Joh. 3. 21.) If our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence (or freedom of ſpeech) towards God. They that are aſhamed of what they have done, hang down their heads, or pull their hats over their eyes, they dare not be ſeen of men, much leſs of God, who is of purer eyes then to behold iniquity. Thou ſhalt lift up thy face.

Si bene egeris elevare, i.e. elevatio erit tibi.

Without ſpot.] The Original imports any kind of blemiſh. Some tell us, that the word Momus, is derived from it, which ſignifies a fault-finder, or one who makes it his buſineſs and ſtudy, to find or make faults in what is done or ſpoken. To lift up the face without ſpot, is, to be without blemiſh, or blameleſs.

מום Denotat vitium corporis vel quicquid pulchritudinem deſtruit. Hinc Momus.

Spots in propriety of ſpeech belong to the body. Can the Leopard change his ſpots? (Jer. 13. 23.) The Lamb for the Paſsover muſt be without ſpot, (Exod. 12. 5.) So muſt the Prieſts, (Lev. 2. 17.) As whatſoever ſtains the the beauty, and darkens the light of the face, ſo whatſoever diſcompoſeth the harmony, or hinders the comlineſs of the whole body, comes under the proper ſenſe of this word.

There is alſo a metaphorical ſpot, which is twofold: Firſt, Upon the name or credit: ſo a mans diſhonour is his ſpot; any blemiſh caſt upon our reputation, is called an aſperſion. Secondly, Upon the mind or inward man; ſo every ſin is a ſpot. The Greek word for unblameable, or without ſinful blemiſh, diſcovers it ſelf plainly to be the offſpring of this in the Hebrew. The ſoul takes ſpots as well as the body. Whatſoever blemiſheth the beauty, or obſcures the glory of the mind; whatſoever ſullieth the credit, or obſcures the dignity of man, comes under the metaphorical ſence of this word.

Moſes having exalted God in his perfections, A God of truth and without iniquity, juſt and right is he, (Deut. 32. 4.) ſubjoyns (the more to aggravate them) not the imperfections, but the groſs impieties of Iſrael, (verſ. 5.) They have corrupted themſelves, their ſpot is not the ſpot of his children; that is, their ſin is, not a ſin of infirmity, ſuch as often appears upon the children of God. They ſin as if they had no relation to God; they ſin like aliens, yea like rebels, not like children, not like members of the Commonwealth of Iſrael. Any ſpot is bad, but ſome are worſe. Sin-ſpots are the worſt of ſpots, yet they are not all equally bad: There is a ſpot which is, and a ſpot which is not the ſpot of Gods children. The Apoſtle counſels the Philipians to take heed of theſe ſpots, as they deſired to live in the reputation of children, (Chap. 2. 15.) That ye may be blameleſs and harmleſs, the ſons of God without rebuke (ſo we render,) or (as the Greek bears it clearly) that ye may be ſpotleſs ſons of God, that is, without all ſuch ſpots as are unſuitable to, or inconſiſtent with your ſonſhip. Some are ſo beſpotted, that they are called ſpots: Theſe, ſaith the Apoſtle Jude (verſ. 12.) are ſpots in your feaſts of charity. He that hath many ſpots, is not forward to hold up his face; then how ſhall he who is a ſpot?

But what is the ſpot intended in this text? There are three interpretations about it.

Firſt, Some take it for the ſpot of grief and ſorrow ariſing from affliction. Thou ſhalt lift up thy face without ſpot, that is, thou ſhalt get clear of theſe afflictions which ſpot thy face with ſorrow. This ſence alludes to that (Chap. 9. verſ. 31.) where Job complaineth, though I waſh my ſelf, &c. yet ſhalt thou plunge me in the ditch, I ſhall be all mire and dirt, all to be ſpotted with troubles and ſorrows, though I waſh in the waters of repentance: No ſaith Zophar, if thou doſt repent indeed, thou ſhalt lift up thy face without ſpot, God will throw thee into the dirt no more. Some tranſlate from the letter of the Hebrew, thou ſhalt lift up thy face out of the ſpot, that is, thou ſhalt riſe out of thy affliction, and recover out of the mire of thy tribulations.

Hence Obſerve, They who repent and get looſe from ſin, ſhall proſper, and get looſe from ſorrow.

Though all our repentings, waſhings and purgings, cannot deſerve freedom from the leaſt evil, yet this is the way to ſuch freedom; and when we (through the power of Chriſt) purge our ſelves from all filthineſs of fleſh and ſpirit, we are in the faireſt probability, in the neareſt poſſibility to be freed from the ſpots of tribulation and affliction. Sin and ſorrow uſually come, and go together: when we fall into the mire of ſin, God caſts us into the mire of ſorrow; and though he often vary his diſpenſations, yet this is a truth, That when we get out of the mire of ſin, the Lord lifts us up out of the mire of ſorrow.

Secondly, Others take it for a ſin-ſpot. If thou prepare thine heart, &c. then thou ſhalt lift up thy face without ſpot, that is, the Lord will not take notice of thy ſin.

Hence note, Though no man is without his ſpot, yet all believers are accounted ſpotleſs.

Balaam confeſſeth (*Numb.*23.21.) He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he ſeen perverſneſs in Iſrael; that is, he charged no ſpot upon them at that time, they ſinned not perverſly, nor did they lie impenitently in ſin; Chriſt ſanctifieth and cleanſeth his Church with the waſhing of water by the word, that he may preſent it to himſelf a glorious Church, not having ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing, but that it ſhould be holy and without blemiſh, Epheſ. 5.26,27.

Thirdly, Many underſtand it of a ſhame-ſpot, which is the conſequent of ſin. Thou ſhalt lift up thy face without ſpot, that is, thou ſhalt not be aſhamed to lift up thy face, or when thou lifteſt up thy face, thou ſhalt have clear and free acceſs to God. No cloud ſhall ſit upon thy ſpirit to interrupt communion with him.

De ruboris ob pudorem non autem de peccati macula Zopharem intelligere exigit faciei elevatio. Bold. Elevare faciem ſine macula nihil aliud eſt quam nil conſcire ſibi nulla palleſcere culpa. Id.

Hence Obſerve, Holineſs of life and purity of conſcience, cauſe boldneſs and confidence in our approaches to God.

The Apoſtle Peter chargeth huſbands, to dwell with their wives according to knowledge, and as being heirs of the ſame grace of life, that their prayers be not hindred (1 Pet.3.7.) Uneven or ſinful walking in any relation, hinders prayer three wayes. Firſt, It deads our ſpirits, ſtreightens our hearts, weakens our gifts for prayer. Secondly, It hinders the effect, fruit and ſucceſs of prayer. Thirdly, It hinders us from the very act, it breeds a ſtrangeneſs between our ſouls and God, and makes us liſtleſs to the duty. The ſoul is unwilling to come into the preſence of God, while ſin ſticks upon the conſcience: ſuch as have no heart to come before God, cannot lift up their faces to him. It is ſaid of the poor Publican (Luke 18.) that he durſt not lift up his eyes to heaven, he had low thoughts of himſelf, and his poſture was lowly. The Publican had no purpoſe to continue in ſin, yet becauſe his conſcience was not cleared of ſin, he durſt not lift up his face to heaven, but ſtanding afar off ſayes, God be merciful to me a ſinner. Guilt clogs the ſoul. How ſhall an unholy heart converſe with a holy God? When we lift up our faces, or give good looks to ſin, we cannot lift up our faces to, or expect a good look from God. They whoſe hypocriſie is ſo vigorous, that they can at once look upon ſin with joy, and upon God with confidence, ſhall at laſt to their ſorrow find God rejecting their confidences; and indeed he is not confident but impudent, who hopes for favour from God, while himſelf makes ſin his favourite. Thoſe hypocrites went thus high, whom the Lord upbraids (Jer. 7. 9.) Will ye ſteal, murder, and commit adultery, and ſwear falſly, and come and ſtand before me in this place? Some hypocrites ſeem to have a very lively hope; yet the hope of all hypocrites ſhall be as the giving up of the Ghoſt.

Laſtly, The ſpot from which Job is promiſed freedom, is expounded for diſgrace or diſhonour. Job was beſpattered by his friends as a wicked man, as the worſt of wicked men, an hypocrite.

Hence Obſerve, It is a great mercy to have our credit cleared up from thoſe blemiſhes which the uncharitable ſuſpitions or raſh cenſures of men have caſt upon us.

There is no ſpot except that upon the conſcience which is ſo unbeautiful as that upon our credit. He hath little to loſe in this world who hath loſt his good name: And if the loſs of credit be ſo great an affliction, the reparation of it cannot be a ſmall mercy. David was a man ſpotted with the imputation of rebellion, Saul lookt upon him as a traytour: It was a high favour which God gave him, when he gave him back his good name, when he cauſed him to lift up his face without ſpot, yea without ſpot in the eye of Saul: Saul acquitted him, and ſaid, thou art more righteous than I. The Lord brought forth his righteouſneſs as the light, and his juſt dealings as the noon-day, Pſal. 37. 6. His righteouſneſs lay in the dark, and his juſt dealing was adjudged treachery and deceit: Yet at laſt he recovered his credit, and his name was cloathed with honour in the eſtimation of his adverſaries. This is the firſt promiſe, Thou ſhalt lift up thy face without ſpot. The ſecond is,

Yea thou ſhalt be ſtedfaſt.] It is a happineſs to get a good eſtate, but it is a greater happineſs to keep it. Thou ſhalt be ſtedfaſt. The Hebrew word, in the verb, ſignifies to melt or diſſolve; and in the adjective, ſtrong durable and compact; that which is melted is called compact, either by the figure antiphraſis, becauſe it is uncompact, or, according to the nature of the thing, becauſe mettals which have been melted grow more compact and ſolid when they cool again. Some render it here, Thou ſhalt be like a molten pillar; braſs or iron being molten and caſt into the figure of a pillar, are ſtrong and ſteddy; the word is ſo rendered, (1 Sam. 2. 8.) The pillars (that is the firmeſt and ſtrongeſt parts) of the earth, are the Lords. This promiſed ſtedfaſtneſs may be taken two wayes.

יצק Fudit, liquefacit durus compactus, vel per antiphraſin, vel quòd metalla fuſa conſolidentur. Hinc מוצק fuſum, in hoc libro paſſim ſumitur pro חזק forti, valido. Merc.

Firſt, In reference to his externals, as if Zophar had ſaid. Thou waſt once Maſter of a good eſtate, thou waſt once rich and full, but thy eſtate, thy riches were not ſtedfaſt, thou haſt loſt all, thy wealth is conſumed and gone; yet humble thy ſelf, and thou ſhalt lift up thy face, thou ſhalt not only be exalted, but eſtabliſhed: Thou ſhalt be ſtedfaſt.

Secondly, Stedfaſtneſs may refer to his internals, and ſo there may be a fourfold ſtedfaſtneſs.

Firſt, Of judgement; when a man holds to his profeſſion, and fleets not in opinion. The Apoſtle cautions his Epheſians (chap. 4. 14.) Be no more children toſſed too and fro, with every wind of doctrine: be firm to your principles, be not as a meteor carried about with every guſt, but as a ſtar fixed in your orb.

Secondly, There is a ſtedfaſtneſs of reſolution, 1 Cor. 15. 58. Be ye ſtedfaſt and unmoveable, that is, hold to your purpoſe: ſerve the Lord, and go on in his work, let nothing take you off: Such was the maſculine ſtedfaſtneſs of Queen Heſter, reſolving to do her duty in the face of danger, If I periſh, I periſh.

Thirdly, There is a ſtedfaſtneſs of faith. When we believe and do not waver, or heſitate (Jam. 1. 6.) The Apoſtle Paul ſpeaks of the ſolidity of the firmament of faith, (Col. 2. 5.) Rejoycing in your order and the ſtedfaſtneſs of your faith in Chriſt. And Peter exhorts to reſiſt the devil, being ſtedfaſt in the faith, 1 Pet. 5. 9. He that fights muſt look to his footing. We cannot reſiſt another till we are ſetled our ſelves.

Fourthly, There is a ſtedfaſtneſs of conſcience. Conſcience is full of uncertainties till we ſettle upon Chriſt: the ſtedfaſtneſs of conſcience ariſeth from the peace of conſcience, and our peace flows to us in the bloud of the covenant.

We may underſtand this promiſe, of outward, but eſpecially of inward ſtedfaſtneſs; of the ſtedfaſtneſs of his faith and the quietneſs of his conſcience; that he ſhould no longer hang between hope and fear, between perſwaſions and doubtings of the love of God.

Hence Obſerve, Grace eſtabliſheth the heart.

Put away ſin, and thou ſhalt be ſtedfaſt. Grace is brought into the heart by Chriſt: Grace and Chriſt can never part: the doctrine of grace is therefore ſaid to eſtabliſh the heart, becauſe Chriſt is in it, Heb. 13. 9. It is a good thing that the heart be eſtabliſhed with grace, not with meats, which have not profited them that have been occupied therein: when he ſaith it is good, he means, it is better that the heart be eſtabliſhed by grace then by meat. For meat doth in a ſence eſtabliſh the heart, that is, it recreates and refreſhes the heart. As Abraham ſpeaks to the three men whom he invited to his tent (Gen. 18. 5.) I will fetch a morſel of bread, and comfort ye your hearts, the Hebrew is, ſtay or eſtabliſh your hearts. But the laſting comfort and eſtabliſhment of the heart, is by grace; that is, with grace wrought in the heart, or with the doctrine of grace (which is a means of working that grace) for he oppoſeth grace to meats, about which, queſtions were then ſtarted, and many were unſetled; and with meats he underſtands by a Synechdoche the whole body of the Ceremonial Law, which is oppoſed to the Goſpel, or the doctrine of grace; as if he had ſaid, do not think to ſettle your ſelves by the Ceremonial Law, one part whereof conſiſted in the choice and diſtinction of meats, for they have not profited them that have been occupied therein, they have gotten no eſtabliſhment by them, but grace will do it. As your Fathers did eat Manna in the Wilderneſs, ſo meats of the Sacrifice in Canaan, and are dead; but he that feeds upon Chriſt, and is filled with grace, ſhall live for ever. Meats profited them ſo little, that they are ſaid not to profit them; they adminiſtred only a tranſient help to the body: but grace profits ſo much, that it only may be ſaid to profit, that adminiſters a permanent advantage to the ſoul. Grace renders us alwayes the ſame, and preſerves us from change. Inconſtancy is the companion of ſin; yea inconſtancy is the companion of all earthly things; earthly things move and are unſteady; it is impoſſible to ſtand faſt upon an unſteady foundation. The Apoſtle (Epheſ. 4. 13.) deſcribeth the Gentiles thus, I ſay unto you (ſpeaking to the Saints) that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk; ye were Gentiles, but now I would not have you walk as other Gentiles, namely as unconverted Gentiles: do not imitate them from whom you have made ſo happy a departure; but how did they walk? In the vanity of their mind, that is, in the unſetledneſs and unconſtancy and unſtaidneſs of their minds; you have received grace, and grace ſhould make you firm and ſtable upon your baſis, upon Chriſt your bottom. The holy Ghoſt reproves this unſetledneſs in the old Jews (Jer. 2. 23.) Thou art a ſwift Dromedary traverſing her wayes, (never ſetled in any way, verſ. 36.) why gaddeſt thou about ſo much to change thy way? thou alſo ſhalt be aſhamed of Egypt, as thou waſt aſhamed of Aſſyria; thou wenteſt to this Kingdom and to the other Nation for help, and here thou thoughteſt to ſtrengthen thy ſelf, and there to obtain deliverance; Why gaddeſt thou about ſo much? the world being uncertain, leaves thee in perpetual uncertainties; thou couldſt find no help in Aſſyria, thou ſhalt find none in Egypt, neither the one nor the other ſhall be able to eſtabliſh thee. So Chap. 31. 22. How long wilt thou go about, O thou backſliding daughter? We are in continual motion till we ſettle in God. As the needle in the Mariners compaſs being toucht with the loadſtone is unquiet till it points to the North, and there it ſettles: ſo it is with the ſoul, to what quarter of the creature ſoever we turn our ſelves, we ſhall be unſetled, wavering, and unſteady, till we point directly unto God, till we look heavenward. The heart finds no ground, till it gets off the earth.

Impius non poteſt eſſe firmus.

There is a double unſtedfaſtneſs which ſin brings in, and grace caſts out.

Firſt, About our way. Many are alwayes to chooſe; whether this way or that, is their quere: they not only (which is the infirmity of many of the Saints) halt in their way, but between two wayes. An upright heart may be unſteady in the right way; but a carnal heart is unſteady between the right way and the wrong. Such are ſometimes in good wayes, and ſometimes in evil wayes; they may happen upon a good way, but they cannot chuſe it; or if they chuſe it, it is not for its goodneſs, but commodiouſneſs; it ſerves their turns, and upon that account they take a turn in it.

Secondly, They are unſtedfaſt about the end. A wicked man is often ſecure, but he is never ſetled concerning his end. He preſumes he ſhall be well, but he cannot know it ſhall be well with him. They who walk in dark wayes, muſt needs be in the dark about their end. An evil mind is never quiet upon good termes. They who are morally evil, have no true reaſon to expect eternal good. There is a quietneſs of mind concerning our end, which ariſeth from the ignorance of our ill eſtate; and there is a quietneſs which ariſeth from the knowledge of our good eſtate: in the former ſence many wicked men are quiet, their conſciences do not trouble them, and they wonder why any mans ſhould. Theſe are aſleep in the darkneſs of ſin, and they ſhall lye down in the darkneſs of ſorrow. Only he that finds himſelf united unto Chriſt, and by vertue of that union, cleanſed from the guilt, and relieved againſt the dominion of ſin, is ſteadfaſt indeed. Him wilt thou eſtabliſh (ſaith the Prophet) in perfect peace, whoſe mind is ſtayed on thee. It is a baſtard peace which is the daughter of ignorance: true peace is the daughter of ſaving knowledge.

Laſtly, As this ſtedfaſtneſs is underſtood of his outward eſtate, We learn,

That God only can eſtabliſh the creature to us.

The faſhion of the world paſſeth away, yet God can bid it ſtand. The creature can be no more to us then God makes it, how much ſo ever we make it in our account. David calls his outward eſtate a mountain, Pſal. 30. 6, 7. yet he acknowledgeth that all the ſtrength and ſtanding of his mountain was from God. Lord, by thy favour thou haſt made my mountain to ſtand ſtrong. And he found his mountain ſhaking, yea and his heart ſhaking too, when God did but hide his face. Thou didſt hide thy face, and I was troubled. That's the ſecond thing promiſed. There is yet a third, viz.

And thou ſhalt not fear.] He carries it higher yet. There is an holy fear, and there is a ſinful fear. There is a fear of care, and there is a fear of diſtraction. There is a fear of watchfulneſs, and there is a fear of diſtruſtfulneſs. He doth not mean the holy fear of care and watchfulneſs; but the ſinful fear of diſtraction and diſtruſtfulneſs, Pſal. 112. 1. Bleſſed is the man that feareth God. Why? verſ. 7, 8. He ſhall not be afraid: he that feareth holily, ſhall not be afraid diſtractingly. Again, This exemption from fear doth leave us ſecure; it is Babylon which ſaith, I ſit as a Queen and am no widdow, and ſhall ſee no ſorrow. She is ſo fearleſs that ſhe is alſo careleſs. The more Jeruſalem and her children know their ſafety, the more they labour to be ſafe.

Thou ſhalt not fear. This negative promiſe may have a threefold reference. Thou ſhalt not fear, Firſt, The continuance of thy preſent troubles. Nor ſecondly, The return of theſe troubles. Nor thirdly, The riſing of new troubles. Thy heart ſhall be far above all theſe fears.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, To get free from ſin, is the way to get free from fear.

Put away iniquity, and then thou ſhalt not fear. As by fear we keep from iniquity (The fear of the Lord is to depart from evil,) ſo by departing from iniquity we keep from fear: An evil conſcience is a troubled conſcience: God is above all fear; and man is never without fear till he is in God, (Prov. 21. 1.) The righteous is bold as a lyon.

Mala conſcientia nunquam eſt ſine motu. Extra Deum nihil eſt firmum, unde efficitur ut nemo extra Deum poſſit eſſe ſine metu. Sanct.

Secondly, To be free from the fear of evil, is better then to be freed from evil,

He doth not ſay barely, Thou ſhalt be freed from evil; but, Thou ſhalt be freed from fear. Happineſs conſiſts more in removing inward then outward trouble. He that is not indeed afraid of evil before it comes, may be happy though it comes. It is the perfection of our ſpiritual eſtate not to fear: Perfect love caſteth out fear: (1 John 4. 18.) It caſteth out all fear that we ſhall looſe the favour of God, or be caſt out of his love: it doth not caſt out the fear of offending God, but that whereby we queſtion the favour of God. Whatſoever the premiſes of Gods dealings are, ſuch ſouls make this concluſion, That God will do them no hurt, and means them nothing but good. A great part of the Saints portion both on Earth and in Heaven, lies in their deliverance from fear. And if any ask, how can this be? The next verſe anſwers, Verſ. 16. Becauſe thou ſhalt forget thy miſery, and remember it as waters that paſs away.

These words give us a reaſon of the former, Thou ſhalt not fear, becauſe thou ſhalt forget thy miſery, or thy labour. As we do not feel, ſo we cannot fear that which we have forgotten: and he who is delivered from dangers, is much armed againſt the fear of danger; while he well conſiders how he overcame thoſe which are paſt, he ſees whatſoever may come, as already conquered.

Thou ſhalt forget.] This forgetfulneſs implies two things.

Firſt, That he ſhould be long free from ſuch evils as had oppreſſed him, ſo long, that he ſhould forget that he was ever oppreſſed by ſuch evils: The fruit of a long freedom from trouble, is forgetfulneſs of that trouble. The Lord ſaith of his people in Babylon, They have been loſt ſheep, their ſhepherds have cauſed them to go aſtray, they have gone from mountain to hill, they have forgotten their reſting place (Jer. 50. 6.) Now as ſheep having gone long aſtray, forget their former folds and reſting places, ſo they who have been long freed from miſery, forget their miſery. Length of time wears out the remembrance both of the good we have enjoyed, and of the evils we have ſuffered. Thus God encourageth the believing Gentiles (Iſa. 54. 4.) Fear not, for thou ſhalt not be aſhamed, neither be thou confounded, for thou ſhalt not be put to ſhame: for thou ſhalt forget the ſhame of thy youth, and ſhalt not remember the reproach of thy widowhood. The ſhame of their youth, was their bondage in Egypt; the reproach of their widowhood, was their captivity in Babylon: here the Lord promiſeth ſuch a mercy, as ſhall ſwallow up the memory of both. As a great mercy puts out the memory of a leſſer (Jer. 16. 14, 15.) The deliverance out of the Babyloniſh captivity, ſwallowed up that deliverance from Egyptian bondage;) ſo great mercies long continued, ſwallow up the remembrance of all our miſeries.

Secondly, This forgetting notes ſuch a removal of former evils, that not ſo much as a ſcar, or any print of them ſhould remain to be ſeen: while the ſcar of a wound remains, the memory of it cannot but remain. When Joſeph interpreted Pharaohs dream about the ſeven years of plenty, and the ſeven years of famine, (Gen. 41. 13.) he ſaith there ſhould be ſuch a famine upon the land after the ſeven years of plenty, that the ſeven years of plenty ſhould be forgotten; why forgotten? becauſe there ſhould be no print, no ſign left of plenty: ſo the Lord ſometimes after ſeven years of famine, after ſeven years of poverty or trouble, gives ſeven years of ſuch plenty, peace, reſt and comfort to his people, as wear out all the marks of their former afflictions. When Joſephs brethren feared he would remember the wrongs which they had done him, he anſwers as if he would aſſure them that there was not the leaſt print of them left in his mind, Gen. 50. 21. Fear ye not, I will nouriſh you and your little ones. He hath forgotten all received injuries, who reſolves to return courteſies. He is fartheſt from revenge, who is ready to feed his enemy. Thus ſaith Zophar, Thou ſhalt forget thy miſery, the Lord will heal thy wound ſo perfectly, that there ſhall not be ſo much as any mark of it remaining. The forgetfulneſs of miſery, cannot but ſpring from any eminent ſucceſſion of the contrary mercy. The Prophet deſcribes ſuch a change, and this effect of it, Iſa. 65. 13. My ſervants (ſaith the Lord) ſhall eat, and ye ſhall be hungry; my ſervants ſhall drink, but ye ſhall be thirſty; my ſervants ſhall rejoyce, but ye ſhall be aſhamed; hence v. 16. He that bleſſeth himſelf in the earth, ſhall bleſs himſelf in the God of truth, becauſe the former troubles are forgotten: Eating cauſeth us to forget hunger; ſo doth drinking, thirſt; and rejoycing, ſhame. Thus ſaith Chriſt, A woman after ſore travel remembers her anguiſh no more, for joy that a man is born into the world, Joh. 16. 21. Either of theſe ways Zophar may be expounded, Thou ſhalt forget thy miſery, that is, thou ſhalt have freedom from thy miſery, till the memory and marks of it are quite worn out; ſuch a ſeries of mercies ſhall ſucceed thy troubles, as ſhall make thee doubt whether thou waſt at all in trouble: Thus to forget miſery, is to be perfectly happy; and in the iſſue both theſe met in Job: The long continuance, and the abundance of mercy which he received, made him diſcount all the evil which he had endured. Thou ſhalt forget.

Obliviſcitur priſtina mala, non oblivione memoriæ ſed bonorum ſucceſſione. Hier. in c. 54 Iſa.

But how could he forget? For the clearing of this and other Scriptures of the ſame ſtile, take this diſtinction. There is a double forgetfulneſs. Firſt, In reference to the rational part. Secondly, In reference to the ſenſitive part. He is not promiſed (for that were an affliction) forgetfulneſs of his afflictions in reference to his rational part, he ſhould remember them ſtill ſo as to conſider what they were, and to be thankful for his deliverance out of them. In this ſenſe, they who have the greateſt cauſe to forget theſe miſeries, have alſo greateſt cauſe to remember them; it is the will of God we ſhould. As it is a ſin affectedly to forget the ſins we have committed and are pardoned, ſo to affect a forgetfulneſs of the ſorrows we have ſuffered, and are eſcaped, is ſinful; God receives much glory by our recognizing of pardoned ſins, and of eſcaped ſorrows.

Quantum attinet ad ſcientiam rationalem memor præteritorum malorum, quantum autem ad experientiæ ſenſum priorſus immemor. Aug. de civ. Dei l. 22. c. 30.

But in reference to a ſenſibleneſs of thoſe evils, or of any trouble ariſing from the remembrance of them, thus he is promiſed to forget them. As if Zophar had ſaid, When thou thinkeſt of thy affliction, it ſhall not afflict thee, yea it ſhall be thy joy to remember it. It is a great refreſhing to remember the troubles which we have been in, and are freed from. When Joſeph was advanced in the Court of Pharaoh to great honour, and was married there, he called the name of his firſt-born ſon Manaſſeh, from this word ſignifying to forget; and he gives the reaſon of it, for God hath made me forget all my toil and all my fathers houſe (Gen. 41. 51.) How had God made him to forget it? Not in regard of the rational act, for he did remember what his Fathers houſe was, together with all the afflictions he met with there from his envious Brethren, and this was his duty: but the Lord made him forget all the pain, ſmart and ſorrow of thoſe afflictions; He was very ſenſible how much he had ſuffered, but he had no ſenſe of it. In Heaven we ſhall forget all the troubles and ſtorms of this life, and all our ſins, as they are any hinderance to our joy; but there ſhall be a remembrance, even in Heaven, of the troubles and ſins of this life, ſo far, as to give God the glory of making that glorious change. As we may be ſaid not to know evils two wayes, either becauſe we are ignorant of them, or becauſe we have no experience of them; ſo we may be ſaid not to remember paſt evils two wayes, either becauſe the memory of them doth not ſtay with us, or becauſe the remembrance of them doth not annoy us. And that's the meaning of forgetfulneſs about injuries; when we exhort not only to forgive a wrong, but to forget it: A man may rationally remember the wrong which another hath done him, with all the circumſtances and paſſages of it, and yet forget it ſpiritually. Some ſay, they are content to forgive an injury, but they can never forget it; I ſay, forget it ſo far as to forgive it fully, and then remember it as much as you will. The natural memory of injuries is no ſin, but the angry and revengeful memory. God in the new Covenant is ſaid to forget the ſins of his people, and to remember them no more; but doth he forget any thing, or doth it ſlip out of his memory? No, he knows all things by one everlaſting act, and he remembers even all the ſins of his elect, he remembers all the ſins which he hath pardoned; but he is ſaid not to remember them, or to forget them, when he pardons them, becauſe they are before him as if they were not remembred, that is, he is not provoked by thoſe ſins; his Spirit is not drawn out in revenges againſt ſuch ſinners as he hath pardoned. Thus in the Text before us: Job being delivered from his outward afflictions and inward temptations, is aſſured he ſhall forget them; not that the rational act ſhould be deleted and blotted out, but the ſenſitive: the trouble of his troubles, the afflictiveneſs of his afflictions ſhould be removed, he ſhould remember ſorrow to his ſorrow no more.

Hæc olim meminiſſe juvabit.

Anima beata fruent indeficienter æternorum jucunditate gaudiorum, oblita erit culparum, oblita pœnarum; nec tamen ideo ſuæ liberationis oblita, ut liberatori ſuo ſit ingrata. Aug. ubi ſupra.

Seeing it is promiſed Job that he ſhall forget his miſery,

Hence Obſerve, That, The very repreſentation of evils paſt, may be a preſent preſſing evil.

The repreſentation of paſt afflictions, is ſometimes very afflictive. As a man by conſidering his former comforts, may take in comfort; or by reflecting upon, and remembring his former ſins, may ſin over all his ſins: ſo by remembring his former ſorrows, he may have a new indurance and impreſſion upon his ſpirit of all his ſorrows. It is a mercy when evils are remembred without a taſte of evil; and when a review of former ſorrows doth not revive our ſorrows.

Secondly, Obſerve, Thou ſhalt forget thy miſery.

Forgetfulneſs is the cure of all our ſorrows.

The forgetfulneſs of ſome things is a ſin, and the forgetfulneſs of other things is a priviledge. To forget our duties, to forget the mind of God made known unto us, is our ſin; but (as explained) to forget the trouble and affliction which hath been upon us, is a ſpecial priviledge. It is ſin to forget the hiſtory of our troubles, but it is mercy to forget the pain of them. Forgetfulneſs is good for little; only the forgetfulneſs of the evil of ſin, or of evil cuſtoms, ſo as not to practiſe them again; and the forgetfulneſs of the evils of puniſhment, or of our evil condition, ſo as not to be oppreſſed with them, is good, and the cure of all thoſe evils. When the word preached hath wounded the heart of a wicked man, and made it ſmart, what is his cure? his cure is to caſt the word out of his thoughts, and to forget it, or as much of it as he can; if he can but forget the word, his cure is wrought, and he is whole again; though indeed, ſuch a mans remedy is worſe then his diſeaſe; and his plaiſter, then his pain; yet he hath got (ſuch as it is) a cure. Thus alſo the forgetfulneſs of our troubles is the remedy of our troubles, as ſleep is of our soreſt travels (Pſal. 127. 2.) So he giveth his beloved ſleep; So, how is that? that is, notwithſtanding all the hard labour and pains they take, yet the Lord giveth them ſleep, and ſleep makes them forget all their former labour. So ſome interpret thoſe words (Pſal. 126. 1.) We were like them that dream; that is, when the Lord began to work deliverance, to turn again the captivity of Zion, we (as it were) forgot what our ſtate and condition but lately was. A dreamer forgets how it was with him; ſo, we are as them that dream, we have forgotten all the evils we have been in; even the long time of our captivity. When a friend is in great pain, ſuch as the tooth-ach, &c. we ſay to him, (in a merriment) do but forget it a while, and you ſhall be cured. You may write (probatum eſt) upon this receipt, if you can receive it; but it is God only that can cauſe us to receive it; he only can work this forgetfulneſs of evil, as he only works a true remembrance of what is good. Some men have taught an art of memory, but 'tis God muſt teach this art of forgetfulneſs; this forgetfulneſs proceeds from the grace or favour of God. Heathens ſpeak much of the River Lethes, of which, if a man did drink, he preſently loſt his memory, and forgot all that he had either enjoyed or endured. Lemuel (Prov. 31. 4.) would not have Kings drink wine (that is, immoderately) leſt they drink and forget the law (ver. 5.) but he adviſeth (ver. 6.) to give ſtrong drink to him that is ready to periſh, and wine unto thoſe that are of heavy hearts. Let him drink and forget his poverty, and remember his miſery no more (ver. 7.) Of this wine, ſome underſtand that of the Evangeliſt Mark, in his deſcription of Chriſts paſſion (ch. 15. v. 22.) They gave him wine to drink mingled with myrrhe, but he received it not. Naturaliſts obſerve, that myrrhe ſtupifies and dulls the ſenſe of pain; but Chriſt bids pain do its worſt, he needed not forget it, who was able to conquer it; his ſpirit was infinitely above ſuch reliefs. But to the point; as there is a natural and an artificial way to cauſe forgetfulneſs of miſery, ſo there is a ſupernatural. God can give his people to drink of ſuch a myſtical Lethes, he can give them a cup of ſuch a river of conſolation, as ſhall drown the memory of all their ſorrows. As when a Table-book is written all over, you may take a ſpunge, and wipe out every Letter; ſo when our memories are full of our miſeries, the Lord can ſpunge all out, and not leave ſo much as one line or letter to be read any more.

Multimodis ſeſe commaculat ictibus, myrrhæ preſumptione munitus. Apul. l. 8.

Thirdly, Zophar puts this forgetfulneſs of his miſery, as a conſequent of Job's putting away of his iniquity. Hence obſerve,

> When the hand and heart are clear of ſin, former ſufferings will not be grievous to us.

So long as a man continues in ſin, not only his preſent, but his paſt ſufferings are his torment: put away iniquity, and thou putteſt away the tormenting thoughts of thy miſery; thou ſhalt not feed upon the wormwood and the gall, as the Church did, (Lam. 3. 19.) while ſhe remembred her affliction: the blow was paſt, but the remembrance of it was as bitter as gall, and as unpleaſant as a dinner of wormwood. In heaven, or in that perfect ſtate of bleſſedneſs which is promiſed (Rev. 7. 17.) God will wipe away all tears from our eyes; becauſe then he will for ever caſt every ſin out of our hearts and lives. The captive Jews in Babylon, kept their ſins too cloſe, and therefore when they ſate down by the river, and remembred Zion, they wept, (Pſal. 137.) the ſorrows and afflictions which they had in Zion, as well as their love to Zion, made them weep in Babylon; though while they were in Babylon, they lived free from ſorrow; ſo free, that many of them could not be got out of Babylon, when God called them away (Zech. 2. 6.) and when Cyrus had proclaimed them a full liberty to go away (Ezra 1. 3.) yet ſay they, when we remembred thee, O Zion, we wept. The remembrance of former troubles will afflict, till we are cleared from the guilt, and have ſubdued the power of ſin. Thou ſhalt forget thy miſery.

And remember it as waters that paſs away.] Some read theſe, and the words before, not as a promiſe, but as an exhortation; Do thou forget thy miſery, or remember it as waters that paſs away. As if he had ſaid, thou poreſt too much upon thy ſorrows; I counſel thee to forget them, let them be as a river ſwallowed up in the ſea of an eternal oblivion.

But I conceive this latter clauſe to be an explication of the former: For if any ask, How ſhall he forget his miſeries? Here's the anſwer, he ſhall forget them as waters that paſs away. This ſimilitude is more then once uſed in Scripture, to note utter forgetfulneſs. Job (chap. 6. 15.) compares his friends to the ſtream of brooks that paſs away, becauſe they had forgotten the laws of friendſhip. David imprecates vengeance on his enemies in a like phraſe (Pſal. 58 7.) Let them melt away as waters that run continually; that is, let them and their memorial periſh. Who takes notice or remembers the waters that paſs in a River, or under a Bridge? When the woman of Tekoah would ſhew that they were all as loſt and buried in oblivion, if David did not fetch home his baniſhed, ſhe expreſſeth it thus; we muſt needs die, and are as water ſpilt upon the ground, which (paſſeth away, and) cannot be gathered up again, 2 Sam. 14. 14.

Non recordaberis amplius, nam aquarum quæ præterierunt nulla penitus recordatio eſt.

This may be interpreted, firſt, as an alluſion, either ſtrictly, to Noah's floud: Thou ſhalt remember it as waters that paſs away, that is, thou ſhalt remember the flood of all thy ſorrows and afflictions, as thou doſt remember the flood of Noah; of which, no doubt, Job had heard. The Lord, in the Prophet Iſaiah, chap. 54. 9. ſpeaks of the removal of his peoples affliction, under that Notion; For this is as the waters of Noah unto me; for as I have ſworn that the waters of Noah ſhould no more go over the earth, ſo have I ſworn that I would not be wroth with thee, &c. So here; thy afflictions ſhall be as the waters of Noah that are paſt. Thy troubles ſwell now very high, thou ſuffereſt a deluge, an inundation of ſorrows; but they ſhall be dried up, and ſhall not leave ſo much as their ſlime for a token that they have been there.

Or more generally, as an alluſion to all ſudden torrents, or the riſing of waters upon the fall of great rains in the ſouthern parts of the world; of which, Pſal. 126. is a great proof: waters in thoſe regions ſwell in a moment, and are down almoſt as ſoon as ſwoln; having no conſtant fountain to feed them, they cannot continue. So ſaith he, a mighty flood of trouble and ſorrow overwhelmeth thee, but it ſhall quickly dry up; it is but a cloud, a ſtorm, it will paſs away, and be ſpent ſooner then thou dreameſt, even ſo ſoon, that thou ſhalt be like one that dreameth.

Secondly, It may be taken as a proverbial ſpeech, You ſhall remember it as waters that paſs away, that is, you ſhall not remember it; it ſhall be as if it had not been. Who can tell what waters have paſt, or where to find thoſe waters which are paſt? to remember a thing as waters that paſs away, is to let it paſs out of memory. Some things leave laſting expreſſions behind them, but a ſudden paſſing water doth not.

Proverbialem reor hunc loquendi modum, quo ſignificatur alicujus ſive boni, ſive mali, quod jam præteriit nihil eſſe reliquum. San.

Thirdly, We may interpret it thus, Thou ſhalt remember it as waters that paſs away, that is, thou ſhalt remember it as that which ſhall never return again, or is quite gone, and ſhall never trouble thee any more. Some expound that of the Prophet ſo, Affliction ſhall not riſe up the ſecond time, (Nah. 1. 9.) (which others, and I think rightly, interpret of an utter conſumption; there ſhall be no need for affliction to come the ſecond time; for it ſhall ſpoil all at firſt; thy affliction ſhall make a total devaſtation.) Yet it may be taken in the ſence ſuggeſted. Affliction ſhall not riſe up the ſecond time, that is, thou ſhalt not be afflicted the ſecond time. The waters of affliction are paſſed away, and ſhall not flow back again. Job (chap. 28. 4.) ſpeaks of waters forgotten of the foot; he means (as is conceived) waters ſo deep, that no man could paſs thorow them, and are therefore ſaid to be forgotten of the foot, becauſe no foot had paſſed them of a long time, nor was any like to paſs them any more. Thus alſo an affliction through which a man ſhall never paſs again, may be called a forgotten affliction. Hence when the prophet had ſaid (Nah. 1. 9.) that affliction ſhould not riſe up the ſecond time, he adds from the Lord, (ver. 12.) I have afflicted thee, I will afflict thee no more. This I apprehend as the proper meaning of the text in hand, Thou ſhalt forget thy miſery; or if thou doſt remember it, thou ſhalt remember it but as waters that are paſſed away. Thy miſery will be as nothing to thee, and ſhall never return upon thee. Hence obſerve,

> The memory of miſeries which ſhall never return to hurt us, comforts us.

Miſerrima eſt malorum impendentium expectatio. Merl.

It is our joy to remember thoſe things which were our ſorrow, when we are beyond the borders of ſorrow; ſuch a remembrance is as joyous, as the remembrance of an evil, whoſe return we fear, is grievous. The very ſuſpition that an affliction will renew, reneweth our affliction. Then we feed heartily upon the good which is before us, when we are freed from the after-claps or after-reckonings of evil. That the Iſraelites were delivered from thoſe Egyptian task-maſters, was very ſweet, but to ſee them at their heels, and upon their backs again, was exceeding bitter; hence the Lord, to relieve them from thoſe thoughts, gave them this aſſurance by Moſes (Exod. 14. 13.) The Egyptians whom ye have ſeen to day, ye ſhall ſee them again no more for ever. It is not ſo great a loſs not to ſee, as it is a trouble to ſee what we would not. The King of Babylon ſlew the ſons of Zedekiah before his eyes, before he put out his eyes (Jer. 39. 6, 7.) doubtleſs the putting of his eyes to that uſe, pained him more then the putting of them out. Now as it is a miſery worſe then blindneſs, to ſee that which grieves us; ſo it is a mercy as good as ſight it ſelf, not to ſee what would grieve us; eſpecially to receive a faithful promiſe, that we ſhall ſee it again no more for ever. And as it adds to the affliction of a man in miſery, to remember that he hath enjoyed friends and good dayes, which he ſhall not enjoy nor ſee again any more for ever; ſo it adds to the comfort of a man, encompaſſed about with mercies, to remember he hath endured ſorrows, and been oppreſſed by enemies, which he ſhall not endure, nor be oppreſſed by, no nor ſee again any more for ever. This is the priviledge of the Saints, in reference to that greateſt enemy, Sin; they remember their ſins as waters that are paſſed away, they ſhall never return to hurt them, much leſs to condemn them. Thus to remember our ſins on earth, is a piece of heaven, and will be a great part of our happineſs in heaven; where we ſhall ſay in higheſt triumph and exultation of ſpirit, concerning ſin and Satan, death and ſorrow, or whatſoever hath the face, or deſerves to wear the name of a myſtical Egyptian, theſe Egyptians whom we have ſeen and felt ſo often in the dayes of our mortality, we ſhall not feel, no, nor ſo much as ſee them again any more for ever.

VERS. 17, 18, 19, 20.

And thine age ſhall be clearer then the noon-day; thou ſhalt ſhine forth, thou ſhalt be as the morning.
And thou ſhalt be ſecure, becauſe there is hope; yea, thou ſhalt dig about thee, and thou ſhalt take thy reſt in ſafety.
Alſo thou ſhalt lie down, and none ſhall make thee afraid; yea many ſhall make ſuit unto thee.
But the eyes of the wicked ſhall fail, and they ſhall not eſcape, and their hope ſhall be as the giving up of the ghoſt.

This latter part of the Chapter, conſiſteth (as was touched before) of divers motives and encouragements, which Zophar beſtows on Job, to hearten him on in hearkning to his counſel. As he was encouraged before by a promiſe, that his preſent troubles ſhould ſuddenly expire; ſo here, that ancient mercies ſhould ſuddenly revive; as if Zophar had ſaid, Thou ſhalt be bleſſed, not only by deliverances from, or removals of evil; thou ſhalt not only forget miſery, and have the prints of thy afflictions wiped out; but thou ſhalt be fairly ſtamp'd with freſh favours, and the beſt of bleſſings ſhall be heaped upon thee. This he expreſſeth in thoſe elegant metaphors and compariſons.

Thine age.] The Hebrew word ſignifies time in general, or the whole ſtate of this world. David prayeth to be delivered from the men of this world; or, of this age, (Pſal. 17. 14.) he means it of men who have nothing beyond the world; all whoſe eſtate lies on this ſide heaven. The word ſignifies alſo the particular age of a mans life; and here diſtinctly the latter part or old age of a mans life. Thine age, that is, thine old age, or the latter part of thy life, of which thou ſeemeſt to make little reckoning; upon which thou lookeſt as if it were not worth the having; that latter part of thy life, of which thou ſayeſt in thine heart, ſurely it will be as death to me, it will be full of death and darkneſs, of diſeaſes and of weakneſſes; the ſtrength of it will be but labour and ſorrow; that evening of thy life, of which thou judgeſt (according to the experience of others) ſurely it will be dim and miſty, cloudy and uncomfortable; even that age of thine ſhall be Clearer then the noon-day.] The letter is, thine age ſhall riſe above the noon-day. The noon-day is taken two wayes; ſometimes for extream heat, and ſometimes for extream light.

Eſto illis jucundum refrigerium à meridiano æſtu. Jun.

Firſt, At noon, we expect the extremity of heat; the Sun of perſecution is ſignified by the noon-day, Iſa. 16. 3. Make thy ſhadow as the night, in the midſt of the noon-day; that is, be a refreſhing and a protection to my people, when their troubles are at the hotteſt. And Cant. 1. 7. Tell me where thou makeſt thy flocks to reſt at noon, that is, in the heat of perſecution. The Church deſired to underſtand where to ſhelter, what cooling place was to be had in the times of greateſt tribulation.

Secondly, Noon imports the cleareſt light; it is a common proverb, when we affirm a thing to have the greateſt clearneſs, to ſay, It is as clear as the light at noon-day. And, to light a candle at noon, is a proverb of reproof to thoſe, who trouble themſelves to make that plain, which hath no obſcurity in it. And as noon is put for light, ſo light is often put for joy; and cleareſt light (ſuch is that of noon-day) for greateſt joy; light is ſown for the righteous, that is, they ſhall reap a harveſt of joy.

When Zophar promiſeth, Thine age ſhall be clearer then the noon-day; his meaning is, thy latter end ſhall be full of comfort, and thou ſhalt rejoyce in the ſerenity of thy condition. Hence obſerve,

> God can make the worſt part of our life the beſt to us; and when we expect (according to the courſe of nature) the leaſt good, he can encompaſs us with the choiceſt good.

Old age is called the evil day (Eccl. 12. 1.) and the deſcription of it is given in terms very appoſite unto this; while the evil dayes come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou ſhalt ſay, I have no pleaſure in them; while the Sun, or the Light, or the Moon, or the Stars be not darkned, nor the clouds return after the rain. He compareth old age to a gloomy day, when ſhower falleth after ſhower, and cloud follows after cloud; yet the Lord can make that age which uſually gives nothing but clouds and ſhowers, but moiſture and wet, to be as clear as the light at noon, and as dry as ſunſhine. We need not fear our worſt ſtate, if God will undertake to mend it: be not troubled with tiring expectations of pain and weakneſs, of diſeaſes and ſickneſſes in old age; God is able to make thee, notwithſtanding the diſadvantages of nature, ſtrong and healthy. Old age will be youth to us at his word. Abraham was not troubled at an hundred years old, when God promiſed him, thou ſhalt have a ſon. Sarahs dead womb was no impediment, when God ſaid, thou ſhalt conceive. Young men ſhall faint, and old men ſhall renew their ſtrength like the Eagle, when God will have it ſo. The ſummer of your lives ſhall be a winter, and your winter a ſummer; your cloudy dayes ſhall be clearer then the noon, and your noon a cloud, at his command, who made both ſummer and winter, ſun and cloud. He that put nature into order, can order things againſt nature.

Thou ſhalt ſhine forth, thou ſhalt be as the morning.]

This additional clauſe heightens the ſence of the former. The words which we tranſlate, to ſhine forth, ſignifies alſo, to darken; ſo Mr. Broughton renders, Thy time ſhall paſs the noon-day, obſcureneſs ſhall match the morning. And another thus; If thou doſt wax obſcure, or dark, yet thou ſhalt match the morning.

Licet te ut vita functū exiſtimes novo natali velut aurora conſurges.

Our Tranſlators take Zophar continuing the Metaphor of light; Thine age ſhall be clearer then the noon-day: and here he ſhews, that it ſhall not be a ſtanding, but an encreaſing light, the light of the morning; Thou ſhalt be as the noon, in regard of the clearneſs of thy light; and thou ſhalt be as the morning, in regard of the increaſe and continuance of thy light: For though we have the greateſt light at noon, yet that light is near a declenſion. The Sun being come to his height, is in its vertical point; and every hour after noon, (though we cannot perceive it) grows darker and darker, till the ſhadow of the night wrap up all; but the morning-Sun is a riſing Sun, which gains and gathers every moment. That's Solomon's deſcription (Prov. 4. 18.) The path of the righteous is as the morning-light, that ſhineth more and more unto the perfect day. So then, theſe two are excellently joyned together, to make up the higheſt expreſſion of a proſperous eſtate; thy eſtate ſhall be ſo proſperous in the degree of it, that it ſhall be clearer then the noon-day; and yet it ſhall be of ſuch continuance, or rather, of ſuch encreaſe, that it ſhall be as the morning; thou ſhalt be in a ſtate of perfection, yet receiving addition: though in a ſtrict ſence, Philoſophy defines that only perfect, to which nothing can be added; yet there is a kind of perfection in receiving additions: Job's ſtate ſhall be ſo perfect, that it ſhall need no addition, and yet there ſhall be additions to its perfection. It ſhall be noon for perfection, it ſhall be morning for addition and augmentation; Thou ſhalt ſhine forth as the morning. Hence obſerve,

> God is as able to continue his people in a high eſtate, and to encreaſe it, as to raiſe them to it.

Thy light ſhall be as the noon, and thou ſhalt ſhine forth as the morning. If the Lord pleaſe, he can ſtop the declinings and decayes even of temporals; he can give us an everlaſting noon in the things of this life, and he will certainly do it in the life to come. He who cauſeth our Sun to aſcend till it makes a noon, can command it to ſtand at noon, or aſcend till it makes a clearer noon: As himſelf is higher then the higheſt, ſo he can make us higher, when we think our ſelves at the higheſt. As he makes the darkneſs of affliction darker to many, who ſuppoſed it to be at the darkeſt; ſo he makes the light of joy lighter to many, who ſuppoſed it to be at the lighteſt. Some whoſe ſtate is darker then midnight, are yet as the evening encreaſing in darkneſs; and ſome, whoſe age is clearer then the noon-day, are yet as the morning encreaſing in light. Our evil dayes, and our good dayes, our ſorrows, and our joyes, receive their limits from the hand of God. Our ſorrows will every day be more ſorrowful, unleſs God ſtop them; and our joyes will every day be more joyful, if God enlarge them.

Conſolatio nunquam deerit in omnibus adverſitatibus.

Secondly, As the word ſignifies to obſcure and darken, the ſence appears thus, Thou ſhalt be clearer then the noon, and if any obſcurity ſeize upon thee, yet thou ſhalt match the morning; thou ſhalt overcome that darkneſs, and thy skie ſhall be clear again; the clouds ſhall break upon thee, day ſhall dawn, and comfort ſhall renew; thy obſcurity ſhall be as the morning, which diſperſeth darkneſs, and conquers it by the approaching light. That promiſe (Iſa. 58. 10.) is a clear expoſition of this; Then ſhall thy light riſe in obſcurity, and thy darkneſs be as the noon-day; that is, thy affliction ſhall be turned into conſolation, and thy evil dayes into good dayes. The vulgar Latin tranſlates the former part of the verſe thus, Thou ſhalt be clear towards the evening; or, thy evening ſhall be clear; the latter, thus, when thou thinkeſt thou art conſumed, thou ſhalt be as Lucifer; or, as the morning-ſtar; even like that ſtar which is the forerunner or meſſenger of the morning. Hence obſerve, Et quaſi meridianus fulgor conſurget tibi ad veſperam, & cum te conſumptum putaveris, orieris ut Lucifer. Vulg.

> That, God can quickly turn all our ſorrows into joy, and our worſt times into pleaſant times.

Thy obſcurity ſhall match the morning. He can cauſe joy to riſe out of ſorrow, and turn our water into wine, our loſſes into gain; Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning (Pſal. 30. 5.) And again, Unto the upright there ariſeth light in darkneſs (Pſal. 112. 4.) As the Sun of wicked men ſets at noon, ſo the light of the Saints riſeth at midnight, Amos 8. 9. I will cauſe the Sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day; which text ſtands in as direct an oppoſition to this, as words can be penn'd. He who cauſeth the Sun to go down at noon, can command the Sun to riſe at midnight; and he who darkens the earth in the clear day, lightens the earth in the darkeſt night. As natural, ſo civil and ſpiritual light and darkneſs take their turns, and make their changes, as God decrees. It is the happineſs of the Saints in miſery, that their friend and father can ſay unto their miſery, Be gone; and to happineſs, Return. The ſtate of the Jews was obſcured by the riſing of that fiery fatal Comet, Haman; but anon, Mordecai aroſe, like a bright ſtar in their Horizon, and then, the Jews had light and gladneſs, and joy and honour, Eſt. 8. 16.

Thirdly, Compare this Verſe with the counſel before-given. Zophar adviſeth Job to ſeek unto God, and to humble himſelf before him; what ſhall be the fruit of it? Thine age ſhall be clearer then the noon-day; thou ſhalt ſhine forth, thou ſhalt be as the morning. Hence note,

> When we are better, God uſually makes our eſtates better.

Turn thou to God, and God will turn thy darkneſs into light. The Prophet (Iſa. 58. 10.) having deſcribed a faſt, and taught the Jews how to humble themſelves aright before God, ſubjoyns this promiſe, Then ſhall thy light riſe in obſcurity, and thy darkneſs be as the noon-day. When we depart out of the darkneſs of ſin, the Lord bids the darkneſs of trouble to depart from us. While we caſt our ſelves down, he raiſeth us up, and ſets us in the glory of our enjoyments. We complain we are in darkneſs, but we forget that our ſins ſtand in our light, and hinder good things from us. As promotion comes neither from the eaſt, nor from the weſt, nor from the ſouth, but from God; ſo the ſtop of promotion comes not from any of thoſe quarters, but from our ſelves; if we were empty, God would fill us; if poor, God would enrich us; if low and abaſed, he would exalt us. That advice of the Apoſtle James, ſpeaks all this; Humble your ſelves in the ſight of the Lord, and he ſhall lift you up (chap. 4. 10.) As for thoſe, who, being in darkneſs, kindle a fire, and compaſs themſelves about with ſparks, that they may walk in the light of their own fire, and in the ſparks that they have kindled; this ſhall they have from the hand of the Lord, they ſhall lie down in ſorrow (Iſa. 50. 11.) A man continuing in ſin, ſhall find himſelf as much diſappointed in labouring to get out of darkneſs, into light, by his own power, as in hoping that God will bring him out by his power.

Zophar goes on, and draws this general into particulars. There are five particular bleſſings laid down in verſ. 18, & 19. all which, ſummed together, make up the mercy of ver. 17. viz. proſperity like the noon-day, and comforts like the morning. The firſt is,

Thou ſhalt be ſecure, becauſe there is hope.

Thou ſhalt be ſecure.] The word ſignifies an act, not only of adherence, but of aſſurance; not only of recumbency, but of certainty: when the heart is fully ſetled, and acquieſceth in the ſufficiency and faithfulneſs of him who hath undertaken and ſtands up for our protection.

בטח Non ſimplicem fidem, ſed certitudinem denotat, eſt ſine formidine acquieſcere in ſufficientia præſidii ſui.

There is a double ſecurity.

Firſt, Sinful, accompanied with a neglect of good means, and with a preſumption of a good end. Both are compriſed in that rebuke given the falſe Prophet (Jer. 28. 15.) Thou makeſt this people truſt (or ſecure) in a lie.

Secondly, There is a ſecurity which ariſeth from the actings of a vigorous faith, grounded upon the promiſe and word of God; that's the ſecurity for which Zophar engageth: That ſenſe is clearly given in the words following; Thou ſhalt be ſecure becauſe there is hope; that is, becauſe thou haſt a ſure word, upon which to caſt the anchor of thy hope. True hope is rooted in the promiſe, and fruited with peace. That's it, which, in this point, we call ſecurity. When a lender hath the word of a good man for his money, he is ſaid to have good ſecurity. How ſecure then may the Saints be, who have the word of the good God for their ſecurity. Thou ſhalt be ſecure.

Spes illa ſolum firmitatem habet, quæ Deo nititur. Sanct.

Becauſe there is hope.] That is, Thou ſhalt not only have a preſent good eſtate, and ſtore of bleſſings in poſſeſſion, but abundance in expectation: Hope is of good things to come: An aſſurance of what we have not, is as good a ſettlement to the heart, as what we have; and he that can look for no more then he hath, can never have a ſettled heart. The hope of more is a richer inheritance then the inheriting of much. Were it not for hope, the heart would be unſatisfied in the beſt times. It is never well with us in this life till we can, upon warrantable terms, look beyond what we ſee. Viſion will be enough for us in Heaven, but on earth we cannot have a viſion of any good thing which is enough. This makes the difference between the ſtate of the Saints, and of worldly men, We walk by faith, and not by ſight: They walk by ſight, and not by faith. Faith leads us into the Treaſury of God; ſight leaves them among the treaſures of men. Our beſt eſtate lyes in inviſibles: Senſe is of things preſent or ſeen, which are but temporal; Faith and hope are of things abſent, and out of ſight, which are eternal.

Further, Theſe promiſſory words, Thou ſhalt be ſecure becauſe there is hope, may refer,

Spes eſt meliorum. Druſ.

Firſt, To the attaining of a good condition. Secondly, To the increaſing or bettering of that good condition to which he ſhould attain. Thirdly, To the keeping or maintaining of the good which ſhould be ſo increaſed. Thou ſhalt have a morning, there's good attained; thy morning ſhall riſe up to a noon-day, there's good increaſed; thy noon ſhall not decline, there's good maintained; and becauſe of all theſe hopes, thou ſhalt be ſecure: and all theſe hopes muſt meet to make up a full ſecurity.

> Hence obſerve, Hope in God is the ſettlement and ſecurity of the ſoul.

There is a hope which is ill ſet, ſuch a hope cannot ſettle us. That hope which is right ſet is ſetling. Our hope is as the object is upon which we hope: if we hope upon that which is ſure, hope it ſelf is ſure; hope in God muſt needs be ſure, becauſe God is. So the Apoſtle argues: God willing more abundantly to ſhew unto the heirs of promiſe the immutability of his counſel, confirmed it by an oath, that by two immutable things, in which it was impoſſible for God to lie, we might have ſtrong conſolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope ſet before us, which hope we have as an anchor of the ſoul both ſure and ſtedfaſt, (Heb. 6. 17, 18, 19.) God is the Saints anchor-hold, they cannot be removed by any ſtorm, when once they have faſtened upon him. As every one that hath this hope purifieth himſelf, even as God is pure: So every one that hath this hope may aſſure himſelf, becauſe God is ſure. He is the hope of all the ends of the earth: and hope in him ſhall never end but in a full enjoyment of himſelf in heaven.

> Obſerve ſecondly, That the condition of a godly man can never be deſperate.

Whatſoever he wants in the world he cannot want hope; he hath ſomewhat in hope, though he hath nothing in hand: He hath much in the promiſe, though little in his purſe: He hath plenty of bread in the word, when he hath ſcarce a loaf, or when he hath greateſt ſcarcity at his table. He may expect more of the world then he hath, though he hath much; and he may look upon all that is in the world as his, though none of it be his. He hath a right to all, and he ſhall receive as much as he needs: If leſs then all will not ſupport his needs, he ſhall have all; God will give every Believer a world by himſelf, rather then not give him as much as he hath promiſed. If the good things which God hath already made, be not enough to make good every word which he hath ſpoken, he will ſpeak another word, which ſhall make more. As the heaven and the earth, which are created, ſhall paſs rather then his word; ſo he will create a new heaven and a new earth, that all his words may ſtand.

Conſide dum ſpes eſt. Jun.

There is a textual reading of theſe words given by ſome, which reaches the ſence of this Obſervation; Be thou confident, or ſecure, while there is hope: So it is a counſel, not a promiſe; an exhortation, not a doctrinal aſſertion; or it is the uſe of the former doctrine, ſhewing us what becomes us to do, when we hear what God hath ſpoken. When God makes us a promiſe, it is our duty to reſt upon him in it: Promiſes are the pillars of the ſoul; Chriſt is the ſubſtantial pillar of the ſoul; the promiſes are declarative pillars. As it is the priviledge of believers, that they may, ſo it is their duty, and they muſt reſt upon thoſe pillars. They are invited to cloſe with every word of God, and embrace every offer which he makes. The word is ſpoken in vain, mercies are tendered in vain, except we act faith, and pitch our hope upon them. Shall we be confident when men (who are a lye, and their breath is in their noſtrils) give us hopes they will ſtand our friends and help us; and ſhall we not when the great, the faithful and ever-living God ſaith, he will be our friend and helper!

There are three conſiderations which ſhould make us hope whenſoever God offers us a word.

Firſt, Conſider what God hath done. Experience works hope. Look into your own experiences, and ask after the experiences of others. The report of both will be, Thou Lord haſt not forſaken them that ſeek thee (Pſal. 9. 10.) Who would not ſeek him, who hath never forſaken thoſe that ſeek him?

Secondly, Conſider who it is that ingageth: It is God: A God all-ſufficient to make good his word; there is nothing too hard for him: and as not one Iota or tittle of his commands, ſo not one of his promiſes ſhall fail, all ſhall be fulfilled. He gives promiſes, and he can create performances. The Promiſe is good, but the Promiſer is better; therefore be thou ſecure and truſt when thou haſt his promiſe.

Thirdly, Conſider the relation which God beareth to his people. It is not an enemy, that ſpeaks to enſnare and circumvent us, to mock and delude us; it is not a juſt man who ſpeaks, who (though he mean well, and hath a mind to do what he ſpeaks) yet may ſoon become unable: but it is God, in relation a Friend to us, a Father to us, one who ſpeaks what he meaneth, and is able to do what he ſpeaks. It is God who is able, and whom no accident can diſable, he it is that ſpeaks unto us. If God tell thee thy light ſhall be clearer then the noon, that thou ſhalt ſhine forth as the morning, be thou confident, act faith, yea let faith have a perfect work; then it hath, when we truſt perfectly; Be ſecure, becauſe there is hope; That's the firſt priviledge promiſed. The ſecond is this,

Yea thou ſhalt dig about thee.] Some expound this digging tropologically for the works of holy worſhip and obedience to God. Theſe are a kind of digging in Gods earth.

Ad ſepulcrum pertinet, q. d. ſepultus jacebis ſecurus. Aquin

Others, Thou ſhalt dig; That is, thou ſhalt provide thy grave. As if he had ſaid, I promiſe thee favour, not only while thou liveſt, but when thou art dead; thou ſhalt have a comely burial, and be laid in thy ſepulchre with honour. The words which follow, [Thou ſhalt take thy reſt in ſafety] are interpreted to fill up this ſence, Thou ſhalt be laid in thy grave; and when thou art there, none ſhall violate thy aſhes, or diſquiet thy duſt. It is threatned as a ſore curſe (Jer. 8. 1.) that the bones of the deceaſed Kings and Princes, &c. ſhould be pull'd out of their graves, and ſhould be ſpread before the Sun, and Moon, and all the Hoſt of Heaven, whom they had loved. Now here (ſay they) Job is aſſured, that none ſhall ſtir his bones, or pillage his tomb, when he ſhould ſleep with his Fathers in the grave. But I paſs it.

Jacebis ſecurus velut foſſa circumducta. Tyg.
Securus ages acſi vallo & foſſa munitus. Vatab.

Thirdly, Thou ſhalt dig about thee; that is, thou ſhalt draw a line of defence, or a trench about thee: So Mr. Broughton, Thou ſhalt entrench, and lye down ſafely. The Mole's ſafety (who is named from this word in the Hebrew) is in earthing himſelf; and ſo is the ſafety of men in war. Thus it is an expreſſion of greateſt ſafety, thou ſhalt be as ſafe as if thou wert fortified with walls and trenches, or hadſt planted bulworks round about thee.

Puto alludi ad morem Arabum, qui ſubinde tabernacula ſua & ſedes movebant. Merc.

Fourthly, Others think that Zophar alludes to the faſhion of thoſe times: Either firſt, In their removings, when taking up their tents, and intending to pitch them in a new place, they digged to let in the ſtakes and faſten them; ſo, to dig, is no more but this, thou ſhalt pitch thy tent, or ſet up thy tabernacle, and be in ſafety: God can protect thee in a tent as well as in a caſtle. We call the furniture of our houſes, our moveables, but they had moveable houſes. Or ſecondly, That he alludes to their digging of wells, which was in thoſe ages and places a noted buſineſs, as we may read in Geneſis. So, Thou ſhalt dig, is, thou ſhalt make proviſion for thy flocks and cattel (water being one part is put for all) and none ſhall contend with thee, as the herdſmen of Iſaac and of Gerar did, Gen. 26. 20.

Fodiendi operam ad rem agrariam refert. Cajetanus.

Fifthly, I rather conceive digging is put either ſtrictly for tilling and manuring the earth, or, more largely, for the labour of any calling: Thou ſhalt dig about thee; that is, thou ſhalt follow thy buſineſs in the place where providence hath caſt thee; digging is put for the whole ſervice of this life, (Luke 16. 3.) the unjuſt Steward, when he feared to be called to an account, queries with himſelf, What ſhall I do? for my Lord will take away my ſtewardſhip; I cannot dig; that is, I know not how to put my ſe'f to any labour, or calling, eſpecially to a calling of hard labour, and I am aſhamed to beg, what will become of me? But what priviledge is there in this, that he ſhould dig? I anſwer firſt, It is a mercy to have a calling. But ſecondly, When it is ſaid, Thou ſhalt dig; he means two things further. Firſt, thou ſhalt thrive and proſper in thy calling: Thou ſhalt gain by digging. Secondly, Thou ſhalt be ſafe in thy calling, thou ſhalt dig without fear or danger, without let or hinderance. When Job's eſtate was ſurprized, his ſervants were ſome plowing, others keeping ſheep, all at work. Now it is promiſed, that he and his ſhall dig in quietneſs. To clear which ſence, we may connect the latter clauſe of the verſe (which I have propoſed, and ſhall open as a third diſtinct priviledge) with this, Thou ſhalt dig about thee, and thou ſhalt reſt in ſafety; That is, in labour thou ſhalt have reſt; or, the reſt of ſafety ſhall be thy portion, in all the motions of thy labour.

Hence obſerve, It is a great bleſſing when we freely enjoy the exerciſe of our callings.

It is our duty to have a calling, and it is a mercy to go on profitably and peaceably in it.

There are ſome (though I cannot much approve the interpretation) who expound that (*Cant.*7.1.) where Chriſt ſpeaks to the Church, How beautiful are thy feet with ſhoes? to this ſence, thy feet are beautiful in thy calling. When a man hath his ſhoes on, he is fit for buſineſs, and his feet are never ſo beautiful, as when he is at honeſt buſineſs: As the Saints have a ſpiritual and heavenly calling, in which they deal with Chriſt and trade towards Heaven: So Chriſt will have them imployed in earthly callings, and maintain dealings with men; one calling honours and ſupports the other; our general calling gets a bleſſing upon the ſpecial; and in our ſpecial callings we have occaſion to ſhew forth our vertues and graces, and ſo to honour our general calling: It is a high commendation when we can ſay to a Chriſtian, How beautiful are thy feet with ſhoes? That is, thou art holy when thou art about worldly things, as well as when thou art about ſpiritual things: This is a truth, and may be a good alluſion, though not a proper expoſition of that Scripture: Now as our feet are beautiful with ſhoes, when we go on juſtly, and righteouſly; ſo when we go on thrivingly, quietly, and peaceably in our callings; when though we have much labour, yet we have no ſorrow in our callings: when though we work hard for the bread we eat, yet we get bread to eat, and others do not eat the bread for which we have wrought.

ἡσυχάσεις ϗ οὐκ ἔϛαι ὁ πολεμῶν σέ. Sept.

And thou ſhalt take thy reſt in ſafety.] That's a third priviledge. The word ſignifies a lying down, whether in the day time for a ſhort refreſhment, or in the night for ſleep. And ſo it is no more but this: As thou ſhalt dig, and thrive at thy work, ſo thou ſhalt take thy reſt in ſafety; thy repoſes in the day, and thy ſleep in the night, ſhall be ſweet unto thee. Iſhboſheth was ſlain at noon upon his bed: the night hath been fatal to many.

Note, It is a mercy to enjoy reſt with quiet.

They who are continually hurried with fears, who (like Job) have had their eſtates plundered and ſpoiled, would count it ſo. How many thouſands, lately, in this Kingdom, have, as it was threatned (Deut. 28.26.) been in fear day and night, who when they have lain down could not reſt an hour in ſafety? The Scripture gives us many promiſes about this bleſſing, Prov. 3.26. When thou lyeſt down, thou ſhalt not be afraid; yea, thou ſhalt lye down, and thy ſleep ſhall be ſweet. Pſal. 127.2. So he giveth his beloved ſleep. Pſal. 3. 5. I laid me down, and ſlept; I awaked, for the Lord ſuſtained me. Pſal. 4. 8. I will both lay me down in peace and ſleep, for thou Lord makeſt me dwell in ſafety. When the Lord undertakes our protection, we may ſleep on both ears; that is, ſecurely and comfortably; when he watcheth over us, we ſhall reſt, though thouſands watch againſt us. A good nights reſt is the good gift of God, and deſerves daily acknowledgments by man.

The fourth priviledge follows.

Verſe 19. Thou ſhalt lye down, and none ſhall make thee afraid.

רבץ Propriè de gregibus

Some interpret this as a repetition, or but as an addition to the former; but we may thus difference them; That, promiſed reſt to his perſon and family; this, to his eſtate and cattel. The word (Rabats) here uſed, properly ſignifies the lying down of cattel in their fields and folds. Thus underſtood, it is a diſtinct mercy, Thou ſhalt be quiet in thy bed; as alſo thy cattel, thy ſheep and oxen, ſhall all lye down quietly in their ſtalls and paſtures, none ſhall ſtir them up, much leſs take them away. But ſome may object, The Text doth not ſay, Thy cattel, &c. ſhall lye down: But thou ſhalt lye down. I anſwer; A man and his eſtate, whether in things living, or without life, may be wrapt up in one: we are well and in peace (according to common ſpeech) when ours, and all that we have, are well.

Hence note, A peaceable condition, even for our goods and cattel, is a remarkable ſavour.

That our eſtates are quiet as well as our perſons, that our beaſts can lye down ſafely as well as our children, is to be numbred among our mercies. The Pſalmiſt prayeth hard for it (Pſal. 144. 13, 14.) That our ſheep may bring forth thouſands, and ten thouſands in our ſtreets: That our oxen may be ſtrong to labour: that there be no breaking in, nor going out; that there be no complaining in our ſtreets: and leaſt any ſhould judge theſe but ſmall matters, he caſts them up into a great ſum, even the ſum of all our deſires, Happineſs; Happy is that people that is in ſuch a caſe. Though neither all our happineſs, nor our chief happineſs, conſiſteth in theſe outward things; yet ſuch an enjoyment of theſe things is a happineſs.

There is a fifth priviledge greater then any of theſe, and yet but an outward priviledge: This makes the Sun of his promiſed proſperity as the noon day in his higheſt Zenith of perfection.

Yea many ſhall make ſute unto thee.

The Hebrew is, They ſhall intreat thy face. And the word which we tranſlate entreat, ſignifies alſo to weary, or tire one out, to be pained either in mind or body; and when it is joyned,—as here, with the word face, or countenance, it ſignifies to weary one with prayer and intreaty; that is, to uſe many intreaties, ſo many intreaties as weary a man to hear them. That parable which teacheth that men ought alwayes to pray, and not to faint, repreſents us with a Judge which feared not God, nor regarded men, and with an importunate Widow, who came unto him, ſaying, Avenge me of mine adverſary, and he would not for a while; But afterward he ſaid within himſelf, Though I fear not God, nor regard man, yet, becauſe this Widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, leſt by her continual coming ſhe weary me (Luke 18. 5.) As many are weary of prayer, ſo ſome are wearied with prayers; and grant the petitions of the poor, not to relieve them, but to eaſe themſelves. So the meaning is this, They ſhall make many ſuits to thee, even as many as are made to him that is wearied with ſuitors. Though it be a great honour to have ſuitors, yet there is a burthen in it too: The faces of Kings and Magiſtrates are wearied with hearing ſupplications.

Others underſtand face here (as it is often taken in the Hebrew) for anger and diſpleaſure, and give the elegancy of it thus, Many ſhall abate, or weary thine anger; when they hear that thou art angry or diſpleaſed with them, they ſhall make ſo many ſuits and petitions to thee, as ſhall take off thine anger, and bring it down. It is hard to be angry with thoſe that are humbled; when God is angry, we may be ſaid to weary his anger by prayer; or to cauſe him to give over being angry. The Church wonders when the anger of God outſtood ſo many prayers. O Lord God of hoſts, how long wilt thou be angry againſt the prayers of thy people? (Pſal. 80. 4.) The anger of God can hold out as long as his love; but God will appear weary of his anger, when we are not weary of praying to him. We weary the anger of God, and make it faint with ſupplications, when we ſupplicate plicate him earneſtly, and humbly, without wearineſs and fainting. As ſin and unbelief are ſaid to weary the patience of God, (Iſa. 7. 13. chap. 43. 24.) So prayer and faith (or the prayer of faith) are ſaid to weary the wrath of God. In this ſence the word is frequently uſed, (Pſal. 119. 58.) I intreated thy favour (or wearied thy face) with my whole heart. Saul ſpeaks ,in the ſame form of words, (1 Sam. 13. 12.) I ſaid the Philiſtims will come down now upon me in Gilgal; and I have not made ſupplication unto (or wearied the face of) God. So then the bleſſing here promiſed Job, is, that many (as ſubjects to their Princes, and tenants to their Lords, yea, as man to God) ſhould make their ſuit, and do homage to him. As if Zophar had ſaid, Many now deſpiſe and undervalue thee becauſe of thine affliction; and heretofore many came boldly to diſquiet thy perſon, and ſpoil thy ſubſtance; but the caſe ſhall be ſo altered with thee, that they, who before deſpiſed thee, ſhall honour and reverence thee: (As many of them who mocked Chriſt, ſhortly after adored him,) they that heretofore terrified thee, ſhall be afraid of thee, and ſhall humble themſelves before thee. They ſhall fear thy power, and beg thy favour, with renewed ſupplications, till it ſhall be a wearineſs to hear them. Thou ſhalt be more able to deſtroy them, then deny them. Only take my advice, and hearken to my counſel. Be thou earneſt in ſeeking unto God, and others ſhall quickly ſeek unto thee; do thou make ſuit to him, and weary his face, and thou ſhalt ſee many will come and weary thy face with ſuits: Thy very enemies, and unkindeſt friends, will be glad, not only of thy company, but of a good word, or a good look, from thee. And in this Zophar ſpake truer, in reference unto himſelf, and his friends, then he was aware of: For as others, ſo theſe three, by the command of God (chap. 42.) were glad to come and intreat the face of Job, that he would intreat the face of God for them.

Te ſuſpicient & colent, tibi ſupplices erũt propter divitias & dignitatem. Drui.

First, Hence obſerve, It is an honour to have others ſue or ſeek to us.

In this God gives us a ſhare, and makes us partakers with himſelf in one of his greateſt honours: It is the honour of God, that all creatures ſue to him, and depend upon him; that all need his help, and that ſo many petition him for it every day. He is the God hearing prayer, therefore to him ſhall all fleſh come. The higheſt glory which God hath on earth, is, that ſo many thouſands come thronging to, and knocking at the gate of Heaven, with tears and prayers. One reaſon why Princes and Magiſtrates are called gods, is, becauſe ſuch as are oppreſſed, or in want, make ſupplication unto them; Prov. 19. 6. Many will intreat the favour of the Prince: It is the ſubjects duty to do it; and the doing of it is the Princes honour: Flatterers are the diſgrace of Princes; but Suitors are a grace unto them. That civil power is draw down to the lees, or is at the loweſt ebb, which no man, or but few, ſue unto. And the loweſt ebb, both of Zions ſpiritual power, and outward ſplendor, is thus expreſt (Jer. 30. 17.) This is Zion whom no man ſeeketh after. Zion was once ſought unto, for thither the Tribes went up, they went up thither to worſhip the Lord: and when the glory of Zion ſhould be reſtored, the Prophet aſſures her (Iſa. 60. 14.) The ſons of them that afflicted thee ſhall come bending unto thee, and all they that deſpiſed thee ſhall bow themſelves down at the ſoles of thy feet: And they ſhall call thee the City of the Lord, the Zion of the holy One of Iſrael. (Iſa. 45. 14.) The labour of Egypt, and merchandiſe of Ethiopia, &c. they ſhall come over, and they ſhall fall down unto thee, they ſhall make ſupplication unto thee, ſaying, Surely God is in thee, and there is none elſe, there is no God. To make ſupplication to any one, either ſuppoſeth him to be a God, or that much of God is in him. (Pſal. 45. 12.) The rich among the people ſhall intreat thy favour; (it is the word in the Text) not only poor mean underlings, but the worldly rich among the people ſhall ſeek thy heavenly riches; the honourable ſhall think it an honour to joyn in communion with thee. The Philadelphian Angel is promiſed this high priviledge, Rev. 3. 9. Behold, I will make them of the Synagogue of Satan, which ſay they are Jews, and are not, but do lye, behold I will make them come and worſhip before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee; that is, I will make them ſubmit and ſue unto thee as unto my ſpecial Favourite. The glory of Chriſt himſelf is thus deſcribed (Iſa. 11. 10.) There ſhall be a root of Jeſſe, and to him ſhall the Gentiles ſeek. To ſeek or make ſuit to a man, ſpeaks reverence to, and worth in his perſon: It ſpeaks ability to help, and ſuppoſeth willingneſs; it ſpeaks a fear of having that power uſed againſt us, and an earneſt deſire of having it improved for us; honour comes in from all quarters to thoſe who have many ſuitors.

Secondly, To whom, and upon what terms, doth Zophar make this promiſe? He makes it unto Job, and to him in caſe he ſhould ſeek unto God, and humble himſelf before him.

Obſerve, Holineſs towards God, makes us honourable and venerable among men.

I grant, ſome are therefore deſpiſed becauſe they are holy; and not a few continue in, or turn to unholineſs, leſt they ſhould be deſpiſed. Holineſs, which is the beauty of men and Angels, yea of God himſelf, is accounted a blot among unholy ones; yet all they who are holy are truly honourable in themſelves, and they are honourable in the eyes and eſteem of many others. Though they are thought unworthy to live in the world, yet the world is not worthy of them, Heb. 11. 38. There is more worth in the leaſt Grace, then in all earthly glory. Them that honour me (ſaith God, 1 Sam. 2. 30.) I will honour; and they that deſpiſe me, ſhall be lightly eſteemed. God is the fountain of honour, and yet he receives honour. We give much honour unto God, when we ſincerely ſeek unto him, and obey him; they that honour God thus, ſhall have a like honour, others ſhall ſeek to them, and obey them. Since thou waſt precious in my ſight thou haſt been honourable (Iſa. 43. 4.) All are ready to honour thoſe who are precious in the eyes of earthly Kings, and ſue for the favour of their Favourites. This in a proportion is true of every one that is precious in the eyes of God, he ſhall be honoured, ſometimes in the eyes of worldly men, but alwayes in the eyes of men fearing God. There is a ſpiritual excellency ſtampt upon the face of the meaneſt ſervant of God: they that are ſpiritual ſee and reverence it. The Citizen of Zion is deſcribed among other qualifications by this alſo, he is a man, in whoſe eyes a vile perſon is contemned, but he honoureth them that fear the Lord. As Grace is honourable, ſo it is a ſign of grace to honour thoſe who are gracious.

Omnes quodãmodo mali eſſe cogũtur ne viles habeantur. Sal. lib. 4. ad Eccl. Cathol.

Theſe are the promiſes made by Zophar to encourage Job, both in general, ver. 17. and in particulars, ver. 18, and 19. In ver. 20. he draws up the concluſion of his ſpeech, ſetting down the contrary eſtate and condition of wicked men, and by conſequence the eſtate of Job, if he ſhould continue (as he ſuppoſed him) wicked. While he ſpake of mercy, he ſpake in the ſecond perſon; here he ſpeaks of judgment in the third.

Verſe 20. But the eyes of the wicked ſhall fail; and they ſhall not eſcape, and their hope ſhall be as the giving up of the ghoſt.

As if Zophar had ſaid, If thou doſt perſiſt in thy ſin, thou mayſt look for good till thy eyes ake, and never be bleſſed with the ſight of it; or thy condition ſhall grow yet more ſad, ſo ſad, that thy eyes ſhall be pained to ſee it, and thou ſhalt have no hope to eſcape it; or if thou haſt, it ſhall be a dying hope, even like the giving up of the ghoſt.

Here are three branches of this deſcription, concerning the oppoſite condition of wicked men.

Firſt, Their eyes ſhall fail, in looking for good.

Secondly, They ſhall not eſcape, preſent evil. If they hope they ſhall, then Thirdly, Their hope ſhall be as the giving up of the ghoſt.

The eyes of the wicked ſhall fail.] The failing of the eyes may be conſidered two wayes. There is firſt a natural failing of the eyes through age, as alſo through extremity of want and affliction (which is an accident unto Nature.) The eyes of the wild Aſſes are ſaid to fail becauſe there was no graſs, Jer. 14. 6. God threatens the Jews with ſuch troubles as ſhould conſume their eyes, Levit. 26. 16. When Jonathan (1 Sam. 14. 29.) wanted food, his eyes were dim, and as ſoon as he had taſted a little honey, See, I pray you, (ſaith he) how mine eyes have been enlightened, becauſe I taſted a little of this honey. Neither of theſe wayes are we to underſtand it here. Secondly, There is a failing of the eyes in a moral ſence: Though the optick vertue of the eye be like that of Moſes, which was as ſtrong and clear at a hundred and twenty years old, as at twenty, yet when a man is diſappointed of the thing which he looks for, his eyes are ſaid to fail. The failing of our eyes is the diſappointment of our hopes. And the reaſon of that expreſſion is, becauſe the eye is the inſtrument, by which we look up, or look out for that, which is the deſire, and would be (as we conceive) the ſatisfaction of our ſouls. Yet further, the eyes may be ſaid to fail two wayes.

Dum expectant bonum & non aſſequuntur. Sic conſumptio oculorum ſumitur in Scriptura. Rab. Sol.

Firſt, (As before) When we obtain not what we have long expected: So the captive Jews complain (Lam. 4. 17.) As for us, our eyes as yet failed for our vain help: in our watching we have waited for a nation that could not ſave us. Job, in vindication of his integrity, profeſſeth, That he never cauſed the eyes of the widow to fail (Chap. 31. 16.) that is, he neither made them ſtay over-long for an anſwer, nor did he chide them away preſently with a bad one. For,

Videndo & invidendo langueſcet. Invidia eſt oculorum dolor.

Secondly, This failing of the eyes doth ariſe from the ſight of that which we would not ſee, as well as from the not ſeeing of what we would. To meet with that which we look not for, is as troubleſome, as not to meet with that for which we look. And as want of that good, which we would enjoy, ſo envy at the good, which another enjoyes, is a pain unto the eyes. Envy is the worſt diſeaſe of the eye: when a man ſeeth another flouriſh in proſperity and in peace, whom he hates, that monſter envy tortures him, and his eyes begin to ake.

In both or either of theſe ſences we may underſtand it here.

Firſt thus, Wicked men ſhall look long enough for any good before it comes, their eyes ſhall fall out of their heads with looking for good becauſe it comes not.

De Jobi æmulatoribus & invidis hæc arbitror intelligenda. Bold.

Secondly, Their eyes ſhall fail; that is, they ſhall ſee the righteous in ſuch proſperity, and raiſed up to ſuch luſtre and glory, that they ſhall not be able to bear it. This ſome give as the peculiar intent of the place. For though the aſſertion be appliable to all wicked men, yet it ſeems to aim chiefly at thoſe who inſulted over Job in his affliction. Theſe mens eyes, ſaith Zophar, ſhall be dazled, and ſink in their heads, at the ſplendour of that reſtitution which God will make in thy eſtate, if thou wilt but return to God, and repent. They who mocked thy fall, ſhall be amazed at thy riſing.

This firſt clauſe taken in connection with the counſel before given, yields us this Obſervation:

The prayers of the Saints draw down good upon themſelves, and trouble upon their adverſaries.

Prayer is an offenſive weapon as well as a defenſive: as it protects us from evil, and attaineth good for us, ſo it wounds our enemies, and obſtructs the paſſages of their good. What hinders the deſires of wicked men, and breaks their projects? what ſtops the courſe of their counſels? Some poor ſoul, perhaps many, are praying againſt them, and then, the eyes of the wicked ſhall fail, they ſhall never partake of their expectations. There is a deſtroying power in the prayers of the Saints, as well as a ſaving and a helping power. The witneſſes have a flame at their lips, fire proceedeth out of their mouthes, which devoureth their enemies (Rev. 11.) which moſt interpret to be their prayers: they pray their enemies to deſtruction, they pray them into diſappointments; their enemies lay deſigns, and prayer diſmounteth their deſigns, or turns their Artillery againſt their own breaſts.

Secondly, Take the interpretations given of theſe words in their own compaſs. Then Obſerve, firſt, It is a vexation to wicked men, a very pain to their eyes, to ſee the proſperity of godly men.

A good man is an eye-ſore to thoſe that are evil. Haman was in an high eſtate, a great man, and full of honour, yet Mordecai was an eye-ſore to him; Haman's eyes failed when he ſaw him, and therefore after he had made report to his friends, and to his Wife, of the glory of his riches, and the multitude of his children, and all the things wherein the King had promoted him, &c. he melts into this ſad and diſcontented concluſion, yet all this availeth me nothing, ſo long as I ſee Mordecai the Jew ſitting at the Kings gate, Eſther 5. 13. All the pictures in the Kings gallery, did not pleaſe and feed the eyes of Haman ſo much as the ſight of Mordecai ſitting at the Kings gate vexed him.

Secondly, Obſerve, Wicked men ſhall never obtain the good things they long for and gape after.

Their hopes ſhall be fruitleſs, their projects ſucceſleſs, their labour ſhall be labour in vain. The beſt are ſometimes put to it very hard, their refuge and their hopes fail them long, though not for ever, (Pſal. 69. 3.) Mine eyes fail while I wait for my God. David waited ſo long, that he was even weary with waiting, yet God came at laſt. The ſtubborn Jews are threatned, Deut. 28. 32. Thy ſons and thy daughters ſhall be given to another people, and thine eyes ſhall look and fail with longing for them all the day long. Siſera's Mother, and her wiſe Ladies, looked long through the lattice for his coming, but he came not at all. The eyes of the wicked ſhall fail indeed, they ſhall fail with waiting upon their idols and vanities, upon their luſts and lyes, upon their relations and friends, upon their policies and plottings: It ſhould make the Saints to lift up their heads and their eyes with confidence, that God will cauſe the eyes of wicked men to fail.

And they ſhall not eſcape.] As they ſhall not receive the good which they expect, ſo they ſhall not be able to deliver themſelves from the evil which they fear. They ſhall not eſcape; the Hebrew is, Their refuge ſhall fail them: Mr. Broughton, Their refuge ſhall be forlorn. You may take it either in reference to their eſcaping the hand of men, or to their eſcaping the hand of God. They ſhall not eſcape the hand of men, their refuge ſhall fail them there. When once Saul was forſaken of God, he could not eſcape the hand of the Philiſtims: ſee (1 Sam. 28.) what means he made to eſcape them, whom he had often conquered; he goes to the Devil for help, but he could not eſcape; Nothing ſhall do them good who are forſaken of God. And if they cannot eſcape the hands of men, much leſs ſhall they be able to eſcape the hand of God. As his hand is not ſhortned to ſave, ſo not to puniſh. Where he reſolves to ſtrike, he can. They ſhall not eſcape. This intimates two things.

Firſt, The falſeneſs of thoſe props and ſupports, whether perſons, or things, upon which they leaned. I (ſaith David, Pſal. 142. 4.) looked on my right hand, and beheld, but there was no man that would know me, refuge failed me: The help of man often fails good men, though the help of God never fails them. The help of man often fails wicked men, and the help of God fails them ever. They may look in a ſtreight not only on the right hand and on the left, that is, on all creatures, but upward alſo, on God himſelf, and yet find no refuge. God will not deliver wicked men, and others ſhall not. Nothing can ſave him whom God will deſtroy, or give up to deſtruction.

Secondly, The vanity of their own hopes; they have great hopes that they ſhall get off, and out-run their dangers, but they cannot. Their ſorrows ſhall be too ſwift of foot for them; yea, their ſorrows ſhall purſue them as upon Eagles wings. They ſhall not eſcape.

Hence obſerve, There is no eſcaping the hand of God.

His is a long hand, every thing is within the reach of it. His foot is a ſwift foot; therefore the flight ſhall periſh from the ſwift, and the ſtrong ſhall not ſtrengthen his force, neither ſhall the mighty deliver himſelf, neither ſhall he ſtand that handleth the bow, and he that is ſwift of foot ſhall not deliver himſelf, Amos 2. 14. When a prevailing enemy comes, there's no fighting with him, but there may be an eſcape from him. A good pair of heels may do us ſervice where hands cannot. But when a people can neither fight nor flee, neither charge nor retreat, their caſe is deſperate. There is no getting from that vengeance which God ſendeth to attach and apprehend his enemies. As all outward helps ſhall fail thoſe whom God will not help; ſo God rejects the confidences which wicked men have in him. On that ſuppoſition Rabſhakeh thought to daſh the confidence of Hezekiah, and to perſwade him that he ſhould not eſcape. Is not this he in whom thou truſteſt (ſaith he) whoſe high places and whoſe altars thou haſt taken away? Thou truſteſt in God, but will God deliver thee when thou haſt thus diſhonoured him? They that deſtroy the inſtituted worſhip of God, have little reaſon to hope that God ſhould aſſiſt them, while they they offer to truſt him, which is his natural worſhip. Seeing then God rejects the confidences which wicked men have in him, and blaſteth every outward thing which they make their confidence, how is it poſſible for them to eſcape? When our Rock will not ſave us, how ſhall we be ſaved by a ſtaff of reed?

The third branch of the Text wrings the very dregs of the wrath of God, into the cup of ungodly men.

Spes eorum. מפח נפש

Their hope ſhall be as the giving up of the ghoſt.

When hope dyes all dyes: hope is the laſt commodity which a man puts off in this life; But what is their hope worth which is as dead?

Proprie hac phraſi ſignificatur deliquiū animæ. Eſt ſpes illorum abominatio animæ. Vulg.

There is much variety in interpreting this expreſſion. The word properly taken ſignifies ſwooning, or failing of the ſpirits. The giving up of the ghoſt, is the total and final failing of the ſpirits. He can have but few ſpirits left alive, whoſe hope hath given up the ghoſt. Mr. Broughton renders, Their hope is nought but pangs of the ſoul: The Vulgar, Their hope ſhall be the abomination of their ſoul: The ſence of which tranſlation ſeems to be this; That which wicked men receive in lieu of, or in anſwer to their great hopes, ſhall be an abomination to them; they hope for good, but evil cometh. And every evil is then moſt grievous, when it ſucceeds the hope of good. Hope may be ſaid to give up the ghoſt, when either the good we would obtain removes further from us, or the evil we would decline comes cloſer to us: Hope expires when we are preſented with viſions of fear and ſorrow, after our higheſt expectations of joy and comfort: Hence ſome tranſlate the word (Nepheſh) a breath or puff of wind; to which the hope of the wicked is elegantly compared, becauſe it quickly vaniſheth, and produceth no effect, or not the effect hoped for. That complaint of the Prophet, ſutes this notion fully, (Iſa. 26. 18.) We have been with child (big with hopes) we have been in pain, (endured much to enjoy our hopes, and bring them to the birth, but inſtead of them) we have, as it were, brought forth wind, we have not wrought any deliverance in the earth. After long looking, and long labour, all proved but a gripe of wind, or a Collick fit.

Vox Nepheſh hoc loco pro halitu & vento ſumitur. Bold.

Res ſperatæ dignæ ſunt quæ exibilentur exufflentur quas flatus repellat longeque projiciat.

Again, ſay others, Their hope ſhall be as the ſnuffing of the breath; that is, they ſhall be ſo angry at their diſappointments, that they ſhall vex and ſnuff at it. Or thus, The things which they ſhall receive upon all their hopes placed in, and credit given to the creature, ſhall not be worth a ſnuff of breath; that is, they ſhall be light and vain: So ſome expound that (Mal. 1. 13.) where the Prophet brings in that people toyling under the preſſures of (that which ſhould have been their delight) the publick worſhip; Ye have ſaid, Behold what a wearineſs is it, and ye have ſnuffed at it; (it is this word) they cryed out, we have brought many weighty Offerings, and Sacrifices, and what a burthen is it to do ſo? And ye ſnuffed at it; that is, ye thought much of it, or were vexed at it; ſo we tranſlate: But the letter of the Original is read thus, Ye have ſaid, Behold what a wearineſs is it, whereas you might have blown it away, or blown it off; as if he had ſaid, you think you have done a great matter, and ſpeak as if ye were all in a ſweat at my ſervice; whereas indeed you have done little for me, and what you did, you ſpoiled it in the doing, you have done it in an ill manner; you have brought me a poor, a lame, and a halting Sacrifice, ſuch as a man might even blow away with his breath; and your own hearts have been more halting, lame and light, then your Sacrifice. So here, their hope ſhall be as a thing blown or puffed away with a breath, there ſhall be no ſtability, no ſubſiſtence in it.

The words (according to our reading) teach us, that the hopes of wicked men are decaying and dying hopes. Giving up the ghoſt is the laſt act of life, and the beginning of death. As all the hopes of wicked men periſh when they dye, ſo while they live their hopes are dying. A godly man hath not only a living, but a lively hope, (1 Pet. 1. 3.) A wicked man hath but a dying hope at beſt; and his hope ſhall be worſe and worſe every day, till it be utterly deſperate. The Prophet Joel deſcribeth the judgments of God upon his ancient people, by pulling off the bark of a tree (chap. 1. 7.) He hath laid my vine waſte, and barked my fig-tree; He hath made it clean bare, the branches of it are white. The Caldee Paraphraſt gloſſes it by the expreſſion of this Text, He hath cauſed my fig-tree to give up the ghoſt; hence the meaning is plain, that, look as a tree (take it for a fig-tree, or any other tree) when you pull off the bark, bears no more fruit, but dyes; ſo ſhall the hope of a wicked man be: We may ſay of ſuch a mans hope as Chriſt of the fig-tree which he curſed, Never fruit grow on thee more; thou art a dying tree, thou haſt done thy worſt, thou haſt ſeen thy beſt dayes, now thy bark is peeled off, thy boughs are bare; Thy hope is as the giving up of the ghoſt.

Spes eorum perditio Sept. ſui ſc. rerumque ſuarum, vel quod de ipſis impiis ſperari poteſt animæ perditio eſt.

Laſtly, The Hebrew, having no particle of ſimilitude, runs thus in the letter, Their hope ſhall be the giving up of the ghoſt; that is, A wicked man is often brought into ſuch a condition, that he hath no hope but this, that his day is almoſt done, and himſelf a near neighbour unto death: He hath no hope when he dyes, yet all his hope is to dye; and that's a miſerable hope. Jonah's hope (under temptation) was the giving up of the ghoſt; therefore he prayes hard that God would take him out of the world. Achitophel's hope was his death; he being croſſed in his wicked counſel, went and hanged himſelf. They who are paſt all poſitive Hope in this life, retire (as their laſt reſerve) to this privative hope, O that they were dead. Not to be, is their hope who are oppreſſed with fears of being miſerable. Deſpair of all good while we live, makes evil (ſuch is death) the beſt of our hopes.

Spes eorum efflatio animæ i.e. tanto dolore afficientur excidentes ſua ſpe ut ſibi mortem conſciſcant.

The ſum of all is, A wicked man is a miſerable man. Put the three parts of this verſe together, and you may read the worſt of miſery. He that never receives the good he hopes for, and ſees others receive that good which he grieves for: He that cannot eſcape any danger which he fears, nor meet with any deliverance which he deſires: He whoſe hopes are dying, or who hath no hope but to dye: He that is all this, is any thing but happy, and wants nothing but hell (at the very brink whereof he is, when he is all this) to make him compleatly miſerable.

The Prophet Malachi gives us the opinion of thoſe times concerning wicked men, You call the proud happy, and they that work wickedneſs are ſet up; but he tells of a time when they ſhould return, and diſcern between the righteous and the wicked: There is the greateſt real difference already between the righteous and the wicked: but God will make a legible difference, a difference ſo plain and legible, that you ſhall not need to call in the help of faith (which hath the moſt exquiſite eye) to read it; ſenſe may do it. The oldeſt eyes, even the eyes of the old man ſhall diſcern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that ſerveth God, and him that ſerveth him not; when the one ſhall be burnt up root and branch in the fire and flames of Juſtice, and the other refreſht with the healing beams of the Sun of Righteouſneſs. Wait but a while, and you ſhall ſee God drawing out theſe poſitions in providences towards his people, and making a viſible comment upon this Text of Scripture. The light of the righteous ſhall not fail, but the eyes of the wicked ſhall: The one ſhall be ſecure becauſe there is hope; but the other hath no hope to eſcape, or the hope he hath ſhall be as the giving up of the ghoſt.

CHAP. XII. Verſ. 1, 2, 3, 4.

And Job anſwered, and ſaid,

No doubt but ye are the people, and wiſdom ſhall die with you.

But I have underſtanding as well as you; I am not inferior to you: yea, who knoweth not ſuch things as theſe?

I am as one mocked of his neighbour, who calleth upon God, and he anſwereth him: the juſt upright man is laughed to ſcorn.

This, and the two following Chapters, contain Job's anſwer to the counſel and objections of his third friend, Zophar, not excluding what had been ſaid by the two former. There are four things moſt remarkable in it.

Firſt, Job ſharply rebukes that pride of ſpirit, and confidence of their own opinion, which he obſerved in his friends. He purſues this point from the beginning of the Chapter, to the end of ver. 4. No doubt but ye are the people, &c.

Secondly, He refutes that opinion which they three had maintained againſt him; namely, that good or evil things diſtinguiſh good and evil men; himſelf ſhewing by many arguments, taken from the various adminiſtrations of God, that outward evils are often the lot of good men; and that outward good is often the lot of evil men in this life. The Theme begins at ver. 5. and is enlarged to the end of the Chapter.

Thirdly, He rejects his friends, as Phyſitians of no value; yea, as having wronged God, whilſt they ſeem to be advocates for him. This he proſecutes with much variety, from the beginning of chap. 13. to ver. 17.

Fourthly, He renews his former plea with God, putting many requeſts to him, and ſtrongly arguing for a releaſe from, or at leaſt, a leſſening and mitigation of his troubles.

The whole diſcourſe is ſomewhat more preſſing and ſharp, then either of the former; Job's ſtile taſts much of the gall and vinegar, in this reply; and there was ſome reaſon it ſhould: for ſeeing his friends undervaluing the defence he had made, and charging him afreſh with that old leaven of hypocriſie (as if there were no way to aſſert the juſtice and holineſs of God, but by condemning him for unjuſt and unholy) he could not take it well at their hands, but grows ſomewhat warm in language towards them; we ſhall be ſenſible of it in opening the body of his anſwer.

Then Job anſwered, and ſaid.] He ſeems to aſſert, rather then to diſpute; and is larger in laying down his own poſitions, then in anſwering the objections of his friends. Yet indeed a clear aſſertion of truth, is a ſufficient confutation of error; and a clear ſtating of a queſtion, is the anſwer of all objections.

No doubt but ye are the people.] The word is uſually tranſlated, the multitude; and it comes from a root, which ſignifies to cover or hide; becauſe a multitude, or a great croud of people hide and cover the face of the earth.

עמם • עם Operuit, texit, quia multitudo terram tegit

No doubt but ye are the people: The text is taken two wayes; ſome read it as a plain aſſertion; others, as an Irony; which is a ſpeech fill'd with deriſion; while the letter of it makes no doubt, the ſpirit of it is an abſolute denial.

They who take it as a plain aſſertion, read thus; Without all queſtion you are to be reckoned (inter plebem) but as the ordinary ſort of people, even as the vulgar; and wiſdom is dead with you; if ever you had any wiſdom, your wiſdom is faded, your parts are ſpoiled, you have outlived your prime; you are not the men you pretend to be, the choiceſt and the chiefeſt, the cream and flower of all; no, your ſpeech betrayes you, and ſaith, you are of the vulgar, of vulgar judgments, and common underſtandings. I ſee no depth or myſtery in any thing ye have ſpoken. Thus the Phariſees ſpeak, Have any of the rulers believed on him? but this people (this common people, this vulgar) who know not the law, are curſed, John 7.49.

Video quod eſtis populares, & vobiſcum mortua eſt ſapientia. Pagn. Vos eſtis hominum univerſitas. Tygur. Putatis quod vos eſtis ſpecimen totius orbis. Vat.

Secondly, By the people, ſome of the Rabbins underſtand the choiceſt, the elect of the people; ſo the language is ironical. No doubt but ye are the people, the choice the choſen people, the choſen of God, his elect and precious ones, his favorites and familiars, to whom he opens his boſom, and reveals his ſecrets; ye are the Church and people of God, to whom the divine Oracles are committed. We are thruſt out among the prophane.

עם Populus, id eſt, מבחר עם delectus populi. Rab. Moſ. ben. Nahm. Vos eſtis lectiſſimi in toto populo, ac velut columnæ totius nationis. Merc.

Again, Ye are the people, that is, the choſen of the people, the repreſentative of the whole Nation; as we may ſay of the Houſe of Commons in Parliament, ye are the people of England, that is, the people have choſen you, and confide in you, as the wiſeſt, the moſt judicious and faithful of your ſeveral Countries, for carrying on the affairs of the Kingdom, and maintaining of their rights. In this ſenſe (though they are but a few hundreds, yet) they are the people of the Kingdom. Job taxeth his friends as arrogating this; Ye are the people, ye are they that would ſeem to be a whole Nation of men; ye (ſure) have got away all the wit from the world, ye would be accounted as mankind, or as the flower of the univerſe; ye take it upon you as if all the world were epitomized in you three; as if all wiſe, learned and knowing men had delivered up, and put over their judgments and underſtandings, their all, into your hands; yea, as if wiſdom had yielded her ſelf captive to you, and ye had devoured all knowledge: ſurely ye are the men. The Lord by the Prophet Jeremy (chap. 5. 1.) bids them run to and fro through the ſtreets of Jeruſalem, to ſee if they could find a man: And the old Cynick went into a throng with a torch by day, to find a man. A man of wiſdom and integrity is the man; other men compared to him, are but beaſts. Zophar at the twelfth verſe of the former chapter, compares Job to the wild aſſes colt, and numbers him among the beaſts: here Job fits him with an expreſſion; you carry your ſelves (ſaith he) as if you only were The men, and I, yea, all men beſides, very beaſts, or wild aſſes colts, that knew neither what ye ſay, nor whereof ye affirm.

Amicos modeſtè reprehendit aſperſo tamen modico ſive ſale ſive felle ſub ironica forma. San.

Quoniam Zophar Jobum vellicando, pullo onagri, i. e. ſtupidiſſimo bruto comparaveverat, ideo dicit, vos eſtis homines, cæteri ad vos beſtiæ. Merc.

And wiſdom ſhall die with you.] Moral wiſdom is the knowledge of natural things, and of their cauſes. Divine wiſdom is the true knowledg of God and of our ſelves. We may ſuppoſe both wiſdoms intended here; as if he had ſaid, you pretend to ſo much wiſdom, that if you ſhould die, all that is called wiſdom muſt ſurely die with you, there will be none ('tis to be feared) left in the world, when you leave the world. When the Sun goes down, the light goes down; the Sun is the veſſel of light: it was ſaid of Chryſoſtom (who held forth much light of knowledge in his time) that it were better the Sun ſhould be taken out of the firmament, then he from his Sphere. When ſome men go down, much light goes down with them: A wiſe holy man is both a burning and a ſhining light. Job puts it upon his friends as their preſumption, to think ſo highly of themſelves; his thoughts were, that wiſdom would be ſafe, when they ſhould not be; that the common-wealth of learning would loſe little or nothing, though it loſt them, with all their learning; that the day of knowledge would not be darker, whenſoever they with all their light ſhould ſet.

Sapientia eſt rerum divinarum & humanarum, cauſarumq; quibus hæ res continentur ſcientia. Cic. l. 2. de Off.

Quando vos moriemini integra manebit quæ in mundo eſt ſapientia. Lod.

Whether or no Job's friends were thus conceited of their own abilities, and preferred themſelves before their brethren, is more then I dare conclude againſt them. Their round dealing with Job, and thoſe magiſterial leſſons and advices given him, ſound ſomewhat that way; but let it be granted that Job in his paſſion over-acted a little upon his friends, yet there is this truth in it, which ſhall be my firſt Obſervation from theſe words:

That, Many are apt to over-value and over-rate their own abilities, as if they had engroſſed all knowledge, and had the monopolie of wiſdom in their own breaſts; as if all muſt borrow or buy of their ſtore, and light their candle at their torch.

Wiſdom is no mans peculiar; and a great opinion of our own wiſdom, ſavors of great folly: The very head of that monſter, Papal pride, appears in this point. The Pope thinks himſelf to be The man, that He is the people; that all the wiſdom and judgment of the world is contracted into him, and faſtned to the pummels of his chair; whence he would be believed to utter Oracles with a ſpirit of infallibility. No man errs more then he who ſaith he cannot; nor is any man a greater ſtranger to true knowledge, then he who boaſts he hath more then his neighbours. It is noted of the inhabitants of China, that as they are a witty nation, ſo they have a conceit of their own wit above all the nations of the earth. Hence their boaſt, that they have two eyes, the Europeans one, and the reſt of the world is blind. But they who think all are blind, who ſee not with their eyes, are yet blind, and have never ſeen themſelves. It is the emptineſs of knowledge, not a fulneſs of it, which makes ſo great a ſound. They who expect that all ſhould bow to their judgments, and acquieſce in what they reſolve; they, who would be eſteemed to ſpeak nothing but principles and poſtulata, which muſt be ſwallowed, without chewing, by an implicit faith; they, who require aſſent, rather then perſwade it, may juſtly fall under the weight, and feel the ſmart of this ſcornful objurgation, ye are the men, and wiſdom ſhall die with you. The Apoſtle is expreſs, He that thinks (that is, proudly conceits) he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know (1 Cor. 8. 2) What then doth he know, who thinks (which he cannot without higheſt pride) that he knoweth all things, and that all men muſt know (if they will know any thing) from him.

Secondly, Obſerve, All kind of ſcorn is not alwayes uncomly.

We may, without breach of charity, or ſtain of holineſs, check pride with deriſion, and ſpeak them below men, who ſpeak themſelves above men, or act what is unworthy of men. The Jews are taught by God himſelf to deride the proud King of Babylon, Iſa. 14. 4. Thou ſhalt take up this proverb (or taunting ſpeech) againſt the King of Babylon, and ſay, How hath the Oppreſſor ceaſed, the golden City ceaſed! &c. verſ. 9, 10. Hell from beneath is moved for thee, to meet thee at thy coming; it ſtirreth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth; it hath raiſed up from their thrones all the Kings of the nations; all they ſhall ſpeak unto thee, and ſay, art thou alſo become weak as we? art thou alſo become as one of us? This is the Proverb which was to be taken up againſt the King of Babylon, and it is a taunting proverb indeed. Not only ſhould the great Princes then alive who (ver. 8) are expreſſed under the ſhadow of Firtrees and the Cedars of Lebanon, rejoyce againſt him; but even the dead whom he had oppreſſed, are here brought in, inſulting over him. When the Babylonian ſhould tumble down to hell, the Princes there are repreſented riſing from their places, to give this great Prince the upper hand, and the higheſt room in that kingdom of darkneſs. Thus hell it ſelf is ſaid to be moved, and to be, as it were, in a hurry, how to entertain that mighty King; that he who had been chief in wickedneſs and in pride, might have his right, to be chief in torment. The dialogue which the dead are ſaid to have with that deceaſed King, is ſomewhat like thoſe in which Alexander and others are derided by the dead in Lucian; Art thou become like unto us? &c. In what a heat of heavenly zeal doth Eliah deride the Prieſts of Baal? 1 Kin. 18. 27. Cry aloud, for he is god, either he is talking, or he is purſuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he ſleepeth, and muſt be awaked. When the Prophet Micaiah, (1 King. 22. 17.) was called for to give his opinion about Ahab's expedition to Ramoth Gilead, he knowing what they would have him vote, they expected he ſhould join with the reſt, and ſay what they had ſaid; therefore when Ahab asked, ſhall we go up to Ramoth Gilead? yea, ſaith he, go up and proſper; I know you have a mind to go up, I pray go; Ahab reſented it as a ſcorn, and therefore adds, How oft ſhall I adjure thee, that thou tell me nothing but that which is true in the name of the Lord? They who reſolve upon their way, before they ask counſel, are often counſelled according to their own way, are led to error in ſcorn, becauſe they had no love unto the truth. We find the Apoſtle Paul, in the higheſt elevation of his ſpirit, expreſſing himſelf in language extreamly parallel with this of Job. It ſeems the Corinthians, much like the Laodiceans, had boaſted of their ſpiritual fulneſs, that they were rich, and encreaſed with goods, and had need of nothing. Yea, ſaith the Apoſtle, I know ye are, I will be of your opinion too for once (1 Cor. 4. 8.) Now ye are full, now ye are rich (all things go bravely with you) ye have reigned as Kings without us, that is, you exalt your ſelves above us here, as much as a King is above his own ſubjects, you are ſupream. I and Apollos, whoſe Miniſtry God was pleaſed to uſe in planting and watering the Goſpel among you, are now looked upon as mean fellows, as men of low and poor parts; or, at beſt, but as ſome good honeſt dull Preachers, not worthy to be named the ſame day with your new and highflown teachers (yet all this is but an holy ſcorn put upon them, as his correction, in the next line, imports) I would to God (ſaith he) that ye did reign (namely, in deed and in truth; I ſhall not envy you, only I would be bold to put in for a part with you) I would to God ye did reign, that we alſo might reign with you; I would be glad to ſhare in thoſe gallant Goſpel-notions you ſo much brag of; but I fear your portion is but ſmall in true ſpiritual Goſpel-knowledge, except in your own conceits, and there you abound ſufficiently. Again, in v. 10. though in another ſtile, yet fully to the ſence, and almoſt the words of Job; We are fools for Chriſts ſake, but ye are wiſe in Chriſt; we are weak, but ye are ſtrong; ye are honourable, but we are deſpiſed; we are nothing, ye are all: This the Apoſtle ſpeaks, as moſt interpreters agree, by an Irony; or if taken properly, the ſence may be given thus, we are fools in the opinion of the world, poſſibly in yours too, becauſe, for the Goſpels ſake, we expoſe our ſelves to ſo much hazard. But ye are wiſe; who ſo preach Chriſt, that ye endanger neither life nor liberty, neither perſons, nor eſtates. Read the ſame ſtrain, (1 Cor. 14. 36, 37.) What! came the word of God out from you? or came it unto you only? What! do you think that you have all the word and will of God? doth all the knowledge of Scripture, and reſolution of doubts lie in your breaſts, and flow out at your lips? comes all from you? have you the ſole trade of Goſpel-truths? he ſubjoins, If any man thinks himſelf to be a Prophet, or ſpiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the Commandments of the Lord: as if he had ſaid, do not think you have got all, I have ſomewhat as well as you, I know what the commandment, what the will of God is. Job ſpeaks in the next verſe, as if he had read this Epiſtle of Paul, or had ſet him a pattern; for having ſaid, No doubt ye are the people, and wiſdom ſhall die with you; he adds, Ridet ſpiritus carnales, ridet caro ſpirituales. Deſcendit ad graviſſimam ironiam, ut ambitioſos illos ad ruborem vel invitos cogat. Bez. in loc. Poſtquam ſerio & abſque figuris vanam eorum confidentiam repreſſit, tum ironicωs quoque eam deridet. Cal.

Hæc antitheſis eſt ironica & plena aculeis.

Aſpera objurgatio ne ſoli ſapere Corinthii ſibi videantur. Bez. Objurgatio eſt paulo aſperior, ſed quâ neceſſe fuit retundere ſuperbiam Corinthiorum, qui ſibi ultra modum placebunt. Calv.

Verſe 3. But I have underſtanding as well as you, I am not inferiour unto you; yea, who knows not ſuch things as theſe?

As before, he derided their ignorance, or their preſumption of knowledge; ſo now, he puts himſelf into the ballance with them: you that think you have all the wiſdom and knowledge, let me come in for a ſhare with you; I have underſtanding as well as you, I am not inferior to you; poſſibly I ſhall weigh as heavy as you, when we are weighed together; yea, who doth not weigh as heavy as you? Who knows not ſuch things as theſe?

We have here a double compariſon.

Firſt, Job compares himſelf with his friends, and that two wayes. 1. For the matter; That, as they had underſtanding, ſo had he: I have underſtanding as well as you. 2. He compares himſelf for the degree; my underſtanding is as large as yours: I am not inferiour to you.

Secondly, He makes a compariſon between his friends and the reſt of men; even with the vulgar and ordinary ſort of men: as if he had ſaid, Do not think that I lift my ſelf up above my brethren, or would be reckoned for more then an ordinary man, when I ſay, I have underſtanding as well as you; for truly who knows not ſuch things as theſe? yours is but the common Ephah, and your meaſure but the meaſure of a man.

I have underſtanding as well as you.] The Hebrew is, Non ſum excors, neque cor perdidi.

I have a heart as well as you. The heart in Scripture is put, as for the affections, ſo likewiſe for the underſtanding; a man without underſtanding, is a man without an heart: the heart is the treaſury wherein the precepts and maximes of holy knowledge are laid up: A good man out of the good treaſure of his heart bringeth forth good things. Hear now this, O fooliſh people, and without underſtanding. The Hebrew is, and without heart (Jer. 5. 21.) And in chap 34. of this Book of Job, ver. 32. Let men of underſtanding tell me; the Original is, Let men of heart tell me. And the Latines call a wiſe man (Cordatum) a hearty peice, a man of heart. The name of one of the twelve Apoſtles was Lebbeus (from Leb, the heart) ſignifying as much as wiſe, or underſtanding. Some, for I have underſtanding, read, I have courage and height of ſpirit, as well as you: The heart, in Scripture, is often put for courage, 2 Sam. 17. 10. He that is a valiant man, whoſe heart is as the heart of a Lion, ſhall utterly melt; that is, his courage ſhall fail. So the Prophet threatens, that the mighty mens hearts in Moab, in that day, ſhall be as the heart of a woman in her pangs (Jer. 48. 41.) The failing of the heart is the failing of courage; that's a good ſenſe here, I have courage as well as you; or, I have ſpirit to ſtand to my cauſe, and maintain what I have aſſerted, notwithſtanding all the contempt and contradictions which you have poured upon me; you have not yet made my heart fall, though my body, though my eſtate be caſt down. You have loaded me with reproaches and heavy cenſures, but my ſpirit bears your infirmity in doing ſo.

I am not inferiour to you.] I have the ſame for kind, and I have as much of it as you. The Hebrew is very elegant, I do not fall before you; a man that falls before another, is ſubdued and overcome. He that falls under in wreſtling, is prevailed over: I do not fall as the weaker, I yet keep my ground, and ſtand upon my legs. So the word is uſed, Nehem. 6. 16. When thoſe enemies perceived how God dealt with his people, the Text ſaith, they were caſt down in their own eyes; or, fell before their own eyes, that is, they were aſhamed and dejected, becauſe they ſaw the proſperity of the Jews.

There may be a threefold ſence of this, I am not inferiour to you; or, I do not fall before you.

Firſt, I am not inferiour to you in honour and dignity; I am as great a man as you.

Secondly, It may refer to holineſs: I am not inferiour to you in grace; I am as good a man as you.

Thirdly, Which is ſpecially meant; I am not inferiour to you in knowledge and underſtanding; I am as wiſe a man as you. Some render it thus, I yet fall, trip, or ſtumble no more then you, and I hope to ſtand my ground in this controverſie as long as you dare ſtand againſt me. Hence obſerve, > Firſt, That, In ſome caſes, ſelf-commendation is not uncomly.

To boaſt of our underſtanding, proceeds from the want of it; but a man may ſay, I have underſtanding as well as you, without a boaſt. This is a very tender point; example from the ſervants of God in Scripture, teacheth us to be more ready to ſpeak and write our blots and failings, then our good works or praiſes: And the rule of Scripture is, Let another man praiſe thee, and not thine own mouth; a ſtranger, and not thine own lips (Prov. 27. 2.) The Apoſtle alſo is expreſs, that ſelf-commendation is no commendation (2 Cor. 10. 18.) Not he that commendeth himſelf, is approved; but whom the Lord commendeth. To have praiſe of other men, is better then to have praiſe of our ſelves; but to have praiſe of God, is better then to have praiſe of men. Yet when men diſpraiſe us maliciouſly, we may juſtly praiſe our ſelves. Such praiſe is but to do our ſelves juſtice, which we are more bound to do, then to any other man.

There is a twofold commendation of our ſelves. There is a ſinful ſelf-commendation, when we deſire to be lifted up in the opinion of the world. There is a lawful ſelf-commendation, when we deſire to be lifted up, leſt the glory of God ſhould be caſt down. When the honour of God is in danger to be abated in our abatings, we may ſafely take all due honour to our ſelves; yea, we are bound to honour, and make the moſt (we poſſibly can) of our ſelves with truth, when either the truth, or honour of Chriſt muſt be leſſened, if we do not. I think (ſaith Paul) that I have the ſpirit of God (1 Cor. 7. 10.) He ſpeaks not, as if he doubted whether he had; but to reprove thoſe who ſlighted him, as if he had not the ſpirit of God. While he ſaith only, I think I have the ſpirit of God, he ſaith more to this purpoſe, then if he had aſſerted ſtrongly, I have the ſpirit of God. The confidence of the falſe Apoſtles, that they had the ſpirit, gave occaſion, not only to ſuſpect whether they had it, but to conclude, that they had it not: Paul's modeſty, in but thinking, gave occaſion to be reſolute, in concluding, that he had the Spirit.

Further, Job doth not only commend himſelf poſitively, and ſay, I have underſtanding, I have wiſdom; but he commends himſelf comparatively, which is the moſt unpleaſing way of commendation. We uſe to ſay, compariſons are odious, and ſubject to miſconſtruction; yet Job commends himſelf, at leaſt, by comparing himſelf with, if not preferring himſelf before the formoſt of his friends; I am not inferiour to you. Hence obſerve,

> A man, in ſome caſes, may ſo ſtand upon his own honour, as not to yield or ſubmit to others at all.

The Apoſtles counſel is, In lowlineſs of mind, let each eſteem other better then themſelves (Phil. 2. 3.) and yet a time may come, when a man, with lowlineſs of mind enough, may judge himſelf better then another. When the matter lies between Saints and Saints (of ſuch the Apoſtle there ſpeaks) one Saint ſhould not lift up himſelf above another, they ſhould rather give honour one to another, and think others better then themſelves: If any man hath whereinto boaſt, I much more (ſaith Paul, Phil. 3. 4.) yet he calls himſelf leſs then the leaſt of all Saints; amongſt Saints, he cares not though he were accounted the leaſt of Saints; but when his Miniſtry and Apoſtleſhip was under-rated, he ſpeaks of himſelf at the higheſt rate, 2 Cor. 11. 5. I ſuppoſe I was not a whit behind the very chiefeſt Apoſtles, fully the language of Job here; I am not inferiour to you, no, not to the beſt of you. But were ſome of the Apoſtles greater and better then others? was there inferiority and ſuperiority amongſt them? No, Apoſtleſhip, as an office, is of equal honour in all Apoſtles; but even amongſt Apoſtles, ſome had more excellent gifts, and greater enlargements; God did communicate himſelf more to one then to another; one of thoſe ſtars differed from another ſtar in glory: Thus among Apoſtles, ſome one might be chief: thus Paul was not behind (which I take for a modeſt expreſſion, that he was even with, yea, that he, in ſome things, went before, or outwent) the chiefeſt of the Apoſtles. He indeed confeſſeth at chap. 12. of the ſame Epiſtle, ver. 11, 12. I am become a fool in glorying; as if he had ſaid, it is the guiſe and character of a fool, affectedly to commend himſelf, but (I have not affected it) ye have compelled me to it, for I ought to have been commended by you (that is, ye ought to have given teſtimony to my integrity, and to have maintained the honour of my Miniſtry) for in nothing am I behind the very chiefeſt Apoſtles, though I be nothing; though you, through envy, account me nothing; and though I, in humility, would account my ſelf nothing, yet (being now put to it) I muſt ſpeak it out, I am not behind the very chiefeſt Apoſtles: or, as ſome render from the letter of the Greek; I want nothing, (not a hairs breadth) of their meaſure, who are Apoſtles above meaſure; I am as much an Apoſtle, as they who are more then much Apoſtles. All this while, Paul was no Braggadochio, no vain Thraſo: He doth not contend perſonally with the Apoſtles for preheminence or primacy, but he checks thoſe who hoped to be excuſed in undervaluing him, becauſe they valued other Apoſtles above him, or pretended to have received Goſpel-myſteries from ſome other of the Apoſtles (whoſe great confidents and familiars they would be eſteemed) beyond all that Paul had ever yet taught. Paul (I ſay) never wrangled with any of the Apoſtles for the upper hand; he never ſaid to Matthew, Thomas, or Andrew, &c. I am not behind you; or, I am better then thou. But becauſe they made uſe of the parts and gifts of ſome of the Apoſtles, to ſlight his, he, who ſomewhere ſaith, I am not worthy to be called an Apoſtle; ſaith here, I am not behind the greateſt, the chiefeſt of the Apoſtles. Thus we may ſtand upon terms of credit with any who lay our perſons low, that they may diſparage our work, and lay that ſervice low to which God hath called us.

Solomon gives us an excellent obſervation (Prov. 25. 26.)

A

A righteous man falling down before the wicked, is as a troubled fountain, and a corrupt ſpring. Some interpret it thus, A righteous man falling into ſin, before, that is, in the company or preſence of the wicked, is as a corrupt ſpring, many begin to ſuſpect that his waters are not wholeſom, when they ſee ſuch corruption ſwimming at the top, and ſo refuſe to drink him any more, ſc. to accept his counſels or inſtructions. This is a uſeful explication; yet I rather give the ſence from the point in hand: A righteous man falling, that is, baſely ſubmitting, or creeping poorly to a wicked man, is as a troubled fountain. Many a righteous man is made to fall down before the wicked. Abel fell down before Cain; for he murdered him: and ſo have thouſands of righteous ſouls fallen before their bloody perſecutors; but for a righteous man actively to fall down, to crouch or ſtoop to wicked ones, either through fear or flattery, is an act unworthy a righteous man. A righteous man thus falling before the wicked, what is he? or to what ſhall we liken him? Solomon tells us, he is as a troubled fountain, and a corrupt ſpring. A righteous man is a wholeſom fountain, a ſpring of pure water, many may refreſh themſelves at him; but he, by this his act, becomes a troubled fountain, he hath mudded the purity of his own ſoul, with worldly reſpects and carnal intereſts, elſe he had never bowed to that generation of golden Idols, and graven Images. Noble Mordecai would not fall before proud Haman: He choſe rather (if that muſt have been the iſſue of it) to fall down by his power, then to fall down unto his perſon. Giants are called Nephalim, from this word, Fallers, becauſe men, beholding their vaſt limbs, and dreadful ſtature (like the Army of Iſrael before great Goliah) fall before them for fear. There are Giants ſtill in every Land (though not in body, ſuch are very rare, yet in mind) they would be Nephalim, all muſt fall before and ſubmit unto them; they would be Joſephs, every mans ſheaf muſt make obeiſance unto theirs. Paul would never fall down to falſe Apoſtles, nay, he would not to a true Apoſtle, when he did not walk according to the truth; he withſtood Peter to the face, becauſe he was to be blamed, Gal. 2. 11, 14. Though Chriſtians ought, in lowlineſs, to ſubmit to one another; and in duty, to ſubmit to Magiſtracy, and the higher powers, yet they muſt not ſubmit to the pride or luſt of any how high ſoever. Thus to bow before wicked men, is ſomewhat like bowing to an Idol. To adore them, is to diſhonour God; yea, to make them Gods.

Heb. Cum quo non ſunt hæc?

Who knows not ſuch things as theſe?] As he had ballanced himſelf with his friends, ſo he thought any man might. Such a treaſure of knowledge as this, is no mans peculiar: We may gather up ſuch upon the common; we need not travel to the oracles of learning for it, he that knows any thing, knows what you ſay; he that is not (ſuch as you think me to be) a wild aſſes colt, a very fool, may fathom all your notions; they carry no ſuch depth, but that line enough may be had in any mans brain to reach their bottom. Who knows not ſuch things as theſe? Hence note,

First, There are ſome common principles, and eaſie truths, which fall under every mans apprehenſion.

Who knows not ſuch things as theſe? The Apoſtle (Heb. 6. 1.) ſpeaks of the firſt principles of the doctrine of Chriſt. The objects of knowledge are of various degrees, according to the degrees of capacity in the ſubject. (Heb. 5. 14.) we read of ſtrong meat for men of full age, and milk for babes. The youngeſt child feeds on milk. Who knows not ſuch things as theſe? Some principles in Religion are of ſo eaſie a digeſtion, that even babes in Chriſt may feed upon them, and ſuck them in. We ſay of thoſe commodities which are rich and high-prized, they are not every mans money; ſo we may ſay of thoſe truths which are dark and myſterious, they are not for every underſtanding: He that hath an underſtanding, may underſtand ſo much of the myſtery of Chriſt, as may light him ſafe to heaven, though ſome things are too high for thoſe who are higheſt, to underſtand fully, while they are here upon the earth.

Secondly, Obſerve, Who knows not ſuch things as theſe?

It is a ſhame not to be acquainted with common principles.

Every one knows theſe things; what? not underſtand that which the meaneſt may underſtand? We find the Apoſtle improving this argument, Rom. 2. 4. Where (having convinced the Gentiles in the former Chapter, for ſinning againſt the light of nature, and the benefits of creation) he proceeds to convince the Jews for ſinning againſt the light of Scripture, and the mercies of redemption. Deſpiſeſt thou the riches of the goodneſs and forbearance of God, &c. Not knowing that the goodneſs of God leadeth thee to repentance? Art thou a Jew, one that boaſteſt of ſo much knowledge, and doſt not thou know this common principle? doſt not thou know the meaning of the goodneſs and forbearance of God? every child in holy knowledge knows the voyce of mercy, that it beſpeaks our return to God, or leads us to repentance. The Apoſtle deals with the Corinthians upon the ſame ground (1 Cor. 11. 14.) about the wearing of long hair, Doth not nature it ſelf teach you? It is a ſhame for you to be ignorant of that which you may learn at the ſchool and univerſity of nature? nature teacheth, that if a man have long hair, it is a ſhame unto him. It is not only a ſin, but a diſhonour for a man, to do that, which his being a man tells him he ſhould not do. By a like inſinuation Paul labours to keep the Epheſians at furtheſt diſtance from groſs ſins; for this ye know (ſaith he) that no whoremonger, &c. hath any inheritance in the Kingdom of God and Chriſt. This is a received truth; do you not know this? I know ye know it. Some truths can hardly be known by all our ſtudy, many are known without any ſtudy. It is almoſt as hard to be ignorant of ſome things, as it is to know other things. There will be a ſore reckoning with the world one day, becauſe they are not ſeen in the deep myſteries of Chriſt, having been often ſhewed them; but when it ſhall be found, that they are not ſeen in that, which they could not but ſee, except they had ſhut their eyes, this will render them altogether inexcuſable, and ſhut their mouths for ever. The more eaſie any truth is, the harder will be our ſuffering, and the greater our ſin, if we attain not to the knowledge of it.

Thirdly, Job's friends carried it, as if their diſcourſe had been all riddle and myſtery; yet he tells them, Who knows not ſuch things as theſe? Hence note,

It is a vanity to pretend myſteriouſneſs about vulgar truths.

Some cover the Sun with clouds, and put diſguiſes upon the plaineſt doctrines. They dig deep for that which lies above ground; and in ſtead of enlightning what is dark, darken the cleareſt light. They ſpeak and write of things as new and never known, whenas all that hear or read them, may juſtly reprove them with that ancient proverb, You tell us news; or in the language of this Text, who knows not ſuch things as theſe?

Job having thus rebuked the pride of his friends, begins to check their ſcorn.

Verſe 4. I am as one mocked of his neighbour, who calleth upon God, and he heareth him; the juſt upright man is laughed to ſcorn.

I am as one mocked of his neighbour.] The word ſignifies ſcorning joyned with laughter, ſtrictly called deriſion. The letter of the Hebrew is, I am the laughter (the ſport or paſtime) of my neighbour; he ſpeaks partly in the firſt, and partly in the third perſon: He doth not ſay, I am as one mocked of my neighbour; that had caſt it too directly upon his friends; but, I am as one that is mocked of his neighbour, and ſo lets it light where it will. Job's comforters had high thoughts of themſelves, and low thoughts of him. A man that is mocked, is under the greateſt contempt, and meaneſt eſtimation. I am as one mocked, &c. as if Job had ſaid, In ſtead of comforting, informing, and ſupporting me, you have mocked me in my adverſity.

Noluit Job dicere prima perſona, ſocio meo, ſed ſocio ſuo in tertia, ut modeſtius loqueretur. Merc.

Obſerve, It is an addition to affliction, to be mocked in affliction.

Mocking is one of the greateſt afflictions. Amongſt the ſufferings and cruel perſecutions that the Saints endured, the Apoſtle mentions this, They had trial of cruel mockings, (Heb. 11. 36.) Who knows how deep ſharp words will enter, and what wounds they will make? They not only wound the name, but the ſpirit; they ſtab to the heart. It was one great part of the ſufferings of Chriſt, he was mocked and uſed like a fool in a play; they put a robe on his back, a reed in his hand, and a crown upon his head; and when he hung on the croſs, finiſhing the work of our ſalvation, they (in higheſt ſcorn) Bid him ſave himſelf. The Apoſtle Jude aſſures us, that the Lord is coming to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly of all their hard ſpeeches which they have ſpoken. Hard ſpeeches are as bad as hard blows; and amongſt all hard ſpeeches, mockings are the hardeſt. A man will eaſier receive a blow from his friend, then a ſcorn from his friend: Scorning is fundamentally oppoſite to the fundamental laws of love. This is the ſecond ingredient which imbittered his ſufferings; I am as one that is mocked of his neighbour.

Ab amicis acceptæ contumeliæ aculeū habēt moleſtiſſimum.

Secondly, Note, The nearer they are from whom we receive diſcourteſies, the nearer they go to our hearts.

A wound from a hand afar off, is far off from our hearts. What? Thou my friend, Thou my familiar uſe me thus? The mock of a neighbour is cutting, almoſt killing. The unkindneſs of a friend hath moſt of the enemy in it. When Chriſt perceived his own Diſciples withdrawing, he was extreamly troubled at it. Many of the people were offended, and went back, and walked no more with him; and he complained not, he expected no better from them: But when he ſaw his Diſciples hang a little off, he expoſtulates, Will ye alſo go away? (John 6. 67.) What, you my Diſciples? As if he had ſaid, That will be a croſs indeed, your departure will be a home-affliction; it is no wonder if others do it; but will ye do it? will ye go away too? And becauſe the ſufferings of Chriſt, were to be the higheſt in all aggravating circumſtances, that they might anſwer all the aggravations of our ſins, therefore he was wounded (as the Prophet ſpeaks) in the houſe of his friends, betrayed by his own Diſciple, and by a Diſciple kiſſing him. Betrayeſt thou the Son of man with a kiſs? (Luke 22. 48.) Any treaſon is bad enough, but the treaſon of a Diſciple, and of a Diſciple kiſſing is worſt of all. But as it behoved Chriſt to fulfil all righteouſneſs, ſo to receive all unkindneſſes, and therefore this. Though (as I have noted already) Job was not a type of Chriſt, yet their ſufferings were very like: Chriſt was wounded by the lips, and Job by the tongue of a friend. I am as a man mocked of his neighbour,

Who calleth upon God, and he anſwereth him.

There is a difference among Expoſitors about the Antecedent of this Who: whether it ſhould be referr'd to Job, or to the neighbour about whom Job ſpeaks. I am as a man mocked of his neighbour; who, which neighbour calls upon God, and he anſwers him. So ſome underſtand it, and then the words are a deſcription of Job's neighbour, I am as a man that is mocked of his neighbour; And what kind of neighbour is he? He is one that uſeth to call upon, and to be heard of God; he is a man acquainted with God in prayer. The Hebrew word, which we tranſlate to call upon God, notes a ſort of men, whoſe chief buſineſs, or trade, was to call upon, or invocate the Name of God (Pſal. 99. 6.) Moſes and Aaron among his Prieſts, and Samuel among them that call upon his Name; they called upon the Lord, and he anſwered them: implying, that it was their ſpecial calling to call upon God. So ſaith Job, I am as one mocked of his neighbour; which neighbour is one that calls upon God; that's his profeſſion, or his work; and 'tis, as a painful, ſo a moſt noble work. Prophets and Prieſts were profeſſed callers upon God. That interpretation of the word gives the ſence thus, I am derided by neighbours, who yet are ſuch as would be loth that God ſhould deride them: they deride me, whoſe duty it is to pray for me, and to pray with me; you are men of prayer, men that call upon God, and you have the favour to be heard of God; God is facile and favourable unto you, but ye are hard and ſowre to me, you ſhew me no favour: how uncomely a thing is this, that you, who wait to be heard of God, ſhould not hear me? or that you, who are heard of God, ſhould deride me? This Expoſition, as it may ſtand with the letter of the Text, ſo it may teach us this leſſon:

קרא Dicitur cui ex officio incumbit invocare Deū. Bold.

Siccine ludus & fabula ero etiam illis, qui in Dei famulatu ſocii mei ſunt ejuſdemque conſortes miniſterii? Bold.

Ego riſui ſum ſocio meo, qui ſc. ſocius, quoties deum inclamat eum exaudit: q. d. deum in omnibus facilē habent.

They who have had experience of Gods tenderneſs to help them, and hear their prayers, ſhould be very tender to others, when they call to them, and ſeek their help?

What? Should I be mocked of a neighbour that uſeth to call upon God? ſuch carriage looks like theirs who call not upon God. You that have had anſwers from God in prayer, and know what it is to be anſwered, think what it is for you but to deny a friend, eſpecially to mock a friend, when he calls upon you in the day of his calamity. Will you take it well if God deny you, or ſend a mock in ſtead of an anſwer to your prayer? You that have any ſuit to God, be not hard, much leſs inexorable, when diſtreſſed friends ſue unto you.

But the Antecedent ſeems rather to be Job himſelf. I am as one mocked of his neighbour; who, that is, which man thus mocked, doth yet call upon God, and he anſwers him: They mock him, but God doth not mock him. Or thus, I am as one mocked of his neighbour; who thereupon takes an advantage to call upon God, to go to God, when he cannot be entertained, or is rejected by men, and he hears him. The vulgar tranſlation reacheth this ſence very clearly, He who is derided of his neighbour as I am, will call upon God, and God will hear him.

There is a difference in the latter clauſe, And he anſwereth him; we put it in the Preſent tenſe, He anſwereth him; others in the Preterperfect tenſe, He hath anſwered him; ſome in the Future, He will anſwer him: He calleth upon God, that he may anſwer him, or to be anſwered by him: So Abraham ſpeaks (Gen. 23. 8.) Intreat for me to Ephron, that he may give me the cave of Machpelah: Thus here, He calls upon God, and he anſwereth him; that is, he calleth upon God that he may anſwer him; he hopeth to ſpeed well in Heaven with his petition, though he ſpeed ill on earth.

Qui deridetur ab amico, ſicut ego, invocabit deum & exaudiet eum. Vulg.

Et reſpondet illi i,e. ut exaudiatur ab eo, emollietur interpretatio ſi & ſumatur pro ut. Antehac cū ad deū clamarem, me exaudire ſolebat, ſed & nunc eum idem facturum non deſpero, me nunc qui talis ſum vos mei ſocii ridetis? Merc.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, It is the priviledge of the Saints, when men fail and reject them, to make God their refuge, and their recourſe to Heaven.

They who have intereſt in God, know how to make this improvement of it: If the world caſt out the Saints, God will take them in: His ſtile is, The helper of the friendleſs. And David's experience was, When my father and my mother forſake me, the Lord taketh me up, (Pſal. 27. 10.) that is, Though my father and mother, who are neareſt to me, ſhould be ſo unnatural, as to reſtrain their bowels, and forſake me; or though they ſhould be reſtrained from doing me thoſe offices which Nature dictates, yet the Lord takes me up, ſc. in the everlaſting arms of mercy: His love never changes, nor can any thing ſtop the motions of his love. His love is hotteſt to us, when the love of man waxeth cold. The departures of friends bring him nearer to us; and where creature comforts end, the comforts of God begin. They are in a ſad condition, who being caſt off by men, have not a God to call upon, and go unto. Only they who can have acceſs to God, need not fear the receſſes of men.

Ubi deeſt auxilium humanum, ibi maximè adeſt auxilium divinū Aquin. in loc.

Secondly, Obſerve, That the repulſes which we meet with in the world, ſhould drive us nearer to God.

I (ſaith Job) am mocked of my neighbour; What courſe ſhall I take? Shall I lye down and vex? Shall I fret my ſelf, and pine away? I know a better way then that: I will call upon God, I will try what's to be had in Heaven, now that the earth hath nothing for me; men have not an ear for me, but ſure enough God hath not only an ear to hear, but a heart to pity, and a hand to work deliverance. The holy Prophet reſolves, It is good for me to draw nigh to God, (Pſal. 73. 28.) And when he ſaith, 'tis good, his meaning is, 'tis beſt. This poſitive is ſuperlative. It is more then good for us to draw nigh to God at all times; it is beſt for us to do ſo; and it is at our utmoſt peril not to do ſo; For lo, (ſaith the Pſalm, ver. 27.) they that are far from thee ſhall periſh; thou ſhalt deſtroy them that go a whoring from thee. It is dangerous to be far from God; but it is more dangerous to go far from him. Every man is far off by nature; and wicked men go further off: The former ſhall periſh; the latter ſhall be deſtroyed: He that fares beſt in his withdrawings from God, fares bad enough: Therefore it is beſt for us to draw nigh unto God. He is the beſt friend at all times, and the only friend at ſome times. And may we not ſay, that God ſuffers and orders evil times, and the withdrawings of the creature for that very end, that we might draw nearer unto him? doth he not give up the world to a ſpirit of reviling and mocking, that he may ſtir up in his people a ſpirit of praying? This is a gracious deſign of God, and we ſhould interpret the neglects, the contempts and ſcorns of the world, to be as the Voice of God ſaying to us, Come to me, and ſee whether you ſhall not have better uſage; ſee whether I will ſcorn you; you have loved the world too much, you have too much pleaſed your ſelves with the ſmiles and good looks of men; you have been taken and overtaken with the things of this life, come to me, and take (you cannot overtake) the things of eternal life. The leaſt things of Heaven are more noble then the greateſt things on earth. Shall we not then prize the great things of Heaven much, when we can hardly enjoy the leaſt things of the earth? Shall we not, when we are mocked of our neighbours, call upon God, we having this aſſurance, that he will not mock, but anſwer us?

And he anſwereth him.] The anſwer which God makes to ſuch as call upon him, is either to the outward, or to the inward man: he anſwers the inward man, or the ſpirit of man, by a hint from his Spirit. Satisfaction to our ſpirits, is an anſwer from the Spirit. When the Lord (having ſaid to the ſoul, I am thy ſalvation) ſaith alſo, I am thine honour, I am thy credit, I am thy liberty, I am thy riches, I am thy friend; the ſoul is more abundantly filled then with riches, credit, liberty, friends, or honour. Again, anſwer comes to the outward man, Providence ſpeaks to ſome as the Spirit doth to others. We having called upon God, ſee the creature at work towards a redreſs of our evils, and a ſupply of our preſent wants. Under the Law God anſwered many wayes: He anſwered by Urim and by Thummim, by Prophets and by dreams, by viſions and revelations. And though we have not ſuch anſwers now, yet we have as ſure anſwers. God never receives any prayer which doth not receive an anſwer. We may call upon men, and not be anſwered; men may go to idols, to lying vanities, and not be anſwered; but if we go to God, we ſhall.

> Hence obſerve, Prayer and ſeeking unto God are not in vain, or fruitleſs.

The Lord will anſwer. Sometimes he anſwers before we call; and he gives before we ask; and he promiſeth, if we ask he will give; and anſwer if we call. Chriſt raiſeth up our confidence, that God will hear us, becauſe men do. (Math. 7. 9, 10.) What man (ſaith he) is there of you, whom if his ſon ask bread, will he give him a ſtone? or if he ask a fiſh, will he give him a ſerpent? Chriſt argues from that readineſs which is in men (eſpecially in thoſe who are in relation to us) to give, that God will give much more. If ye then being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more ſhall your Father, which is in Heaven, give good things to them that ask him? If a father will anſwer when a ſon asks him, much more will God: Yea though when a ſon asks, a father will not anſwer; though when a ſon asks, a father mocks, and in ſtead of bread gives him a ſtone; in ſtead of fiſh a ſerpent; though in ſtead of granting, he croſs his ſons petition; yet be confident your Father in Heaven will anſwer; he will not mock; he will not give ſtones for bread, nor a ſerpent for fiſh; he loves to be giving, and to be giving good gifts is his delight.

Further, From theſe words, taken together, we may obſerve,

> That, As it is ſinful, ſo it is extreamly dangerous to mock thoſe who have the ear of God, or acceptance with God in prayer.

Will you uſe him ill that can go and tell God how you have uſed him, and ſhall be ſure to be heard? It is uncomely to mock an enemy, it is more for one friend to mock another; it is yet worſe to mock a friend in his affliction; but it is worſt of all to mock any man living that is praying in faith, and humbling himſelf before God. Such the Pſalmiſt brands, Ye have ſhamed the counſel of the poor, becauſe God is his refuge, (Pſal. 14. 6.) That is, ye have derided godly men, when ye have heard them pray in their affliction. The great Wits and Politicians of the world ſmile at the ſimplicity of thoſe, who make ſuch a buſineſs of prayer in times of diſtreſs: who, when they hear of any troubles ariſing, preſently give this counſel, Come, let us go pray, and ſeek God. This counſel of the poor they ſhame, and think them ſilly fellows who give it. They had rather lay their heads together a plotting, then their hearts together a praying. And if ſuch joyn in counſel to call for prayers in times of trouble, it is not out of an opinion, much leſs out of faith that it will do any good, or prevail any thing, but only to pleaſe the people, or comply with a party: for in truth they ſhame thoſe counſels of the poor, as the pooreſt counſels. Some are aſhamed of prayers; and others will put them to ſhame who pray. The beſt I can do for ſuch as deride prayer, or thoſe who pray, is to pray for them, as Chriſt for his crucifiers, Father forgive them, for they know not what they do. Do you know what you do, when you mock a man that can pray? I believe you do not, therefore I will tell you: you mock that Spirit by which he prayes; you provoke God to whom he prayes; you ſtir up the whole Church againſt you, for whom he prayes; you ſet the Chariots and Horſemen of Iſrael againſt you, you turn Armies againſt you; that is, you turn the prayers of all the people of God againſt you, when you turn againſt prayer. Do you know what it is to provoke ſuch who can complain to God of your provocations? You were better have tales told of you to the greateſt enemy you have in the world, then to have tales told of you unto God, by thoſe, whom he is pleaſed to number among his friends.

Job having thus ſet forth how he had been aſſaulted by men, and how he had retreated to God; now layes down a general propoſition, as a corrollary, or concluſion, drawn from all, The juſt upright man is laughed to ſcorn.

The juſt upright man.] Job ſpeaks ſtill in the third perſon, he doth not ſay, I who am a juſt upright man, am derided, he ſpeaks modeſtly as Paul, 2 Cor. 12. I knew a man. So here, The juſt upright man.

Both words are near a kin in ſignification, the one, at moſt, doth but explain and heighten the other. The juſt upright man, is the man juſtly upright, or uprightly juſt. The latter word is plural in the Original, (as Gen. 6. 9.) noting a man that acts in the exactneſs of uprightneſs, even all manner of uprightneſſes; or a man ſo upright, that he hath the uprightneſs of many men in him; for as we ſay of ſome men, who are egregiouſly diſhoneſt, that when diſhoneſt men are ſcarce, they may go for twain; ſo ſome men are ſo exactly upright, that where upright men are ſcarce (as they are every where) they may be reckoned for two, or many.

But how is this juſt man, who hath the uprightneſs of many men in him, entertained in the world? do not all reverence and adore him? The next words ſhew us his uſage, The juſt upright man

Is laughed to ſcorn.] He was mockt before; now he is laughed to ſcorn. The Original is the ſame, though the ſence be extended; he is not only laughed at, but he is a laughter. The perfect, juſt, is a mockage, ſo Mr. Broughton, the abſtract is put for the concrete. A man that is through in juſtice, through in integrity and purity, this man is made a laughing ſtock, a jeſt, a ſport, he is loaded with diſgrace, while ſome are unburdening themſelves of ſorrow. They reſolve to laugh and be fat, to be merry and ſing care away, they want a theme, a ſubject; none ſo fit as the juſt upright man: Come let's paſs upon him: Thus He is laughed to ſcorn. As if Job had ſaid, It is no great wonder to ſee that I am mocked of my neighbour, for this is according to the wont and old cuſtom of the world, the juſt upright man meets with ſuch dealing every where; it is no new thing which I ſuffer, mine is but a common lot with the beſt of the Saints: If I am laughed to ſcorn, ſo have my betters been.

> Hence note, Firſt, That holineſs is under diſgrace among unholy men.

It is not alwayes a diſparagement to be laughed at; the beſt may be laughed at; The juſt upright man is ſo. Jeremiah was more then ſo, he was a Prophet of the Lord, yet he ſaith, I was a deriſion to all my people, and their ſong all the day, Lam. 3. 14. He was a deriſion, and a deriſion to all his people. Some read thus, I, together with all my people, am a deriſion; as noting, that he and all that adhered to him, or owned him, were derided. So ſpeaks the Prophet Iſaiah typically of Chriſt, Chap. 8. 18. Behold I, and the children which thou haſt given me, are for ſigns and for wonders in Iſrael. Our Tranſlation makes all his people deriders of him: And then all doth not include every individual, but only ſhews the great and general Apoſtacy of that people, from all reſpect to this Prophet, or to his miniſtry. How often doth holy David, that heavenly Singer, complain of thoſe who made helliſh ſongs upon him? And Job complains of this more then once, read Chap. 12. 2, 6. Chap. 21. 3, &c. Paul was one of the ableſt ſpeakers, in the myſteries of the Goſpel, that ever lived: yet when he came to Athens (Acts 17.) they ſay, What will this babler ſay? Solomon gives us a Proverb to this point (Prov. 14.2.) He that walketh in his uprightneſs, feareth the Lord; but he that is perverſe in his wayes, deſpiſeth him. It is a truth, if we underſtand the antecedent to him, to be the Lord, and ſo make the oppoſition thus, He that walketh in his uprightneſs, feareth the Lord; but he that is perverſe in his wayes, deſpiſeth him; that is, deſpiſeth the Lord. But the meaning of the Proverb is this, A man walking in his uprightneſs feareth God, but a perverſe man will deſpiſe him that walketh in his uprightneſs. You are ſo precise, you go ſo gingerly, as if you were paſſing a narrow bridge over a deep precipice; you will not turn aſide, or ſtep awry, not you: thus he is deſpiſed. The Apoſtle reports us a great example of this unholy ſcorn, (Gal. 4. 9.) He that was born after the fleſh, did perſecute him that was born after the ſpirit. Iſhmael perſecuted Iſaac. Moſes tells us the manner how, and the weapon wherewith; Iſhmael did not lift up his hand againſt Iſaac, (as Cain did againſt Abel) but his tongue: He mocked him, (Gen. 21. 9.) Thoſe greateſt differences in Divine Heraldry, of being born after the fleſh, and after the ſpirit, ſhew where the quarrel lay; it was the ſpiritualneſs of Iſaac, which rendred him ſo obnoxious to his carnal brother Iſhmael. Iſaac was born after the ſpirit, and doubtleſs he ſhewed ſome fruits of the Spirit, which Iſhmael did not reliſh, and therefore mocked him. Even ſo it is now (ſaith the Apoſtle there) and we may now ſay, Even ſo it is now: The reaſon of it is that of the Apoſtle (1 Cor. 2. 14.) The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are fooliſhneſs unto him. A rational man laughs at, and ſcorns a fooliſh thing: Now the natural man hath reaſon enough (he may be a man of the moſt ſublimated reaſon) but having no grace he underſtands not the things of the Spirit of God, therefore they are fooliſhneſs unto him: Thoſe things which are fulleſt of Divine wiſdom, are counted moſt fooliſh by him that underſtands them not. As, they are fools who cannot underſtand; ſo ſome wiſe men count many things fooliſh which yet are above their underſtanding. No marvail then, if they uſe them as fooliſh things, if they mock and ſcorn them: No marvail, if they deride thoſe who trouble themſelves with ſuch baubles and toyes as they conceive the things of God to be: No marvail, if they count them a company of hair-brain fellows, who are moſt conſcientious about them. Hence it is that Goſpel ſimplicity is mockt as ſimpleneſs; punctual obedience, as ſcrupulouſneſs; ſorrow for ſin, as dumpiſhneſs; zeal, as madneſs; contempt of the world, as ignorance of the worth of it; ſelf-denial, as a wronging of our ſelves. It is recorded in the life of Nero, that the Chriſtians were deſpiſed, and mockt, as a ſect of ſilly fools, by the wiſe Citizens, and grave Senators of Rome, becauſe they ſeemed to uſe a ſtrange kind of ſuperſtition, or a new Religion, and would be wiſer in their generation then the reſt of the world. Reproach is one of Satans choice engines to batter Sion with; he hath ſcarce ſuch another ſhaft in all his quiver to wound Religion at the heart with. This Lion in the way frights many from entring into, or appearing in the wayes of God. It cauſeth others to apoſtatize, and forſake the wayes of God, after they have entred into, and for a time appeared in them. As Zedekiah durſt not obey the word of the Lord, in rendring himſelf to the Babylonians; ſo many are afraid to obey the word of the Lord, in rendring themſelves up to Sion, leſt ſome finding them there ſhould mock them, Jer. 38. 39.

Chriſtiani ab Ethnicis deriſi ſunt, qui videbantur genus hominũ ſuperſtitionis novæ & maleficæ. Suet. in vita Neron.

Secondly, Obſerve, As holineſs in any degree is ſubject unto ſcorn, ſo they who are moſt holy meet with moſt ſcorn.

The juſt upright man, who would be holy to the height, ſhall have ſcorn to the height. If a man ſerve God (as David danced before the Ark) with all his might, a Michals wit will mock and teem with a prophane jeſt, though ſhe be curſed with barrenneſs all her life after. That child of the fleſh made her fleſh childleſs unto the day of her death, 2 Sam. 6. 23. If a man do (as Chriſt expects) ſome ſingular things, he may quickly be laughed at for ſingularity. Paul, in the higheſt actings of his faith, was accounted mad, 2 Cor. 5. 13. It is poſſible to move in the ordinary courſe and common round of Religion, and to have fair quarter, yea to have reſpect, and be accounted wiſe in the world; but he that will be a juſt upright man, that is, he that ſticks at ſmall matters, and acts the greateſt; he that will not go an hairs breadth from the mind of Chriſt, and will do his whole mind; he that will walk preciſely, accurately, and, as we ſay, in print, this man may ſoon have the honour to be called, a fool in print; at beſt he ſhall be laughed at, let him look for it. All holineſs may come under contempt; but the more holy you are, the more ſubject you are unto contempt: never think to get credit in the world by your holineſs: It is enough that holineſs hath credit with God and good men. The Apoſtle aſſures us (Heb. 11.) That thoſe Worthies of the Jewiſh Church (whoſe names ſparkle like bright ſtars in the firmament of that chapter) obtained a good report, through faith, (ver. 2.) But of whom, or with whom? Did the world think the better of them, or well of them, becauſe of thoſe high and heroical actings of their faith? No, verſ. 36. tells us, they were both ſcourged, and mockt by the world, for all their faith. Theſe gallant men in grace, had a good report with none but gracious men, and the God of grace. If we will now live after their rate by faith, and walk in the uppermoſt regions of Religion, we muſt expect a good report there only, where they found it. Thoſe works of faith, which are moſt above reaſon, ſeem to be without reaſon; and that which is moſt pleaſing unto God, ſeems to have not ſo much as any thing of a man in the eyes of many men: you venture not only liberty, eſtate, and life, but your very diſcretion, if you walk in the cleaneſt paths of wiſdom. Few have holy wiſdom enough to be accounted fools, or ſeriouſneſs enough in the things of God to be laughed at, eſpecially to be laughed to ſcorn. No man knows where his worldly loſſes will end, when once he hath gained Chriſt. It is an experienced truth, which is lent us by a Noble Patriot yet living; That man will but deceive himſelf, who hopes to ſave any thing by his Religion but his ſoul. The juſt upright man is laughed to ſcorn; and the more juſt he is, the more he is laughed at.

VERS. 5, 6.

He that is ready to ſlip with his feet, is as a lamp deſpiſed in the thought of him that is at eaſe.

The tabernacles of robbers proſper, and they that provoke God are ſecure, into whoſe hand God bringeth abundantly.

IN the former context, which contained the preface to this enſuing diſcourſe, Job taxeth the pride and ſelf-conceitedneſs, the ſcorn and contemptuouſneſs of his friends. They thought themſelves the chief of men, and mocked him, as if he had not been ſo much as a man, or not to be numbred among men.

Now he enters upon the Argument it ſelf: And in theſe two verſes layes down two Poſitions in direct oppoſition to what Zophar had aſſerted. He at the ſeventeenth verſe of the eleventh Chapter, deſcribes the ſtate of a godly man, exceeding the light of the noon-day, and of the morning: Thine age ſhall be clearer then the noon-day, and thou ſhalt be as the morning, &c. And at the twentieth verſe he gives ungodly men their doom: The eyes of the wicked ſhall fail; and their hope ſhall be as the giving up of the ghoſt. Both theſe concluſions are contradicted by Job; the former in the fifth verſe, and the latter in the ſixth. In the fifth, He that is ready to ſlip with his feet, is as a lamp deſpiſed: As if he had ſaid, Thou telleſt me, that a godly man ſhall be brighter then the Sun at noon; that his brightneſs ſhall increaſe like the Morning-ſun, more and more unto the perfect day; whereas, alas, I ſee all the light which many a godly man hath, no bigger then a candle, or lamp, and that not like the light of a great candle neither, or of a goodly beautiful lamp, but like the light of ſome poor candle, or of the meaneſt lamp. There is a great difference between a lamp and the Sun. What is the light of the moſt ſhining lamp, to the light of the Sun? but the difference is greater between the Sun and a baſe blinking lamp. I ſee their light no clearer, then that of a deſpiſed lamp, whoſe light thou talkeſt up to the Sun at noon for clearneſs. The holieſt men, if afflicted, do but ſmother in ſtead of ſhining. Again, Thou telleſt me, that the eyes of the wicked ſhall fail, and that their hope ſhall be as the giving up of the ghoſt; but I have often ſeen, and can give thee proof of it, the eyes of ſuch are bleſt, and refreſht with the deſire of their eyes; they ſee what they moſt deſire, proſperity in their dwellings. The tabernacles of robbers proſper, and they that provoke God are ſecure, into whoſe hand God bringeth abundantly. Thus the oppoſition ſtands in theſe two verſes, as they are an anſwer to what Zophar had promiſed as the portion of the righteous, and threatned as the lot of wicked men.

He that is ready.] That is, he that is very near ſlipping. The Hebrew (Nachon) ſignifies to be prepared or diſpoſed, yea to be deſtinated to ſuch a purpoſe, it ſignifies alſo to be fixed and ſetled (Pſal. 108.) O God, my heart is fixed, or, my heart is ready. He that is ready to ſlip, is, as it were, fixed to ſlip, he is ſet in a ſtate wherein he cannot ſtay. All men in the world are in an unſetled eſtate, in a ſlippery condition, but ſome are in a more ſlippery condition then others; They are (as we ſay) next door to deſtruction, within a ſtep of danger, ready to tumble and fall from the pinacle of their proſperity. There are preparations for ruine as well as for riſing. He that is ready

To ſlip with his feet.] There is a twofold ſlipping with the feet ſpoken of in Scripture.

Firſt, There is a ſlipping into ſin; of that David ſpeaks, Pſal. 73. 2. As for me, my feet were almoſt gone, my ſteps had well nigh ſlipt, when I ſaw the proſperity of the wicked; that is, I had almoſt ſinned, I was tempted to hard thoughts of God and of his wayes, as he explains himſelf at the 13th verſe of that Pſalm, ſhewing what the ſlip was, Then ſaid I, verily I have cleanſed my heart in vain, and waſhed my hands in innocency; This was the thing he was ready to fall into, to look upon all his labour, as loſt labour, as labour in vain, which he had beſtowed in attendance upon the duties of holineſs and repentance.

Secondly, Slipping with the feet, is to fall into affliction. When we decay and decline in honour, credit, riches, and poſſeſſions, we may be ſaid to have got a ſlip. 'Tis a proverbial ſpeech, and we find it frequent in Scripture; his foot ſhall ſlip, that is, he ſhall down, his ſtate ſhall change. Moſes deſcribes the Lord thus ſpeaking of his enemies, (Deut. 32. 35.) To me belongeth vengeance and recompence, what then? Their foot ſhall ſlide in due time. Theſe men ſuppoſed themſelves ſetled upon a rock, that they were ſo eſtabliſhed that nothing could remove them; but in due time they ſhall find that they ſtood upon ice, or glaſs, their foot ſhall ſlide, they ſhall fall from their heights and ſeeming holds in due time. So (Pſal. 94. 18.) When I ſaid, my foot ſlippeth, thy mercy, O Lord, held me up, that is, when I gave my ſelf for a loſt man in the world, then the Lord ſupported me, (Jer. 13. 16.) Give glory to the Lord your God, before he cauſe darkneſs, and before your feet ſtumble upon the dark mountains. Dark mountains, are mountains of ſorrow and trouble: to ſtumble upon the dark mountains, is to be ruined among our troubles. To ſtumble, ſlip, fall, run all into the ſame ſenſe. In purſuance of which, the ſtate of wicked men is called a ſlippery ſtate, and the place upon which they ſtand, a ſlippery place, Pſal. 73. 18. David being much troubled at the proſperity of wicked men, and ſo troubled that his ſteps had well nigh ſlipt, ſtayed, or recovered himſelf, by remembring that his enemies did not ſtand faſt. I went into the Sanctuary of God, and there I found that thou didſt ſet them in ſlippery places: and when he found that their eſtate was ſlippery, that they ſhould ſhortly fall, then he kept his ground and ſtood upright. Who can envy or be grieved to ſee a man in an eſtate great and proſperous, wherein yet there is no continuance, or from which he muſt ſhortly fall, and in the fall bruiſe and hurt himſelf more, then he did comfort himſelf in his ſtanding? all the things of this life, eſpecially to wicked men, are ſet in ſlippery places. The world it ſelf is ſlippery, and ſo is all that's in it. The world may be compared to that ſea of glaſs, (Rev. 4. 6.) It is a ſea for the uncertain motions, and tempeſtuouſneſs of it; and it is like a ſea of glaſs for the ſlipperineſs of it. Glaſs you know yields no good footing, neither doth the world to any that would ſtay themſelves upon it. And as the ſliding of our feet ſpeaks the change; ſo the firmneſs of our feet, the eſtabliſhment of our eſtate, Pſal. 121. 3. He will not ſuffer thy foot to be moved; a man cannot go without moving of his feet; and a man cannot ſtand whoſe feet are moved. The foot by a Synechdoche is put for the whole body, and the body for the whole outward eſtate: ſo that, He will not ſuffer thy foot to be moved, is, he will not ſuffer thee, or thine, to be moved or violently caſt down. The power of thine oppoſers ſhall not prevail over thee, for the power of God ſuſtains thee. He will not ſuffer, &c. Many are ſtriking at thy heels, but they cannot ſtrike them up, while God holds thee up. If the will of thine enemies might ſtand, thou ſhouldeſt quickly fall: But God will not ſuffer, &c.

Hence Obſerve, That the beſt earthly eſtate in it ſelf, is a tottering eſtate.

An earthly eſtate is ſo, whoſoever is the maſter of it, unleſs God will be the eſtabliſher of it. This text ſpeaks of the afflictions of the godly; their outward eſtate is full of uncertainties, their feet (treading earth) are ſubject to ſlide. David once thought himſelf ſo ſetled, that he ſhould never fall, In my proſperity I ſaid, I ſhall never be moved: Lord, by thy favour thou haſt made my mountain to ſtand ſtrong, Pſal. 30. 6. But he quickly felt his feet ſliding, and his mountain falling. Worldly men phancy and project to themſelves an everlaſtingneſs in worldly things, Pſal. 49. 11. Babylon boaſts (Revel. 18. 7.) I ſit a Queen; ſhe doth not ſay, I am, but, I ſit a Queen; as if ſhe had ſaid, I am not only in a high place, but in a ſure place, I have a warm and a firm ſeat, I am well ſetled. I ſit a Queen, and am no widow, and ſhall ſee no ſorrow: I feel no ſorrow, neither do I fear any, I ſhall have no changes. Preſumption makes the ſoul believe it foreſees, and therefore propheſies as great things as faith can. The Prophet Zechary (chap. 1. 11.) hath Chriſt repreſented in a viſion, ſending out the Angels, thoſe heavenly ſcouts or intelligencers, to bring him in a report, how things went in the world, Theſe are they (verſ. 10.) whom the Lord hath ſent to walk to and fro through the earth; and what is the report they bring? Behold all the earth ſitteth ſtill, and is at reſt. The earth of wicked men, did not only, as they thought, ſtand faſt, but had ſet themſelves down ſoft and ſure, they thought themſelves ſitting upon down pillows for eaſe and ſoftneſs, and upon rocks of Adamant for ſureneſs and unmoveableneſs; they ſate ſtill and were at reſt, yea doubtleſs they ſaid in their hearts, who ſhall raiſe us up? Both the poſture and the confidence of literal Babylon was like that of myſtical Babylon; yet as old literal Babylon (though ſhe ſate ſtill and cloſe in her ſeat, yet ſlid and fell at laſt) ſo alſo ſhall myſtical Babylon. She that ſaid, I ſhall ſee no ſorrow, ſhall ſee nothing but ſorrow. Now if the feet of that great temporal monarchy did ſlide, and the feet of this ſpiritual monarchy muſt, both which have had as ſure footing as the world with all its wit and ſtrength, policy and power, were, or are able to make, what then may the weaker and more uncompacted parts of the world expect? There is no firm ſtanding upon that which is unfirm; if our foundation be unſure, our footing cannot be ſure: moveable creatures will never put us into an unmoveable condition. The ſoul ſtandeth faſt in Chriſt alone; when we once fix upon him, we are fixed; our feet may ſlip or ſlide, I confeſs, though we are in him, but they ſhall not ſlip or ſlide from him at all for ever. He that is ready to ſlip with his feet.

Is as a lamp deſpiſed.] The words of this text are ſomewhat dark, and there are not a few who make the lamp the darkeſt word in it. One of the Rabbins reades very differently. The word which ſignifies a lamp, he divideth into two words. Lamech prefixed is ſervile (as Grammarians ſpeak) noting as much as for, or becauſe of; and Pid, deſtruction, calamity, or ſorrow: So it is taken, chap. 31. 29. If I have rejoyced at the deſtruction of him that hated me: and then the ſenſe is, as if Job in the third perſon had ſpoken thus, I am as a man deſpiſed in the thoughts of him that is in proſperity, becauſe of my afflictions. But I ſhall not inſiſt upon this tranſlation of the word, which yields us this ſence, though it ſtand entire under the notion of a torch or link, which are carried in the ſtreets to give light, or (as we render) of a lamp, which is a veſſel, filled with oyl, and fitted with wiek, giving light in the houſe. Every one knows what a lamp is; but what is a deſpiſed lamp? a deſpiſed lamp is a lamp whoſe frame is old, worn, batter'd & out of faſhion, or whoſe oyl is conſumed. A lamp or a torch is very deſirable in a dark night, but when Lampas contempta propriè pro re viliſſima & inutili habita proverbialis eſt locutio, quo virum nullius pretii ſignificant Hebræi. Bold.

'tis day, or when the torch is burnt down to the laſt inch, and the lamps oyl is ſpent to the laſt drop, then both are deſpiſed, who cares for either? So that, for a man to be looked upon as a deſpiſed lamp, is a proverbial ſpeech, importing, that he is of no more value then a thing of naught.

A deſpiſed lamp is of the ſame ſignification with a ſmoaking firebrand. When the people of Iſrael were in a great fear, at the invaſion of Rezin and Remaliah's ſon, and the heart of Ahaz the King, moved as theirs, like the trees of the forreſt ſhaken with the wind, the Lord bids the Prophet, ſay unto him, Take heed, and be quiet, fear not, neither be faint-hearted: What? not fear when ſuch mighty enemies are coming againſt us: No ſaith he, fear not, for the two tails of thoſe ſmoaking fire-brands, (Iſa. 7.4.) Ahaz and the Iſraelites lookt upon them, as the flame of a devouring fire that would burn and conſume all: no, ſaith God, they are but as ſmoaking fire-brands, they are but brands ends, they have almoſt conſumed themſelves, they are ſmoaking rather then burning, they will ſoon go out. A ſmoaking brand is a proverb for that which is almoſt ſpent, whoſe violence you need not fear, it can do no great hurt, nor can it ſtand you in any ſtead. As ſmoaking flax in the Goſpel (Matth. 12.20.) notes the loweſt degree of grace, which Chriſt will not quench nor put out; ſo a ſmoaking fire-brand notes the leaſt degree of hurtful power remaining, or malice vexed out; and a ſmothering lamp, the leaſt degree of uſeful remaining power, or comforts wearied out. On the other ſide, a bright burning lamp, or the lighting of a candle, expreſſeth the beginnings of honour and excellency, or our continuance in the enjoyment of them, (Pſal. 18.28.) Thou wilt light my candle, the Lord my God will enlighten my darkneſs. See what an office holy faith puts God unto; David believed that God would come and light his candle; what candle? his meaning is that the Lord would renew his eſtate, and chaſe away the darkneſs which lay upon it. Thou wilt light my candle; thou wilt cauſe me to ſhine clearly and fairly in the world, though I have been a while as a candle extinguiſht, or burnt out. The Prophet ſets the hoped and prayed for reſtauration of Sion under a like metaphor and alluſion (Iſa. 62.1.) For Sions ſake I will not hold my peace, and for Jeruſalems ſake I will not reſt, until the righteouſneſs thereof go forth as brightneſs, and the ſalvation thereof as a lamp that burneth: That is, till the eſtate of the Church be beautiful and glorious. Now as a burning lamp is the emblem of a happy, ſo a dying deſpiſed lamp is the emblem of a miſerable condition. For what's a broken dying lamp worth? what's the ſnuff of a candle worth? or a candle burnt down to the ſocket? of no more worth is many a gracious ſoul in the thoughts of worldly wealthy men, when once he hath loſt the wealth of the world. Riches are to the reputation of man, as oyl to the lamp, they feed and nouriſh it, they cauſe it to ſhine out with a reſplendent brightneſs: but when riches are conſumed, a mans reputation conſumes too, he is a deſpiſed lamp. Thus the intendment of Job is obvious, and may be drawn into this plain obſervation, Tempora ſi fuerint nubila ſolus eris.

That they whoſe eſtates are ſliding and falling are ſubject to deſpiſing. Or more briefly thus, They who are afflicted are uſually ſlighted.

Nil habet infælix paupertas durius in ſe, quam quòd ridiculos homines facit. Juven. Sat. 3. Contemptus eſt ultima adverſæ fortunæ ſarcina.

Affliction ſubjects us to contempt. Chriſt appeared meanly in his outſide, he appeared in an afflicted condition, a man of ſorrows (Iſa. 53.) and what was the effect of this? He was deſpiſed and rejected of men (verſ. 3.) and we hid as it were our faces from him, and we eſteemed him not. Unhappy poverty (ſaith the heathen poet) hath nothing in it more unhappy then this, that it makes men ſcorned and derided. A man emptyed of riches is uſually filled with contempt. They that ſlide ſhould be lifted up, as the law ordered concerning the aſs overburthened, and the oxe fallen into a pit; but when a man is fallen under the burthen of affliction, uſually another burthen, the burthen of contempt is laid upon him, he is deſpiſed: while we are burning lamps ſhining with riches and greatneſs, we are lookt upon and ſought to; but no ſooner under a vail of want, but thrown by and regarded no more.

This holds true alſo in regard of internal gifts and endowments; while a man hath great abilities and quick parts, he is as a lamp full of oyl, or as a burning light: ſo John Baptiſt is deſcribed (Joh. 5.35.) He was a burning and a ſhining light, and ye were willing for a ſeaſon to rejoyce in his light, all liked him very well, yea they even danced about him, as children about a bonfire (ſo much the word bears) for a ſeaſon. The lamp of Johns Miniſtery was alwayes alike, burning and ſhining, his oyl did not waſt. 'Tis ſaid indeed by John himſelf (Joh. 3.30.) I muſt decreaſe; not that John did abate or leſſen his light, but becauſe a greater light coming, his light was obſcured (as the ſtars by the ſun) but not at all diminiſhed: but though Johns light was alwayes alike, yet the peoples delight in him was only for a ſeaſon: Even they whoſe gifts are not at all abated, may yet find a great abatement in the acceptation of their gift; how much more they (which is the caſe of not a few) whoſe gifts are indeed abated? Many are as a burning and ſhining lamp a great while, but at laſt (according to the lamps motto) by ſhining they conſume: Their oyl ſpends, their parts impair, their gifts are deaded, Theſe are deſpiſed lamps. There are lamps ſpoken of, Matth. 25. which Chriſt will deſpiſe. The fooliſh Virgins brought lamps, but they had no oyl in them. Some make a great profeſſion, and would be thought burning and ſhining lights, who yet have no oyl, that is, no truth of grace. Lamps without oyl, Chriſt will deſpiſe: But he will not deſpiſe a lamp becauſe it is not gilded with riches and worldly honour, or becauſe not filled with ſuch or ſuch a meaſure of gifts; that's the way the world goes; let a man have never ſo much oyl of grace and ſincerity in his lamp, never ſo much of God and of Chriſt in his lamp, if he have not golden oyl in his lamp, riches and fulneſs, rare gifts and great parts, he is deſpiſed, and caſt off.

Prælucendo pereo.

There is another reading of the words, take it thus; A man that is as a deſpiſed lamp by thoſe who are at eaſe, is ready to ſlip with his feet, that is, to ſin: the words may bear this tranſlation, without any ſtrain to the text, and with the advantage of another truth, which may be given you in this Obſervation, עשת Candidus, nitidus, per metaphoram, denotat cogitationes lætas, quæ ſunt veluti radii animæ.

Affliction layes us open unto temptation.

As holy David (Pſal. 73.) was ready to ſlip with his feet into ſin, by ſeeing wicked men ſtand ſo faſt in honour while they ſinned: So when a holy and righteous man ſees himſelf diſhonoured, he is ready to ſlip with his feet, to ſin, and ſay, I have cleanſed my heart in vain, and waſhed my hands in innocency. It is a temptation to be deſpiſed; and except the heart be very well ſetled, the feet will ſlide. When a hypocrite is deſpiſed, he not only ſlips in, but falls from that profeſſion he formerly ſeemed to ſtand in; he caſts off the wayes of God, when he ſees himſelf caſt off by men. They who are well rooted and ſound at heart may be ſorely ſhaken; but the rotten hearted, and unſound, are rooted up by the ſtrength of this temptation. The third branch of this verſe, ſhews us by whom the man ready to ſlip is deſpiſed, it is

In the thought of him that is at eaſe.

In the thought.] The word ſignifies alſo clear, or pure, and by a metaphor it notes a thought, becauſe thoughts are as the irradations and beamings forth of the mind. And the word in ſpecial notes joyful or delightful thoughts; that ſence makes the text yet more emphatical. A man compaſſed about with ſorrow is deſpiſed in the joyful, or rather jolly thoughts of him that is at eaſe: a man at eaſe hath pleaſant and merry thoughts, and being full of theſe merry delightful thoughts, he deſpiſeth him who like an expiring lamp, ſits ſobbing and ſmothering in ſad and ſorrowful thoughts.

Of him that is at eaſe.] Quiet, ſetled, and (as the word imports by a trope) inſolent and ſecure; eaſe doth uſually make men not only ſecure, but inſolent. Becauſe they have no changes, therefore they fear not God, Pſal. 55. 19. It is ſeldom that their hearts are changed, whoſe eſtates feel no change. Civil changes occaſion ſpiritual: None are further from a ſpiritual change then they, who fear not God; and they who have no civil changes are very often far from fearing God. Jeruſalem had little eaſe a long time, but ſhe is promiſed it: Thine eyes ſhall ſee Jeruſalem a quiet habitation, or, an habitation at eaſe, (Iſa. 32.20.)

Jeruſalem that now is, hath been an unquiet habitation, full of troubles, toſt up and down; but at laſt God will make her a quiet habitation: Babylon hath been at eaſe a great while, but Jeruſalem ſhall have her turn to be at eaſe too.

Job ſpeaks indefinitely; he is deſpiſed in the thought [Of him that is at eaſe.] Let him be who he will, a good man or a bad man, he is apt to deſpiſe thoſe that are in great affliction. A godly man is not wholly exempt from this, not only unchriſtian, but unmanly paſſion. Job ſpeaks here with an eye to his friends, whom, though he rebukes often very ſharply, as acting very ſinfully, yet he did not judge as wicked. The beſt man at eaſe, may not only be unſenſible of his brethrens afflictions, but, in a degree, ſlight the afflicted: Job ſuppoſes his friends faulty in this; as if he had ſaid, you (my friends) are at eaſe and quiet, all things go well with you; I am a poor ſnuff, a conſumed lamp, and you deſpiſe me, you make nothing of my ordinary ſorrows, and but light of my heavieſt burdens. A good man may fail thus far for a time in his duty towards an afflicted friend, and though he fail not thus far, yet he may come within the verge of this ſin, deſpiſing. For we deſpiſe the afflicted, not only by reproaching them with our words, and vilifying them in our thoughts, but by not laying their afflictions to our hearts, and bearing a part in them, by a brotherly fellow-feeling. When we do not ſuffer with them, we under-reckon them in their ſufferings. Hence obſerve, > Firſt, They who are at eaſe, whoſoever they are, eſpecially wicked men, are apt to deſpiſe thoſe that are in pain.

Few feel any ſmart, till themſelves ſmart, or any want till themſelves are empty, It is bad enough, not to feel the ſmart or want of others; but it is far worſe to inſult over it. Of ſuch, David makes complaint (Pſal. 123.4.) Our ſoul is exceedingly fill'd with the ſcorning of thoſe that are at eaſe, and with the contempt of the proud. And again, The drunkards made ſongs upon me. Wine puts the wit in tune for a prophane jeſt. When David was eating aſhes, and drinking tears, he was deſpiſed by thoſe who did eat the fat, and drink the ſweet; they cried out, Where is now thy God? Pſal.42.3. David profeſſeth concerning his enemies, (Pſal. 35.13.) When they were ſick, my cloathing was ſack-cloth, I humbled my ſoul with faſting, and my prayer returned into my own boſom; that is, ſay ſome, though they got no good by my prayers, yet my own ſoul did: rather thus; I prayed often and much for them, even from my heart; the returning of the prayer, may ſignifie his frequent minding of them; and the boſom, both ſecrecy and affectionateneſs in prayer for them. Laſtly, We may read it thus, Let my prayer return into my boſom, that is, I wiſhed no worſe to them then to my ſelf; let me receive that of God for my portion, which I have deſired may be theirs; either of theſe interpretations ſhew David's ſympathy, even towards his enemies; which the next verſe (14) clears yet more; I behaved my ſelf as though it had been my friend and brother, I bowed down heavily as one that mourneth for his mother. Would you not believe, if theſe enemies of David ſhould hear of any affliſtion befallen him, that they would be in blacks? See how they mourn (as we ſay) in Sack and Sugar (ver. 15, 16.) But in my adverſity they rejoyced, and gathered themſelves together. With hypocritical mockers at feaſts, they gnaſhed upon me with their teeth: When they were a feaſting, they were mocking; abuſive ſpeeches were as ſauce to their meat, and ſugar to their wine; and they would forbear a while to employ their teeth at eating, that they might employ them in reviling; they gnaſhed upon me with their teeth. The teeth ſpeak as well as the tongue; gnaſhing of the teeth hath a loud voice in it. The damned in hell ſhall gnaſh their teeth in ſorrow for pain; the pain which themſelves feel: and the wicked here on earth, do often gnaſh their teeth in joy or ſcorn at the pain which others feel. The Prophet Hoſea deſcribes the tempe of ſuch intemperate feaſters (chap. 7.5.) In the day of our King, the Princes have made him ſick with bottles of wine, that is, in the day of the celebration of the Kings Birth or Coronation, or ſome of thoſe great feaſting feſtivals, the Princes made him drink more then did him good; and what did he then? he was then fit to do evil, and ſo he did; He ſtretched out his hand with ſcorners, that is, ſay ſome, he took up his cups, or put his hand to his cups, as often as vile perſons, ſcorners, uſe to do: or nearer to the point; He ſtretched out his hand, thar is, he acted againſt goodneſs and good men, againſt juſtice and thoſe who are juſt, even as ſcorners and contemners of juſtice, and goodneſs, of juſt and good men, uſe to do, Neither is it any wonder that men at eaſe are thus ready to deſpiſe the beſt of men in a low condition, ſeeing they deſpiſe even the moſt high God. They who ſerve their luſts, cannot ſerve either God or man, but they can deſpiſe both. And their conſciences ſeldom trouble them (whatſoever they do) who have no trouble in their condition. Jeſurun waxed fat; Iſrael was called Jeſurun, either from Joſher, righteouſneſs; becauſe they had received righteous laws, or were called unto righteouſneſs; or from Shor, to look or ſee; becauſe this people ſaw more of the glory of God, then any people under heaven; yet even this Jeſurun, when he waxed fat, that is, rich and great, then he kicked (Deut. 32.15.) Kicking is an act of contempt; and againſt whom did he kick? Moſes tells us; then he forſook God that made him, and lightly eſteemed the rock of his ſalvation. If men at eaſe venture to deſpiſe God, they will not ſtick at men; leaſt of all, at men in their afflictions.

> Secondly, Obſerve, It is very ſinful to deſpiſe thoſe that are in affliction.

Job ſpeaks it, not only by way of Narration, declaring what was done; but by way of conviction, reproving what was done. If it be ſinful not to pity thoſe that are afflicted, then much more to deſpiſe them (Amos 6.4.(They lie upon their beds of Ivory, and ſtretch themſelves upon their couches, &c. but they are not grieved for the affliction of Joſeph. He ſpeaks nothing of their rejoycing at Joſeph's affliction, or that they laughed and paſſed jeſts upon him; no, but they did not grieve, they did not pity him in his affliction; this was their ſin: how ſinful then is theirs, who deſpiſe the afflicted?

There is another reading of this verſe; which I ſhall only name. He that is fit to guide the feet of others, is as a deſpiſed lamp in the thought of the rich, who are at eaſe: As if Job had ſaid, they whoſe holineſs is moſt eminent and exemplary, even leading-men in holineſs, are deſpiſed.

Lucerna cõtempta judicio hominis opulenti, qui idoneus eſt greſſibus dirigendis. Tyg.

Job having thus croſſed Zophar's firſt aſſertion, repreſenting the righteous as a deſpiſed lamp, whom his friend had compared to the morning-light, or noon-day Sun; he now proceeds to refute his ſecond aſſertion, repreſenting the wicked in fulleſt proſperity and higheſt ſecurity; whoſe eyes, his friend had ſaid, ſhould fail, and whoſe hope he had compared to the giving up of the ghoſt.

Verſe 6. The Tabernacles of robbers proſper, and they that provoke God, are ſecure, into whoſe hand God bringeth abundantly.

As if he had ſaid, Friend Zophar, thou haſt affirmed, that the righteous man is as the ſhining light; I ſay, he is but a deſpiſed lamp: thou affirmeſt, that the eyes of the wicked ſhall fail, &c. but I have ſeen the tabernacles of robbers proſper, and they that provoke God, ſecure.

He deſcribes a wicked man, by ſins againſt both Tables. Firſt, He ſins againſt his neighbour by injuſtice; he is a robber, the tabernacles of robbers proſper. Robbery is a ſin againſt the ſecond Table; and robbery is here mentioned by a Synechdoche, for all ſins againſt the ſecond Table. Secondly, He ſins againſt God; he provoketh God, which is the breach of the firſt Table: and provocation of God is here mentioned by a Synechdoche, for all ſins againſt the firſt Table. They that provoke God, are ſecure. Though every ſin againſt our brother, be alſo a ſin againſt God, and we may provoke God, when the ſin is immediately or nextly againſt our brother; yet God, in the ſins of the firſt Table, is chiefly provoked, and thoſe ſins are immediately againſt God; therefore he putteth both inſtances. Take a man that breaks the firſt Table, or the ſecond; take a man that cares not how he wrongs his neighbour, or how he prophanes the name of God, the one proſpers, and the other is ſecure; therefore your poſition is falſe, that the eyes of the wicked ſhall fail, and that their hope ſhall be as the giving up of the ghoſt.

The Tabernacles of robbers proſper.

That is, the dwellings and families, the affairs and undertakings of robbers, they, and all that belong unto them, proſper.

Tabernacula i. e. quæ ad illos pertinent univerſa.

Robbers

Robbers are of two ſorts; there are open and violent robbers, who waſt, ſpoil and deſtroy all that comes near them, and care not who ſees; ſuch are warlike robbers, who bring power to do, what they cannot do by juſtice: Such were thoſe warlike bands (and at them Job aims in this argument) of Caldeans and Sabeans, who ſpoiled Job's eſtate and cattel. The uſual effect of war is waſt and ſpoil: It is ſaid of the Turkiſh wars, That where the Grand Signiors horſe ſets his foot, no more graſs will grow; he makes havock of all. By robbers here, we may underſtand firſt, thoſe boiſterous ſons of Mars, men of blood and violence, who make their will their law, and think they may do whatſoever they have power to do. God himſelf is called El-ſhaddi, the mighty God; he is mighty to ſave, and mighty to deſtroy; he is able to lay all the world waſte when he pleaſeth, as he once did, when the world diſpleaſed him. God can deſtroy as much as he will, but he will not deſtroy as much as he can. Theſe robbers have their name from the ſame root, becauſe they uſe all their power to deſtroy: They have a will to deſtroy as much as they can; but they cannot deſtroy as much as they will: If they could, the whole world muſt fall before them, if it will not fall down unto them.

Secondly, There are ſecret robbers; deceit and fraud commit robbery, as wel as power and force. Some rob while they pretend to ſeek for right; they ſue at law, hoping to pervert juſtice. Some are robb'd, others are murdered by the law. The law is a ſhadow to many lawleſs actions. He is a robber, that takes his neighbours right from him by pretence of law, as well as he that takes his purſe in the high way. Again, others rob ſecretly, while they ſeem only to ſell; they ſteal, while they tell you, you ſhall have a penny-worth for your penny. Ephraim ſaid, ſurely I am become rich, I have found me out ſubſtance; in all my labour they ſhall find none iniquity in me, that were ſin, Hoſ. 12. 8. I have got a great eſtate, and I hope there is none in the world can tax me that I have done them wrong; in all my labour they ſhall find none iniquity: Who? I wrong! I ſteal or rob! not I; I have not ſtained my trading and commerce with any ſuch foul fact; I confeſs, I have uſed ſome ſubtilties and ſleights, I have a little helped my ſelf by art; my calling is a myſtery, and if I deal myſteriouſly in it, for my own advantage, who can blame me for that? I am ſure, none can charge me with any open wrong or robbery; in all my labour they ſhall find none iniquity. And it appears plainly, that I have done no ſuch thing, for that were ſin; that is, puniſhment would follow ſuch iniquity; whereas I thrive and proſper: ſuch ſales they make, who have ſold their conſciences. To clear this ſence, obſerve what the Prophet ſaith in the former verſe; He is a merchant, the balances of deceit are in his hand, he loveth to oppreſs: When a buyer comes to him for a commodity, he weigheth it out fairly in the balance, there's no iniquity; but there is deceit in the balance, or he hath a bag of deceitful weights; that's iniquity. To deceive with weights, is robbery, as well as to take by force; a man may rob with a pair of balances or a meet-wand in his hand, as well as with a ſword or piſtol in his hand. Both or either of theſe robbers may be underſtood here.

Ex eo facilè conſtat me non eſſe peccati reum, quod mihi bene eſt: Nam qui rei ſunt, eos Nemeſis impunè abire non ſinit. Jun. in loc.

Laſtly, Some, in ſtead of robbers, read, rich men. Rich men are called robbers, not as if a man could not be rich without robbery (the bleſſing of God, not their wronging of men, makes many rich; a diligent hand, not a violent nor a fraudulent hand, enriches many) but rich men are called robbers, becauſe many, if not moſt rich men, are (in one of theſe ſences) robbers, or becauſe riches are alwaies a provocation to robbery; yea, and a help to it. For, as in one reſpect, poverty is a temptation to robbery (Prov. 30. 9.) Feed me with food convenient for me, leſt I be poor, and ſteal: as poverty is a temptation unto ſtealing, ſo are riches. He that hath power, hopes he may oppreſs, and go unpuniſhed. Some durſt not oppreſs, but for the ſhelter of a high place. A Pirate taken at ſea, and condemned by Alexander, ſaid unto him, I am condemned for robbing at ſea in a little ſhip, but thou robbeſt at land all the world over, and art applauded: There are more who ſteal by reaſon of their abundance, then by reaſon of their want; what they have, gives them ability to rob for more.

The Tabernacles of robbers,] whether of the one kind, or of the other, [proſper.] The Original ſignifies, not only a thriving, but a peaceable condition: They and their ſtoln goods lie (for a time) as ſafe and quiet as a child in the mothers belly. The word bears ſuch a ſence. Hence obſerve,

Unjuſt men, men of violence, may proſper for a while.

Robbers may enjoy proſperous ſafety, and ſafe proſperity. Having met with texts before, about the proſperity of the wicked, I ſhall not ſtay upon it here; the next clauſe alſo, giving further occaſion to touch upon it again. The ſecurity of thoſe who provoke God, is the ſame with the proſperity of the robbers, and they who rob men, provoke God; yet here to provoke God, is a ſin of another claſſis, yea, of another nature then to rob men; therefore I ſhall diſtinctly open it.

They who provoke God, are ſecure.

Here is the ſecond ſort of proſperous wicked men. They who break the ſecond Table, and wrong their neighbours, proſper; they who break the firſt, and provoke God, are ſecure.

They that provoke God. The word ſignifies, to move, or irritate: it ſignifies, to move corporally and locally (Job 9. 6.) He ſhaketh the earth out of her place. (Iſa. 23. 11.) He ſhook the kingdoms. This word ſerves in both Texts. And hence it is taken for paſſion or inward diſtemper againſt others (2 Kings 19. 28.) Becauſe thy rage againſt me; word for word, becauſe thou waſt moved againſt me: ſuch a one (we ſay) was moved, exceedingly moved when he was in a rage and angry. They may be ſaid to move God, who provoke him, they attempt to put him out of temper.

To provoke God, is more then to ſin againſt God; it is ſinning with an high hand, or with ſuch circumſtances, as exceedingly aggravate ſin. Provocation notes the higheſt act of diſpleaſure, and therefore that ſin which provokes, is one of the higheſt. (Pſal. 106. 7.) They remembred not the multitude of his mercies, but provoked him at the ſea, even the red ſea. The confluence or meeting together of many ſins, makes up a provocation.

Such ſinners of the higheſt ſtature, Job deſcribes in this ſecure eſtate: They who provoke God; As if Job had ſaid, I do not ſpeak of thoſe who ſin lightly, who trade in ſmall ſins, or ſin after the rate and courſe of ordinary men, that theſe only are ſecure; but they who ſin provokingly and boldly; they who ſend defiance to heaven by ſinning, even theſe live ſecurely here on earth, Theſe

Are ſecure.] The hebrew is abſtract and plural; They that provoke God, ſecurities, confidences are to them; as, (Pſal. 1. 1.) we read of the bleſſedneſſes of him that walketh in the Law of God; which we tranſlate, The man is bleſſed: So here; They that provoke God, are ſecure; or, ſecurities are to them that provoke God: They ſin againſt God every way, and they have ſecurity every way; they ſin againſt God as much as they can, and they have as much proſperity as they will. All kind of ſecurity is their portion, who commit all kind of impiety. Hence obſerve,

God ſometimes gives them greateſt worldly peace, who offer him the higheſt provocations.

Such as will not let God reſt, God lets reſt. Wicked men would throw God out of heaven, if they could; but he doth not throw them out of earth, though he can. It is a wonder of patience, that God ſhould let them have any eaſe, who do their utmoſt to weary him.

I ſhall here touch four grounds of this diſpenſation of God toward wicked men in temporals.

Firſt, The Lord gives them ſecurity, that they may have opportunity to ſhew themſelves, and to bring out thoſe curſed treaſures of iniquity ſtored up in their hearts. If luſt were alwayes pinched with poverty, and burdened with affliction; if luſt were alwayes in bands and chains, in priſon and reſtraint, under the revenging hand of God, luſt could not look like it ſelf, nor diſcover what it can do. There had never ſo much of the ſinfulneſs of men appeared, if ſo much of the goodneſs of God had not appeared. As afflictions draw out the graces of the Saints, ſo they keep in, and dead the corruptions of the wicked; many corruptions cannot at all, but in a warm Sun. There are ſome, I confeſs (unbelief, diſcontent, murmuring, &c.) which act eſpecially in cold and froſty ſeaſons; but moſt are ſtopt.

Secondly, 'Tis thus, as to diſcover what men are; ſo to make them more unexcuſable for being what they are. What can they ſay for themſelves, who have received ſo much good from the hand of God, and have requited him with ſo much evil? What plea can they make, who anger God, while he is giving them content? who, while God encompaſſeth them with bleſſings, compaſs him about with their rebellions? Thou art unexcuſable, O man, who makeſt ſuch returns. When Dives in the parable, begs for a drop of water, he is anſwered, Son, remember, that thou in thy life-time haſt had thy good things: Doſt thou call now for an abatement of fire and torment, who didſt multiply thy ſin as faſt as thy comforts were multiplied? Doſt thou call for eaſe, who didſt abuſe all thy eaſe? He hath not a word more to ſay for himſelf, his next ſuit is for his brethren, that they might not come into that place of torment, out of which he had no hope to eſcape. Every mouth will be ſtopt by theſe openings of the hand of God.

Thirdly, Such diſpenſations are both the trial and honour of the Saints. They will not venture into ſinful waies, though others thrive in them. They ſee ſome proſper by robbery, others advanced by flattery; yet they will not ſet up thoſe trades. This is an evidence that they love holineſs for holineſs ſake, and hate wickedneſs (how proſperous ſoever it is) for wickedneſs ſake. Sin is worſe to them then hell. The blackneſs of that coal offends them more then the heat of it.

Laſtly, God doth this, to keep the Saints, while they are in the world (which is their proper way of living here) to a life of faith. If all godly men ſhould proſper and have peace, if all wicked men ſhould ſuffer and be in trouble, if God ſhould leave viſible marks of his diſpleaſure upon every one that provoketh him, and viſible marks of favour upon every one that pleaſeth him, men would live by ſight, and not by faith. In the next life there will be an end of faith, God will then give every one his portion: then no man that provoked God impenitently, ſhall be at eaſe; nor ſhall any ſmart who have ſincerely pleaſed him. Tribulation and anguiſh ſhall be upon every ſoul that ſinneth; and every ſoul that hath taken hold on Chriſt by faith, and walked in love, ſhall have life and immortality: every one ſhall feel what he is, and enjoy what he hath believed. Heaven and hell have all in ſight: faith will have no work in either. Here we muſt alwayes walk by faith, and then moſt, when godly men are caſt down, and when they who provoke God are ſecure.

Into whoſe hand God bringeth abundantly.

As if he had ſaid, They take courage to provoke God through the abundance which he beſtows upon them. Thoſe treaſures of good things which he brings into their hands, cauſe them to bring out thoſe evils which were treaſured up in their hearts. Hence obſerve, > Wicked men make the bleſſings of God fewel for their luſts, and beat their outward comforts into the weapons of an unholy war againſt him.

Their bread and their wine, their gold and their ſilver' their wool and their flax, do but feed and cloath, enrich and ſtrengthen their baſe corruptions, Hoſ. 13.6. According to their paſture, ſo were they filled; they were filled, and their heart was exalted; therefore have they forgotten me. When the heart is lifted up with the creature, it falls from the creator; and that proves an occaſion of forgetting God, which ſhould be a means of remembring him. The ſmalleſt taſte of benefits ought to put us in mind of our Benefactor: But they had put God out of their minds, while he was putting fat morſels into their mouths, and had filled them with his benefits.

Again, In theſe words, Into whoſe hand God bringeth abundantly.

Job ſeems to have a ſpecial reſpect to the Caldeans and Sabeans, into whoſe hands God put all his abundance. Hence obſerve,

> What the worſt of men have, is of Gods giving; he puts into their hands.

Satan puts wickedneſs into their hearts, but it is God who puts power into their hands; God puts the perſons and eſtates of others into their hands. They indeed aſcribe all to their own power and policies. So the King of Babylon (Iſa. 14.) boaſted, By my hand and by my power have I done theſe things; he forgot that he was an inſtrument in the hand of God, or that God gave thoſe nations into his hand. The Lord ſtayes himſelf from bringing afflictions upon his people by this argument, Deut. 32.27. Leſt their adverſaries ſhould ſay, our hand is high, and the Lord hath not done all this: God would not put his people into their hand, becauſe he foreſaw they would not acknowledge it; but ſacrifice unto their net, and burn incenſe unto their drag, as if by them their portion had been fat, and their meat plenteous. Man is unwilling to own any beyond himſelf as the author of his enjoyments. He ſcarce accounts any thing worth the having, unleſs it be of his own bringing in.

Further, We tranſlate, Into whoſe hand God bringeth Abundantly.] The Adverb, Abundantly, is not in the Original; our tranſlators add it in a different letter, as an explication, to ſhew the bounty of God, even to many of them, who moſt deſignedly diſobey him. Such receive not only enough to ſupport their lives, but to ſatisfie their luſts. They have, not only as much as they need, but as much as they deſire. God brings Quails into their hands as well as Manna; yet he puts theſe into their hands, not as love-tokens, but as wrath-tokens. And while the meat is in their mouths, the wrath of God falls, yea abides upon them. It is not alwayes a mercy to receive what we would. God brings abundance into their hands, who never had one drop of favour from his heart.

In cujus manum venire facit deus, ſc. omnia animi ſui vota. Merc.

There is another reading, which gives an intimation of that particular ſin, whereby theſe ſecure ones had provoked God. They were ſuch, as brought God in their hands, that is, falſe worſhippers and Idolaters: Such are well deſcribed by this Periphraſis, they bring God in their hand: we render, into whoſe hand God putteth; theſe render, who put God into their hand. The Jewiſh Doctors are much for this ſence; but it receives little approbation amongſt the Latines, and I will not inſiſt upon it; yet this is a truth, Idolaters put God in their hand: True worſhippers carry God in their hearts; Idolaters carry God in their hands; that is, they have a God of their own making; an Idol, an Image, is the work of their hands. He that worſhippeth according to mans invention, hath his god in his hand. Again, falſe worſhippers may be ſaid to carry god in their hand, becauſe they act as if God were in his power and diſpoſe (or they deſire he ſhould be ſo) not they in his. The Tyrians chained Hercules to a poſt, that he might not depart their countrey. Other of the heathen would adopt or reprobate their gods as they pleaſed; unleſs the gods pleaſed them, they ſhould be no longer gods. This is to bring a god in the hand groſly and openly: they do it cloſely and covertly, who are unwilling to be guided by his hand. They who would bring God down to their wills, make laws for God; and they who make a law for God, act as if they had made God. Every thing muſt receive the rule of its being, where it receives a being.

VERS. 7, 8, 9, 10.

But ask now the beaſts, and they ſhall teach thee; and the fowls of the ayr, and they ſhall tell thee.

Or ſpeak to the earth, and it ſhall teach thee; and the fiſhes of the ſea ſhall declare unto thee.

Who knoweth not in all theſe, that the hand of the Lord hath wrought this?

In whoſe hand is the ſoul of every living thing, and the breath of all mankind.

JOB having checked the pride of his friends, in the four firſt verſes of this Chapter; and oppoſed the opinion of Zophar, in ver. 5, 6. he in this context brings out his proof, which he takes as low as low can be; that ſo he might raiſe his conviction the higher. He deals not with him upon the dictates of humane reaſon, or upon the authority of Scripture; but from the voice of nature, from the common cry and conſent of all the creatures; he convocates a ſynod of beaſts and birds, of ſenſeleſs trees, and mute fiſhes, to give their ſuffrage for the determination of the controverſie betwixt him and his friends.

Diſſeruiſtis ô amici, pleraque de ſapientia & potentia Dei, quòd omnia creat & cõſervat, quaſi hæc mihi incognita eſſent, nam vobis tacentibus docẽt me hæc creatura. Mer.

Ask now the beaſts, and they ſhall tell thee.

As if Job had ſaid, Friend Zophar, thou haſt diſcourſed about the providence of God, as if it were all riddle, or myſtery, which none but learned men could teach, and none but men of extraordinary parts could underſtand: But ſurely thou needeſt not ſpeak ſo high, or in the clouds, foraſmuch as the beaſts of the earth, the fowls of the air, &c. may be our maſters, to teach us the wiſdom and power of God, though man ſhould be ſilent. Theſe have a voice, theſe have tongues like trumpets to proclaim a providence in ordering the world, and that God doth, both in Heaven and earth, whatſoever pleaſeth him: And therefore though the wiſdom of God be higher then heaven, deeper then hell, broader then the ſea, and longer then the earth; though there is a wiſdom of God, and much in all his wiſdom, which no creature can comprehend, yet his wiſdom receives teſtimony from every creature, and we need not make ſuch weary and long journeyes to find out ſo much of it as concerns our inſtruction and ſatisfaction. Ask now the beaſts, and they ſhall teach thee.

Hence obſerve, All creatures have a teaching voice, they read us divinity lectures of Divine Providence.

Non eſt ullū animalculū tam exiguū in quod non plus diſcere poſſimus quā in omnibus ſculptis, pictis aut fuſis ſimulachris. Lavat.

Chriſtians, who have not only reaſon but grace, may learn from creatures which have not ſo much as life or ſenſe. Images made by man are teachers of lyes; but the things which God hath made are teachers of truth. And hence it is that Chriſt himſelf taketh up parables from the meaneſt of the creatures, to inſtruct his hearers. I confeſs there is no knowledge like the knowledge of Chriſt, and of him crucified: The croſs of Chriſt is the chief ſubject of holy ſtudy: As the Apoſtles reſolve aſſures (1 Cor. 2.) I determined to know nothing among you but Chriſt, and him crucified. All knowledge, without the knowledge of Chriſt, is but ignorance: Yet there is a uſefulneſs of knowledge from natural things, as ſubſervient unto ſpiritual. Grace in the heart of a Believer improves common earthly objects to holy ends, as having a ſtamp of Heaven upon them. The world below is as a glaſs, wherein we may ſee the world above. They who cannot read other books, may run and read this: It is the Plowmans Alphabet, the Shepherds Kalender, the Travellers Perſpective, through which he receives the lively ſpecies of infinite excellencies in God. We may meditate from the Sun, to the Stone; from the Cedar, to the Hyſop that groweth on the wall; from the Angel, to the Worm that creepeth on the ground; from all, from the leaſt of theſe we may know much of the great God; and it is the ſcope of the Apoſtle, (Rom. 1.) to convince thoſe who do not. It is reported of one, who had but little or no knowledge at all in Arts and Sciences, or skill in Tongues, and yet was full of knowledge in Heavenly things; that being asked, How he came by that knowledge, having not read books? he ſaid, he had a book which he read continually, which had three great leaves, The Heaven, the Earth, the Waters; the creatures contained in theſe, were as ſo many letters, out of which he ſpelled many myſteries, and comfortable truths. Though the creature is not able to lead us into a ſaving knowledge of the myſteries of Chriſt, yet it gives us ſuch advantages to know God, as will leave us unexcuſable in our ignorance.

Seculum eſt ſpeculum

There are four things which the creatures teach us.

Firſt, They teach us that there is a God; and much of that which God is. (Rom. 1. 20.) The inviſible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead. As faith ſees him that is inviſible, ſo ſenſe ſhews us him that is inviſible: Faith ſees God in himſelf; ſenſe ſhews us God in his works.

Secondly, The whole creation teacheth us ready obedience to the will of God: All creatures obey the law of their creation: Fire and hail, ſnow and vapours, ſtormy wind and tempeſt fulfilling his word, Pſal. 148. 8. And if there be any ſtop at all, or interruption in their obedience, if they do not fully anſwer the end for which they were created, it is either to teſtifie, or to puniſh mans diſobedience.

Thirdly, All creatures teach us dependance upon God. Things without life are expreſſed, as putting forth acts of faith towards the living God. (Hoſ. 2. 21.) The earth cryes to the heavens; and the corn, and the wine, and the oyl cry to the earth; there is an intercrying from the loweſt to the higheſt, till the cry come up to the moſt high God. The whole preſents us with an elegant proſopopeia, All the creatures ſtriving to do them good, to whom God had once betrothed himſelf in mercies, and in loving kindneſs; yet all (in a chain of dependance) confeſſing their inability to do them good, without help from God. The corn, and the wine, and the oyl would feed and refreſh Jezreel; but then the earth muſt give theſe rooting, juyce and nouriſhment: The earth is willing to do her office, and give out her ſtrength to theſe, that theſe might ſtrengthen Jezreel; but then the heavens muſt open their treaſury, and let down their rain, and heat, and influences into the boſom and bowels of the earth, to make it fertile. The heavens are ready to befriend the earth, at her requeſt, with theſe inriching dowries of rain, heat and influence; but the heavens cannot ſend a ſhower, nor the ſun a ray, till God gives commiſſion, and therefore they cry to God to unbind the ſweet influences of Pleiades, and looſe the bands of Orion, that ſo, God commanding the heavens, the heavens may feed the earth, and the earth may feed the corn, the wine, the oyl; and theſe may feed Jezreel, the beloved ones of God. Thus the eyes of all wait, or look up unto God (Pſal. 145. 15.) that they may receive good. Such is the very manner of their ſubſiſtence as declares their dependance: they wait upon God, and ſhall not we?

Fourthly, The whole creation teacheth us, that there is ſomewhat more provided for us then we now enjoy. The Apoſtle makes that uſe of it (Rom. 8. 19.) The earneſt expectation of the creature, waiteth for the manifeſtation of the Sons of God: But how can the creation have an earneſt expectation? Not that the creature is able to put forth ſuch an act directly, for then it muſt have not only life, but reaſon and grace; but there is ſomewhat in the creature, not only like expectation, but like an earneſt expectation; the creature ſtretcheth out (as it were) its head to look for theſe things, and is weary till it receives them: We know (ſaith the Apoſtle, ver. 22.) That the whole creation groaneth and travelleth in pain together until now. Now if the irrational and inanimate creatures, which have been tired out by mans ſin, and made ſubject to vanity, by reaſon of mans vanity, if they live under an expectation, how much more ſhould man himſelf? Shall liveleſs creatures be reſtleſs in their preſent condition, which our ſin hath brought upon them; and ſhall we, who are the ſinners, reſt in that condition? Shall the world groan under a ſtate of vanity, and ſhall we rejoyce, and ſatisfie our ſelves in it? The beaſts of the earth may teach us better; and the fowls of the air may inſtruct us to ſoar to a more heavenly pitch of ſpirit.

Ask now the beaſts.] The word Behemoth, ſignifies all ſorts of beaſts, whether wild, or tame; yet moſt uſually thoſe that are wild and ſavage, ſuch as will not come to hand: to take the word in that ſtrictneſs inlargeth the ſence; as if Job had ſaid, The worſt, the moſt unteachable of the beaſts, will teach thee; thoſe beaſts which have nothing in them but cruelty and fierceneſs, but rage and ravening, will inform thee. The Elephant, in this book, is called Behemoth, which word is in the plural number; as if we ſhould ſay, beaſts; intimating the huge vaſtneſs of the Elephant, that he hath (as it were) many beaſts ſumm'd up in him; here are Behemoth, or beaſts, in that one Beaſt.

Ask the beaſts. * It is uſual in Scripture to turn us to the irrational creatures, when we depart from, or act below reaſon. To put a man to ſchool to the beaſts, implies beaſtly ignorance: Ask now the beaſts, they will convince thee, or ſtop thy mouth. The Prophet brings in the Lord beſpeaking Heaven and earth, (Iſa. 1. 2.) Hear O Heavens, and give ear O earth, I have nouriſhed and brought up children, and they have rebelled againſt me: So Deut. 32. 1. Give ear, O ye Heavens, and I will ſpeak; and hear, O earth, the words of my mouth: Moſes tells the people, that the very Heavens and earth ſhould ſhame them, if they would not hearken. Now as when at any time God appealeth to, or beſpeaketh the Heavens and the earth, and makes them his witneſſes, or hearers, it is to ſhame mans deafneſs and rebellion; as if unreaſonable creatures, were more ready to hear, and receive inſtruction, then man. So when he bids us go, or ſends us to inanimate creatures, to hear them ſpeak, it is to ſhame mans dulneſs; as if they were more ready to give inſtruction, then we to receive and entertain it. Thus Solomon ſends the ſluggard to the Ant; Go to the Ant, thou ſluggard: The little Piſmire ſhall teach thee; there thou ſhalt learn a leſſon of laboriouſneſs, and induſtry, to provide for thy ſelf and thine. The Apoſtle ſaith, He that provideth not for his own houſe, is worſe then an infidel; becauſe the light of nature teacheth a man to provide for his houſe: But we may ſay, he that provideth not for his houſe is worſe then a beaſt, worſe then the creeping things of the earth; becauſe the light of nature teacheth them to do ſo. Go to the Ant, thou ſluggard; conſider her wayes, and be wiſe. Iſa. 1. 3. Go to the Ox, and to the Aſs, O unthankful man; they will teach thee; The Ox knoweth his owner, and the Aſs his maſters crib: As the Prophet ſpeaks to the Heavens and the earth, he deſires them for his hearers, rather then men; ſo he ſends the people to the Ox, and Aſs, that they ſhould be their teachers, when they refuſed to hear him. Ask now the beaſts, they are wiſe and learned enough to direct thee in this point.

They ſhall teach thee.] Theſe words carry a double figure in them; either a Proſopopeia, which is the imitation of a perſon, or the attribution of ſpeech and reaſon, to things ſpeechleſs and irrational: or a Metonimy of the effect; Ask the beaſts, and they ſhall teach thee; that is, ſtudy the beaſts, and this knowledge is attained. Meditation is both the daughter and the mother of wiſdom. They who have no wiſdom cannot meditate, and they who meditate ſhall have more wiſdom. The creatures teach us when we think of them: they teach us, though not formally, yet vertually. They anſwer, and reſolve the queſtion put to them, though not explicitely, to the ear, yet convincingly to the conſcience: Ask now the beaſts, and they ſhall teach thee.

So then, we ask the creatures, when we diligently conſider them, when we ſearch out the perfections, and vertues, which God hath put into, or ſtamped upon them: To ſet our minds thus upon the creature, is to diſcourſe with the creature. The queſtions which man asks of a beaſt, are only his own meditations. Again, the creatures teach us, when we in meditation make out collections, and draw down a demonſtration of the Power, Wiſdom, and Goodneſs of God, in making them; or of the frailty of man, in needing them; ſuch concluſions, and inferences, are the anſwers, and teachings of the creature. It is an excellent paſſage of Auguſtine, to this purpoſe, in the tenth book of his Confeſſions, I put the queſtion, ſaith he, to the earth, and to the ſea, and to the reſt of the creatures, and they gave me an anſwer. Now if you would know what my queſtion was; it was the deep intention, and conſideration, I had in my heart about the creatures? And would you know what their anſwer was? Their anſwer was that which I collected in my meditations from their ſeveral natures, qualities, and properties. So then to ask the beaſts, and to be taught of the beaſts, is only in a ſerious, and holy manner, to let out our hearts in meditation; and every true concluſion, derived from ſuch a meditation, is the voice, and anſwer, of the creature.

Hujuſmodi interrogatio eſt mentis operatio quâ creaturarum perfectiones intuemur ac meditamur. Tunc homo creaturas interrogat quando eas diligenter conſiderat; ſed tunc interrogatæ reſpondent cum homo perſpicit quod tanta ordinatio eſſe non poſſit niſi ab aliqua ſuperiore ſapientia diſpenſante. Aquin.

There is one thing further obſervable in theſe words, Ask the beaſts, and they ſhall teach thee. The Original is in the ſingular number; Ask the beaſts, himſelf ſhall teach thee. It is uſual in Scripture to put a plural and a ſingular thus together; though it croſs Grammar, yet it improves Divinity. Eccleſ. 10. 1. Dead flies cauſe the ointment of the Apothecary to ſtink: The Hebrew Noun is plural, and the Verb of the ſingular number: The reaſon of this kind of ſpeaking, is, to ſhew that any one of the number, about which we ſpeak, will produce the effect of which we ſpeak: And ſo when he ſaith, Dead flies will corrupt, it notes, that any one, or every particular dead fly among flies, is enough to corrupt the moſt precious ointment. So when he ſaith, The beaſts will teach, putting beaſts in the plural number to a Verb of the ſingular, it notes, that every particular beaſt, or every ſingle creature, is able to give inſtruction. And ſo the ſence is ſtronger, Thou ſhalt not only be taught and inſtructed from the whole congregation and aſſembly of the creatures, or by laying them all together in thy thoughts, but each one ſhall teach thee, every one by himſelf ſhall teach thee; the leaſt as well as the greateſt; the Mouſe as well as the Elephant, or the Lyon; the Shrimp as well as Leviathan; the Hyſop on the wall, as well as the Cedar in Lebanon; the Graſs of the field, as well as the Oaks of Baſhan. So many creatures as are in the world, ſo many preachers there are in the world, of the power and goodneſs of God.

Docebit te, i.e. unaquæque ex beſtiis docebit te, cum nomini plurali adjungitur verbū ſingularis numeri diſtributio fit eorum quæ nomine continentur. Muſcæ perdit, i. e. quælibet perdere ſufficit.

And the fowls of the air, and they ſhall tell thee.

This clauſe is of the ſame ſence with the former. The word ſignifies any thing that flies in the air, all winged creatures, both the greater and the leſſer: The Eagle, or the Sparrow; the Oſtrich, or the Fly: Thou haſt ſwarms of Teachers. All theſe can tell thee: Yea not only ſo, But

עוף Generali ſuo ambitu quicquid per aërem volitat includit. Hinc עפעפים palpebræ à celeri motu

Verſe 8. Speak to the earth, and it ſhall teach thee.

The word imports a ſilent enquiry, or a ſtudious meditation upon, or about a thing: ſpeak to it in thy heart and thoughts, or in thy deepeſt meditations, as was explained before. There is a different tranſlation. Some render, not by a Verb, but by a Noun, and repeating the Verb, Ask, out of the former direction, they give it thus, Ask every ſlip, or ſprig, which grows in the earth, and it ſhall teach thee: For the word Shuah ſignifies a branch, or a ſprig, a ſlip, or a plant, any thing that grows out of the earth. And ſo the ſence is carried thus, Ask of the beaſt of the earth, ask of the fowls of the air; yea, ask of every ſprig, or ſlip, or plant of the earth, and that ſhall teach thee alſo. So that as Job before ſent him to the beaſts and fowls, ſo now he ſends him to trees and plants, that they alſo may be his teachers. And yet he hath not done, here are more Maſters.

שיח; Notat quicquid è corde vel ore emanat, meditationes, colloquia, preces, nec non apud ſe meditationes aliosq; actus mentales. Bold. Virgultum terræ. Pagn. שיח Significat quemlibet fruticem arbuſculum aut herbam. Gen. 2. 5.

The fiſhes of the ſea ſhall declare unto thee.

The ſilence of fiſhes is grown to a proverb, As mute as a fiſh. How then can a fiſh declare? Fiſhes are ſo far from forming up words and ſentences, that they cannot make a ſound, or the rudeſt noiſe; yet they have a ſpeech, though they have no voice. The Scholars of Pythagoras were enjoyned ſilence for five or two years; here we have a ſort of Tutors who are alwayes ſilent. Theſe ſay not much, while they ſay little; but they ſay much, though they can ſay nothing. A fiſh is expreſſed by a word in the Hebrew, which ſignifies to multiply; and to encreaſe as a fiſh is an Hebraiſm for a great increaſe (Gen. 48. 16.) The very multitude and increaſe of fiſhes, their huge ſhoals, and innumerable numbers, declare much to us.

דגה. Piſcis. דג Multiplicatus, inſtar piſcium auctus fuit.

I might inſiſt largely upon theſe Teachers, and ſhew you how every creature hath a proper leſſon for us, and what thoſe leſſons are. I will give but a touch.

If you ask the beaſts, They will teach you to know and own God, from whom you receive ſo much good, ſo many benefits. That leſſon the Prophet call's the Jews to learn from the Ox and the Aſs, Iſa. 1. 3. The Ox knoweth his owner, and the Aſs his maſter's crib, but Iſrael doth not know.

Go to the fowls of the air, and they will inſtruct you. Firſt, That God hath a care of his people, becauſe he hath a care of them who are ſo much inferiour to his people. Thus Chriſt ſupports our faith, and ſcatters diſtracting cares (Mat. 6. 26.) Behold the fowls of the air, for they ſow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns, yet your heavenly father feedeth them; are ye not much better then they? And as he takes care to feed them, ſo to preſerve them; A Sparrow falls not to the ground without the will of your Father, ye are of more value then many ſparrows; therefore be not afraid at the approach of fear. Will not God take care of you, who takes care of Sparrows? Secondly, The obſervation which the fowls of the air make of their ſeveral ſeaſons, teach us to keep time and ſeaſon. The Prophet makes that uſe (Jer. 8. 7.) The Stork in the Heaven knoweth her appointed times; and the Turtle, and the Crane, and the Swallow, obſerve the time of their coming; but my people know not the judgment of the Lord. When we ſee the Swallow coming in the Spring, and going away towards Winter; when we obſerve the Turtle and the Crane timing it ſo exactly, do they not teach us to know the time of judgment, and the time of mercy; when it is Winter, and when it is Spring; when it is warm, and when it is cold?

Look upon the earth, and learn, Firſt, The power of God bearing it up: It is marvellous, even miraculous, that the earth ſhould hang upon nothing, that it ſhould hang in the thin air; that it ſhould hang there, where a tennis-ball, yea where a feather will not ſtay without ſupport. The earth hath nothing but the decree and power of God to bear it up. How doth this teach us the power of God, and the infinite ſtrength of his decree! Secondly, The earth teacheth us what we are, and what we muſt be, Duſt thou art, and to duſt thou ſhalt return. Ask the earth, and that will teach thee that thou art a brittle creature: Ask the graſs of the earth, and that will teach thee that thou art a withering creature: Iſa. 40. 6. The voice ſaid, Cry; and he ſaid, what ſhall I cry? All fleſh is graſs, and all the goodlineſs thereof as the flower of the field. Thirdly, The earth calls us to fruitfulneſs, when we are plowed, manured and watered: and that they, who often drinking in the rain of Heavenly doctrine bring not forth fruit, are near unto curſing, Heb. 6. Laſtly, All the creatures teach us that ſpecial point which Job is upon, namely, That the tabernacles of robbers proſper.

For Job having ſaid in the former verſe, that the feet of the godly ſlide, or that they are trampled under foot, that robbers are rich, and oppreſſors proſper, he bids Zophar Ask the beaſts, the fowls of the air, and the fiſhes of the ſea, whether it be not ſo or no. As if he had ſaid, Even beaſts and birds teach us, that it is thus among men: For are not the moſt innocent and harmleſs beaſts torn, vexed and devoured by the more cruel and ſtronger beaſts. There is no deſert in thoſe, why they are advanced, and proſper: Neither is there any fault at all in thoſe, why they are deſtroyed, and periſh. The fowls of the air teach this alſo; do you not ſee the greater preying upon the leſs: is not the innocent Dove grip't in the talons of the ravening Vulture; and the poor Partridge by the hauk? The ſea gives us the ſame inſtruction, for there alſo the Sharks and Whales, &c. ſwallow whole ſhoals of ſmaller fiſhes. As there are beaſt-devouring beaſts, and fiſh-eating fiſhes; ſo there are men-devouring, men-eating men: There are civil Canibals in every Kingdom of the world, whoſe Tabernacles are glutted with proſperity.

Again, The beaſts and birds, &c. will tell you that the tabernacles of robbers proſper, if you put them this other queſtion, In whoſe poſſeſſion are moſt of you? Who is your maſter? Come to the flocks of ſheep, and to the herds of cattel, and ask, whoſe are ye? They will anſwer, ſuch a wicked man is our maſter, a robber is our owner, an oppreſſour is Lord of all theſe flocks and herds. Ask the fowls of the air, and the fiſhes of the ſea, to whoſe tables are ye moſt ordinarily ſerved up? who feeds upon you? The fiſhes will ſay, We are carried up to the great mens tables, the robbers and oppreſſors of the earth feed upon us, we ſcarce ever come to the poor mans trencher, and but ſeldom (comparatively) to the good mans trencher; the greateſt ſtore of us is ſpent out upon the wicked, the tyrants of the earth glut themſelves with us, we ſatisfie the luſts, fat the backs, and fill the bellies of oppreſſors. Ask the earth for whom it ſends forth corn, and wine, and oyl, for whom ſhe gives out her treaſures of gold and ſilver, together with her rich materials for ornament and cloathing. The earth will tell you, moſt of my delicates are ſwallowed down by robbers; my ſilks and ſcarlets, my gems and precious ſtones, cloath and adorn the backs of robbers: Thus paſs through every ſpecies of the creation, and all return this anſwer to the queſtion in hand, The tabernacles of robbers proſper. Thus your thoughts may travel through all the creatures, and receive particular inſtruction from them. Zophar ſaid, Chap. 11. 7. Canſt thou by ſearching find out God? Yea, ſaith Job, I can find him almoſt without ſearching, every thing I ſee ſhews me God. I need not go to the heights of Heaven, or the depths of the Sea, as if the knowledge of God were not to be had within the bounds of the viſible creature: whereas indeed every created form, informs us of the Creator; and every object we ſee, is as a teacher to the ear. The Apoſtle James gives a Caution (Chap. 1. 3.) My brethren, be not many maſters: Which we may underſtand either thus, be not Magiſterial and cenſorious (as if every one of you had many Maſters in him) towards your brethren: or thus, let not every one take upon him to be a teacher, or (as ſome) to be a whole univerſity of Teachers. For as it is ſaid, that there are more Phyſitians then ſick perſons: Every man almoſt will venture to preſcribe a Medicine. So we may ſay, there are more Maſters then ſcholars: There are more who think themſelves able to teach, then who are convinced that they have need to learn. Thus the Apoſtle would not have us to be many Maſters: Yet we ſee God hath provided us many Maſters, even as many as there be beaſts in the field, or birds in the air, as many as there be trees and graſs growing upon the earth, and fiſhes moving in the ſea.

Videbatur Zophar ſapientiam extra fines rerum aſpectabilium coſlocaſſe. Merc.

Hence take theſe two Corollaries.

Firſt, We who have had ſo many Teachers, that we might know God, and glorifie him as God, ſhall have a many condemners if we do not.

Secondly, If they ſhall be without excuſe, who know not God by the teaching of the creatures, how inexcuſable will they be, who know him not in Chriſt, who is taught and preached every day?

But the points of holy learning which Job eſpecially intendeth, are expreſſed in the two next verſes.

Verſe 9. Who knoweth not in all theſe, that the hand of the Lord hath wrought this? &c.

As if he had ſaid, Though there are manifold leſſons to be learned from the beaſts, and from the fowls, and from the fiſhes, yet I call you in a ſpecial manner to learn that the hand of the Lord hath wrought this, and that all theſe things are in the hand of the Lord.

There are two points in theſe two verſes, which Job calls us to learn.

Firſt, The work of creation, ver. 9.

Secondly, The work of preſervation, or providence, verſ. 10.

The work of creation, Who knoweth not in all theſe, that the hand of the Lord hath wrought this? And if the hand of the Lord hath wrought them all, then the hand of the Lord doth diſpoſe them all too; which is the Argument he was upon.

Who knoweth not.] That is, every one knoweth this; or every one may know from the works of the Lord, that the hand of the Lord hath wrought them.

That the hand of the Lord.] Why doth he ſay, The hand of the Lord? Was it not the word of the Lord that made the world? The Lord ſaid, Let there be light, and let there be earth, and let there be ſeas, and let there be graſs; and all things were ſo; how doth he ſay here, the hand of the Lord hath wrought them? I anſwer, the hand of the Lord, is no more then the word of the Lord; the hand of the Lord is the power of the Lord; and the word of the Lord is the power of the Lord too: Only, here he ſaith, that the hand of the Lord made them, to note, that the Lord made them immediately. The hand of the Lord put to a work, noteth his immediate work. Who knows not that the hand of the Lord hath wrought theſe things? That is, that the Lord, without any help or aſſiſtance, hath ſet up this mighty frame of Heaven and earth; that he alone hath provided and prepared all thoſe veſſels, which furniſh it for the uſe and accommodation of the ſons of men.

Who knoweth not in all theſe, &c.

That is, in one as well as in another. The loweſt as well as the higheſt works of God, ſhew that God wrought them. Some pieces and parts of the world, are more excellent then the reſt, but there is enough in any one of them to ſpeak out who made it.

Hence note, Firſt, God alone made the world.

Creation had but one hand in it. The hand of the Lord hath wrought. Every work of providence hath the hand of God in it, and ſome the hand of God only. But in creation the ſupream cauſe was all the cauſe, that knows nothing either of ſubordinate cauſes, or of inſtrumental. Some have asked, with what tools, or inſtruments, did God make the Heavens and the earth? with what ladders and ſcaffolds did he build ſo many ſtories, and after ſet up the roof over all? Job anſwers theſe fools, Who knoweth not that the hand of the Lord hath wrought them?

Secondly, The Lord hath ſo made all, that the very things which he hath made, proclaim that he made them.

Who knoweth not in all theſe? or, from all theſe. Many works of providence are ſo done, that man cannot ſo much as be ſuſpected to have done them. God doth like God: He needs not ſubſcribe his name to his work; for that his Name is near, his wonderous works declare. It muſt be ſaid by way of affirmation, This hath God wrought; as well as by admiration, What hath God wrought! Now, if providence (wherein uſually man acts with God) act ſo much above man, that the whole is aſcribed to God: how much more doth creation declare it ſelf to be the ſole work of God, Who knoweth not in all theſe, that the hand of the Lord hath made them?

Naturalis Theologia. Socinus negat naturaliter ex animadversâ mundi machinâ Dei exiſtentiam & providentiam colligi, ſc. ut abſurdum non ſit eſſe mundum & non eſſe Deum & providentiam, nempe quia præſtãtiſſimi Philoſophi non agnoverant. Coc.

But it may be objected, To underſtand that the world was made, is the work of faith; How then do we know it from all theſe? Or how do the creatures demonſtrate their creation? Saith not the Apoſtle, Heb. 11.3. Through faith we underſtand that the worlds were framed by the word of God; ſo that things which are ſeen, were not made of things which do appear? I anſwer, Faith gives the higheſt underſtanding of theſe things; and there is ſomewhat of theſe things which we cannot underſtand but by Faith; yet the very creature doth demonſtrate a creation. A Chriſtian knows in a higher way then a Philoſopher; yet a Philoſopher may know that by reaſon, which a Chriſtian knows by Faith. A Believer is in a higher form, and hath a higher light then a Philoſopher, though both learn the ſame leſſon.

And this doth more convince, not only Atheiſts, who deny that there is a God, Who hath wrought all theſe: but thoſe alſo who improve not the works of God: for though we give God the greateſt glory when we underſtand by believing, yet we may underſtand this principle by reaſoning. The creature well viewed by a natural eye, tells the underſtanding, that a Divine power once created, and ſtill ordereth all theſe things.

Hence thirdly obſerve, in reference both to creation and providence,

That the Lord doth not only the greater things, but the leſſer.

Pſal. 145.6. Whatſoever is in Heaven, earth, or ſea, he hath wrought them all. When the Primitive Chriſtians were under the heat of perſecution, they lived upon God under this notion, Acts 4. 24. Thou art God which haſt made heaven, and earth, and the ſea, and all that in them is: For hence it follows, that he takes care of all. Providence is as large as creation. It was an ancient hereſie, that, but ſome of the creatures, or the beſt of them, were made by God, and that, the more troubleſome, and worſt, were made by the Devil. To which purpoſe that ſtory is famous, reported by Auſtin, in his firſt Tractate upon John, concerning a Manichee, that argued with an Orthodox Chriſtian againſt the Creation; who having perſwaded him, that God never troubled himſelf to make little Flyes, upon that conceſſion cauſed him to confeſs, that he made not the Bee, the Locuſt, and ſmaller Birds; having got this advantage, he leaves not his Sophiſtry, till he forced him to confeſs, that God made neither the Ox, nor the Elephant, no, nor man himſelf. The truth is, if we do not give God glory in making the leaſt of the creatures, we ſhall quickly be drawn to deny him glory in making the greateſt. As it is in ſinning, if we make not conſcience of committing the leaſt ſin (I do not ſay, that if we commit a little ſin, we ſhall preſently commit a great one) but if we commit it out of this opinion, that it is no great matter, if once we admit of a little ſin upon this ground, it will quickly bring the Conſcience to ſwallow the greateſt. 'Tis ſo about the works of God; if we deny his power in the work of creation, or his wiſdom in the work of providence, about the leaſt creature, we ſhall quickly grow to a kind of Atheiſm, and deny, or at leaſt not hold forth with power the work of God in any of the creatures, or that His hand hath wrought them all.

Auguſt. Tract. 1. in Joh. Cum orthodoxus muſcam dixiſſet à diabolo factam, compulit fateri eum Manichæus ab eodem factã apẽ, locuſtã, lacertã, avẽ, bovem, elephantem, hominem.

Verſe 10. In whoſe hand is the ſoul of every living thing, and the breath of all mankind.

The hand which made all, keeps all that he hath made in his hand. The former verſe holds out the creation, and this the conſervation of the world.

In whoſe hand.] The hand is put for power; and to be in the hand of God, is to be in the power of God.

Hence obſerve, The ſame power that made the world, preſerveth the world.

Si creaturæ à deo factæ ſunt manifeſtum eſt, quod in dei poteſtate ſunt ſicut artificiata in manu artificis. Aquin.

When men have done their work, they put it out of their hands; we uſually ſay, ſuch a thing is in, or under, my hand; that is, it is a doing, I am at work upon it; but as ſoon as we have done our work, we ſay, ſuch a thing is out of my hand; that is, I have done with it: Man cannot hold his work alwayes in his hand; but God doth: And there is a neceſſity that he ſhould. The world would preſently run out of its being, if it were not upheld by the ſame hand which at firſt gave it a being: When man ſinned, the world had ruined, if Chriſt (by whom all things were made, John 1.) had not ſtept in, to be the ſtay and prop of it, By him all things conſiſt, Col. 1. 17. He upholdeth all things by the word of his power, Heb. 1.9. He is that powerful word which made all things, and he upholdeth all things by the word of his power; we owe the ſtanding of the world as much to Chriſt, as we do the creation of it. In whoſe hand

Is the ſoul of every living thing.] The Hebrew word ſignifies, not only the ſoul of man, but of any creature that breatheth, or the breathing of any creature. And it is put for the whole compoſitum, the body and the life. Every living thing died: So Moſes ſpeaks of the Flood. God put their lives out of his hand into the hand of the mercileſs waters: Yea, not only men, and beaſts, and birds, &c. but trees and plants, the graſs in the field, and the flowers in your gardens, live by the power of God: the trees in Winter are as dead, their leaves fall off, and their fruit is gathered, the fields are uncloathed and naked: but when the Spring comes, graſs comes, trees bud and bring forth fruit again; ſhall we aſcribe this to the Sun? ſhall we go no further then the ſeaſon for this? and ſay, the Spring is come, and therefore the graſs comes? No, In his hand is the ſoul of every living thing: There is a life in the graſs, and it is of God that the graſs grows, that the trees bloſſom and bring forth. In his hand is the ſoul

Of every living thing.] Sometimes the word is reſtrained to man, Gen. 2. Eve, the firſt Woman, was ſo called, becauſe ſhe was the Mother of all living, yet ſhe was the Mother only of living man. Some take it ſo here, implying that the Lord, who made all ſouls, hath the ſoul of man eſpecially in his hand. But we need not reſtrain it thus; ſeeing the laſt clauſe of the verſe ſpeaks expreſly of the care of God towards man: In whoſe hand is the ſoul of every living thing,

And the breath of all mankind.] Or, The ſpirit of all mans fleſh: So Mr. Broughton reads it: Breath and ſpirit are often uſed promiſcuouſly; and Ruah ſignifies both.

Here 'tis taken for the breath, or breathing of man, which is but an act of life. In whoſe hand is the breath of all mankind. Daniel makes report to Belſhazzar (Dan. 5. 23.) what God had done for his father Nebuchadnezzar, in what great glory he had ſet him up, &c. and then reproves him, The God, in whoſe hand thy breath is, and whoſe are all thy wayes, haſt thou not glorified. The God, in whoſe hand thy breath is. Belſhazzar was a great Prince, the greateſt Monarch at that time upon the earth, he commanded all, he had the breath of many in his hand, as Daniel there ſpeaks of his father, whom he would he ſlew, and whom he would he kept alive, ſuch was the power of that great Monarch; but then he minds him, that he was not Lord of his own life; Thy breath is in the hand of God; if God will, he can keep thee alive; and if God will, he can take away thy life. It is true of God in the fulleſt extent. Whom he will he ſlayes, and whom he will he keeps alive.

It is the comfort of our lives, that our lives are in the hand of God. That which is in his hand, is in a ſafe hand. It is not in the power of all the world to take away one life which God will keep. As the ſafety of the ſoul, in the ſtate of grace, lyes in this, that it is in the hand of God, as Chriſt argues in the tenth of John, Ye are in my Fathers hand; that is, your ſpiritual eſtate is in his hand, and my Father, which gave you unto me, is greater then all, and no man is able to pluck you out of my Fathers hand. Here is the ſafety of the Saints; and that's the priviledge we have under the Covenant of Grace by Chriſt, beyond what we had under the Covenant of works in Adam. Our ſpiritual life was then in our own hand; now it is in the hand of God. Here alſo in its proportion lyes the ſafety of our natural life; it is in the hand of God; God hath not only taken the life of our ſouls into his own hand, but the life of our bodies too; he diſpoſeth of lives as he pleaſeth; he can ſay to one in a day of common calamity, Thou ſhalt have thy life for a prey; and to another, Thou ſhalt dye by the ſword, &c. What can we ſay in theſe times of death, when the breath hath gone out of many thouſands; why hath it not gone out of our bodies? No other account can be given but this, Our breath is in the hand of God; were it not ſo, the breath of many of us had not been in our bodies at this time.

Further, It ſhould teach us to honour that God, in whoſe hand our breath is. Daniel checked Belſhazzar, becauſe he failed in this, The God in whoſe hand thy breath is, haſt thou not honoured. How careful are we to pleaſe thoſe who have our eſtates in their hands? We reſpect him alſo very much, in whoſe hand our health is: But if our life be in the hand of another (as ſometimes it is) how do we ſtudy and ſtrive to comply with the commands, yea with the very humours of ſuch a man? Shall we not honour God, in whoſe hand our breath is?

Laſtly, If our breath be in the hand of God, it teacheth us, that the time of our death, and of the going forth of our breath, is ſet down and diſpoſed by God. Sometimes a ſickneſs indangers our life, and threatens to ſtop our breath preſently; but God ſaith, no, it ſhall not be. Sometimes outward violence invades us; but as David comforts himſelf, Our times are in Gods hand: And as none can take away life, if He will continue it; ſo none can continue life, if He will take it away. If God ſend for our breath (how unwilling ſoever we are to part with it) it muſt come. One of the Ancients beſpeaks a wicked man thus, Thou haſt thy breath in thy noſtrils, and thou art unwilling to let it go; but if God ſpeak the word, thy breath will go. Again (ſaith he) When God ſhall reunite theſe two, thy body and thy breath, and caſt both into hell together, he will hold thy breath in thy body whether thou wilt or no: Here is a double puniſhment; he will fetch thy breath out of thy body, when thou wouldſt keep it; and he will keep thy breath in thy body, when thou wouldſt be ſeparated from it. Thou ſhalt dye when thou wouldſt live; and thou ſhalt live when thou wooeſt death, and deſireſt to be diſſolved, yea to be annihilated.

This alſo adminiſters comfort to the Saints, that as when their breath goes forth, Gods hand leads it forth; ſo that hand of God will preſerve their breath for ever. He gives them eternal life, and that is in his hand; He can lengthen out life to all eternity, in whoſe hand life is. He that gives us life of a ſpan-long, can give us life eternity-long.

Thus we have ſeen Job's firſt Argument from the creatures, all which acknowledge God their Maker, God their Diſpoſer, and Preſerver; they have their being, and their well being, together with the changes and continuance of both from him.

VERS. 11, 12, 13, 14.

Doth not the ear try words? and the mouth taſt his meat?
With the ancient is wiſdom, and in length of dayes, underſtanding.
With him is wiſdom and ſtrength; he hath counſel and underſtanding.
Behold he breaketh down, and it cannot be built again: he ſhutteth up a man, and there can be no opening.

THe knot of connection, which ties theſe words to the former, lyes ſo cloſe, that many have been troubled to find it out.

First, It is conceived by ſome, that Job having in the former verſes, the ſeventh and eighth, called his friends to read the Book of Nature; Ask now the beaſts, and they ſhall teach thee, &c. Turn over all the leaves of that great Volume, the World, and they will be inſtruction to thee. He now purſues the ſame point, and tells them, that it would not be unprofitable for them, or loſt labour, if they, in purſuance of his counſel, ſhould ſet upon this ſtudy; For the ear tryeth words, and the mouth taſteth his meat; that is, every ſenſe will give them information about its proper objects, and ſhew the peculiar end of its inſtitution: he inſtanceth in two ſenſes, Hearing and Taſting, by a Synechdoche, for all the reſt; as if he had ſaid, Each power and faculty with which the nature of man is endowed, will be a contributor towards the attainment of this knowledge; and declare that the wiſdom and power of God is eminent and conſpicuous in the creature. And becauſe old men have heard many words, and have taſted many meats; that is, have had long experience of things; therefore he addeth in the twelfth verſe, With the ancient is wiſdom, and in length of dayes, underſtanding; they who have run the longeſt courſe in the world, and have ſeen the greateſt variety of changes, muſt needs know moſt of God, becauſe every change holds forth ſomewhat of God.

Agitur de creatoris cognitione percipienda ex creaturis experimento rerum ſenſibilium, quæ per illos duos ſenſus, guſtum videlicet & auditum, ſignificantur. Aquin. placet etiã Sanct.

Secondly, The connection appears to others thus; as if Job would here again meet with that opinion, which his friends (Zophar eſpecially) had more then once inſinuated, that the doctrine which they were upon, and had taught him, was a deep myſtery, and very hard to be underſtood, that it was (which ſome now glory in, Theologia cryptica) Divinity in the myſtery. No, ſaith he, there is no ſuch matter; the point you are upon is very plain and eaſie; you need not make ſo many preambles, as if it were all under a vail, or within a curtain of ſecrecy (as was hinted in the former Chapter) for the things are plain. As the ear tryeth words, and the mouth taſteth meat, ſo it is here; theſe things are as obvious, as ſenſible objects to the ſenſes; we may learn them by ordinary hearing, which is the uſe of the ear; and by common experience, which is imported by the taſt.

Thirdly, That Job refers to his own doctrine; As if he had ſaid, I have held forth my opinion concerning the dealings of God with juſt men. And the truth I have maintained, is as plain and eaſie to the underſtanding, as ſounds and languages are to the ear, or as meats unto the mouth. For as the underſtanding is to things rational and ſpeculative, ſo are the ſenſes to things external and ſenſitive; the palate to meats, and the ear to words.

Fourthly, That Job being about to lift up the Name of God, to ſpeak out his glory in the attributes of his power and wiſdom; and that God by his abſolute ſoveraignty over all creatures, may afflict or proſper, do good or evil as he pleaſeth; doth here preface or premiſe this general commendation of his wiſdom, that God doth as exactly apprehend all that is done or ſpoken in the world, as the ear of a man tryeth the words of him that ſtands next him, whether they be true or falſe, for him or againſt him: or as the palate taſteth meat, whether it be ſweet or bitter, liking or loathſome. All the wayes of the children of men are before the Lord, he diſcerns the voice of all their actions, and the language of every mans life: he knows whether their works be ſweet or bitter, whether good or evil. The Pſalmiſt ſpeaks near the language of this interpretation, (Pſal. 94. 9.) He that planted the ear, ſhall he not hear? he that formed the eye, ſhall he not ſee? God is elſewhere ſaid to have eyes, which try good and bad; he is here ſpoken of as having ears diſcerning truth and falſhood. And his ears are ſo quick, that they take in the leaſt whiſper, the ſtilleſt voice; there is not a word ſpoken, but the voice is heard by God: He hears our ſilence, as well as our ſpeech, and can tell what we ſay, when we ſay nothing: He hears the voice of our thoughts, our thoughts are as loud in the ears of God, as a trumpet in our ears. God hears the voice of our actions, though we utter no words. The voice of thy brothers blood crieth; thou haſt done a bloody deed, and that hath a voice, a crying voice (Habbak. 2. 11.) The ſtone ſhall cry out of the wall. The Lords ear hears the voice of all creatures, even of thoſe that cannot ſpeak; he can do what he pleaſeth, and he is as clear in all he doth, as the ear is in trying words, or the taſte in diſcerning meats.

Divina ſapientia omnia quæ loquuntur cogitantur aut fiunt, ita cognoſcit quaſi illorum audiret voces, quod auriū eſt; aut guſtaret ſapores, quod faucium eſt. Sanct. Senſus percipiunt ſonos, ſapores, &c. Nonne oportet deum qui hæc dedit omniſciū eſſe? Coc.

Every excellency in the creature is in God by way of eminency. Doth the ear of man try words? then the ear of God doth much more. Doth the mouth of man taſte meat? much more doth the Lord taſte men. Hence he ſometime ſpeaks diſtaſtingly of men, they are repreſented as a burthen to his ſtomack, and he as ready to ſpue them out.

Further, The words ſeem to carry a reproof of the raſh and inconſiderate judgement of Jobs friends about what had been ſpoken. This Expoſition may be taken two wayes. Either Socios taxat quod non diligenter expenderent à ſe dicta, q. d. veſtrū ſane erat purgatam aurem afferre non me carpere, &c Merc.

Firſt, In reference unto what Job had offered.

You have heard my judgement about the diſpenſations of God before, and I have ſpoken it a ſecond time, that the tabernacles of the wicked proſper, that many a godly man is as a deſpiſed lamp: Now, Doth not the ear try words? Doth not the mouth taſte meats? As if he had ſaid, You have not yet weighed nor conſidered what I have propoſed; if you had, I ſhould not have needed to come upon this point the ſecond time; you have been raſh in your judgements, your ears have not done their office, you have not pondered my ſpeech, nor the arguments and reaſons which I have produced in confirmation of my opinion.

Or ſecondly, in reference to what Jobs friends had offered. As if he had ſaid, You have declared many things to me me, and you think that I have taken no notice of them, but I aſſure you I have, my ear hath as exactly tryed your words, as the mouth or the palate of a man taſteth meats.

Taking it thus, we may beſt read the words comparatively, (as we find them chap. 34. 3.) The ear tryeth words, as the mouth taſteth meat. Thus the ſenſe is moſt clear. Hearken diligently to my words, and then you may underſtand my meaning as diſtinctly as your taſte doth what you eat.

בחן Probare, tentare, penitùs explorare, & diligenter expendere. Aurem non externā tātum intellige ſed & internam i.e. exactum judiciū quod iis quæ audiuntur eſt adhibendum. Merc. Aurium & Stateræ idē eſt nomen in Hebræo, duæ enim aures ſunt velut bilances quibus expenduntur quæ audimus.

The word which we tranſlate try, ſignifies exact tryal, a perfect exploration. The ear is the chief Inſtrument of the underſtanding, the ſenſe of diſcipline. Here Job ſpeaks not only of the outward ear, but of the ear as it acts with the underſtanding, which not only hears the ſound of words, or knowes the Engliſh of them, but diſcerns the meaning and ſcope of them. This Job eſpecially intendeth, when he ſaith, The ear tryeth words.

Obſerve, The ear muſt do more then hear, in hearing it muſt try what it heareth.

He puts that which is properly an act of the underſtanding upon the ear, which is but an outward ſenſe, namely, to try the truth or falſhood of thoſe things that are ſpoken. The Original word for an ear (repreſents us with this duty of the ear) being in the dual number, ſignifies a pair of ballances, to note, that when we are hearing we ſhould be weighing; we ſhould put every word into the ſcales as we receive it. Doth not the ear try words? When you have received a piece of gold you try it, and there is a double tryal, a tryal by the Touchſtone, and a tryal by the Ballance. Every one that doubteth will go to the Touchſtone to try whether it be good mettal or no, and he will go to his ballances and try whether it be weight or no. Thus when words are ſpoken they ſhould be tryed, tryed by the touchſtone and ballance of the Sanctuary. An attentive ear, and a holy underſtanding, will never put them among our treaſures of knowledge or leading principles, till they have brought them to this tryal.

The point layes a juſt reproof upon thoſe who hear many words, but try none. It is ſaid of the Bereans (Act. 17.) that when an Apoſtle ſpake, they tryed his words; they might have truſted Paul as ſoon as any man alive, that he would not put any falſe Coyn upon them, that he would not ſpeak a word that wanted a grain of weight, yet their ears would try the words of Paul, though he ſpake by inſpiration immediately from heaven, though he had an infallible Spirit. If this duty were obſerved, if hearers would try words, ſo many light pieces, light doctrines, which bear no weight in the ballance of the Sanctuary, would not be purſed up, and put in among our treaſures. Many make treaſure of light and erroneous doctrine, of baſe coyn, and counterfeit money: The reaſon is, Becauſe the ear doth not try, the underſtanding and ear joyn not together. Pſal. 62. 11. God hath ſpoken once, and twice have I heard it; that is, he heard it with his outward ear, and he heard it with his underſtanding: He duly weighed what God ſpake. Thus you muſt do if you will hear to purpoſe, be it who will that ſpeaks; hear it once, and hear it again, that is, hear it with a ſenſitive ear, and hear it with an intellective ear, judge of it and try what it is. Our Saviour Chriſt cautions us to take heed how we hear; though to hear be a natural act, yet there is an artificial hearing, there is an heavenly art in it. The ear muſt be taught by the Spirit to hear, or elſe it can never hear what the Spirit ſaith.

Secondly, Obſerve, No doctrine ought to be rejected until it be tryed.

As none ought to be received till it be tryed, ſo none to be rejected. Job taxeth his friends, that they out of prejudice had caſt off what he had ſpoken. Doth not the ear try words? Why have you not done me that right, as to examine the things I have ſpoken, before you cenſure me? you ſlight and contemn me, as if I were a man diſtracted and out of my wits; as though my words were not worth the weighing. It is as dangerous to refuſe, as to receive what we have not examined. For, however a doctrine may be worthy to be rejected which we do not try, yet we do not our duty to reject it before we have tried. As we ſay of a judge, he that judges a man before he hears him, though poſſibly the ſentence which he paſſeth may be juſt, yet the judge is unjuſt; ſo it is in this caſe, if we reject a doctrine before tryal, though poſſibly it be worthy to be rejected, yet we are worthy to be reproved for rejecting it. We erre in laying aſide an errour, before we have found it to be an errour. The beſt that can be ſaid of ſuch, is, that they have done well by accident. And as they need pardon who do evil, though they know it not; ſo they have nothing to boaſt of, who refuſe that which is evil before they know it to be ſo. The Apoſtle gives that rule (1 Theſ. 5. 21.) when he had ſaid, Deſpiſe not prophecyings, be diligent in attending the means, he adds, Prove all things, and hold faſt that which is good. As we muſt not reject or refuſe to hear the Word, ſo we muſt not receive every word we hear, but try all things, and hold faſt that which is good. Doth not the ear try words?

And the mouth taſte his meat?

The Hebrew is, Doth not the palate taſte his meat? There is a diſpute among Philoſophers what is the proper ſenſorium or inſtrument of taſting. Moſt give it to the whole mouth, ſome to the palate, others to the tongue, not a few to the tip of the tongue; there is a fifth opinion which aſcribes it to the nerves which diffuſe themſelves quite through the tongue; a ſixth places it in the throat. Hence Ariſtotle reports of Philoxenus an Epicure, who wiſhed that he had a neck as long as a Crane, that he might the longer taſte the pleaſure, and take the more delight in his meat. Which way ſoever it is in nature, the Moral truth is the ſame, which you may take in this brief Note.

Ariſt. l. 3. Eth. c. 10.

Every ſence hath a diſtinct office, the Ear is for hearing, the Mouth for taſting, the Eye for ſeeing, the Noſtrils for ſmelling; Thus the Lord hath made a Polity in the body Natural. The body of man is a kinde of corporation, every officer ſtandeth in his place, and hath his duty. The comlineſs of the body natural, and the comlineſs of a body Politique, whether civil or ſpiritual, ſhines in the due diſcharge of each members office: every member needs the help of his neighbour member, and the operation of every member is a help to the whole; The eye ſees, the ear hears, the mouth taſtes, as a ſervant, and for the ſervice of the whole body.

Ut auris voces mens haud mala ſententia. Druſ.

There is yet another tranſlation (obſerved by Chryſoſtom) in ſome of the Greek verſions, where it is read thus, The ear tryeth words, and the mind taſteth meats. One letter added in the greek changes the ſignification from the mouth to the mind; taking it with that literal addition, theſe words are an explication of the former: As the ear tryeth words or ſounds, ſo the mind trieth meats. What meats? Truth is the meat of the mind, the nouriſhment of the underſtanding. Hence the word of truth is often compared to things edible and potable, to meat and drink, to honey, and the honey comb. And the want of the word of truth is called a Famine by the Prophet. The ſoul ſtarves where the word of truth is not rightly divided, cut out, or carved to it. All the excellencies of God that are held forth in the word, are the ſouls food, (Pſal. 34. 8.) O taſte and ſee that the Lord is good; what is it that taſteth how ſweet the Lord is? It is the mind working, meditating, and acting faith upon him. Faith is the ſouls taſter, faith is the mouth of the ſoul, which not only taſteth but cheweth the promiſes and manifeſtations of God to his people, and ſo makes meat of them; Meditation turns the promiſes into marrow. My ſoul (ſaith David, Pſal. 63. 5, 6.) ſhall be ſatisfied as with marrow and fatneſs, and my mouth ſhall praiſe thee with joyful lips, when I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night watches. As there is all manner of riches, ſo all manner of dainties in the believing meditations of God: every promiſe is a diſh, and all the promiſes are a royal feaſt to faith. Heathens have given this notion about the taſte of words. Cicero in his Oration againſt Piſo, ſaith, Pompey could not taſte that Philoſophy. He was a great Souldier, a man of action, and troubled not himſelf with ſedentary ſtudies, and bookiſh contemplations. And as there is a ſpiritual taſte, ſo a ſpiritual hearing, or rather theſe are the ſame; to taſte ſpiritually is to hear ſpiritually. It was the meat of Chriſt to do the will of him that ſent him: it is meat to ſuch as are Chriſts, to hear the will of God by thoſe whom he ſends, and the more they hear, the more wiſdom they get, as followeth, Verſ. 12. With the ancient is wiſdom, and in length of dayes underſtanding.

With the ancient is wiſdom.] The ſenſes are a door to the underſtanding, both acting together lay up treaſures of knowledge, therefore with the ancient is wiſdom, and in length of dayes underſtanding. The word which we tranſlate ancient, ſignifies not the firſt, no nor the ſecond (for the Hebrews reckon three) but the third and laſt ſtep of Old age. The firſt, by their calculation begins at the year threeſcore, and extends to threeſcore and ten: when man is threeſcore, he enters (ſay they) the borders of old age, and while he is travelling to threeſcore and ten, he is in the firſt territory of old age. The ſecond reaches from threeſcore and ten to fourſcore: he is an old man indeed who attains that reckoning, (Pſal. 90. 10.) The third is that whole ſpace be it longer or ſhorter, that man lives beyond fourſcore, and that is properly meant by the word uſed in this Text, with the ancient is wiſdom; and the more ancient any are, the more wiſdom they may be ſuppoſed to have.

Triplex ſenectus apud Hebræos, decrepiti ſunt annoſiores ſenibus. Merc.

Not that every old, or every decrepit old man hath wiſdom; ſome have attained the laſt degree or ſtep of old age, who have not attained the firſt degree of wiſdom: They have walked in a vain ſhadow, and have learned nothing. But when he ſaith, with the ancient is wiſdom, he means; Firſt, it is the duty of old men to ſhew forth wiſdom. Secondly, old men have had a great opportunity to gather wiſdom, a price hath been in their hands, though poſſibly they have not had hearts to make uſe of it. It is not running through a great many years, that makes men wiſe: wiſdom is the gift of God, not of time. And as this doth not infer, that all old men are wiſe, ſo neither doth it infer, that none but old men are. Wiſdom is not ſo with the ancient, as if it could be no where elſe; Gray hairs have not ingroſſed that whole commodity, nor is it all given and granted to them. Wiſdom doth not alwayes lean upon a ſtaff, nor look through Spectacles: It doth not alwayes (as ſome deſcribe venerable old age) go upon three legs, nor ſee with four eyes. Young men may have wiſdom if God give it, and old men cannot have wiſdom unleſs God give it. Some young men have underſtood as much as the ancient, yea more then the ancient, as there will be a clearer occaſion to ſhew at the thirty ſecond Chapter, verſ. 7, 8, 9. whither I refer the Reader, if God ſhall carry on this work ſo far by my hand.

Obſerve, at preſent, Firſt, Old men ſhould be wiſe men. With the ancient is wiſdom.

Where ſhould we go for wiſdom but unto them? Some will not ſo much as ſuſpect young men for much wiſdom, but we have reaſon to look for it among the Ancients. The Apoſtle (1 John 2. 11, 12.) writ to Chriſtians of all ſorts and ſizes, under the titles of little children, young men, and fathers, and he gives a ſpecial reaſon of his dedication to either of them. I write unto you little children, becauſe your ſins are forgiven. I write to you young men, becauſe you are ſtrong, &c. I write unto you fathers, why? Becauſe you have known him which was from the beginning. He gives a reaſon ſutable to old men, I write unto you fathers, becauſe ye have known him which was from the beginning. As if he had ſaid, wiſdom and knowledge are amongſt old men, amongſt the fathers. I take it for granted, that you are knowing men, therefore I write unto you about theſe depths of knowledge. With the ancient is wiſdom. The Apoſtle (Heb. 5. 12.) gives a ſevere reproof to thoſe who when for the time they ought to be teachers, yet had need that one teach them again which be the firſt principles of the Oracles of God. When for the time, that is, they had a great deal of time, and therefore their proficiency in holy knowledge ſhould have been great. And proportionably how much time every one had, ſuch a talent he hath had, and he ſhall be reckoned with, as having had it to get wiſdom. Time in it ſelf cannot advantage us, but time bringeth advantages with it for the compaſſing of the greateſt undertakings, and for the perfecting of thoſe who are moſt imperfect. Time is not an empty duration. God hath filled time with helps to eternity, and with means to know him the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt whom he hath ſent, which is eternal life. Wo to thoſe that have not competently learned this great leſſon, when for the time they ought to be teachers, &c. An old man ignorant is more childiſh then a child. To ſee an old man in the firſt rudiments or primer of natural knowledge is uncomly; but how dreadful is it to ſee an old man not able to read nor underſtand the primmer of the Goſpel, or the firſt principles of Religion; we have ſeen ſad experiences of ſome who have lived under powerful means, even till decrepit old age, even until this third degree of old age, and yet have not been in their A. B. C. of ſaving knowledge, being unable to ſpel or put two letters together in the things of God, or to make out any one concluſion underſtandingly about the neceſſaries to ſalvation. It is bad enough when children and young men are ignorant, and fooliſh in the things of heaven; but with what tears ſhould we lament it, when with the ancient there is no wiſdom, nor underſtanding in length of dayes. Which croſſeth the ſecond part of Jobs Aſſertion, Turpis & ridicula res eſt ſenex elementaris.

And in length of dayes underſtanding.] Both parts of the ſentence have the ſame ſence. In length of dayes, or in many dayes, that is, by the experiences which we get in length of dayes, underſtanding is improved and heightned. Experience is a great teacher. The Apoſtle tells us that every experience we have of God ſhould teach us to hope in God. Experience worketh hope (Rom. 5.) Experience alſo worketh knowledge. Experience is a tedious Maſter, it keeps us long at School; but experience is a ſure maſter, and we may learn much by experience. In length of dayes is underſtanding.

Scientia domi paratur ex libris, prudentia ex itinere & uſu rerum.

Obſerve upon the whole verſe, Old men are to be honoured, and their counſel to be reſpected.

With them (probably) there is moſt wiſdom, and therefore they deſerve moſt reſpect. Hence the Scripture calleth us often to reverence gray hairs, and that we ſhould riſe up to old men; not that we are to adore, which is indeed to dote upon old age; it is doting to think that every thing muſt be true which an old man ſaith, or which the Fathers have aſſerted. But as it is the dotage of any man, to credit any thing which an old man ſpeaks, or to pin our faith upon the opinion of the Ancients, ſo it is a ſin (beſides the incivility of it) to ſlight or undervalue what old age ſpeaks. Old men having injoyed the like means that young men have, and having made improvement of the means which they have injoyed, are to be looked upon with veneration, and their counſel is to be received with more reſpect then that of young men. What deſtroyed the Kingdom of Rehoboam? he followed the counſel of the young men, and would not follow the advice of the old Councellors, who had been with his Father, and had long known the carriage of the Kingdom, and the way of government: He takes young mens counſel, and ſo overthroweth all. The ſame error and danger lyes in ſpiritual, as well as in temporal affairs. An ancient Writer, deſcribing the happineſs of a City, ſaith, Then a City is happy, when it uſeth the counſel of old men, and the ſtrength of young men: When it hath the heads of ancient men, and the hands of young men; the one to give counſel and advice, the other to act and execute; then a City, or Commonwealth, is like to be ſafe and flouriſh. Though we muſt not tye up our ſelves to the counſel of the ancient, nor eſteem all truth becauſe the Ancients ſay ſo; Truth is older then the eldeſt; Truth hath the grayeſt hair, the hoarieſt head: And though if truth be ſpoken by a Youth, we muſt reverence it, and reject error, though an old man be the patron; yet old men muſt have reverence in what they ſay, and deſerve preheminence in counſel.

Maximè ſalva eſt civitas, ubi conſilia ſenum, juvenū arma obtinent. Plut.

Job ſeems to apply this to his friends. You are men of years, therefore you ſurely have attained much underſtanding. You may well know what I have taught, and what I am now teaching, That God is tranſcendent in wiſdom, that his knowledge as well as his power is over all. You muſt needs know that God works myſteriouſly and ſecretly, that he works ſupreamly and authoritatively, that he needs not give an account unto the children of men, With the ancient is this wiſdom, and in length of dayes this underſtanding; This is the wiſdom which I ſhall now demonſtrate.

Verſ. 13. That, with him is wiſdom and ſtrength, he hath counſel and underſtanding.

With him.] The Antecedent is not the ancient man ſpoken of before, with him wiſdom may be, but not ſtrength. Old men do probably increaſe in wiſdom, but they do certainly and unavoidably decreaſe in ſtrength. Here then we muſt look for another Antecedent diſtinct from the ancient man. With him, that is, with God, about whoſe providence and juſtice I have ſpoken, with him is wiſdom and ſtrength; as if he had ſaid, if men by hearing and taſting gather up much knowledge in a tract of time, and length of dayes; then what treaſures of knowledge and wiſdom are there in God, who is the ancient of dayes, and who is as old as eternity. Job argues from the leſs to the greater: with God who is eternal, and inhabiteth eternity, there is wiſdom and ſtrength, and he hath counſel and underſtanding.

With him there is wiſdom and ſtrength.

Ex ſapientia & fortitudine confecit divinâ providentiam eſſe omnibus partibus perfectam.

We met with both theſe attributes of God, Chap. 9. verſ. 4. He is wiſe in heart, and mighty in ſtrength, who hath hardned himſelf againſt him and proſpered? Therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon them here, only a word.

Firſt, God is infinitely wiſe and ſtrong. He is wiſe to deſign, and ſtrong to effect.

Secondly, they who want wiſdom muſt go to God for it. With him is wiſdom, as if he had ſaid, You may gather wiſdom among the creatures, and from obſervation, but all wiſdom is laid up in God. Study alone will not make you wiſe, experiences alone will not make you wiſe, you muſt go to the Fountain of wiſdom; So the Apoſtle directs (Jam. 1. 5.) If any of you lack wiſdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it ſhall be given him. And again, (verſ. 16.) Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights; (Holy wiſdom is not a vapour which fumes up from the earth, but an influence which falls from that light of heaven) with whom there is no variableneſs, nor ſhadow of turning.

Some conceive that Job here anſwers the counſel of Bildad, (Chap.8. verſ. 8.) Enquire of the former age, and prepare thy ſelf to the ſearch of their fathers, for we are but of yeſterday, &c. I grant (ſaith he) we are to enquire of former ages; I am of your opinion too, that, with the ancient is wiſdom; yet I do not expect to find all wiſdom among the ancient, (their Well hath not depth enough to yield theſe waters to all comers, or for all occaſions) no, I muſt go to God; With him is wiſdom, and he hath counſel and underſtanding. Though all the ancient men in the world, and ancient Councels, affirm that, which the word of God denies, we muſt not believe them, for with him is wiſdom. In the 28. Chapter of this book, verſ. 12. the queſtion is put, Where ſhall wiſdom be found? and where is the place of underſtanding? Where? All the creatures diſclaim it, The depth ſaith, it is not in me, and the ſea ſaith, it is not with me. Though we may gain wiſdom by converſing with the creatures, yet there is no creature hath wiſdom in his keeping, or at his diſpoſing. That's the priviledge of God; With him is wiſdom. With him, as with a Maſter, as with a Lord; His it is. With him, as with a diſpenſer, as with a Steward; He gives it out as he pleaſeth, he beſtowes it upon whom he will; all wiſdom is Originally in him, and derivatively from him. (*Chap.*15.8.) Haſt thou heard the ſecret of God, and doeſt thou reſtrain wiſdom to thy ſelf? As if he had ſaid, Thou talkeſt as if thou hadſt been of Gods counſel, or at leaſt as if thou hadſt learnt knowledge, not only from the mouth of men, but immediately from the mouth of God himſelf.

Thirdly Obſerve, That all the wiſdom of man, compared with God, is no wiſdom.

Our wiſdom is fooliſhneſs compared with God. I ground it from the Text, thus. He had ſaid before, With the ancient is wiſdom, and in length of dayes underſtanding. Now ſaith he, With him is wiſdom, and he hath counſel and underſtanding. As if he had ſaid, I told you of wiſdom in old men, and of underſtanding in length of dayes, but I aſſure you this wiſdom is nothing to the wiſdom I now ſpeak of. He means not a wiſdom different in kind; for if there be true wiſdom in old men, it is a drop of Gods ocean, a beam of the Father of lights. But the wiſdom that is in God carries the name of wiſdom from the wiſdom that is in old men. As all the light of the Stars is but darkneſs compared to the light of the Sun; ſo there is wiſdom with men, with old men eſpecially, and there is wiſdom with God: But the wiſdom that is in God, who is the ancient of dayes, extinguiſheth and overcometh all the wiſdom in men, though they be never ſo ancient. With him is wiſdom and ſtrength.

He hath counſel and underſtanding.

Here are four words uſed in reference to God: we had but two before in reference to old men, wiſdom, and underſtanding. But with God there is wiſdom, ſtrength, counſel, and underſtanding; and though three of the four are uſed promiſcuouſly, yet as they ſtand here together we may give them a diſtinct ſenſe.

Underſtanding conſiſts in finding out ſecrets and myſteries, in diving to the bottom of truths. With God there is underſtanding, he findes out the moſt hidden myſteries, his name is the Revealer of Secrets.

Secondly, Counſel is properly that which fits means to the attaining of an end. When we have a buſineſs to do, we go to counſel, and Counſel is to provide ſutable means for the carrying on of ſuch a deſign, and the accompliſhing of our deſires.

Thirdly, Wiſdom, as it ſtands diſtinct from underſtanding and counſel, conſiſts in the due ordering of thoſe means which counſel hath found out. Thus underſtanding findes out the matter, counſel declares the means, and wiſdom manages and diſpoſeth all towards the attainment of the end. All theſe are in God,

And a fourth, which is Strength to execute and carry on the means (according to the dictates of underſtanding, counſel and wiſdom) home to the end. If a man be furniſhed with the greateſt meaſure of underſtanding to find out, of counſel to contrive, of wiſdom to diſpoſe, yet if he want an arm of ſtrength, what can he do? 'Tis true, wiſdom is better then weapons of war, yet what can wiſdom do without weapons of war? A good head is better then a ſtrong arm, yet what can a good head do without a ſtrong arm? But where wiſdom and weapons of war, where a good head and a ſtrong arm joyn, what can they not do?

Job to demonſtrate the abſolute compleatneſs of God in all his adminiſtrations, ſhewes all theſe meeting in God. Would you have underſtanding? it is in him, he can ſearch out deep things: Would you have counſel? He can direct you to the moſt proper means. With him is counſel. Would you have wiſdom? He can mannage and order means to the beſt advantage: He is the God only wiſe. Would you have ſtrength? He can execute and bring to paſs effectually whatſoever he intendeth, his power is over all, and there is nothing too hard for him. Thus the glory of God is lifted up, not only above the actings, but above the thoughts of man.

Hence Obſerve, God is compleat in all perfections.

Among men excellencies are ſcattered, and lye divided, one hath depth of underſtanding, a ſecond clearneſs for counſel, a third is enriched with treaſures of wiſdom, a fourth is fortified with a hand of power. 'Tis rare when any two of theſe meet in one man; and he is a kind of miracle of men, in whom they all meet, though but in ſome low or languid degree. But in God they meet all, and continue alwayes in the higheſt degree. Thoſe things which ſingle put honour and value upon man, concenter in God. Who would not ſeek unto and depend on God? Who would not have God his friend, in whom he hath all friends, and who is ſuch a friend, that having him we need not care nor fear who is our enemy?

One God helping, is more then all men oppoſing. When word was brought to a great Carthaginian Commander in their war againſt the Romans, that the Enemy was very ſtrong and numerous; He anſwer'd the trembling Intelligencer, How many do you reckon me for? Some men are of ſuch vaſt wiſdom ſtrength and courage, that one of them may be muſtered for a whole Army of men. How many then may we reckon God for, who alone hath all that which all men have among them, who alone can do more then all men combined together can? Men act their ſeveral parts in the ſcene of worldly affairs, but God acteth all parts. As he that rides poſt a long journey, takes freſh horſes to carry him through; one horſe carries him the firſt ſtage, and there he is left: A ſecond ſpeeds him to another Stage, and there ſtayes: In the ſame manner a third to a third. So it is in tranſacting any great buſineſs, one man will help you thus far, and another will carry you ſo far, and a third yet farther. One carrieth us as far as counſel and wiſdom work, but he wants ſtrength; another hath ſtrength, but he wants faithfulneſs. But God carries us through the whole journey of our works, he is never tired, nor can he be taken off. (Iſa. 40.28.) The mighty God fainteth not, neither is weary, and there is no ſearching of his underſtanding. Yea, not only hath he this unweariedneſs in himſelf, but he communicates it to his, the young men ſhall faint, (that is, they that are ſtrong, eſpecially they that boaſt in their own ſtrength) but they that wait upon the Lord ſhall renew their ſtrength, they ſhall mount up with wings as Eagles, they ſhall run and not be weary, and they ſhall walk and not faint. The Lord gives his much of himſelf, they ſhall act like God who truſt in God.

Job having arrayed the Lord in all theſe excellencies, proceeds to illuſtrate what he had aſſerted by ſome ſpecial inſtances. As if he had ſaid, leſt any ſhould think that I ſpeak only general notions, I will give you particular proofs, which you who are old men have ſurely made out by your own Obſervation, and are able from experience to atteſt.

Verſ. 14. Behold, he breaketh down, and it cannot be built again; he ſhutteth up a man, and there can be no opening.

Here is an inſtance of the ſtrength and power of God, yea of his wiſdom and underſtanding; all theſe concur in one act of providence; though ſome one appear and be put forth more eminently. I will tell you (ſaith Job) what God doth: this God of whom I have ſpoken great things, doth great things; Yea, it is far eaſier for him to do great things, then for me to ſpeak of them; for himſelf can as eaſily, and as ſpeedily do them, as ſpeak them. The Works which ſpeak him great, are more then can be ſpoken; Of ſome I ſhall now ſpeak.

Behold, he breaketh down, and it cannot be built again.

יהרם Propriè deleverit, diſſipaverit. Ampla valde & vehemens eſt illa ſignificatio deſtruendi, ut etiā denotet Anathematizare, excommunicare. Pin.

Theſe words relate to the attribute of power: With him is ſtrength. And they are more then a bare affirmation that God is ſtrong, they prove that he is ſtrongeſt, or that there is no ſtrength a match for his: This the inſtance reacheth fully, Behold, he breaketh down, and it cannot be built again. No man, no nor Angel, is able to preſerve what God will overthrow, or to reſtore, what he hath once deſtroyed.

The word which we tranſlate to break down, ſignifies an utter diſſipation or diſſolution, even the putting of a thing out of its being: Some interpret it by Anathematizing, curſing, or excommunicating, which imports the devoting both of things and perſons to a total and perpetual ruine.

Firſt, ſome underſtand Job ſpeaking here of his own children and family which God had broken down, with a high and ſtrong hand. Children are a living houſe; A ſon in the ſacred language hath his name from building, becauſe ſons build or continue their fathers houſe. When Sarah prayed Abraham to go in unto Hagar, ſhe ſaid, It may be I may obtain children by her: The Hebrew letter is, It may be I may be builded by her, Gen. 16.2. Rachel invited Jacob to Bilhahs bed upon the ſame hopes, That I alſo (ſaid ſhe) may have children, or be built by her, Gen. 30. 3. Now as when God gives children he builds, ſo when he takes them away he breaks down: If the Lord break down thus, if he take away the children which he hath given, who can reſtore them to us again, or repair that breach?

Secondly, others conceive he refers to thoſe two ancient acts of Gods breaking providence, the overthrow of Babel, and the deſtruction of Sodom, which were not builded again to that day.

Meliusquadrat ut in communi dicatur, quicquid vult Deus quacunq; ratione deſtruere. Bol.

Thirdly, we need not reſtrain his ſence to any ſpecial City, or to his own family; expound him rather of the ruining of mans eſtate in general. If the Lord break down, and deface their worldly glory, who are moſt fairly built and raiſed up, who have ſtrongeſt foundations, and firmeſt walls, who have higheſt towers, and the moſt aſpiring pinacles; if he pull down an eſtate thus founded, thus raiſed, and break it to pieces, it ſhall certainly be broken, and that without remedy.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, What God will do, he can do, and it ſhall be done.

He breaks down without asking any man leave: God doth not work by ſufferance, but by authority. The whole world is his work, and he may make what work he will in the world. If he will work who ſhall let it? (Iſa. 43. 13.) if he will ſmite, who ſhall let it? He will not put up his ſword at thy word, no nor for fear of thy power. If he give the word, Break down, down it ſhall. The word of God plants, and the word of God roots up, and it doth both irreſiſtibly. If God will deſtroy perſons or Kingdoms, there is no ſaving them. As none can pull down, what he ſets up, ſo none can ſet up what he pulls down. If he ſaith, Let it lye in the duſt, who ſhall raiſe it up again? The Prophet (*Mal.*1.4.) brings in Edom ſurveying the deſolations which God had made upon his Territories. Edom began to reflect ſadly upon his ruinous condition, We are impoveriſhed, ſaith Edom: upon this Edom takes counſel, yea he reſolves, We will return and build the deſolate places. But what ſaith the Lord to Edom? (Do and you will) They ſhall build, but I will throw down again. As if he had ſaid, I once threw down, and made deſolate the palaces of Edom; and if Edom will attempt to better his condition, and build again, I will again make deſolate: as faſt as Edom repairs, I will pull down. Man ſhall never make up the works which God hath ſlighted, till he hath leave for it from heaven. (Pſal. 28. 5.) Becauſe they regard not the works of the Lord, he ſhall deſtroy them, and not build them up, that is, he ſhall deſtroy them, and they ſhall not be built. For unleſs God himſelf will build what he hath deſtroyed, no man can, (Hoſ. 6. 1.) Let us return unto the Lord, for he hath torn, and he will heal us; If God make the wound, it is not in the skill or Chirurgery of man to give a plaiſter: He hath ſmitten us, and he will bind us up. When you have got a wound from God, you cannot get your cure from the creature; man tares, and God heals; man ſmites, and God bindes us up; but if God tare and ſmite, he muſt bind up and heal, or elſe we can never be healed: our wound and our ſalve come from the ſame hand. When Jericho was deſtroyed, the Lord ſaid by Joſhua, Curſed be the man that riſeth up and buildeth this city Jericho, he ſhall lay the foundation thereof in his firſt-born, and in his youngeſt ſon ſhall he ſet up the gates of it, (Joſh. 6.26.) We find that for five hundred years none attempted to build this City, the curſe of God lay ſo heavy upon it; but after five hundred years, whether the man forgetting what was ſpoken, or preſuming that now after ſo long a time, God would forget what he had ſpoken and not make it good, One Hiel the Bethelite (as you may read 1 King. 16. 34.) built it, but how? By building that, he pulled down himſelf, for ſaith the Text, He laid the foundation thereof in Abiram his firſt-born, and ſet up the gates thereof in his youngeſt ſon Segub, according to the word of the Lord which he ſpake by Joſhua the ſon of Nun. The meaning is this, when he laid the foundation of that city, the curſe of God fell upon him, and his eldeſt ſon died. God pull'd down the beſt part of his living houſe, his eldeſt ſon, and yet he would not be warned of the judgement of God, but went on to finiſh Jericho (for ſetting up the gates notes the accompliſhment of his work, as laying the foundation ſignifies the beginning of it) and what came of that? then the Lord ſlew his youngeſt ſon, he ſet up the gates thereof in his youngeſt ſon Segub, he built Jericho: but he could not deliver himſelf from the curſe; God did not ſay, this city ſhall never be built, but curſed be he that builds it, and this curſe ſhall be upon him, He ſhall lay the foundation thereof in his firſt-born, and in his youngeſt ſon ſhall he ſet up the gates of it; and ſo it came to paſs, the Hiſtory fulfilled the Propheſie, and the work of providence gave Teſtimony to the truth of the word. This alſo is very remarkable in the ſtory of Jeruſalem. Chriſt threatned Jeruſalem that it ſhould be deſtroyed, and the Temple, that there ſhould not be left one ſtone upon another, that ſhould not be thrown down. The event anſwered this threat. The Romans ruined all, and were that abomination of deſolation in the place. Yet in the time of Julian ſome had a deſign to build the Temple and reſtore Jeruſalem: Yea that Apoſtate Julian, on purpoſe to croſs the words of Chriſt, and the counſel of God, of which he had heard, that There ſhould not be left one ſtone upon another; therefore he (not out of any good will to the Jews, or out of any deſire to have the Worſhip of God and the Temple reſtored, but only in ſpight and malice, to ſee whether he could croſs the word of Chriſt, and reverſe his curſe) gave the Jews (like another Cyrus) ample commiſſion, and full liberty, to go and build the Temple. In purſuance of which grant they gathered a vaſt ſtore of materials; but when they began to work, the ſtory ſaith, That God from Heaven, by ſtorm and tempeſt, did ſo diſmay and ſcatter them, that they were forced to give it over, and confeſs the hand of God was againſt them; he confounded thoſe builders of the Temple, as he did the builders of Babel. It is (in ſome caſes) a dangerous attempt to build when the Lord hath pulled down; but it is (in all caſes) an impoſſible attempt to build what God reſolves ſhall continue down.

Ammianus Marcel. l. 23. Hiſt. Tripart. l. 6. c. 43.

It is thus alſo with private men, ſome have had fair eſtates in the world, God pulls them down, and breaks them to pieces. We uſe to ſay of a man that fails, He is broke; ſuch will be trying to get up again, yet they cannot: ſome after breakings have had more then they had at firſt to ſet up with, beſides their ſtocks of experience; yea theſe men, beſides their experience, have added more diligence in the uſe of all honeſt means: yet God will not let them build their eſtates again, he will not let them thrive in the world. 'Tis ſo alſo with the body: God pulls down a mans health, and ſtrength, and then he goes from Phyſitian to Phyſitian, he asks every one he meets what he may do to build up his body again? Yet this man muſt carry a crazy body to the grave. He breaketh down, and it cannot be built again. That's the firſt Inſtance.

The ſecond is, He ſhutteth up a man, and there can be no opening.

Ad viæ impedimentum ad carcerem ad vinculū referri ſolet.

The word which we tranſlate to ſhut up, notes any kind of block, impediment, or hinderance laid in a mans way to ſtop his courſe; it is applyed alſo to locking of a door, that none come out, or go in; to the ſhutting of the Heavens, that it rain not, (2 Chron. 7. 17.) Shutting and opening note acts of power; and ſo to ſhut that no man can open, or ſo to open that no man can ſhut, are acts of ſupream power. Hence the giving of a key hath been an ancient ceremony, of inveſting men in places of authority and chief command. He ſhutteth up a man, and there can be no opening; that is, none till he pleaſeth: God ſaith of Eliakim (Iſai. 22. 22.) The key of the houſe of David will I lay upon his ſhoulder; ſo he ſhall open, and none ſhall ſhut; and he ſhall ſhut, and none ſhall open; that is, he ſhall have the higheſt office in the Kings houſe; to ſhut and open bears the ſame ſence with going out, and coming in before a people, Numb. 27. 17. Chriſt, of whoſe Kingdom the houſe of David was a type, is deſcribed by opening and ſhutting (Rev. 3. 7.) Theſe things ſaith he that openeth, and no man ſhutteth; and ſhutteth, and no man openeth. Chriſt hath all power in Heaven and earth given into his hand; and therefore what his hand doth, no man can undo. Now in his abſence he puts this general power into the hand of the Church, to be exerciſed and adminiſtred by ſuch Officers as himſelf hath appointed: Thus he applyes himſelf to Peter, after he had made that confeſſion, which is the Foundation of the Church (Matth. 16. 19.) I will give to thee the keyes of the Kingdom of Heaven, and whatſoever thou ſhalt bind on earth, ſhall be bound in Heaven; and whatſoever thou ſhalt looſe on earth, ſhall be looſed in Heaven: where though the words vary, yet the meaning is the ſame, and give us this aſſurance, that no power can reſcind what is done in and by the Church, according to the will of Chriſt in binding, or in looſing. Further, ſhutting up, notes in general the putting of a man into a ſad condition, whether in regard of civil, or ſpiritual things; and opening imports deliverance and freedom from either.

Aperire, aliquid ſignificat lætum fortunatum, contra clauſum, miſerum & ærumnoſum. Aprilis vocatur ab aperiendo cælo.

Hence obſerve, There is no prevailing againſt God, or repealing any of his reſolves.

As when he breaketh none can build; ſo when he ſhutteth up none can open. Balaam confeſſeth (Numb. 23. 20.) God hath bleſſed, and I cannot reverſe it; and where God hath curſed, who can reverſe it? If the Lord ſhut any door againſt us, or upon us, all the Smiths on earth cannot make a key to open it. If God ſhut, or lock up the Heavens that it rain not, who can open them? Elijah comes in as if he had the keyes of Heaven at his girdle, (1 Kings 17. 1.) There ſhall be (ſaith he) neither dew nor rain theſe years, but according to my word. We find in the Epiſtle of James what the word was, Elijah prayed that it might not rain; and it rained not on the earth, for the ſpace of three years and ſix months. And Elijah prayed again; and the Heaven gave rain. It was not an Imperative word, it was a petitionary word, that locked and unlocked the Heaven: None hath an Imperative word, a word of command to lock and unlock Heaven, but God himſelf, Amos 3. 7. I cauſed it to rain upon one City, and cauſed it not to rain upon another City. Again, If the Lord ſhut up the womb, there is no bringing forth, Gen. 20. 18. The Lord had faſt cloſed up all the wombs of the houſe of Abimelech. If the Lord ſhut up the earth, it becomes as iron, and brings forth no fruit; if he ſhut a man up in ſickneſs, in poverty, in diſgrace, in trouble of ſpirit, there is no unbinding, no opening. He hath concluded, or ſhut up, all under ſin, that every mouth may be ſtopped, Rom. 3. 19. He hath ſhut them all in unbelief, that he may have mercy upon all, Rom. 11. 32. They are ſhut up as a company of priſoners in a dungeon, that they may receive, whatſoever they receive, at the hand of mercy; for who can open for thoſe men? who can unlooſe theſe Seals of unbelief, till mercy unlooſe them? As none could unlooſe the Seals of that Book, wherein the Myſteries of God were contained, but only Chriſt, Rev. 5. 5. So none can open the Seals of ſin which are upon the heart of an unbeliever, but Chriſt only: Chriſt who opened the Book, opens to our ſouls; Chriſt who looſed the Seals, can looſe us from our ſins: Him God hath appointed to be the great Opener of priſons, and the Deliverer of thoſe who are in bonds: If the Son make us free, we ſhall be free indeed; and until he make us free, we are ſlaves indeed. Whom Juſtice locks up, Mercy lets out. There is no opening, either by the force, or by the deſert of man, where God ſhutteth up. The evil Angels have ſo much power, that they are called powers; yet they could never get out of priſon. They are reſerved in everlaſting chains, under darkneſs, to the judgment of the great day, (Jude ver. 6.) Their chains will never wear out, nor can they be filed off; whitherſoever thoſe wicked ſpirits go, they go in chains, like priſoners who are kept till the day of Seſſion. The Apoſtle Peter (1 Pet. 3. 19.) aſſures us as much of the ſpirits, or ſouls, of thoſe evil men who lived in the dayes of Noah: Theſe being caſt into priſon, could never break priſon, nor make an eſcape unto this day. Chriſt by his Spirit, in the miniſtry of Noah, preached to them for the preventing of their impriſonment: He preached to them who are now in priſon, that they might not have been impriſoned. But ſee how ſure a Goal Hell is: thoſe diſobedient unbelievers, who were caſt into priſon in Noah's time, were all faſt there in the Apoſtle Peter's time. There is no picking the lock of Hell gates, nor breaking through the walls of that fiery Tophet. Abraham in the Parable (Luke 16.) aſſures the rich man in Hell, that he could not come out of that place of torment, and that no comfort, not ſo much as a drop of comfort could be conveyed to that place (ver. 26.) And beſides all this (ſaith he) between us and you there is a great Gulf fixed, ſo that they which would paſs from hence to you cannot, neither can they paſs to us that would come from thence. The man is convinced that he could not get out, and therefore deſires that no friend of his might come in; but that Lazarus might be ſent to teſtifie to his five brethren, leſt they ſhould come into that place of torment. He knew well enough, if they were once there, they could come out no more. God will at laſt ſend his Writ to the Grave to bring out the bodies of the wicked that are ſhut up there, and he will ſend a Writ to Hell, to bring out the ſpirits that are ſhut up there, that both together may receive ſentence of eternal impriſonment and torment: God will ſhut them up, and there ſhall be no opening for ever.

VERS. 15, 16.

Behold, he withholdeth the waters, and they dry up; alſo he ſendeth them out, and they overturn the earth.

With him is ſtrength and wiſdom: the deceived and the deceiver are his.

JOB proceedeth upon his former Argument in giving Inſtances to prove the great power and the unqueſtionable ſoveraignty of the Lord. In the former context we had an inſtance in civil affairs: He breaketh down, and it cannot be built again; he ſhutteth up a man, and there can be no opening. The acts of God are irreverſible by man: Here he inſtanceth in natural things, Behold, he withholdeth the waters, &c. As God ſhutteth up men, and they cannot get out; ſo he ſhutteth up and impriſoneth the waters, and they cannot get out. This alſo calleth up our attention and admiration, Behold,

He withholdeth.] The word ſignifies, Firſt, to ſtop or to ſtay a thing by ſtrength, and fine force. Secondly, to ſtop or to ſtay a thing by authority, or command. Thirdly, to ſtop a thing by intreaty, or by prayer (2 Sam. 24. 21.) When David offered a ſacrifice in the floor of Araunah, the Text ſaith, So the plague was ſtayed: there was a ſtay, a ſtop, a withholding of the plague: David intreated the Lord, and the Lord at his intreaty gave that effect; he checkt the malignity of the peſtilence, and bid the deſtroying Angel ſheath his ſword. The ſame word is uſed (Numb. 16. 48.) when the plague was begun among the people, Aaron took a Cenſer and offered incenſe, and ſo the plague was ſtayed, or withheld: the plague was marching on ſwiftly and furiouſly, but at the interceſſion of Aaron, God ſtopt its courſe, and bid it ſtand. This withholding, is ſometimes applyed to the laws of men: Laws are as boundaries and limits, yea, laws are as bridles and bonds, as chains and fetters, to ſtay and reſtrain, to ſtop and withhold the ſinful extravagancies and excurſions of the fleſh. I find it often applyed to the withholding of water. If I (ſaith the Lord) ſhut up Heaven, that there be no rain, (2 Chron. 7. 13.) then if ye pray, &c. God locks the Clouds, and prayer is a key of Gods own making to open them. This word is alſo applyed to the reſtraint of that other Element, the ſtopping and ſhutting in of fire (Jer. 20. 9.) Fire and water are head-ſtrong Elements, They are good ſervants, but ill maſters. God puts a bridle upon the fire, a bridle upon the water. He withholdeth

The waters.] What waters? It may be underſtood, Firſt, of waters under or upon the earth; there are ſubterranean channels of water: Springs furniſh Rivers, Rivers are ſubterranean channels, earthen veſſels, or rather vehicles and conveyances of water. He withholdeth the waters, he withholdeth the under-waters, he forbids thoſe Springs to feed the Rivers, and then they are dryed up. Secondly, it may be underſtood of the waters that are above (the Empire of the Lord reacheth both.) Waters hang in the Clouds, there are ſeas of water above us; it is the mighty power of God which gives thoſe aiery Sponges, the Clouds, a retentive faculty, for elſe they would ſoon diſſolve and overwhelm us. And it is from the anger and judgments of God, that thoſe aiery ſponges, the Clouds, are ſometimes ſo cloſed up, that they yield no more water then Iron or Adamant. As he alwayes withholds the water from drowning the whole earth, ſo he ſometimes withholds it from refreſhing many parts of the earth, he forbids the Clouds to diſtil a drop. Thirdly, it may be expounded of the waters of the Sea, which feed the Springs, as Springs feed the Rivers, (Nah. 1. 4.) He rebuketh the ſea, and maketh it dry, and dryeth up all the rivers. Where the Sea is dryed, the Rivers muſt. The Sea is Grandmother to the Rivers. The Prophet Zachary ſpeaks the ſame (Chap. 10. 11.) He ſhall ſmite the waves of the Sea, and all the deeps of the Rivers ſhall dry up. Thus alſo he withholdeth the waters,

And they dry up.] What dryeth up? The Rivers dry up, when the waters of the Sea are withholden; and the things that grow upon the Earth dry up, when the waters of Heaven are withholden; and when they are withholden very long, not only the Fruits of the Earth, but the Rivers dry up too. In that great drought, (1 Kings 17. 17.) The brooks dryed up, becauſe there was no rain in the land. Again (Joel 1. 20.) The beaſts of the field cry alſo unto thee, for the rivers of waters are dryed up, and the fire hath devoured the paſtures of the wilderneſs. The fire hath devoured; What fire? It was not ordinary elemental fire that burn'd the paſtures; the fire was the Sun, there being no rain to mollifie and mitigate his ſcorching beams; the Sun, as a fire, conſumed the paſtures of the Wilderneſs. So here, He withholdeth the waters, and they dry up; that is, the Paſtures (as well as the Rivers) together with all Vegetables, that are nurſed and nouriſhed by thoſe breaſts of Heaven diſtilling upon them.

Further, He withholdeth the waters, and they dry up; takes in the effect which follows the withholding of the waters, and the dryneſs of the earth, namely, barrenneſs, and famine: and ſo the cauſe is put for the effect; and, he withholdeth the waters, is, he cauſeth famine in a Land: He withholdeth the waters, and, then Corn, and Graſs, Trees, and Plants dry up. That three years famine (2 Sam. 21.) was from an extraordinary drought, as is conceived: The fruit of a drought is famine; and the fruit of rain is abundance. Plenty deſcends from Heaven in ſhowers: God takes away the fruits of the earth by taking away that which ſhould nouriſh and feed the earth in bearing fruit.

q. d. Quando vult poteſt tum ſterilitatem tum copioſã rerum omniũ abundantiũ elargiri. Bold.

I ſhall but note two things from this briefly, referring the Reader to the thirteenth verſe of the fifth Chapter, where the power of God, in ordering rain and waters, is more fully opened.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, The waters are at Gods command, He withholdeth them.

He withholdeth them, as it were, by a law; or he withholdeth them as with a bridle. There ſhall not be dew nor rain theſe years, but according to my word, ſaith Elijah (1 Kings 17. 1.) This ſpake he in the power of God; for he prayed, and then the rain or the waters were withholden. God complained of his Vineyard, (Iſa. 5.) that he had beſtowed much coſt upon it, and yet had received little rent from it, unleſs ſuch as was paid in baſe coin; He looked for righteouſneſs, but behold oppreſſion, &c. Well ſaith the Lord, Go to, I will tell you what I will do; I will do thus and thus; and beſides all this, I will command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it. The power of God, and his glory, is wonderfully lifted up in this work of providence (Amos 4. 7.) I have withholden the rain from you, when there were yet three months to the harveſt; that is, in the time when the Corn and Graſs had moſt need of rain, I withheld it, and I cauſed it (ſaith he) to rain upon one City, and cauſed it not to rain upon another City: read Jer. 5. 24. and 10. 13. Joel 2. 23. Matth. 5. 45. Acts 14. 17. There is a piece of ſecret Atheiſm in ſome about this point: The heart may be ſweetly moiſtened by the acknowledgment of God in the rain: But moſt ſtick too much in natural cauſes, and ſcarce look beyond the Almanack for the changes of the weather. We ſhall have rain (ſay they) at the change of the Moon, or when the Wind turns. 'Tis true, that there is a natural reaſon, why at the change of the Moon, why at the change of the Wind, there may be a change of the weather; yet God hath a power above the Wind, and above the Moon; and therefore ſometimes he lets the Moon change and change, yet no rain; and the Wind blows from all the points of Heaven, and yet no rain: That we might not ſtick in ſecond cauſes, God often acts beyond them, yea againſt them: And that we ſhould not deſpiſe ſecond cauſes, and the order in which God hath diſpoſed the frame of Nature, he often works with them, and by them. When natural cauſes produce their effects, God ſhews his bounty; and when natural cauſes cannot produce their effects, God ſhews his Soveraignty, and teacheth man his duty. Hence the want of rain in an ordinary courſe, is put as an extraordinary occaſion of prayer, and ſeeking God (1 Kings 8. 35. Zach. 10. 1.) Ask ye of the Lord rain, in the time of the latter rain. When rain comes not in the ſeaſon of nature, we may ſhew much of grace in asking rain.

Secondly obſerve, That natural cauſes being ſtopped, natural effects muſt ceaſe.

There can be no natural effect without a natural cauſe: All ſuch effects are miraculous; withhold the rain, and all dryes up; there is a natural dependance between the fruitfulneſs of the earth and the rain. David in his laſt words, ſhewing how bleſſed and how great a bleſſing a juſt and a godly King is: He ſhall be (ſaith he) as the light of the morning when the Sun ariſeth, even a morning without clouds; as the tender graſs ſpringing out of the earth by clear ſhining after rain (2 Sam. 23. 4.) Here he puts in all the natural cauſes. He ſhall be as the tender graſs ſpringing out of the earth: But what cauſeth the graſs to ſpring out of the earth? There is firſt, the rain, to moiſten; and ſecondly, the clear ſhining, to warm and draw out the ſeminal vertue of the earth. When the Lord threatens (Deut. 28. 33.) I will make the Heavens over you as braſs; he preſently adds, and the earth under you ſhall be as iron. If the Heavens be braſs, the earth will be iron. We have this concatenation of cauſes elegantly ſet forth (Hoſ. 2. 21, 22.) I will hear the heavens (ſaith God) and they ſhall hear the earth, and the earth ſhall hear the corn, and the wine, and the oyl, and they ſhall hear Jezreel. Jezreel muſt have Corn, and Wine, and oyl; Corn and Wine muſt be had from fertile earth; the earth cannot be fertile without benign Heavens; the Heavens can ſhew no kindneſs to the earth, either by moiſtening ſhowers, or quickening heat, without orders from God. Hence the Heavens cry to God, and the Earth to the Heavens, and the Corn to the Earth, and Jezreel to the Corn, that he may be fed. If God withholdeth the waters of Heaven, the earth dryes up; we are fed by the bleſſing of God upon ſecond cauſes. Again,

He ſendeth them out, and they overturn the earth.

This latter clauſe doth not hold out the mercy oppoſite to the judgment in the former; but it holds out a ſecond judgment. For as there, the withholding of the waters was a judgment; ſo here, the ſending of them out is a judgment too. When God withholdeth the waters over-long, the earth cannot bear fruit; and when God ſendeth out the waters overmuch, the fruit which the earth bears is ſtifled and choaked. Waters are ordinarily ſent to refreſh and revive the earth; but here they are ſent to overturn the earth.

He ſendeth them.] The word ſignifies the ſending out of a meſſenger upon ſome command. Waters receive a commiſſion to ſtay at home, and they receive a commiſſion to go out in a way of judgment: God gives them a precept, a writ, Go and overturn the earth: He looſens their bonds, and enlargeth their borders, to puniſh thoſe who will not be kept in bounds. Moſes deſcribing the Deluge (to which Job here, as ſome conceive, alludes) ſaith, All the fountains of the great deep were broken up, and the windows of Heaven were opened (Gen. 7. 11.) both the under-waters, and the upper-waters were till that day impriſoned and kept cloſe by the Decree of God: But then God broke open the priſon, and let out the waters, and we ſee what work they made in the world.

Evertit mutavit ſubſtantiam formam aut locum rei alicujus.

They overturned the earth.] The word notes a change both of place and ſtate; either of which, when they are great, are an overthrow, or an overturning. But is not the earth too big to be overturned? And hath not God promiſed that he will never deſtroy the earth again by water? Beſides, the earth is rather overwhelmed, then overturned by the waters. To clear this. The earth may be taken three wayes.

Firſt, for ſome ſpecial Tract, or Province of the earth, which the Lord may overturn, that is, ſpoil and deface without breach of that promiſe, Gen. 9. 11. The Bow in the Clouds is a ſign between God and the world, that he will never drown the World any more; this doth not hinder the overthrowing of great Tracts and parts of the World by water.

Secondly, By the earth we may underſtand the Inhabitants of any part of the earth, and the dwellings which they have raiſed for themſelves upon the earth. Theſe the waters are often ſent out to overturn, though the ſite and ſoil of the earth remain the ſame.

Thirdly, By the earth, we may underſtand the fruits of the earth, or the things which grow out of the earth. Thus God overturneth the earth, by ſending out immoderate rains and exceſſive ſhowers: When Corn and Graſs, when the Vines and Olives are deſtroyed, the Earth (for that ſeaſon) is deſtroyed.

> Hence obſerve, Firſt, The Lord can make any of the creatures mans ſcourge.

He that made the whole World without any Inſtrument, can make one part of the World an Inſtrument to deſtroy another: He that ſet up the world without help, cannot want help to throw it down. He hath his Fire-works and his Water-works ready; He ſendeth out the waters, and they overturn the earth. We uſe to ſay, Fire and water have no mercy: Water is a terrible Element, though it is a uſeful and a comfortable Element. I might bring you many ſtories, ancient and modern, of the wonderful effects of water. Pliny in his natural Hiſtory, and Seneca, in his natural Queſtions, give us ſundry inſtances of Towns and Countries, made deſolate by water.

Plin. lib. 2. cap. 90. & 92. Nat. Sen. lib. 6. Nat. quæſt. c. 23. Hiſt.

The queſtion is put (Job 28. 22.) Haſt thou entred into the treaſures of the ſnow? Or haſt thou ſeen the treaſures of the hail, which I have reſerved: Againſt when? Which I have reſerved againſt the time of trouble, againſt the day of battel and war? The Lord ſpeaks here as ſome great Prince, who hath a Magazine ſtored and filled with Ammunition againſt a time of war. Haſt thou (ſaith he) entred into the treaſures of the ſnow? Haſt thou been in my Magazine, and conſidered what ſtores I have laid up there againſt the day of battel and war? What day of battel and war is this? We may expound it either one or both theſe wayes: Firſt, of ſome day of Gods ſpecial wrath and judgment upon a people, when no enemy appears but himſelf; when he (as it were) in perſon makes war upon them, and comes forth in battel againſt them: In ſuch a day of battel as this, he brings out theſe treaſures of wrath, the Snow and the Hail. God went to war and battel againſt Egypt immediately; and one of the foreſt plagues was the Hail, which deſtroyed the earth by killing the Cattel, Corn, and Fruits, Exod. 9. 18. God ſent down ſhowers of water made up into bullets, upon Egypt, ſuch is Hail. Secondly, We may underſtand it of a day when a war is made againſt his people; for then he ſometimes brings forth this Ammunition out of his ſtore-houſes, he fires his great Guns, and pours out volleys of ſhot from Heaven upon the enemies of his people. We have a clear record, which gives God the glory of this truth (Joſh. 10. 11.) When Joſhua was ingaged in battel with thoſe uncircumciſed Nations, The Lord caſt down great ſtones from Heaven upon them, and they dyed; they were more which dyed with hail-ſtones, then they whom the children of Iſrael ſlew with the ſword. Thus whether we underſtand that Text of the day of Gods immediate war againſt evil men, or of the day when evil men war againſt the people of God: both are evidences of his power, in ſending waters, hail and ſnow, ſtorm and tempeſts (all which he hath at his command) to overturn the earth. Great Princes and States, ſend forth their Generals with command to overturn Cities, and deſtroy all that will not ſubmit unto them; God gives a charge to ſenſeleſs and inanimate creatures to go forth and overturn the earth, and it is done.

> Secondly obſerve, That the very ſame creature which is a mercy to us, may be a great affliction and a ſcourge to us.

Waters fatten, and waters deſtroy the earth. We pray in drought for rain and waters; the Lord can give us rain, until rain ſhall afflict as much as drought. There is no earthly thing but we may have too much of it. The exceſs of any creature is a judgment upon the creature. We may ſoon have too much fire, and too much water; too much heat and too much cold; as the want of theſe things troubles us, ſo likewiſe doth the glut of them: we depend upon God as much for the quantity and meaſure of outward mercies, as for the mercies themſelves. See here a difference between the things of Nature, and the things of Grace. We can never have too much of Grace, nor too much of the Spirit. The more we have of theſe the better; and we are then beſt, when we have moſt. A gracious heart grows up to glory, through the abundance of grace. Be not drunk with wine, wherein is exceſs, (is the Apoſtles caution, Eph. 5. 18.) But be filled with the Spirit. We may drink wine quickly to exceſs; but we cannot be filled with the Spirit to exceſs; there is no exceſs poſſible in that, and therefore the Apoſtle gives no caution about it. Take your fill of the Spirit, you cannot be overfill'd. The wine of the Spirit doth not make us drunk; the more we drink of it, the more ſober we are. And the waters of the Spirit do never drown us; the more and the oftner they fall upon us, or overflow us, the more fruitful we are. The waters of the Spirit are never ſent out to overturn the ſoul; the mightieſt inundations of Grace, make the heart mighty for God. Spiritual things in the leaſt degree are a bleſſing; and the greater the degree is, the greater is the bleſſing. Hence that promiſe, In the latter dayes (ſaith God) I will pour out my Spirit; you ſhall not only have ſome drops, and ſtill dews, but ſtrong ſhowers, rivers and torrents flowing down from Heaven, upon the dry and parched ground, upon the barren wilderneſs, to make it like Eden, the Garden of God; ſuch Rivers ſhall run into you, till you ſhall have Rivers running from you. He that believeth on me (ſaith Chriſt, John 7. 38.) out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of living water: This he ſpake of the Spirit, which they that believe on him ſhould receive.

Verſe 16. With him is ſtrength and wiſdom; the deceived and the deceiver are his.

The former inſtance was in the works of Nature; now Job inſtanceth in civil things, ſhewing the providence and power of God acting mightily in them: With him is ſtrength and wiſdom.

We had theſe words at the thirteenth verſe [With him is wiſdom and ſtrength] ſo we tranſlate in both. Why doth he (only two verſes put between) repeat the ſame thing again? He had ſaid, ver. 13. With him is wiſdom and ſtrength; here, With him is ſtrength and wiſdom: Why doth he touch ſo often upon this ſtring?

Note from it, Firſt, That all repetitions are not uſeleſs and vain.

Repetitions in Scripture have not only an elegancy in them, but a profitableneſs in them. That's one thing.

Secondly, From the matter, With him is ſtrength and wiſdom. (That's the point.) It is no ſmall matter that he repeateth, and it teacheth us thus much,

That we need to hear often of, and meditate often upon, the power and wiſdom of God.

When we have learn'd that leſſon once well, we have learned a great many leſſons: When the heart is but aſſured and ſettled in this truth, and can make the inferences, and draw out the concluſions which flow from thoſe premiſes, we have profited very much in the knowledge of God.

But further, we may anſwer. The reaſon why Job repeateth what he had ſo lately aſſerted, may be this, becauſe he beginneth upon a new ſubject: and therefore as he put this Preface [With him is wiſdom and ſtrength] to thoſe former Inſtances, ſo now giving Inſtances of an higher nature, he renews that Doctrine, With him is wiſdom and ſtrength. He would have the thoughts of men cloſe fully with theſe Attributes of God. As if he had ſaid, I ſhall ſpeak to you of ſuch things as you will never believe, nor honour God in the manifeſtation of them, unleſs your hearts be very well ſetled upon this foundation, that with him is ſtrength and wiſdom.

Hence obſerve, That great truths muſt be uſhered, or led in with great thoughts of God.

As in prayer, when weighty petitions are made, we find the Saints raiſing up their hearts, and bearing up their ſpirits to high thoughts of God: ſo when any great doctrinal truths are laid before us, uſually there is ſomewhat prefaced about the greatneſs of God, which may cauſe us to reverence and adore ſuch truths. The Prophets, Thus ſaith the Lord, or, Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, was as if they had ſaid, We ſpeak his words, who is able to make them good.

Or laſtly, Job ſpeaks this only in a way of acclamation, as being lifted up and raviſhed with the meditation of Gods Greatneſs, Power, and Wiſdom. And therefore as he had ſaid, ſo he ſaith it a ſecond time, With him is wiſdom and ſtrength. He is the ſtrong God, the wiſe God: This, Rhetoricians call (Epiphonema) a raiſing up of the voice and ſpirit, in acclamation to the truth of that which is ſpoken. When the Apoſtle had exhorted the Saints to rejoyce, he adds, And again, I ſay, rejoyce: ſo here, did I ſay the Lord hath wiſdom and ſtrength? I will ſay it again, with him is wiſdom and ſtrength.

Epiphonemicω̃s dictum, cum eo ſane eſt robur & ratio. Merc.

But though the words in our Tranſlation are the ſame with the thirteenth verſe, yet the Hebrew differs. In the thirteenth verſe the words are Chochmah and Geburah; but here, Ghoz and Toſiah; which though they bear the ſame interpretation in the Engliſh, yet they have a greater force in the Original: For the former ſignifies not only irreſiſtible ſtrength, but excellency and dignity joyned with that ſtrength: ſo that it imports a perſon cloathed as much with dignity and honour, as with ſtrength and power (Pſal. 29. 1.) Give unto the Lord glory and ſtrength; that is, give unto the Lord a ſtrength which is glorious. Jerome tranſlates this word often by Imperium, ſometimes by virtus, noting in both, an Imperial ſovereignty or power.

Ita fortitudinem ſignificat, ut etiã dignitatem, præſtantiã, honorem & excellentiam connotet. Hieronymus vertit imperium ſæpe, virtus. 70. Honor regius.

The latter word ſignifies not only wiſdom in general, but the higheſt and pureſt wiſdom, the moſt ſublimate and refined wiſdom, the very quinteſſence and ſpirit of wiſdom: Again, it ſignifies not only the quinteſſence, and extract of wiſdom, but being and exiſtence: As if he had ſaid, with him is being, ſubſtance, permanency: divers of the Rabbins tranſlate ſo, and ſo doth Mr. Broughton, He hath the force, and all that is; all being is contracted and brought unto God, for he is the firſt being, and in him all things live, move, and have their being. Now here is much more then we had at the thirteenth verſe, With him is force, and all that is; that is, the being and ſubſiſtence of all creatures is contained in God. God is his own being, he is ſelf-being, ſelf-exiſtence; and all exiſtence or being is derived from him. This is the higheſt Elogy of God. Thirdly, It ſignifies not only the firſt being, but the moſt excellent being, the being and ſubſiſtence (ſo ſome of the Rabbins render it) of the High-Prieſt, of Kings and Emperours, a being in ſovereign authority; fix your thoughts upon the nobleſt ſubſiſtences, ſuch, and infinitely more noble then ſuch, is the ſubſiſtence of God. With God is being, with him is the moſt glorious being; all the excellent beings that are ſcattered through the world, are ſumm'd up, and united in God; yea they are all but ſo many ſtreams, and beams, iſſuing from this ever-flowing Fountain and glorious Sun of being. Fourthly, This word ſignifies alſo the rule, or the certain law of wiſdom and judgment: not only that wiſdom which acts in man, but the rule by which that wiſdom acts. The reaſon of government, or the meaſure by which all things are to be governed, lyes in the boſom of this word. Here alſo another ſhining truth breaks forth from under the clouds of this expreſſion; With him is ſuch wiſdom as is the rule and meaſure of all things which are done in wiſdom. Job being to ſpeak great things of God, that the deceiver and deceived are his, that he looſeth the bonds of Kings, &c. had but need to put this preface to it, With God is the meaſure, the reaſon of all things.

Thus we have found theſe words in the Original, far more fruitful and extenſive in ſence, then thoſe uſed for ſtrength and wiſdom at the thirteenth verſe.

From the laſt interpretation, take this Note,

That the will of God, or God himſelf, is the rule of all things.

God hath not a rule without him, but within him, it is himſelf. In this he differs from the beſt of men: Man hath a rule, but the rule is one thing, and the man is another; the Law is one thing, and the King is another: but God and his rule are the ſame; his will and his law are himſelf; this renders him excellent in dignity, The Lord over all. Tyrants make their will their law; But what is their will? Their will is crooked, a leaden, Leſbian rule, which turneth and changeth, and will faſhion it ſelf to any occaſion, or immergency: their wills are diſtorted and turned this way and that way, even every way. And therefore it muſt needs produce tyranny for a man to make his will his rule, becauſe his will hath not an everlaſting rectitude and ſtraitneſs in it. But the Lord makes his will a law, and there is no tyranny, nothing but juſtice and equity in it. It is impoſſible for any law to be made ſo ſtrait as the will of God is; it is impoſſible to give a rule ſo holy as Gods will is. If we could have a ſupream Magiſtrate, whoſe will were as holy, juſt, and good, as any law, it were reaſon his will ſhould be the law: but this cannot be; therefore it is the prerogative of God alone, whoſe will is (as we have deſcribed) the original of juſtice, and ſo more then a law, which is but the meaſure of juſtice. The counſels of God are without conſultation, his decrees without deliberation: he hath all wiſdom without ſtudy or experience; all knowledge and evidence of things without diſcourſing upon premiſes, or drawing down concluſions. And whence is this? but becauſe with him is this certain rule which cannot err. The Pope challengeth to himſelf, that, though he may err in his private actions as he is a man, yet as he is (in Cathedra) ſeated in the Apoſtolick chair, as he is the viſible head of the Church, he cannot err; his will is the rule: we ſee what rule it is, by the rules which it hath given. Who can ſay that is clean, which brings forth an unclean thing; or ſtrait and true, which brings forth that which is crooked and erroneous? Sinful actings ſpeak ſinful men, and his actings have been ſinful enough to ſpeak him (what is written of him) The man of ſin. The actings of God have been ſo holy, that they declare him The holy God; and his wayes ſo wiſe and juſt, that they proclaim his Wiſdom to be the unerring rule of juſtice. With him is ſtrength and wiſdom.

Job having thus premiſed the unſearchable wiſdom and inſuperable ſtrength of God, giveth a proof of both in the next words,

The deceived and the deceiver are his.

שגג Ignoravit שגה In Hiphil errare fecit.

The deceived.] Is paſſive, A man miſled through ignorance or inadvertency: The deceiver, is active; he conſults and plots to catch the ſimple in his ſnare: Yet the word may ſignifie alſo to ſeduce ignorantly; for as all are deceived through ignorance (he is not deceived, who knows that he is) ſo ſome deceive through ignorance; ſuppoſing they give good counſel, and hold out the truth, when they are wrapt up in, and blinded with the darkneſs of error. And though moſt deceivers deceive knowingly, and intend to do the evil which they do, yet ignorance cauſeth ſome to deceive; and did they know better they would not do ſo bad. But under what notion ſoever any man is deceived, or becomes a deceiver, the Text entitles them both to God.

Ex Hebræis multi per facientem errare Satanam nimis arcte intelligunt.

The deceived and the deceiver are his.] I ſhall open two things about it.

1. Who are the deceived and the deceiver.
2. In what ſence they are ſaid to be his, that is, the Lords.

There are ſome, who by the deceiver, underſtand the Devil, who is indeed the great deceiver and impoſtor: he wrought the firſt deceit in the world, and to deceive is his continual trade in the world. Men do but uſe deceit in their Trades and Tranſactions; but the Devils trade and all his tranſactions are deceit. Yet we muſt not reſtrain and narrow up this Scripture to him only. God conſidereth that great deceiver, and all that are deceived by him. But Job diſcourſeth of men, not of devils; and then the deceivers and the deceived are of two ſorts.

1. In matters of Religion, or in ſpiritual things.
2. In matters of the world, or in civil things.

In matters of Religion, there is much deceiving, and many are deceived: Chriſt foretells it will be ſo (Matth. 24. 24.) There ſhall ariſe falſe Chriſts, and falſe Prophets, and ſhall ſhew great ſigns and wonders, in ſo much that (if it were poſſible) they ſhall deceive the very elect. But though it be impoſſible for them to deceive the elect, yet their attempt ſhall not be without too much ſucceſs. For, Take heed (ſaith Chriſt to his Diſciples, ver. 4, 5.) that no man deceive you, for many ſhall come in my name, ſaying, I am Chriſt, and ſhall deceive many. Their deceits ſhall proſper. Paul (Tit. 1. 10.) ſpeaks of deceivers who ſubvert whole houſes: not by outward violence, but by cunning craftineſs, they overthrow their faith, and turn them from the truth: thus they deceived whole families.

Secondly, There is The deceiver and the deceived in civil things, or in matters of the world. And theſe are of two ſorts.

Non ſolum hæc quæ loquitur Job, de ψευδοθρησκίαις intellexerim ſed de omnibus erroribus tũ in politiâ & civitatibus regendis, tum in domo, &c. Merc.

Firſt, In commerce and trading: Thus we read (Prov. 11. 1.) Of the falſe ballance, which is an abomination to the Lord. And the Prophet Micah brings in the Lord diſdaining at theſe deceivers, (Chap. 6. 11.) Shall I count them pure with the wicked ballances, and with the bag of deceitful weights? for the rich men thereof are full of violence, and the inhabitants thereof have ſpoken lyes (he means Exchange-lyes, Warehouſe-lyes, Shop-lyes, the lyes of the ſeller, or of the buyer) and their tongue is deceitful in their mouth.

Secondly, In matters of government and policy, about which the greateſt deceits and jugglings have been exerciſed in all the ages of the world. What crafty Councellors ſuggeſt, ſimple plain-hearted men are taken with, and often miſled to their own deſtruction. In Abſalom's rebellion there went two hundred men out of Jeruſalem that were called, and they went in their ſimplicity, and they knew not any thing, namely, of Abſolom's intent of aſpiring to his Fathers Throne: They were meerly catcht, and ſurpriſed with his wilely inſinuations. Polititians are skill'd to put fair vizards upon foul faces, and cover their wicked deſigns with honeſt pretences. Theſe are State-ſophiſters; their ſtudy is to put fallacies and cheats upon the common people. All theſe deceivers, and they who are deceived by them, are comprehended under this general affirmation, The deceived and the deceiver are his.

How His?

לא Ejus vel ei vel ab eo eſt errans & errare faciens. Merc.

The Hebrew is rendred, or rather paraphraſed three wayes. Firſt, They are of him. Secondly, To him. Thirdly, From him. We tranſlate, They are his, and that may include all three. Yea, there is a five-fold his, which I may hint to clear this point.

Firſt, His by creation.

Secondly, His by poſſeſſion.

Thirdly, His for uſe and ſervice.

Fourthly, His by way of dominion, or diſpoſal.

Laſtly, His by way of ſpecial affection and appropriation.

The two former of theſe are too little for the point: For, to ſay the deceived and the deceiver are his, by creation, is indeed to ſay nothing peculiar to this point: for ſo is the earth, and the ſea, and the ſtorms, and the winds, every thing is his, they are all Gods creatures. And ſecondly, to ſay they are his by way of poſſeſſion, that he is the Lord and Proprietor of them, this alſo is too little, for ſo (Pſal. 50.) All the beaſts of the forreſts are his, and the cattel upon a thouſand hills. To ſay no more of this deceiver, and the deceived, then you may ſay of the beaſts of the field, or of the fowls of the air, or of the fiſhes in the ſea, that the Lord is the maker and poſſeſſor of them, is below the purpoſe of Job, and the honour of God. And as theſe two are not enough, ſo the fifth way of being his, is too much, for they are not his by way of ſpecial affection and appropriation. That's too great a priviledge for the deceiver and the deceived: for ſo only (among men) the Saints are his. Theſe are Gods peculiars, and beloved ones, as he ſpeaks of his people Iſrael, to Moſes, Exod. 19. 5. Now therefore if ye will obey my voice, and keep my covenant, then ye ſhall be a peculiar treaſure unto me above all people, for all the earth is mine. And though it be poſſible for many that are deceived, and for ſome who deceive at preſent, to be his, even in this way of ſpecial appropriation; yet this were too high a ſenſe to give this Text; therefore we ſhall take the his in the third and fourth ſences. They are his; that is, his to uſe, or he makes uſe of them: and they are his to diſpoſe; that is, he diſpoſeth and ordereth, both the deceiver and the deceived, to his own righteous ends and holy purpoſes.

Both which may be more fully demonſtrated, by theſe following interpretations.

Ipſe novit. Vul.

Firſt, He knoweth them: ſo the vulgar reads it, He knoweth the deceiver, or the deceiver is known to him, and ſo alſo is the deceived: As if he had ſaid, The Lord is acquainted with the deceiver, though he thinks that he walks in a miſt, or is wrapt up in a cloud, though he flatter himſelf that no eye ſees him; yet whether he be a deceiver in matters of Religion, or in matters of Trade and State-policy, God knows what he is; he whoſe ſeven eyes run through the whole earth, ſees him throughly. For when it is ſaid, that the Lord knows the deceiver, it is not meant only thus, that he knows his name or perſon, There goes a deceiver, there's a falſe heart, there's a head full of errors and rotten principles; but the Lord knoweth with what artifices and fetches, with what devices and projects, by what wayes and engines, he compaſſeth and carrieth on the trade of deceiving. He knows alſo by what miſrepreſentations, falſe gloſſes, and ſemblances of truth, the deceived have been intrapt and drawn into the ſnare. To do this is one of the higheſt acts of wiſdom. To diſcern how, and wherein another hath been deceived, ſhews as much ſoundneſs of underſtanding, as not to be deceived. Any fool commits, or runs into error, only a wiſe man finds it out; Eccleſ. 1. 17. I gave my heart to know wiſdom, and to know madneſs and folly. Solomon ſtudied as much to know folly, as to know wiſdom. Only truth diſcovers falſhood, and right the wrong.

Novit quã arte quo aſtu fallit decipiẽns, cujus rei ignorantiâ vel inanimadvertentia falſa pro veris amplectitur errans, quod non niſi per ſapientiam fieri poteſt. Merl.

Secondly, deceiver and the deceived are his, ſounds thus much, That God will make them both to be accountable unto himſelf.

himſelf. A maſter ſaith to his ſteward or ſervant, You ſhall give me an account of theſe actions and expences; ſo ſaith God to the deceiver, and the deceived, you ſhall anſwer for what you have done, you that deceive ſhall be ſure to pay for it; and you that are deceived ſhall not eſcape a tryal and a cenſure, for your careleſneſs and your folly: you ſhould have look'd better to it, 'twas your duty to prove all things and to hold faſt that which was good. Some are deceived in civil things, and are blameleſs; It is their affliction to be deceived, not their ſin: but there is no man that is deceived in ſpiritual things, and is blameleſs; there it is every mans ſin not to know his duty, and not to try before he approves. The ſame word in the Greek ſignifies both to prove, and to approve; implying that no man ought to approve any thing before he hath proved it. It is no honour to a man to approve that which is true, before he proves it: but he that approves an errour before he hath any proof of it, runs himſelf into a double ſin: Firſt, of being deceived: Secondly, of not ſo much as conſidering whether he were or no. But which way ſoever a man is deceived, whether through ignorance or idleneſs, whether becauſe he could not find the truth when he ſearcht for it, or becauſe he would not be at the coſt and pains to ſearch for it, whether it were this or that by which he is deceived, God will reckon with him about it; much more then will he reckon with deceivers, whether they have deceived ſimply, or upon deſign, though theſe laſt ſhall be deepeſt in condemnation. God will arraign all impoſtors and cheaters, all mountebanks and corrupters of truth, whether in ſpirituals or in civils; They are all his, and they ſhall ſtand before him to receive according to their deeds of darkneſs and deceit.

Neq; permiſſioni tantũ Domini hoc Scriptura tribuit, ut quidam putant, qui ſapientiorũ ſpiritu ſãcto videri volunt. Merc. Job vult indicare divina providentia fieri, quod quidã errant, quidam vero alios decipiãt & in errores inducant.

Thirdly, The deceiver and the deceived are his, that is (as ſome underſtand it) he permits and ſuffers deceiving and deceit to be in the world; it is from his ſufferance that there are any ſuch. This is a truth, though not all the truth; The Lord doth not will any deceit, yet there can be no deceit whether he will or no; it is poſſible, yea very eaſie for him to hinder both the deceiver and the deceived, but he is not obliged to do it, neither is he pleaſed to do it: he doth not alwayes give check to deceivers, nor doth he at all times ſet a bar in their way. He alwayes hinders errour morally, by declaring againſt it; but he doth not alwayes hinder it powerfully and effectually by acting againſt it. Thus the deceiver and the deceived are his by permiſſion: but this is not all, they are more his then thus. For,

Fourthly, The deceiver and the deceived are ſaid to be his, becauſe he ordereth and diſpoſeth them; he ſendeth out deceivers, and giveth men up to be deceived. He is active in this diſpenſation, yet free from the leaſt touch of pollution. He is not the author of the deceit, though he be the orderer and diſpoſer of it. Mr. Calvin gives his judgement upon the place to this effect, roundly and clearly. To ſay (ſaith he) that God doth only permit men to deceive, and to be deceived, is a very cold expreſſion, and ſpeaks little, yea it is a derogation to the honour of God; for the Lord in infinite wiſdom and holineſs, diſpoſeth of the errours of men, and of thoſe that lead them into errour.

There are four things, in which the providence of God moves to the ordering of this diſorderly work of man.

Firſt, He orders the perſons, who ſhall deceive, and who ſhall be deceived; Hence it is ſaid (Matth. 24.) that the falſe prophets, and the falſe Chriſts, ariſing in the latter times, ſhould (if it were poſſible) deceive the very elect. Then the elect are perſons exempt; deceivers may diſtemper them, but they ſhall never poiſon them.

Secondly, When or what time any ſhall deceive or be deceived, is alſo ordered by God. We read that Satan was bound for a thouſand years, that he ſhould not deceive the nations (Rev. 20.) It was God that bound him. Satan muſt be in a chain of divine providence a thouſand years, and after that he muſt be looſed a little ſeaſon. He that bound him looſed him; and as he bound him that he ſhould not deceive, ſo he looſed him to deceive the Nations. But how doth Satan deceive? Not immediately by himſelf; the devil doth not come above-board (as we ſpeak) he doth not walk in his own likeneſs, and appear as he is, that would terrifie men, rather then deceive them; but he acts by transforming himſelf into an angel of light. He ſtirreth up the ſpirits of men, to deceive, as he ſtirreth them up to vex and perſecute thoſe who will not be deceived: as the devil is ſaid to caſt thoſe witneſſes of the truth into priſon, who are impriſoned by men at his inſtigation (Rev. 2.10.) ſo he is ſaid to deceive and lead thoſe into errour, who are miſled by men at his inſtigation. It was the devil who filled the heart of Ananias, to vent a verbal lye; and the devil fills the hearts of deceivers to vent and maintain doctrinal lies. The times of theſe deceivers are in the hand of God; he hath ſet down the term when they ſhall begin, and how long they ſhall continue their enſnaring Trade.

Thirdly, God orders how far any man ſhall deceive, or to what degree his deceit ſhall prevail. Hence the Apoſtle ſpeaking of deceivers, men of corrupt mindes, reprobate concerning the faith, concludes, but they ſhall proceed no further (2 Tim, 3.9.) As the maliciousneſs, ſo the deceivableneſs of men would know no bounds, if God did not bound it. But becauſe he doth, therefore though they would, yet they ſhall proceed no further. No man can do good till God aſſiſts him, and no man ſhall do hurt when God will ſtop him.

Thus far the Lord is active in ordering the deceiver, and the deceived. That Scripture is clear for it (1 King. 22.22.) Ahab was deceived, and the falſe prophets deceived him; Whence was it? The deceivers and the deceived were under the hand of God. Micaiah ſpake it out plainly, as Ahab had deſired (1 King. 22. 19, 20.) I ſaw the Lord ſitting upon his Throne, &c. And the Lord ſaid, who ſhall perſwade Ahab, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-Gilead? &c. And there came forth a ſpirit and ſtood before the Lord, and ſaid, I will perſwade him. And the Lord ſaid, thou ſhalt perſwade him, and prevail alſo, go forth, and do ſo. Now therefore (ſaith the Prophet) the Lord hath put a lying ſpirit in the mouth of all theſe thy prophets. The Lord hath done it: He was active in it, yet full of holineſs and truth in himſelf, as well as of juſtice and wrath againſt Ahab. Becauſe Ahab hated the true Prophet, therefore he is given up to the teaching of falſe prophets. Here was more then a bare ſuffering: God, as a Judge, put a lying ſpirit, as his executioner, into the mouths of thoſe lying prophets. They who like not plain-dealing, are juſtly flattered into deſtruction. The Apoſtle ſpeaking of that groſs deception under which the Jews then lay, and ſtill lye to this day; aſcribes it to God by Scripture Authority, According as it is written, God hath given them the ſpirit of ſlumber; eyes that they ſhould not ſee, and ears that they ſhould not hear unto this day, (Rom. 11. 8.) And the Lord takes it upon himſelf in down right words, (Ezek. 14. 9.) If the Prophet be deceived when he hath ſpoken a thing, I the Lord have deceived that Prophet. Not that the Lord did inſtil or infuſe errour into the Prophet; he is the God of truth, he is the author of truth, and therefore cannot be the author of errour; he is the revenger of errour, and therefore alſo he cannot be the abetter of it. Yet the Lord ſaith, I have deceived him. Obſerve (ſaith Calvin) God ſlinks not into a corner, ſaying I permitted it, and ſuffered it, I drew a curtain between me and the world, and let men do what they pleaſed, No, but he ſtandeth in the open light, and ſaith, I have deceived that Prophet. The man of ſin is propheſied coming with all deceiveableneſs of unrighteouſneſs, in them that periſh, becauſe they received not the love of the truth: For this cauſe God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſion, that they ſhould believe a lye. The deluſion is of their deſerving, but of Gods ſending: They deſerve it becauſe they never loved the truth, and God ſends it becauſe he ever loveth juſtice.

And as he ſends theſe ſpiritual deluſions, ſo he likewiſe ſends political deluſions. When a people are deceived and led away from the wholeſome rules of government, when they have State tricks put upon them: We may conclude as the Prophet doth, when Egypt was ſeduced (Iſa. 19. 14.) The Lord hath mingled a perverſe ſpirit in the midſt thereof, and they have cauſed Egypt to erre in every work thereof. Nations, through the juſt judgement of God, run into errour after errour, and ſtagger like a drunken man in his vomit, till they fall into the pit, and into the ſnare of ſome utter deſolation.

Further, The deceiver and the deceived are his; that is, the Lord improves both, to ſerve his own ends, to bring about his counſels, and promote his glory. We think nothing ſerves the ends of God but the publication of truth; yes, the publiſhing and ſpreading of errours ſerve his ends too, and bring his purpoſes to paſs. Carnal reaſon ſtartles at this, and cannot make it out. But go into the ſanctuary, and learn what this meaneth: remember Jobs preface, With him is ſtrength and wiſdom, and you will be ſatisfied. The preface makes the doctrine eaſie: and who is not convinced that there is infinite wiſdom, and a ſtrait rule in him, who can regulate the irregularity and crookedneſs, the errours and abſurdities of man? Who can find out the depth of his wiſdom, who is able to make ſuch improvements out of folly, and give an advantage to truth, by the breaking out of falſity? Doth not the glory of God ſhine bright in this? The queſtion is put by Auguſtine, in his 22. book of the City of God, Why doth not God remove and ſweep ſin and errour out of the world? He anſwers, It is better, and an act of greater power to make good out of evil, then not to ſuffer evil to be: As it is one of the higheſt acts of grace in man, to render good for evil: ſo it is one of the higheſt acts of power in God to draw good out of evil. We may well conclude, wiſdom and ſtrength are his, whom the craft and skill of men to deceive cannot circumvent, and whom the ſillineſs and folly of men in being deceived cannot diſappoint. In how clear a light doth God dwell, yea how clear a light is God, who makes his way without one wry ſtep through all the miſts and darkneſs of this world? It argues an infinite ſoveraignty in God, that he doth his work by that which ſeems to work againſt him. Deceivers do the work of God, though they intend nothing but their own.

Hinc patet quod apud ipſum eſt ſapientia. Nam qui ſuperior eſt omni calliditate humana, atq; providentiã habet deceptionũ & errorũ non poteſt eſſe niſi infinitè ſapiẽs. Pined. Potentius & melius eſt de malis etiam benefacere, quam mala eſſe nõ ſinere. Auguſt

For firſt, God would have his people tried, and he tries them by thoſe who attempt to deceive them. (Deut. 13. 1, 2.) If there ariſe among you a Prophet, that ſpeaks unto thee, ſaying, let us go after other Gods, &c. Thou ſhalt not hearken unto the words of that Prophet, for the Lord your God proveth you. Here is the account which God gives, why he lets deceivers go abroad, and take their ſcope among his people, It is to prove his people. The Apoſtle gives the ſame reaſon, (1 Cor. 11. 19.) For there muſt be alſo hereſies among you, that they which are approved may be made manifeſt among you. It would never appear either what falſe principles corrupt the hearts and underſtandings of men, or what truth and ſincerity are lodged there, if the Lord did not let out deceivers and falſe prophets, to open their packs of lies in their ſight or hearing.

Secondly, God would have us, not only hold truth, but be zealous for the truth, and contend earneſtly for the faith which was once delivered to the Saints: He therefore ſends out ſome to oppoſe it. Some are buſied in ſpreading deceits, that we may learn to be more buſie in withſtanding them, or more watchful in avoiding them. When we hear that there are Cut-purſes in a crowd, every man looks to his purſe; ſo when we hear that deceivers and impoſtors are in the Church, and that they come with ſuch an effectualneſs of deceit, that if it were poſſible they ſhould deceive the very elect, this muſt needs awaken all to look to themſelves; will you not try what ye receive, when ye hear there are deceivers, and teachers of falſe doctrine are abroad, as well as teachers of the truth? and that there are blind guides, as well as Seers gone forth? If nothing but truth could poſſibly be offered, our care and pains to prove what is offered might be ſpared: Neither would it be needful for us to pray unto Chriſt (the great Prophet) to keep us in his truth, but only to give us faith to receive, and wills to obey his truth. But ſeeing there are deceivers abroad, ſhall we not examine before we receive? ſhall we not weigh and try all in the balance of the Sanctuary, by the touchſtone of the word, ere we believe it?

If any ask, Why are ſo many miſled into errour, and poiſoned with unwholſom doctrine? why doth not God preſerve, and antidote all places againſt theſe infections? The Prophet Ezekiel hints us an anſwer (chap. 14. verſ. 7.) God puniſheth one ſin with another. When men continue in ſins of practice, God lets them fall into ſinful opinions. He juſtly blinds their eyes againſt his truth, who harden their hearts againſt his fear, and put the ſtumbling block of their iniquity before their faces. A ſecond reaſon is given by the Apoſtle (2 Theſ. 2.) He had ſaid, verſ. 11. God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſion, the reaſon follows, it is, becauſe they received not the love of the truth: The underſtanding may ſubmit, while the affections ſtand out. It is eaſier to receive truth, then to receive the love of the truth. And how much truth ſo ever we receive without love to it, leaves us ſtill under the wrath of God. The wrath of God is viſible in his judgements; and this is judgement in perfection, to be given up to ſtrong deluſion. Thoſe are the ſoreſt puniſhments which are made of ſins. They are puniſhed with the belief of errour, who love not truth. Falſe doctrines are fit plagues for falſe hearts. And as they ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes, who know their maſters will and do it not, ſo alſo ſhall they who know it, and love it not; and indeed theſe and the former are the ſame. The reaſon why any doth not what he knows, is becauſe he doth not love it; and he that loves it, will do it, for love is the fulfilling of the commandment.

By all it appears, how the deceiver and the deceived are Gods. Mr. Broughton hath put the ſum of theſe ſeveral interpretations into his tranſlation. By him, and from him, and for him, are deceivers and deceived. From him, that is, he ſendeth them. By him, that is, he ſuffers and orders them. For him, that is, they promote his glory, and ſerve his ends, either to try and diſcover who are faithful, or to puniſh thoſe who are falſe.

Take one note by way of inference from the whole. If the deceiver and the deceived are the Lords, then ſurely they who lead others into truth, and they that are led into truth, are his much more. Truth teachers, and truths receivers, lye, as, in the boſom of God, and are his by ſpecial approbation; They are to him as the apple of his eye, as his precious jewels; They are his Scholars, he teacheth them; he teacheth thoſe that teach truth, and they who learn truth are taught of him; The Lord feeds them with knowledge and underſtanding; He maketh them to lye down in green paſtures (of ſound doctrine) he leadeth them beſide the ſtill waters of ſpiritual conſolation. He will open the gates of ſalvation, to a righteous nation who love the truth, (Iſa. 26. 1.) They are his, and none ſhall pluck them out of his hands; they ſhall not be left either to the cunning craftineſs of deceivers, or to the rough violence of oppreſſours. And though ſuch as publiſh and receive the truth may ſuffer for it, yet they ſhall never looſe by it. Truth is ſuch a commodity as never broke the buyer, what ever it coſt him.

VERS. 17, 18.

He leadeth Counſellours away ſpoiled, and maketh the Judges fools.

He looſeth the bonds of Kings, and girdeth their loins with a girdle.

JOB inſiſteth upon his former argument, to illuſtrate the power and wiſdom of God. He had done it in natural things at the 15th verſ. He withholdeth the waters, and they dry up. He did it in civil and ſpiritual things, at the 16th verſ. The deceived and the deceiver are his. In this context he enumerates more diſtinctly, the ſeveral ſorts and degrees of men, whom the Lord by the wonderful adminiſtrations of his power and wiſdom, ſets up or caſts down.

In the former verſe we heard of deceivers in Religion, and of deceivers in policy: of Church-deceivers, and of State-deceivers. The inſtances given here are about the latter: we may call them State-heretic ks, deceiving, or being deceived in the miniſtery of juſtice, to Kingdoms and Commonwealths. And becauſe the intent of Job is to ſhew the mutations of States and Kingdoms, therefore he ſpeaks of thoſe who are the chief ſupporters, the moſt eminent pillars of States and Kingdoms. Of theſe he names, 1. Councellours. 2. Judges. 3. Kings; in whoſe miſcarriages whole Kingdoms miſcarry.

Verſibus his quinq; deſcribitur Monarchici ſtatus Labefactatio atque everſio. Merl. Affert rara & extraordinaria quæ Deus facit, ut his tremendis operibus & judiciis veterũ à nobis excutiat. Merc.

It is here obſervable in general, that Job being to deſcribe the providences of God in the world, doth not meddle with ſmall matters, as what God doth to a private perſon, or ſingle families; but he deals in thoſe which are moſt eminent, the tranſmutations of Kingdoms, which fall within the obſervation of the whole world. If a particular man be undone or ruined, his next neighbour takes notice of it, but it is ſcarce known in the next village: But when Kingdoms are ruined, all States and Kingdoms ring of it, ſuch events are the talk and wonder of the Nations round about.

Secondly, He doth not inſtance in the founding and eſtabliſhing of Kingdoms, wherein yet the wiſdom and power of God are very glorious; but in their deſtruction and putting down. And the reaſon is, becauſe we take greater notice of God in pulling down, then we do in building up; we obſerve him more when he killeth, then when he maketh alive; his withdrawings are more noted then his preſence, and we are more ſenſible of our privations, then of our injoyments. The Sun is more looked at in an ecclipſe, then when it ſhineth with pureſt luſtre.

Further, He giveth inſtance in theſe, becauſe we are apt to caſt the miſcarriages of Kingdoms upon ſecond cauſes. It was the pride of ſuch, the envy of others, the ambition of a third ſort, or the unfaithfulneſs of a fourth, which undid all; we ſeldom look up to the hand of God, while we complain ſo much of men. In all changes here below, Job carrieth our thoughts directly to God, He leadeth Counſellours away ſpoiled: Do not ſtay enquiring how weakly Counſellours adviſed, or how fooliſhly Judges gave their ſentence, it is God that doth all theſe things, He leadeth Counſellours away ſpoiled, and maketh the Judges fools, &c. More diſtinctly,

He leadeth.] The Hebrew is, he makes them go, he makes them go whether they will or no: he leadeth them from the height of their dignity, into a deſpiſed condition. No man hath any mind to ſuch a motion.

Counſellours.] Counſellours (as the word is ordinarily taken) are ſuch as give advice in publick affairs; they chaulk out the way for action; that's the proper work of counſel; Counſel is to lay the deſign, and to cut out the means, how buſineſſes are to be carried, how to be mannaged, then others are called to execute. Counſel tables order the affairs of the whole world: they give the rule, and draw the method, they appoint the inſtruments and ſet the time how all ſhall be done. A Counſellour is like the Pilot at the helm, ſteering the veſſels courſe, (Prov. 11. 14.) Where no counſel is, the people fall, but in the multitude of Counſellours there is ſafety. Hence when Job would ſet forth the deſtruction of a people, he tells us that God leadeth Counſellours

Διάγω βουλευτὰς αἰχμαλώτους. Sept. Ducit conſultores captivos.

Away ſpoiled.] The Hebrew is variouſly interpreted. The Septuagint ſaith, He leadeth them away as captives. Then the ſence riſeth thus, That the Lord takes the wiſe Counſellours of the earth, as priſoners in war; when they in their counſels and deſigns have ſet themſelves againſt his Throne and Kingdom, when they have been deviſing devices againſt his people; then the Lord comes out with his Army, conquers them, and leads them captive. When Chriſt aſcended upon high, (Pſal. 68. 18.) He led captivity captive, or, He captivated captivity; that is, he led thoſe captive who had captivated his people; or he led his people, who were miſerable captives to Satan, into a bleſſed captivity to himſelf. And as he led captivity captive, ſo he can lead liberty captive, making thoſe who injoyed the greateſt liberty, even Counſellours themſelves, his captives.

There are three wayes in which this leading Counſellours ſpoiled and captivated may be underſtood.

De gradu dignitatis dejicit. Druſ.

Firſt, Spoiled of their honour and reputation. It is as eaſie as it is uſual with the Lord, to ſpoil thoſe of honour in the world, who uſe their counſels and their power againſt thoſe whom he honours. It is as great an affliction to caſt them out of the hearts of men, (eſpecially of good men) as out of their eſtates. The hand of God is in nothing more viſible then in making them a deteſtation among men, who were the delight of men. Honour is one of the richeſt ſpoils that can be taken from any man, eſpecially from Counſellours; who alwayes do as much with their reputation, as with their reaſon, and can do nothing with all their reaſon, when once they have loſt their reputation.

Sapientes hujus ſeculi optato fine dejicit. Pin.

Secondly, He leadeth them away ſpoiled of their hopes and expectations, ſpoiled of the booty and of the prey which they deſigned to themſelves; they thought of rich advantages by ſpoiling others, but they are led away ſpoiled. To which ſence the words are well expounded, He doth caſt the wiſe men of this world from their wiſhed end: They who preſumed and promiſed themſelves great ſpoils, become a ſpoil. Eliphaz treateth at large of this point, (Chap. 5. 12.) He diſappointeth the devices of the crafty, ſo that their hand cannot perform their enterpriſe.

Hebræi ſpoliatos mente & judicio exponunt. Merc.

Adducit ſapientes in prædā ſcientiæ: i. e. eorū ſapientiam quaſi prædam & ſpolia diripit. Rab. Moyſ.

Thirdly, Theſe Counſellours are often ſpoiled, not only of their honour and credit, of their ends and hopes, but alſo of their wits and wiſdom. They whoſe wits and wiſdom continue as high and quick as ever, may yet be diſappointed in their counſels, and looſe both their ends and honour: But the Lord doth ſometimes ſpoil the wiſe of wiſdom, and knowing men of underſtanding. The Hebrew Doctors delight moſt in this interpretation, He preyeth upon the wiſdom of the wiſe; they think themſelves able to outreach and outpolicy all the world: Yet God blaſts their gifts, and darkens their underſtandings, he puts them out of their wits, and makes their judgements injudicious. He gives them up (as he did thoſe Gentiles, who waxed vain in their imaginations, Rom. 1. 28.) to a reprobate mind, to an unjudging, or an unapproving ſpirit. They who knowingly put darkneſs for light, and light for darkneſs, evil for good, and good for evil, wrong for right, and right for wrong, ſhall do it at laſt for want of knowledge. They who act againſt their light, ſhall not have light to act by. And as ſome counſellours are thus ſpoiled for a puniſhment to themſelves, ſo not a few are ſpoiled that they may be a puniſhment to others. For this cauſe they are diſabled to reſolve what is ſafe for a people, and what is unſafe; what may be for their uniting, or what for their dividing; what for the ſetling, or what for the diſturbing of affairs. (Pſal. 75. 5.) The ſtout hearted are ſpoiled; ſo we read, but ſome tranſlate, They are ſpoiled of their ſtout heart: The ſtout hearted, the ſtrong are ſpoiled; the ſtrong man may be ſpoiled by a ſtronger: that's a good ſence, but it is more elegantly rendred, they are ſpoiled of their ſtout heart, that is, the Lord takes their heart out of their boſom. Daring men, who fear nothing, are turned into Magor-miſſa-bibs, fear round about; their ſtout hearts are taken from them; and then, they are ſo far from being a terrour to other men, that they run from the ſhadow of a man: Their courage is down, they cannot give a child a confident look, much leſs look dangers or enemies in the face. Now, as the Lord ſpoils Souldiers and warriours of their ſtout hearts, ſo he ſpoileth Counſellours of their cunning and politick hearts, of their wiſe hearts; the politick hearts are ſpoiled, or, they are ſpoiled of their politick hearts. Rabbi Moſes (as was noted) readeth this text ſo, he bringeth wiſe men into a ſpoil of their wiſdom, that is, he takes their wiſdom as a prey: and as a man that is ſpoiled, is ſent away without a peny in his purſe, or a garment upon his back, ſo theſe wiſe Counſellours are ſent away without any wit in their heads, or prudence in their breaſts. One of the Greek tranſlatours, (both the Hebrews and the Greeks joyn in this ſence) gives it thus, He leadeth away Counſellours to uncounſellableneſs, or he leadeth them away (ſaith another) into penury or poverty of counſel, they have not ſo much as a peny worth of counſel about them, if one ſhould come to ask it of them. The Vulgar Latine comes near this ſence, rendering thus, He leadeth the Counſellours into a fooliſh end, or, into a fooliſh concluſion of their buſineſs; that is, he brings their counſels to ſuch an end, that they ſhall be accounted fools and unwiſe men, by all men of wiſdom.

Spoliati ſūt fortes corde, q.d. privati animo animoſitate & fortitudine.

Δάγων βουλευτὰς εἰς ἀβουλίαν. Symach.

Theſe three wayes we may underſtand this text, that God leadeth Counſellours away ſpoiled. All which are wrapped up in a fourth, he brings them into ſtraits and difficulties, like captives in chains, and ſo drags them after the chariot of his triumphing providence, drawn by his own infinite wiſdom and ſtrength: And thus they become a ſpectacle of ſcorn or pity to all beholders.

Adducit ut prædā. Tyg.

Further, Conſider that theſe Counſellours may be of two ſorts. Firſt, Such as give evil counſel againſt a Kingdom or State, theſe are uſually led away ſpoiled of their honour, and of their hopes, of their ends, yea and of their wits. Secondly, Such as give good counſel, and that with all their might, and the beſt of their underſtanding, yet, even theſe are ſometimes led away ſpoiled of all: So that though they would, yet they ſhall not be able to direct or deliver thoſe that truſt them and depend upon them. Hence Obſerve, Firſt, A ſpirit of counſel is the gift of God.

It is a ſpecial gift of God to be able to give good counſel: it is a great gift of God, to be willing to receive good counſel. I ſcarce know which is the greater, to be willing to receive good counſel, or to be able to give it. Many can give good counſel, who will not receive it: To give or to receive are the gift of God.

Secondly Obſerve, Kingdoms and States fail, when counſels fail.

Jobs ſcope is to ſhew the alterations that are in Kingdoms: now as by the Majeſty of Kings, the wiſdom of Counſellours, the prudence of Judges, the eloquence of Orators, and valour of Souldiers, Kingdoms flouriſh and are eſtabliſhed; ſo by the taking away or decay of theſe, Kingdoms decay and come to nothing, or to that which is next to nothing, a chaos of confuſion. This judgement is threatned, (Iſa. 3.4.) In that day the Lord will take away from Jeruſalem, the ſtay and the ſtaff, the whole ſtay of bread, and the whole ſtay of water. There is a twofold ſtaff of a people, there is a natural ſtaff, and there is a civil ſtaff; the natural ſtaff is bread and water, which by a Synechdoche are put for all the neceſſary ſupports of a natural life. The removal of theſe is ruine; yet God when he intends ruine, takes away other ſtayes beſides theſe. The ſame Prophet proceeds in this ſad narrative, He will take away alſo the mighty man, and the man of war, the Judge, and the Prophet, and the Prudent, and the Ancient, the Captain of fifty, and the Honourable man, and the Counſellour. Thus the Lord takes away the civil ſtaff and ſtay of a people, that is, men inabled for publick ſervices. And when theſe foundations of humane ſociety are out of courſe or removed out of place, down comes the roof and higheſt pinnacles of the moſt potent Commonwealths. For as when viſion, that is, the word preached, faileth, the people periſh; (the preaching of the word is called a viſion, either becauſe the word was received by viſion from God, or becauſe in it, the Lord is ſeen, and his truth is diſcovered to us.) Now (I ſay) as when this viſion faileth, the people periſh, that is, their ſouls periſh, the ſpiritual part periſheth, they periſh in the capacity of a Church: So when counſel fails, the people periſh in their civil capacity, as they are a politick State or Commonwealth. Learn hence, what need we have to pray for the maintenance of theſe ſtayes. God in judgement may lead our Counſellours away ſpoiled, and then we are ſpoiled.

Thirdly Obſerve, The ruine of Kingdoms is not from chance and fortune, but by the decree and purpoſes of God.

He leadeth Counſellours away ſpoiled. He in mercy giveth Counſellours, to eſtabliſh and preſerve Kingdoms; and when either Counſellours abuſe their wiſdom, or when a people abuſe the bleſſings which God giveth, or hath reſtored to them by their Counſels, then he takes them away, he ſpoileth the Counſellours that the people may be ſpoiled. We ſometimes wonder that Counſellours have no more wiſdom, we ſhould rather be humbled that our ſelves have no more goodneſs. Uſually a people are firſt ſpoiled of goodneſs, before Counſellours are ſpoiled of wiſdom to give advice, or are ſucceſsleſs in what they adviſe. If God doth this, we cannot complain: When he gives Counſellours, he is not indebted to do it; and when he takes them away he is provoked to do it; he takes them not away whileſt good counſels are received, or while we are thankful to him for the good we receive by counſel. When the Lord would deſtroy Egypt, he ſpoiled the Counſellors of Egypt (Jer. 19.11,12,13.) Surely the Princes of Zoan are fools, the counſel of the wiſe Counſellors of Pharaoh is become brutiſh; How ſay ye unto Pharaoh, I am the ſon of the wiſe, the ſon of ancient Kings? The Prophet diſcovers their degeneracy from their anceſtours. And whence was all this? Was this from the turning of fortunes wheel, as heathens uſed to ſpeak? No, verſ. 17. Becauſe of the Counſel of the Lord of hoſts, which he hath determined againſt it. The Lord had a Counſel, and his Counſel was againſt Egypt, therefore the Counſel of the wiſe ſhall not help Egypt: For the Princes of Zoan ſhall become fools, and the Counſel of the wiſe Counſellours of Pharaoh brutiſh. When the moſt proper means of ſafety cannot ſave, nothing can. And though Counſellours themſelves continue wiſe, yet they ſhall have no better ſucceſs then fools. Achitophels Counſel was in an ill matter, yet it was the beſt Counſel that could be given to facilitate the ends of Abſalom, but the Lord turned it into fooliſhneſs: The event is the ſame, whether God turn (as he did Achitophels) wiſe Counſel into fooliſhneſs, or (as it follows in this text) the wiſeſt Counſellours into fools; both theſe are alike eaſie to God and fatal unto man.

And he makes the Judges fools.

Some expound this as a repetition of the former clauſe. A Counſellour may alſo be a Judge; ſo they are coincident terms. But rather take them diſtinctly, for here are three Officers ſpecified: Firſt, He who is ſupream, the King: Secondly, They who are ſubordinate, the Judge, and the Counſellour. Now as He leadeth Counſellours away ſpoiled, ſo he makes the Judges fools.

The Judge (as diſtinguiſhed from the Counſellour) is one who adminiſtreth juſtice according to law. Judges are ſervants to the law, and rulers to the people, Gen. 19.9. This fellow came in to ſojourn, and he will needs be a Judge; he will govern and give us the rule, he will take upon him to teach us what to do, ſay the Sodomites to Lot. After the death of Joſhua, the ſupream Magiſtrate in Iſrael was called a Judge, till Saul was elected King. Here the Judge is a ſubordinate Magiſtrate, placed under Kings.

He makes the Judges fools.] Not by any poſitive act, infuſing folly. But God may be ſaid to make Judges fools, two wayes. Firſt, By not enlightning their underſtandings, and leaving them in the dark. Secondly, By overreaching their underſtandings, and outwitting them in the light. It is uſual amongſt us, to ſay, of a very wiſe man, he will make ſuch a one a very fool if he deal with him: Not that he puts folly into the man, or withdraweth wiſdom from him, but he doth ſo much overpoiſe him in parts, that when he deals or argues with him, he will appear but a child or a very fool. Thoſe Iſraelites that went to ſearch the land of Canaan were doubtleſs no dwarfs, yet when they ſaw the huge ſons of Anak, they looked on themſelves like graſhoppers. A tall man is but low of ſtature; A rich man but poor; A wiſe man but a fool, in compariſon of him who greatly excels in ſtature, riches or wiſdom. We may take this text either of a privative act, the Lord withdraws and withholds the light, ſo that the Judge cannot ſee the rule of the Law, and then (like a fool) he errs in judgement; or of a ſuperlative act, for though the Judge retain his light, yet the Lord makes a fool of him. Who can tell how much the wiſdom of God exceeds the wiſdom of man, when the Apoſtle tells us, that the fooliſhneſs of God is wiſer then men? 1 Cor. 1.25. If the fooliſhneſs of God (namely that which vain men count fooliſhneſs) be wiſer then men, then ſurely the wiſdom of God will ſoon make the wiſeſt among men fools indeed.

Again, Job doth not ſay, He makes fools Judges; that the Lord doth ſometimes (Iſa. 3.4.) I will give children to be their Princes, and babes ſhall rule over them: The Prophet ſpeaks not of children in age, for Joſiah was a child, and but eight years old, yet a great bleſſing to the Kingdom of Judah; but he means children in underſtanding. The fore-thought of that, troubled Solomon, Eccleſ. 2.19. I hated all my labour which I had taken under the ſun (ſaith he) becauſe I ſhould leave it unto the man that ſhall be after me, and who knoweth whether he ſhall be a wiſe man or a fool? Rehoboam proved a fooliſh Prince. Now as God to puniſh a people makes fools Judges, ſo which is more, He maketh Judges fools; let them be as wiſe as they will, he outwitteth them, and catcheth them in their own devices.

The Vulgar Latine reads it thus, He brings the Judges into aſtoniſhment, or amazement. The Septuagint, He brings them into fear and trembling: Both note the ſame thing, that the Lord caſts them into a conſternation of ſpirit, and then they fall upon erroneous and fooliſh determinations. (Iſa. 19.14.) He mingleth a perverſe ſpirit in the midſt of them. They turn giddy, or are giddy with turning, and know not well what to do, or which way to reſolve.

Judices in ſtuporem, Vulg. in pavorem, Sept. in conturbatione mentis.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, That the wiſeſt men are not alwayes wiſe.

God can make Judges fools. As wiſdom is the gift of God, ſo is the continuance of it: And unleſs we receive a ſupply of wiſdom from God, we ſhall quickly turn fools, and do things rather like mad men, then like men of reaſon and underſtanding. We want daily wiſdom for our daily work, as much as we do daily bread for our daily wants.

Secondly, Failings in judgment are in judgment from God; or, God in judgment makes men fail in judgment.

It is a high judgment of wrath, to diſable men from judging in reaſon.

This God doth, both to puniſh the ſins of Judges, and of thoſe for whom they judge. When a people truſt in the wiſdom of their Judges, when they make them God, of whom God hath only ſaid, Ye are Gods; then God makes them leſs then men. (Acts 12.) When Herod made an Oration, the people cryed, The voice of God, and not of man. Judges ſhould give glory to God, as Herod did not, and ſo was conſumed of Worms; yet God may ſend a Worm into the counſels and reſolutions of the Judges, and eat them out, becauſe of ſuch cryes among the people.

Laſtly, It is matter of comfort to conſider, that the Lord can make Judges fools: That (as Mr. Broughton tranſlates this verſe) He brings Counſellors to badneſs, and Judges to ſtark madneſs. We need not fear what wiſe men act againſt us, while the only wiſe God acteth for us.

Job goes on, and gives an higher inſtance then in Judges and Counſellors.

Verſe 18. He looſeth the bond of Kings, and girdeth their loins with a girdle.

He looſeth.] The Hebrew is, he openeth or untieth the bond of Kings.

The bond.] The word ſignifies any thing that knitteth, or holdeth together. Sometimes it is put for diſcipline and correction: The Greek expreſſeth inſtruction and correction, both the parts of diſcipline, by one word.

מוסר a rad. יסר Quod eſt conſtringere aut ligare vinculo aut quacunq; inſtitutione aut arctiore diſciplina, quam Græci παιδείαν vocant.

We may take this bond two wayes. First, Paſſively, and ſecondly, Actively.

First, Paſſively, and then by the bonds of Kings, are underſtood thoſe bonds wherewith Kings are bound. So the Chaldee Paraphraſt tranſlates, He bringeth Kings from bonds to the throne; that is, Kings who have been bound, captivated, and brought very low, he raiſeth up again: The Septuagint runs upon that ſence, Placing Kings in their thrones; as ſpeaking of thoſe Kings who had been put out, or put off from their thrones; theſe the Lord re-inthrones, or ſets up again.

καθιζάνων βασιλεῖς ἐπὶ θρόνους. Sept.

Catenam regum ſolvit, q.d. e vinculis eos evehit ad regnum. Tharg

And then in correſpondency to that underſtanding of the word [Bond] the latter clauſe of the verſe [And girdeth their loins with a girdle] is to be underſtood in a good ſence. He giveth them ſtrength and honour, he ſettleth their affairs and crowns, after greateſt ſhakings and depreſſions. A BOND is for puniſhment, a girdle is both for ſtrength and ornament. A girdle is the emblem of power; and to gird a man is as much as to give him power: So that when 'tis ſaid, He girdeth their loins with a girdle, the meaning is (according to the ſence given of the former clauſe) he ſtrengtheneth them in their Kingdom, State, and Government, and reſtores them the obedience of their people; thus the phraſe is uſed (Iſa. 45. 5.) concerning Cyrus, I girded thee though thou haſt not known me; that is, I ſet thee upon the Throne, I eſtabliſhed thee, and confirmed thee, I put thee into that high condition, though thou little thoughteſt that it was I who did it. There is a profitable truth in this interpretation. Kings are delivered from bonds, and ſet upon their thrones by the ſpecial providence and power of God.

But if we view this Text with the Context more ſtrictly; the ſcope of the whole lodges our thoughts in another ſence. For Job is ſetting forth the judgment of God upon Kingdoms, in the judgments which he brings upon Counſellors, Judges, and Kings. Therefore we cannot with any ſutableneſs to the Context (though the thing be in it ſelf a truth) underſtand it of a work of deliverance, in looſing the bonds of Kings, and re-eſtabliſhing them upon their Thrones. Here then we muſt take the word bond, actively, and ſo we may expound it two wayes.

First, For thoſe bonds with which Kings illegally bind their people. Such are the bonds of oppreſſion and tyranny: And ſo the meaning of, He looſeth the bonds of Kings, is this; God by his mighty power breaks, or by his wiſdom untyes thoſe bonds of oppreſſion, with which Kings attempt to enſlave their people; ſuch were the bonds of Rehoboam, whoſe reſolution was (though it was a raſh one) to bind his people in bonds; and when they petitioned him, complaining of heavy burthens laid upon them in his Fathers dayes, praying, that now his yoke might be made eaſier: Eaſier, ſaith he, nay it ſhall be made heavier, Whereas my Father made your yoak heavy, I will add to your yoke; my father chaſtiſed you with whips, but I will chaſtiſe you with ſcorpions; my little finger ſhall be heavier then my fathers loins. I will publiſh ſuch Edicts, and put out ſuch Proclamations, as ſhall be ſo many chains, bonds and fetters upon you, to tye you faſter, and hold you cloſer in ſubjection then ever you were to this day. This ſort of bonds, the Lord breaks, he looſeth the oppreſſing bonds of Princes. When they act the Tyrant, not the King, and in ſtead of ruling, vex a people; when they will not let their ſubjects enjoy ſuch liberty as becomes men, or Chriſtians, then he looſeth their bonds. Kings and people too, joyn ſometimes (though in vain) to break the bonds of God. (Pſal. 2. 1, 2.) Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing? The Kings of the earth ſet themſelves, and the Rulers take counſel together: And what is it upon? It is this, Come let us break their bonds aſunder, and caſt away their cords from us: What? Will Chriſt ſubdue us to his Laws? Will he lay bonds upon us, and make us ſlaves under the Scepter of his Government? Come, Let us break theſe bonds, and caſt theſe cords from us: let us get out our necks from this yoke, and our ſhoulders from theſe burdens. We are a free people, our tongues and our conſciences are our own, who is Lord over us? Thus people and Kings conſpire to looſen the bonds which Jeſus Chriſt, the King of Saints, and King of Nations, chargeth upon them for their good; they will not abide ſuch bonds, not they; but they muſt, for they do but imagine a vain thing. But when Kings and Princes, out of the pertinatiouſneſs and pride of their ſpirits, or out of an ungoverned reſolution in government, ſay, that they will lay bonds and tributes, impoſitions and ſervices upon their people, which make them groan; then the Lord takes counſel in Heaven (and it is not in vain) I will break their bonds, (ſaith he) and caſt their cords off from you, and he doth it. As Sampſon brake the withs and bonds wherewith the Philiſtims bound him, ſo doth God thoſe wherewith his people are bound, as a threed, as a threed of tow is broken, when it toucheth (or as the Hebrew is) ſmelleth the fire. Thus he wrought for his holy Name, and for his people in Egypt. Pharaoh ſaid to his wiſe Counſellors, Come, let us work wiſely, let us make bonds for this people, and bring them into perpetual ſervitude; they were firſt commanded to make brick, and then compelled to make brick without ſtraw; they ſerved with rigour. Here were bonds, but God looſened them, and by a mighty hand, and ſtretched out arm, delivered his people, drowning Pharaoh in the red Sea. Thus the bond of that King was looſened; and ſo were thoſe of Rehoboam; for while he (as was toucht before) prepared bonds for his people, and thought he could never make them ſlaves enough, God in judgment ſtirred up another King, and ten Tribes of twelve departed from his obedience, and never returned again; neither did God permit Rehoboam to proceed in his attempt for the reducing of them, but took the revolt upon himſelf, ſaying plainly by the mouth of his Prophet, This thing is from me, 1 Kings 12. 24. Thus the bonds of that King were looſened, and himſelf was brought into ſtraits, while he endeavoured unjuſtly to ſtraiten thoſe in whoſe juſt liberties he ſhould have rejoyced. Thoſe are the freeſt Kings who govern a free people; and the more free a people are, the more are they truly ſubject. Slavery doth either embaſe the ſpirits of a people, or heightens them to diſobedience. Oppreſſion makes a wiſe man mad; but none are ſo mad as oppreſſors, how wiſe ſoever they ſeem to be. When their bonds are looſed (as they ſhall) they looſe more then they could get, ſhould they continue faſtened.

Activè vinculum quo illi alios vinciunt, ſignificat ſæpe tyrannide aut impotenti regũ dominatione liberari ſubditos dũ jugum excutiunt & è poteſtate tyranni exeunt. Merc.

Secondly, As Kings have oppreſſing bonds, ſo governing bonds. Wholeſome laws are the peoples bonds; and it is both their duty and their liberty to be thus bound. It is a far greater bondage to be under no laws, then to be under hard ones. When every man doth that which is right in his own eyes, there is ſcarce any man will be found either doing or enjoying that which is right. Therefore let people take heed, leſt while they complain of the bonds of oppreſſion, that they do not throw off the bonds of ſubjection: Yet thus alſo God looſeth the bonds of Kings: He in judgment to Kings, and Kingdoms, leaves a people to forget their duty, and to withdraw from due obedience.

(a) Baltheū regum diſſolvit. Vulg. (b) Authoritatem & imperiū illis adimit. Merc. In Baltheo regnantis intelligitur gloria, in fune vero è regno depoſiti ignominia. Hieron. Aureus Baltheus inſigne fuit regum, clariſſimique magiſtratus, quare ſpoliari cingulo dicebantur qui magiſtratu & dignitate privabantur. Pined. (c) Baltheus non fuit inſigne regale, ſed militare. Bold.

The Vulgar tranſlateth (a) He unbuckleth or diſſolveth the belt of Kings; which is gloſſed to this ſence; (b) He deveſts them of regal power. The belt was alwayes a mark of honour, and ſome of the Learned obſerve, that it was anciently an emblem of Kingly power: And ſo the unlooſing of it muſt imply the taking away of that power. (c) The belt is taken here by others for the emblem of a Souldiers power only, not of a Kings. Hence girding, or putting on the belt, is as much as preparing for war: Gird up now thy loins like a man, ſaith God to Job (Chap. 38. 3.) when he challenged him to a diſpute, which is a verbal war. (Pſal. 93. 1.) The Lord reigneth, he is cloathed with majeſty: the Lord is cloathed with ſtrength, wherewith he hath girded himſelf. David giving charge to Solomon upon his death-bed concerning Joab, who had been his chief Commander, or the Generaliſſimo of his forces, ſaith, He put the bloud of war upon his girdle, (or the belt, ſo Pagnine tranſlates) that was upon his loins, (1 Kings 2. 6.) Chriſt himſelf (Iſa. 11. 5.) is deſcribed, having Righteouſneſs the girdle of his loins, and faithfulneſs the girdle of his reins; that is, coming forth girded, or belted about, as a victorious Conqueror, with righteouſneſs and faithfulneſs. That's the meaning of that cooling meſſage (1 Kings 20. 11) Let not him that girdeth on his harneſs, boaſt himſelf as he that putteth it off; that is, do not ſing Victoria before the battel; the event of war is uncertain. And it was uſual, when commiſſion Officers of Armies were caſhiered and turned off, for any miſdemeanour, to take away their belt. There is a famous ſtory in Suidas about it, of one Auxenſius, a great Commander under Lycinius the Emperour; He reports, that when Lycinius came into the Court of his Palace, where there was a great Bath, and ſome Vines growing about it, with the image of Bacchus ſet up among the Vines: The Emperour bad Auxenſius draw his ſword, and cut off a bunch of Grapes, which as ſoon as he had done, he commanded him to offer it at the feet of Bacchus, which was as much as to acknowledge him to be a god: Auxenſius anſwered, I am a Chriſtian, I will not do it: What? not do it upon my command, ſaith the Emperour, then you muſt quit your place: With all my heart, Sir, ſaid the Chriſtian ſouldier; and, in token of it, put off his belt; which was as much as the giving up of his Commiſſion, and went away with joy in that ſuffering for Chriſt.

Noli canere triumphum ante victoriam, nondū depoſuiſti arma nondū pace potiris. Abſit Imperator, chriſtianus enim ego ſum: igitur apage relicta militia (inquit Licinius) at hic nihil cunctatus ſolvit zonam & ſtatim alacer palatio exceſſit. Sui. in Auxentio.

According to this tranſlation and uſe of the word, He looſeth the bond and belt of Kings, the ſign is put for the thing ſignified; and the meaning riſeth thus, God caſteth down Kings, not only from their Soveraignty and Regal power, but from their Military power. He takes not only their Crown from their head, and their Scepter out of their hand, but the Belt and Sword from their loins: So that as their people refuſe to give them any willing ſubjection, ſo they are diſabled to compel them.

Non ſolum regali diademate illos exuit, ſed etiam Baltheo quod eſt ſimplicis militis inſigne, i.e. illuc eos abjicit, ut nec militis quidem nomine digni reputetur. Bold.

Hence obſerve, Kings are in the hands of God, to ſet up, and to caſt down, as himſelf pleaſeth.

By me (ſaith God) Kings reign, and Princes decree juſtice, Prov. 8. 15. and when Princes refuſe to decree juſtice, God can ſay it, and effect it, Ye ſhall not reign. (Iſa. 45. 1.) Thus ſaith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus, whoſe right hand I have holden to ſubdue Nations before him, and I will looſe the loins of Kings, &c. God ſet up Cyrus King, to put down Kings, yet he ſaith, I will looſe the loins of Kings. Cyrus was the Inſtrument, but both the deſign and the ſucceſs was of God. Kings cannot make bonds ſo faſt, either to ſtrengthen themſelves, or ſtrait their people, as God can looſe them. There are four bonds which the Lord uſually looſeth, when he chaſtens the pride and ſin of Kings.

Firſt, The bonds of their Authority, that their word is not reverenced, nor received, as before. Where the word of a King is (ſaith Solomon) there is power: Yet when God is angry, he can render their word powerleſs.

Secondly, He looſeth the bonds of their riches and Revenues: Riches are a ſtrength to Kings: Riches are the ſupport, as well as the fruit of peace; and they are the ſinews of war: When treaſure is gone, power ſtayes not long behind. Money anſwers all things; and when that fails, Princes ſeldom receive contentful anſwers. God ſends a Moth upon the publick treaſure, and that eats aſunder many bonds and obligations.

Thirdly, Which is ſtronger then the former two, God looſeth the bond of a peoples love and affection unto Kings. Love is the bond of obedience, both to God and man. Princes ſit faſteſt in the affections of their people. That King who hath the hearts of his Subjects, hath their hands and their purſes too at command. Jehoram out-lived, or rather, never lived in the love of his people, and he died undeſired (2 Chron. 21. 20.) Some have ſaid, let them hate while they muſt fear: But that fear is ſafeſt which ſprings from love.

Oderint dū metuant.

Fourthly, The Lord looſeth the bonds of their Leagues, Allyances, and Confederacies with forreign Nations: They ſhall not ſtand faſt by covenants with men, who break the covenant of their God. Through this judgment of God, Kings have been oftner entangled, then ſtrengthened with Leagues. Thoſe Leagues and Alliances, ſpoken of by Daniel (Chap. 11.) between the Kings of the North and of the South, proved ſnares to catch, rather then helps to uphold one another.

Theſe bonds, or what bonds elſe ſoever, the Kings of the earth make, either to ſupport themſelves, or oppreſs their people, are looſed by the power of God. As there is no bond of God ſo ſtrong, but the heart of man will attempt to break it; ſo there is no bond of man ſo ſtrong, but the hand of God can break it, He looſeth the bonds of Kings.

And girdeth their loins with a girdle.

In the firſt interpretation of the former clauſe, This girding of the loins of Kings with a girdle, was taken in a good ſence, namely, for the ſtrengthening of their State. But in purſuance of the ſecond interpretation, which hath appeared moſt agreeable to this Text, The girding their loins with a girdle, undergoes a very different conſideration, and may be taken two wayes.

Per cingulū aliqui vires innuunt, cingulo enī lumbi præcinguntur, in quibus virium ſedes & roboris. Druſ.

Firſt, As a girdle is oppoſed to a belt. A girdle is of ordinary uſe, a common part of cloathing: Every man weareth a girdle; but every man doth not wear a belt; that hath ſomewhat of honour in it. And ſo the ſence is this, He looſeneth the belt of Kings, and takes off their ſword, ſo that they cannot carry on their wars. And then, He girdeth their loins with a girdle; that is, he brings them into a low or common condition.

Habitus hominis abjectiſſimi ut opponitur Baltheo, qui reges ornat. Pined.

Secondly, A girdle, and girding with it, ſignifies, not only a common, but a ſervile, or captivated condition. So ſome expound the words here, as an alluſion to that cuſtom which was amongſt the Perſians: (one of the Rabbins is clear for it, and frames his comment upon that notion.) The Kings of Perſia were wont to gird thoſe with a girdle, whom they had taken captive; and they miniſtred unto, and attended thoſe great Kings, being girt with a girdle. Now, That to be girt about the loins is a poſture of ſervice, is clear alſo in Scripture, being a Metaphor taken from the uſage of the Eaſtern countreys, where, wearing long garments, they girded them in all preparations for travel, or labour. Gird up the loins of your minds (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 Pet. 1. 13.) that is, be in a readineſs to ſerve the Lord. When Chriſt went to waſh his Diſciples feet, John 13. He took a towel and girded himſelf. And when he would ſhew how bleſſed thoſe ſervants ſhall be whom their Lord, when he cometh, ſhall find watching; He tells them (Luke 12. 37.) Verily I ſay unto you, that he ſhall gird himſelf, and make them to ſit down to meat, and will come forth and ſerve them. And again, when he would prove that no man, by all his watchfulneſs and diligence, can deſerve any thing at the hand of God: He puts a query, Luke 17. 7, 8. Which of you having a ſervant plowing, or feeding cattel, will ſay unto him, when he is come from the field, go and ſit down to meat, and will not rather ſay unto him, make ready wherewith I may ſup, and gird thy ſelf and ſerve me, &c. According to this approved uſe of the phraſe, Job's ſence is this, He looſeth the bonds of Kings, and girdeth their loins with a girdle; that is, they who ruled others, are forced to obey, and from Commanders are turned into ſervants: So low the

q. d. Commutat eos in famulos. Druſ.

the Lord hath ſometimes caſt the mightieſt and higheſt Princes of the world.

The vulgar tranſlateth yet more low, He girdeth their loins about with a rope; which is the meaneſt matter and making of a girdle: they ſhall not only have a girdle for a belt, but a rope inſtead of a girdle: So that word is rendred (Iſa. 3. 24.) by the ſame Tranſlator, The wanton and delicate Dames of Iſrael, ſhall have, in ſtead of a curious girdle, a rope; to note the extream turn which God would make in the ſtate of thoſe proud women; and thus he can abaſe the pride of the greateſt men.

Præcingit fune lumbos eorum. Funis nomine vilitas zonæ denotatur qua plebeiæ conditionis homines uti ſolent. Bold. Pro zona funiculus.

Let that be the Obſervation upon the whole matter,

God ſometimes doth, and he alwayes can bring thoſe that are higheſt in worldly dignity, into the extreameſt depth of worldly miſery.

Rulers become captives; they who ſat on Thrones, live in priſons; the royal belt is laid aſide, and a common girdle, yea girding with ſackcloth, taken up by the mightieſt earthly gods, when the God of Heaven is angry. The greateſt changes are incident to the greateſt perſons. Nebuchadnezzar's dream was full to this point (Dan. 2. 10.) He forgetting it, ſends for the Magicians and Aſtrologers to tell him, both what his dream was, and what the interpretation of it; but they could not. There is not a man upon the earth (ſay they) that can ſhew the Kings matter; therefore there is no King, Lord, nor Ruler, that asketh ſuch things at any Magician or Aſtrologer: none can ſhew it unto the King, except the Gods, whoſe dwelling is not with fleſh. But unto Daniel the ſecret was revealed by God; and before he revealed it to the King, he makes this preface almoſt in Job's ſtile and language, but fully with his ſpirit and intent, bleſſing God, becauſe wiſdom and might are his, and he changeth the times and ſeaſons; he removeth Kings, and ſetteth up Kings; he giveth wiſdom unto the wiſe, and knowledge to them that know underſtanding, &c. (ver. 20, 21.) Then he tells Nebuchadnezzar his dream, and the interpretation thereof. A goodly image it was, yet degenerating and gradually abaſing from a head of gold, to a breaſt and arms of ſilver, thence to belly and thighs of braſs, to legs of iron, and feet of iron and clay. All theſe repreſented ſome Kings and Kingdoms falling, and others riſing upon their ruines, till a Kingdom doth ariſe which ſhould never fall (ver. 44.) In the ſame prophecy (Chap. 4. 10.) we have the Kingly power deſcribed by a goodly tree, the height whereof reached unto Heaven, under which the beaſts of the field had ſhadow, and the fowls of the Heaven dwelt in the boughs thereof, &c. But, Behold a watcher, and an holy one, came down from Heaven; He cryed aloud, and ſaid thus, Hew down the tree, and cut off his branches, and ſhake off his leaves, and ſcatter his fruit; ſo the body of this flouriſhing tree vaniſhed to nothing, only the ſtump of his roots were left in the earth with a band of iron and braſs. This viſion is alſo interpreted (ver. 24, 25.) by the looſing the bond of that great King ſo much, that he was driven from men, and took up his lodging with the beaſts of the field, and was made to eat graſs as Oxen, and was wet with the dew of Heaven. God, to ſhew that he can throw the moſt potent Monarchs, into the loweſt condition of men, ſpeaks of this Monarch, as thrown into the condition of beaſts: Being (as our late Annotators have obſerved upon the place) either ſtricken mad, and ſo avoided mans company, or being caſt out for his tyranny, he wandred among the beaſts, and eat herbs and graſs. Theſe viſions are cleareſt manifeſtations, that God cuts down Kings, and Kingdoms, even to the very ſtumps (as we ſay) to the very roots, and ſometimes pulls up root and all.

And, that God hath actually done thus to the greateſt Princes, all Hiſtories are full: There is no truth hath received greater teſtimony then this. The records of Scripture, give us high inſtances of it (Judg. 1. 6, 7.) Adonibezeck, a great King, was taken priſoner by the Army of the two Tribes, Judah and Simeon, and They cut off his thumbs, and his great toes: The eminency of the judgment draws from him an acknowledgment of his own former cruelty, and of the preſent juſtice of God upon him, Threeſcore and ten Kings, having their thumbs and great toes cut off, gathered their meat under my table: as I have done, ſo God hath requited me. He cut off their thumbs, that they might be diſabled from handling Arms, or fighting with him; he cut off their great toes, that they might be diſabled to run from him, or eſcape by flight. Suppoſe theſe were petty Princes, yet their number was great; and the hand of God was ſeen greatly, both in caſting them from their dignities, and in catching him at laſt, who had captivated all them. And as thoſe Heathen Kings, ſo alſo ſome of the Kings of Judah, who were of Gods ſpecial anointing and ſetting up, were miſerably afflicted, and brought into bondage, by the ſpecial counſel of God. Take the examp'e of Zedekiah (2 Kings 25. 6, 7.) whom, when the Army of the Chaldees took the City, They purſued, and took, brought to the King of Babylon, who gave judgment upon him; and they ſlew the Sons of Zedekiah before his eyes, and put out the eyes of Zedekiah, and bound him with fetters of braſs, and carried him to Babylon. How ſad a ſpectacle was here? A King of Judah, the Ruler of Gods choſen people, in fetters of braſs? When the latter Greek Empire was overthrown by the Turks, that great Family of the Paleologi (in which the Empire had long continued) came to that lowneſs, that ſome of the Royal blood became Servants, and ordinary Tradeſmen. In them the obſervation of the Preacher was fulfilled (Eccleſ. 10. 7.) I have ſeen ſervants upon horſes, and Princes walking as ſervants upon the earth. Sapor, King of Perſia, took Valentinian, the Emperor, priſoner, and uſed him as a ſtool for himſelf to ſtep upon, when he mounted into his ſaddle. Seſoſtris, King of Egypt, ſubduing divers Kings, compelled them to draw his Chariot. The Roman Hiſtorians give frequent teſtimony, that in the flouriſhing ſtate of that Imperious Commonwealth, conquered Kings and Princes were dragg'd at their Chariots in triumph. Victorious Tamerlane, having overthrown and taken Bajazet, the Turkiſh Emperor, ſhackled him in fetters of gold, cauſed him to be ſhut up in an iron cage, made in the faſhion of a grate, and ſo carried him like a wild beaſt, as he marched through Aſia, to be ſcorned of his own people. Henry the fourth, Emperor of Germany, having been oft worſted in battel, was at laſt reduced to ſuch exigents, that he had not wherewith to buy him bread, but was forced to come to the great Church at Spires (which he himſelf had built) and there beg to be a Choriſter, that ſo he might get a ſmall ſtipend to keep him from ſtarving; but could not obtain it: which repulſe cauſed him to beſpeak the ſtanders by, in the words of lamenting Job (Chap. 19. 21.) Have pity upon me, O my friends, for the hand of God hath touched me. The weight of theſe miſeries brought him ſhortly after to his grave; but he found none ſo humane as to put him in, for he lay unburied five years, no man daring to do it, becauſe the Pope had forbidden it to be done. Theſe examples (more might be added) are clear expoſitions of, or experiments rather of this Scripture. Let the great men of the earth hear and fear, and do no more preſumptuouſly; let them take the counſel of Chriſt (Pſal. 2.) be wiſe therefore now, O ye Kings, and be inſtructed ye Judges of the earth: Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoyce with trembling: Kiſs the Son leſt he be angry, and ye periſh from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little: There is no ſtriving by the moſt glorious Princes of the earth, with him who is the King of Heaven, and Lord of glory.

Pezet. Meliſicii Hiſt. part. 3.

Take two Corrollaries from the whole: If the Lord do thus toſs Kings like tennis-balls, and hurl whole Kingdoms into ruine; if he befools the Judges, and ſpoils the Counſellors of the earth, ſurely he will not ſpare inferiors and weaklings, who ſtrengthen themſelves againſt him. If God deal thus with Kings, what will he do with ſubjects? He that ſmites Princes, will he let a people paſs unpuniſht? God hath in all ages ſet ſome Kings and Princes on the ſcaffold, and made them eminent in ſufferings, as well as in dignity, that others beholding the juſtice of God, might glorifie him, and humble themſelves. Hence we may argue, as Chriſt did in his own caſe; If it be thus done to the green tree, what ſhall be done to the dry? If the Lord hath been thus ſevere againſt the talleſt Cedars in Lebanon, and againſt the Oaks of Baſhan (Kings and Monarchs of the world) that are exalted and lifted up: Shall not low and dry ſhrubs (inferiour perſons) feel the axe and ſtroke of his anger, when they ſin contemptuouſly againſt him? Even theſe are often as proud, unjuſt and oppreſſive, according to the line of their power, and the length of their hand, as they who have longeſt hand, and largeſt power. It is an admirable diſpenſation, when God layes his rod upon the back of Kings, to warn mean men. The children of Princes are uſually corrected (for their faults) by correcting the children of Plebeians in their preſence; their Tutors and Governors do only put them in fear, and make them know diſcipline, by the ſmart which others feel. What ſhall we ſay then, when God corrects the Children of Kings, yea Kings themſelves, in the ſight of the common people, that they may be warned and learn diſcipline?

Secondly, If the ſtrength of Kings cannot hold out againſt the anger of God, how ſhall the weak ſtand before him when he is angry? That argument in the Prophet (Jer. 12. 5. If thou haſt run with foot-men, and they have wearied thee, then how canſt thou contend with horſes?) may be inverted here; if God hath contended with horſes, and they could not weary him, how eaſily will he run with footmen? The ſtatelieſt Palaces, and ſtrongeſt Thrones of Kings, have been conſumed or thrown down at his word: Then what will become of cottages and common mens eſtates, when he ſpeaks againſt them? When the Lord hath once (as lamenting Jeremy complains, Lam. 2. 16.) in the indignation of his anger deſpiſed the King and the Prieſt, his indignation will make quick diſpatch of the reſt, who follow their ſteps in ſin, or partake in their tranſgreſſion.

VERS. 19, 20, 21.

He leadeth Princes away ſpoiled, and overthroweth the mighty.

He removeth away the ſpeech of the truſty, and taketh away the underſtanding of the aged.

He poureth contempt upon Princes, and weakneth the ſtrength of the mighty.

JOB goes on in his enumeration of Inſtances, for the proof and clearing up of his grand Propoſition. In the Context before opened we ſaw how God leadeth Counſellors away ſpoiled, and maketh the Judges fools; how he looſeth the bond of Kings, and girdeth their loins with a girdle. Here we find him at the ſame work ſtill, though upon other objects;

He leadeth Princes away ſpoiled, and overthroweth the mighty.

Facit principes ut deveniant in dementiam. Jun.
Ducit ſacerdotes ingloꝛios. Vulg.
כהן
Miniſtrare in ſacris aut politicis. Sacerdos princeps in quacunque dignitate conſtitutus.

There is a difference about the word which we tranſlate Princes: At the ſeventeenth verſe, He leadeth Counſellors away ſpoiled; and here, He leadeth Princes away ſpoiled: Spoiled (as was ſhewed before) of their ends, and of their hopes, of their power and honour, yea and of their wits and underſtandings, which cauſeth ſome to render it, He leadeth Princes into madneſs. Mr. Broughton, He bringeth Dukes to badneſs: And the vulgar, He leadeth Prieſts into diſhonour, or ſpoiled of their honour. The Hebrew [Cohen] indifferently ſignifies a Prince, or a Prieſt, and is frequently uſed in the old Teſtament for both: And the Verb whence this Noun is derived, ſignifies to adminiſter, both in political, and eccleſiaſtical affairs, and ſo either a Governour in the Commonwealth, or a Governour in the Church. It is put for a Church-governour, Iſa. 28. 7. The Prieſt and the Prophet have erred, Pſal. 99. 6. Moſes and Aaron among his Prieſts. And for a State-governour, 2 Sam. 8. 18. Davids ſons were chief Rulers: For both, Gen. 41. 45. The Prieſt, or Prince of On, Exod. 2. 16. The Prieſt, or Prince of Midian.

Three reaſons are aſſigned, why thoſe two dignities fell under one expreſſion.

Firſt, Becauſe of old time, the Prieſt and the Prince were one perſon. The eldeſt in the family (before the giving of the Law) was both: And after the giving of the Law, together with all the ceremonial Inſtitutes, the high Prieſt of Aarons order was a great Prince in Iſrael.

Secondly, The Prieſthood in general was an office of honour, therefore it is expreſt by a word of honour.

Thirdly, Becauſe the Prieſts were unto God, the King of Heaven, as Princes are unto the Kings of the earth: Princes ſtand but a degree below Kings, and bear the great offices in Kingdoms; they are of Kings ſecret counſel, and know their hearts; they conveigh the mind of Kings to the people, and often as Commiſſioners repreſent their perſons. Such (in their capacity) were Prieſts, in reference unto God; and are therefore called Gods nigh ones. This is it which the Lord ſpake (ſaith Moſes, when the two ſons of Aaron were ſlain by fire, while they offered with ſtrange fire, Levit. 10. 3.) I will be ſanctified in thoſe that come nigh me, or in my nigh ones; ſuch eſpecially were the Prieſts; they approached to God, and received his mind, and were therefore ſaid to ſpeak from Gods mouth, and to preſerve knowledge, even the knowledge of himſelf in their lips. God committed his ſecrets, and the myſteryes of his will, to the Prieſts firſt, and by their Miniſtry conveyed both unto the people: They were as the veſſel, or cabinet, in which God laid up thoſe precious treaſures; The Prieſts lips ſhould keep knowledge, and they ſhould ſeek the law at his mouth, for he is the meſſenger of the Lord of hoſts (Mal. 2. 7.) God gave the honour of this title to the whole Nation of the Jews, they were called a Nation of Prieſts, (Exod. 19. 6.) Ye ſhall be to me a Kingdom of Prieſts, or a royal Prieſthood: A Kingdom of Prieſts, for two reaſons chiefly: Firſt, Becauſe God did eſteem that people above all the people of the earth, he put an honour and a value upon them, therefore ſaith he, Ye ſhall be to me a Kingdom of Prieſts. And ſecondly, Becauſe God communicated more of his counſels to that people, then to any other people, and they were more familiar with him then the reſt of the world; even as the Prieſts were more familiar with God, and came nearer to him then the people. So that look what proportion the Prieſts among the Jews bear to the people, the ſame did the Jews bear to all other people of the world. We may take the word here in either ſence, He leadeth Princes, or, He leadeth Prieſts away ſpoiled.

Ex omnibus regnis vos eritis mihi regnum nobiliſſimum familiariſſimum amiciſſimum, quibus arcana & ſecretiora conſilia revelabo.

As the word is rendred Prieſt, Obſerve,

First, That the holineſs of the profeſſion cannot keep the perſon from ſin.

Prieſts provoke God, and therefore they are ſpoiled. Grace it ſelf is not, much leſs is any outward vocation, a bar againſt temptation: And they who fall in temptation are near falling into affliction, whoſoever they are. Which makes a ſecond Obſervation,

They that are near unto God ſhall ſuffer when they ſin, and the nearer they are, they ſhall ſuffer the more, becauſe the nearer they are, the greater is their ſin.

The Prieſts are among the ſpoiled, Jer. 14. 18. Both the Prophet and the Prieſt go about into a land that they know not; that is, they go into baniſhment, and are carried captives into a ſtrange land. That Text hath a very different reading, for whereas the word which we tranſlate go about, ſignifies alſo to trade or make merchandize, the whole is rendred to this ſence: The Prophets and Prieſts together make merchandize of you, and you either diſcern it not, or do not regard it. This reading gives us a clear reaſon of that which is contained in the former. This ſhews their ſin, and that their puniſhment. Thoſe Prophets and Prieſts who ſell ſouls in their own land, are juſtly ſold as ſlaves into a land that is not theirs. (Lam. 2. 6.) The Lord hath deſpiſed in the indignation of his anger, both the King and the Prieſt; he puts King and Prieſt together, in ſuffering, becauſe they were joyned in ſinning. They who aſſociate in doing evil, ſhall be aſſociated in feeling it. And they ſhall feel moſt evil, when they do it, whoſe office is ſet up by God, and they put into office for the preventing of it: ſuch are Kings and Prieſts. The Prophet Malachy reproves the Levites (Mal. 2. 8.) Ye are departed out of the way; ye have cauſed many to ſtumble at the Law; ye have corrupted the Covenant of Love; that is, ye have been falſe, baſe, and unfaithful in your office: your ſelves have gone out of the way of truth and holineſs, and ye have hindred thoſe who would have walked in it. It was your duty to preſerve the Covenant made with your Tribe, but ye have corrupted it. This is your ſin, and I will tell you your judgment: Therefore have I alſo made you contemptible and baſe before all the people. Unſavory ſalt is fit only for the dunghill, the ſeat of contempt.

As the word is rendred (Prince) in our Tranſlation, Obſerve,

That the honour of man is no ſhelter againſt the wrath of God.

As the holineſs of the Prieſts-office cannot do it, ſo neither can the power of the Princes office. Princes are called the Shields of the earth (Hoſ. 4. 18.) Her Shields (or, her Rulers, as we render) with ſhame do love, Give ye. They are (indeed) the Shields of the earth, but they cannot ſhield themſelves againſt the aſſaults of Heaven. Princes ſhould be Shields to protect men from the oppreſſion of man, but they cannot protect themſelves againſt the juſtice of God. The Prophet (Iſa. 43. 14.) tells the people when they were in fear, Thus ſaith the Lord your Redeemer, the Holy one of Iſrael, For your ſake I have ſent to Babylon, and have brought down all their Nobles; the Hebrew is, I have brought down all their bars: Faithful Nobles are the bars of a Kingdom and Commonwealth, to keep out evils: It is their duty to bolt out impiety againſt God, and unrighteouſneſs towards man: And as they ſhould be a bar of equity againſt theſe evils of ſin, ſo a bar of ſecurity to keep out the evils of trouble. Now (ſaith the Lord) I have ſent to Babylon, and have brought down all thoſe Nobles, who were as bars in the way to hinder your deliverance from, and return out of captivity. Thoſe Nobles (it ſeems) were croſs bars, they lay croſs the way of the people of God, to hinder their paſſage out of Babylon, therefore God deſtroyed them. When Nobles, or great Princes, bar up the liberty of Gods covenant-people, their nobility and greatneſs will be no bar againſt their own miſery. He leadeth Princes away ſpoiled, and

He overthroweth the mighty.

סלף Supplantare inflectere, mutare, dejicere, deturbare.

Here is another act of Divine power. That God is omnipotent, proves he can do all things; but the doing of them is a viſible proof of his omnipotency.

To overthrow, Imports utter ruine: He doth not only ſhake and diſplace; but he ſhakes them to pieces, roots them up, and layes them flat.

He overthroweth the mighty.] Princes are among the mighty ones of the earth, yet ſome Princes have no great might; but how mighty ſoever Princes are, down they muſt, whether they will or no, when the Almighty wills it.

איתן Robuſtus fortis a rad. אתן quæ vox aſſert fortitudinem quandam, quæ non permittit ſe tractari, & duritiem quæ pertinaciter reſiſtit. Fluvios Ethan.

The Hebrew word ſignifieth the moſt confirmed ſtrength, even that ſtrength which ſeems to laugh at oppoſition, and to have outgrown all fear of being weakened, or overpower'd. Great and impetuous Rivers are ſet out by that word (Pſal. 74. 15.) Thou driedſt up mighty Rivers; or, Rivers of might; Rivers which nothing can ſtand againſt: What can withſtand a ſwelling torrent? The weight and violence of water beareth down all before it: no bonds, no bounds of mans making can ſtay it. Yet the Lord can; he, and he only, beareth down the waters; or he drieth them up: He either drieth up mighty Rivers, or ſtoppeth their courſe, while they are running with full ſtreams, in a full career.

Hence learn, Firſt, That all ſtrength and might is weak, before the ſtrong and mighty God.

He overthroweth the mighty (1 Sam. 2. 9.) by ſtrength ſhall no man prevail: When we conclude the probabilities, whether a party ſhall prevail or no, we count upon their ſtrength, we reckon their numbers, we enquire what Armies they have in the field, what Garriſons in Cities, what Friends and Confederacies abroad, yet in all this we reckon not upon that which will do the thing, ſtrength cannot do it; by ſtrength no man ſhall prevail, The Lord overthroweth the mighty: whatſoever ſtrength we have to aſſiſt us, or to oppoſe us, the Lord is ſtronger.

There is a five-fold ſtrength, the overthrowing of which mightily declares the ſtrength and might of God.

Firſt, The ſtrength of the body. God overthroweth the moſt robuſtious and giant-like men, the ſons of Anak are but graſhoppers to him; they (who as we ſpeak) have bodies of braſs, he cruſheth before the moth. Goliah had a mighty ſtrength of body, and yet the Lord overthrew him: Sampſon had a mighty ſtrength of body, yet when the Lord withdrew from him, he was overthrown. Then remember the Prophets counſel (Jer. 9. 23.) Let not the ſtrong man glory in his ſtrength, but let him that glorieth glory in the Lord, who overthroweth the mighty.

Secondly, God overthroweth the ſtrength of riches: Riches are a ſtrong tower. The ſame word in the Hebrew ſignifies ſtrength and riches, becauſe a mans ſtrength is computed by his riches: A rich man is a mighty man in the eye of the world; and ſo is a worldly rich man in his own eyes. Yet, as the ſtrength of body within us, ſo the ſtrength of eſtate without us, is ſoon blaſted by the breath of Gods diſpleaſure. Then, take the counſel of the Apoſtle James (Chap. 1.) Let the brother of high degree rejoyce in that he is made low (that is, low in his own thoughts; rich men are uſually fuller of high thoughts then they are of earthly treaſures) the rich man hath cauſe to rejoyce when he is low in himſelf, knowing that as the flower of the graſs he ſhall paſs away. Riches and rich men paſs away of themſelves; how much more when God blows upon them and drives them away.

Thirdly, He overthroweth the mightineſs of honour: Many fortifie themſelves with great earthly Titles, but theſe are but paper walls to the batteries of Heaven. Haman's honour among the people, and favour with the Prince, could not ſave him, when God frowned.

Fourthly, He overthroweth the mightineſs of authority; that's diſtinct from honour; a man may have great titles, and yet but little authority. Mean men have ſometimes great commands, they may have authority over thoſe who are above them in honour. But though the might of authority be in conjunction with the mightineſs of honour, the Lord overthroweth it. So that he who could (as the Centurion in the Goſpel) ſay to this man, Go, and he goeth; to another come, and he cometh; to a third do this, and he doth it, may at laſt (as our Proverb ſpeaketh) command his man, and do it himſelf. When once commands are ſlighted, authority is overthrown. God who gives weight to the word of a man, can alſo make it light; he ſhall ſpeak, and none regard.

Fifthly, God overthroweth the mightineſs of courage: He makes the valiant faint, and the man, whoſe heart was like the heart of a Lion, to run, like a Coward, at the ſhaking of a leaf: God who ſaith to them that are of a fearful heart, be ſtrong, fear not (Iſa. 35. 4.) and maketh the feeble to be as David (Zach. 12. 8.) This God can ſay to the ſtrong, be ye afraid; and to him that was as David, be thou feeble: He that overthroweth the courageous, can alſo overthrow courage.

Thus the ſtrength of body, the ſtrength of riches, the ſtrength of honour, the ſtrength of authority, and the ſtrength of courage, are all overthrown by the ſtrength of God. Who can conceive how much ſtrength God hath, who is ſtronger then all theſe ſtrengths? And as the Lord alwayes overthroweth the mighty, and gets the day of them, when he engageth with them; ſo he deſires to engage with them. Mighty men ſeem to be ſome match for God; and the fall of theſe makes God more known as he is Almighty. Hence that of the Prophet (Iſa. 2. 12.) The day of the Lord of hoſts ſhall be upon, Whom? he doth not ſay upon the low, weak and poor; but it ſhall be upon, every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up? What day of the Lord is this? It is the day of the Lords judgment, the day of his wrath: when he contendeth with a people, then he picks out the great ones chiefly, to contend with. His day ſhall be upon all the cedars of Lebanon, and upon all the oaks of Baſhan, and upon every fenced wall; that is, upon men, who are, in the account of the world, tall like Cedars, ſtrong like Oaks, high like Towers, invincible like Walls of braſs; with theſe the Lord will be dealing in his day: and (ver. 17.) The Lord alone ſhall be exalted in that day; as if he had ſaid, theſe men were exalted before; now the Lord overthrowing them, he himſelf ſhall be exalted. For the Text may be taken two wayes; he ſhall be exalted either as the Agent, that is, it ſhall appear that he alone hath overthrown theſe mighty ones: Or ſecondly, the Lord alone ſhall be exalted; that is, he will come into the place of thoſe mighty men; theſe carried it in the eye of the world, as the only great ones; now the Lord comes into their place, they ſhall be exalted no more, his Name ſhall be exalted, and his only. When God appears in his greatneſs, none appear great but he: When he exalts himſelf, none will pretend to exaltation. The Lord alone ſhall be exalted in that day.

I ſhall give you four Corrollaries or Deductions from this Propoſition, The Lord overthroweth the mighty.

Firſt, Then, fear not the mightieſt enemies. God is Almighty, the weakneſs of God is ſtronger then men; ſeeing God is deſcribed overthrowing the mighty, if we keep cloſe to him, we need not fear to be overthrown by the mighty.

Secondly, If the Lord overthroweth the mighty, Then truſt not in the mightieſt friends. When great ſeconds, and aſſiſtants appear on our part, then we think we are ſafe; but what can mighty men do for us, if the Almighty God be againſt us? As was further ſhewed (Chap. 9. 13) Unleſs the Lord withdraw his anger, the proud helpers do ſtoop under him; the helpers of ſtrength ſtoop, unleſs upheld by the ſtrong God. As therefore we ought not to fear the worſt of foes, ſo not to truſt upon the beſt of friends, becauſe they are mighty.

Thirdly, Let no man rejoyce, or boaſt in his own ſtrength; though that five-fold ſtrength, before ſpoken of, meet in him, yet let him not truſt upon it. He that breaks them ſingle, can break them combined. A threefold, yea a fivefold cord, is eaſily broken by the arm of omnipotency.

Fourthly, (Which was toucht, verſ. 18.) If God overthrow the mighty, how ſoon can he overthrow thoſe who have no might? You that are weak and poor in compariſon of the mighty Princes and Nimrods of the world; you (I ſay) have cauſe to fear and tremble before the mighty God: As they ſaid, (2 Kings 10. 4.) Behold two Kings ſtood not before him, how then ſhall we? So we may ſay much more of the Lord, two Kings, yea hundreds of Kings, Nobles and men of might, have not ſtood before him, how ſhall worms, and weaklings wraſtle it out, and contend with him?

Verſe 20. He removeth away the ſpeech of the truſty, and taketh away the underſtanding of the aged.

This verſe gives us another act of Gods power, towards the altering and ſubverting of States and Commonwealths. Kingdoms are much upheld by the eloquence of Orators, and by the wiſdom of the Ancient. God makes theſe two removes, when he would remove the beauty and bleſſing of a Kingdom. Firſt,

He removeth away the ſpeech of the truſty.

The Hebrew is, He removeth the lips of the truſty. The ſame word ſignifies lips and ſpeech, becauſe the lips are the inſtrument of ſpeech (Gen. 11. 1.) All the earth was of one ſpeech, or of one lip; that is, they all ſpake one Language. He removeth the ſpeech of

The truſty.] The word hath a double reading, according to a double derivation in the Hebrew. For ſome derive it from a root which ſignifies to ſpeak. Taking it ſo, the ſence is, He bereaveth Orators of their eloquence; or (as Mr. Broughton, cloſer to the letter) He bereaveth the Orator of lips, He makes them like men dumb, or tongue-tied, who were once all voice and tongue.

Labium ponitur pro loquela.

לנאמנים a rad. נאם Dixit locutus elocutus fuit. Rab. Kinchi.

Thus Job toucheth upon all thoſe evils which haſten the ruine of a people; one whereof, and that a great one, is this, when God takes away ſpeech from men, whoſe very trade it is to ſpeak. When God threatened to break the ſtaff of Iſrael, he ſaith, I will take away the eloquent Orator (Iſa. 3. 3.) Kingdoms, with all their bleſſings, are as much, if not more, upheld, or caſt down by tongues, then they are by hands.

God is ſaid to remove, or take away the ſpeech of the Orator, two wayes.

Firſt, When he takes the Orators away; his picking ſuch out of Councils by death, hath had a ſad preſage in it, of the approaching funerals of publick proſperity.

Secondly, When though he leaves the ſpeakers, yet he diſables them to ſpeak: When though he leave the Orator, yet he takes away his Oratory, ſo that he cannot deliver himſelf with any command over the attentions and affections of his hearers: That's the excellency of Oratory, to carry the heart by the ear; to make every ſentence perſwaſive; every word a nail, or a goad; a nail to faſten reſolution, or a goad to quicken unto action. It was ſaid of a Grecian Orator, who was alſo a great Souldier, that he thundred and lightned, moved and awakened all when he ſpake. But if God once take away the ſpeech of the Orator, he may ſpeak his hearers into a ſleep.

Pericles (Olympius propter eloquentiam dictus) fulminabat, intonabat, confundebat Græciam. Plutarch. in vita Peric.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, That ability of ſpeech is a ſpecial gift of God. He removeth and taketh it away, therefore he giveth it. (Exod. 4. 10.) We find Moſes eloquent only to tell God he was not eloquent: He ſpeaks very rhetorically to excuſe his ſervice for want of Rhetorick. Lord (ſaith he) I am not eloquent, neither heretofore, nor ſince thou haſt ſpoken unto thy ſervant (neither yeſterday, nor to day; that is, not at any time) but I am ſlow of ſpeech, and of a ſlow tongue. But how doth the Lord anſwer him? The Lord ſaid unto him, Who hath made mans mouth? As if he had ſaid, Seeing I make the mouth, which is the inſtrument of ſpeech, or the ſhop wherein words are made, I alſo can make the mouth eloquent, and give thee words to ſpeak. The Lord argues further with Moſes, Who maketh the dumb? Is it not I the Lord? I who make the dumb, can make thee ſpeak, and ſpeak eloquently too: I can give thee a flowing tongue. Therefore be not afraid to go on my errand: I, who ſend thee, will ſtore thee with language to do the errand about which I ſend thee: It ſhall be given thee in that ſame hour, what to ſpeak.

Secondly obſerve, Man is not maſter of his own tongue.

God takes away the lip of the Orator. They (Pſal. 12. 3, 4.) bragged much of their tongues; ſurely they thought if any thing was their own, their tongues were, they could ſpeak what they liſt, Who is Lord over us? ſay they: Yet they found a Lord over their tongues. God is Lord of the tongue two wayes, Firſt, Becauſe he will bring every one to an account for his tongue: Thoſe boaſters (Pſal. 12.) thought themſelves exempted from any ſuch controul, Our tongues are our own, who is Lord over us? Who hath any thing to do with what we ſpeak? Who ſhall audit us for words and ſyllables? Yes, there is one will do it to a ſyllable. God gives the rule what we ſhall ſpeak, and he will call every one to a reckoning for what he hath ſpoken.

Secondly, God is Lord of the tongue, in reference to the power of ſpeech. Man cannot ſpeak what he would, or when he would (Numb. 23. 11, 12.) Balak had hired Balaam to curſe the people of God; and Balaam had a good will to it, if ever man had; but Balak found Balaam in another note, he only publiſhed the glory of Iſrael, and propheſied their higheſt bleſſings. Balak was extreamly troubled at this; and ſaith, What haſt thou done unto me? I took thee to curſe mine enemies, and behold thou haſt bleſſed them altogether. As if he had ſaid, What Balaam? Art not thou maſter of thy own words? I called thee to curſe, and not to bleſs; didſt not thou underſtand what my buſineſs was? I knew Iſrael was fenced enough, and too much, with bleſſings: How is it, that when I ſent for thee to blaſt them, that thou haſt bleſſed them altogether? art thou bribed on their ſide? or knoweſt thou not, that I am able to promote thee to honour? ſpeak, man, the ſudden fate of this numerous people, and fear not: Why haſt thou gone ſo contrary to my deſign? What ſaith Balaam? He anſwered and ſaid, Muſt I not take heed to ſpeak that which the Lord hath put in my mouth? Balaam ſeems to reply from his conſcience. 'Tis the duty of every man to take heed to ſpeak that which the Lord puts in his mouth. But Balaam was only overpower'd: If God would have ſuffered him to ſpeak what Balaak had deſired, his own conſcience had never ſtood in his way: He that opened his Aſſes mouth a little before to reprove his madneſs, now ſhut his mouth from uttering that wickedneſs. The Lord (ſaith he) hath bleſſed them, and I cannot reverſe it: As if he had ſaid, I have been tugging at it, and labouring to curſe them, but I cannot do it. The Lord reſtrained his heart, and bound his tongue, that he could not form a curſe, and now he puts it off with this fine language, Muſt I not take heed to ſpeak that which the Lord hath put in my mouth? No man ever came with fuller purpoſe to curſe the Iſrael of God then Balaam did, but his tongue was not his own, he could not.

So much upon that rendring of the Text, He bereaves Orators of their eloquence.

We tranſlate, He removeth away the ſpeech of the truſty: And ſo the word is derived from a root, which ſignifies conſtancy, fidelity, truth, ſtability in word or deed: Men ſo qualified, are worthy to be truſted, and only they. But though it is eaſie to ſay, who a truſty man is, yet it may be doubted ſtill who is here meant by theſe truſty men: Yet conſidering Job's ſcope, we may well conclude, that he ſpeaks of of men either actually truſted, or worthy to be truſted with the mannagement of publick affairs. Some Magiſtrates are not only Governours over the people, but Feoffees for them. Thus the Free-holders of England in their reſpective places, chuſe the Members of the Houſe of Commons in Parliament, as their Truſtees, and commit the protection of their eſtates and liberties into their hand: Of ſuch Truſty-men, or of men thus Truſted, we may well interpret this text. And as of theſe Counſellours whom the people chuſe, and Truſt; ſo alſo of thoſe whom Kings and Princes chuſe for, and truſt with great offices and employments.

But how doth God remove away the ſpeech of ſuch men: What? doth he make them ſpeechleſs, or ſtrike them dumb? he can do that; but here (I conceive) the removing of ſpeech may be taken two wayes, firſt, only, for an abating of the ability of ſpeech; ſo that they who would, cannot give counſel, either with that clearneſs of judgement, or freedom of language, which they have ſometimes ſhewed. Secondly, For the changing or turning of the tenour of their ſpeech. When a man ſpeaks unlike himſelf, contrary to what he hath ſpoken, when he ſpeaks, as if he were not the ſame man, then his ſpeech is removed. When a man, who once ſpake for the truth of God, ſpeaks againſt it: When he that once ſpake for the rights, and juſt liberties of men, is now heard ſpeaking againſt them: When they who in every ſpeech were wont to advance thoſe counſels which tended to the peace and ſafety of Kingdoms, ſhall upon all emergencies ſpeak that which doth but lengthen out their trouble and danger, Then know the ſpeech of the truſty is removed. The ſpeech is never removed till the heart be. The mind is firſt changed, and then the words. As the manner of ſpeaking ſhews of what countrey we are, Thou art a Galilean, and thy ſpeech bewrayeth thee: ſo the matter which is ſpoken diſcovers of what part we are. We may ſay to many, you are thus or thus, for your ſpeech bewrayeth you: and to ſome, You are removed from the cauſe you once appeared in, for your ſpeech is removed: you have certainly turn'd tables, and changed your intereſt, for your language is changed, and your diſcourſe runs counter to all you did before.

This is the removing of ſpeech.

But how can we attribute this to God? I anſwer, God changes or removes the ſpeech of the truſty, not by making them unconſtant and unfaithful, but by leaving them to their own unfaithfulneſs and unconſtancy: All men (even the beſt of men) have a ſeed of unfaithfulneſs, or a principle of apoſtacy in them, and if God leave them to themſelves, they are quickly turned aſide. No man knows what his heart will do, till he is tryed.

The time of temptation is the time of diſcovery. Changes in the providence of God, make the changeableneſs of mens mindes, both viſible in their actions, and audible in their ſpeeches. For

This change or remove of ſpeech, ariſeth two wayes.

Sometimes from fear. Some are ſurpriſed and arreſted with dreadful forecaſts, what will become of them, and their eſtates, what of their wives and children, if they ſtand to former profeſſions and engagements. Fear is a very bad counſellour. Fear hath removed the ſpeech of the truſty more then once.

Secondly, The ſpeech of the truſty is removed through hopes and gifts. Expectation will change a mans opinion, much more will ſomewhat in poſſeſſion. How many have loſt or alter'd their tongues by being felt in the hand, (Deut. 16. 19.) A gift doth blind the eyes of the wiſe, and pervert the words of the righteous. That expreſſion in Moſes of perverting words, doth excellently anſwer and expound this in Job of removing ſpeech. And whereas Job ſaith only that the ſpeech of the truſty is removed, Moſes ſaith, the words of the righteous are perverted. He that was right and went right before, even his words are perverted by a gift. The ancient adage ſaid of ſuch, The ox is upon their tongue, that is, money or worldly reſpects hath ſilenced them. The reaſon of that ſpeaking was becauſe the figure of an ox was anciently ſtampt upon their money; we ſay the black ox treads upon ſome mens toes; we may ſay, the white, or the red ox treads ſo hard upon many mens tongues, that either they will not ſpeak at all, or not as they did. We read that Demoſthenes, a great Orator, being to ſpeak upon a buſineſs of conſequence, came to the bar with a ſcarff or muffler about his neck, and ſaid he was not able to ſpeak, he was troubled with a Quincey; to which ſome of the wits of the time anſwered, That the Orator was ſick of the money, not of the Quincey. Bribes had ſwell'd his throat, that he could not plead. Thus the ſpeech of the truſty is removed, when ſome unrighteous bias will not ſuffer them to ſpeak what they ſhould, or carries them to ſpeak what they ſhould not.

Βȣ̃ς ἐπὶ γλώτ]η.

Non Angina ſed Argentangina correptum Oratorē dicentes. Plutar.

Yet further, Some underſtand the truſty, of (men truſted with the ſouls of men) the Prieſts and Prophets of thoſe times. The word may be well tranſlated, truth-ſpeakers, or meſſengers of truth, God removeth their ſpeech.

Firſt, When they whom he had ſent with promiſes of mercy in their mouths, are now commanded to thunder out threatnings and denunciations of his wrath; when they to whom God hath ſaid, Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, have now no meſſages, but ſad ones, no viſions, but of amazement and deſolation.

Secondly, the Lord removeth away the ſpeech of theſe truſty ones, by leaving a people to the ſpeech of thoſe who are untruſty. When the Jews would not receive the faithful Prophets, God gave them up to the teachings of falſe Prophets. Speech is removed, when the ſpeakers are thus changed.

Commutat promiſſiones ſuas factas per prophetas, in comminationes, vel efficit ut qui læta polliceri ſolent nihil jā niſi triſte prædicent. Philip.

Thirdly, God changeth or removeth the ſpeech of Truth-ſpeakers, by forbidding them to ſpeak. God doth ſometimes ſilence the ſincereſt Prophets. When men will not obey what they ſpeak, God will not let them ſpeak, (Ezek. 3. 26.) I will make thy tongue cleave to the roof of thy mouth, that thou ſhalt be dumb, and ſhalt not be to them a reprover, for they are a rebellious houſe. As men when their ſin is at the higheſt, ſay to the Prophets, Propheſie no more; ſo when judgement is at the higheſt, God ſaith unto the Prophets, Propheſie not. The wrath of God is extreamly hot, when flattering Prophets are ſent to cry, Peace, peace, where there is no peace, and to daube up ſinful men with untempered morter: 'Tis alſo as hot, if not hotter, when God puts a bar upon the lips of his faithful Prophets, that they ſhall no longer denounce his war againſt ſin, or convince the ſinner. The peace of a people cannot be long liv'd, when once the ſpeech of the truſty is thus or thus removed.

Take two brief deductions from all.

Firſt, There is no depending upon the faithfulneſs of man. God removeth away the ſpeech of the truſty. Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lye, (Pſal. 62. 9.) they that have done and ſpoken right to day, may ſpeak and do wrong to morrow. Man is a mutable creature in his qualification, as well as in his conſtitution. Both his natural, and his moral endowments, are as mortal as his life is: And in many, theſe die and go to the grave before their Maſters.

Secondly, If the ſpeech of the truſty be ſo often removed, Then, we muſt judge of what is ſpoken by a ſtanding rule, not by the perſon ſpeaking. It is an evil, and a ſoar diſeaſe under the ſun, that good counſels are refuſed, becauſe ſome have a prejudice againſt the perſon: And it is a worſe evil, when all, even evil Counſels are received upon the good eſteem we have of the perſon. We muſt look to the matter, not to the man, both in the things of God, and in the things of men; there is neither wiſdom nor ſafety in taking any thing upon truſt, eſpecially when we hear that God in judgement removes away the ſpeech of the truſty. Whoſoever ſpeaks, if he ſpeak truth, it ought to be embraced. And though an Achitophel, an Oracle of wiſdom on earth, or Angel from heaven, ſpeak what is falſe, 'tis our duty to reject it. The wiſeſt men are not alwayes wiſe, neither do the prudent alwayes underſtand their way. The holieſt men are not holy in all things, neither do they who are real friends to truth ſpeak all truth. Paul (Gal. 2.) found Peter faultering in his ſpeech, and giving not only counſel but example that was not right. The ancient Fathers, men of profound judgement and underſtanding in the Scriptures, have erred, and miſdelivered the mind of God. Whole Councils (which are a collection of wiſe and learned men) have had their miſtakes. We may conclude as the Prophet doth (Iſa. 2. 22.) Ceaſe ye from man, whoſe breath is in his noſtrils, for wherein is he to be accounted of? The honeſt and the wiſe, the holy and the juſt, the eloquent and the truſty, are not alwayes to be truſted, For, God removeth away the ſpeech of the truſty, who (poſſibly) may be all theſe.

And taketh away the underſtanding of the aged.

Sapientes ſenes vocantur licet ſint juvenes, propterea quod ſapientia utplurimū in ſenibus invenitur. Rab. Dav.

Underſtanding is ſo proper to the aged, or men of years, that an underſtanding young man, deſervedly draws upon himſelf the honour and account of many years; as an old man very fooliſh, is young-old; ſo a young man very wiſe, is old-young.

Age ordinarily heightens underſtanding, and experience maturates and improves natural parts, as was ſhewed at the twelfth verſe: yet they whoſe underſtandings have had the greateſt advantages of experience, may act without underſtanding, yea againſt, not only experience, but reaſon. Some mens underſtandings are enfeebled with age, and themſelves are old children rather then old men: that's the judgement which this text holds out unto us.

The word which we render underſtanding, ſignifies to taſt, or the ſenſe of taſting, and it is frequently tranſlated from the ſenſe to the underſtanding, becauſe (as was ſhewed at the 11th verſe) the underſtanding taſts a doctrine, or a propoſition, whether it be true or falſe, as the mouth or palat taſts meat, whether it be ſweet or bitter. This word is very comprehenſive, ſignifying (as ſome critical Rabbins teach us) counſel, judgement, wiſdom, reaſon, both the argument and decree upon which any thing is done, as alſo the diſcretion with which it is done. Grammarians tell us that the due and proper accent of every word, is in the Hebrew called [Tagnam] becauſe the accent doth give as it were a right taſte of the ſenſe, and ſo leads to a right underſtanding of the word. When the holy ſinger invites all to that glorious banquet, (Pſal. 24.8.) O taſte and ſee that the Lord is good, he means, underſtand how good he is. The ſame inſpired heart prayes in this language, (Pſal. 110. 56.) Teach me good judgement and knowledge, that is, give me a true taſte and reliſh of heavenly truth, Prov. 11.22. As a jewel in a ſwines ſnout, ſo is a fair woman without diſcretion or underſtanding. Beauty without brains is a loathſome deformity. In the book of Ezra, the Chief or Preſident of a Council, who ordereth and moderates the whole proceeding there, is thus expreſſed, The Maſter of Taſte. He had need to have a quick internal palate, who muſt taſte all men, and all matters, as the Preſident of a Council muſt.

This taſte, this underſtanding, or whatſoever moral excellency comes within the compaſs of this word, God taketh away ſometimes from the aged, or from men (who for that ſervice) are of the moſt perfect age.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Our underſtandings are at the diſpoſe of God.

He gives underſtanding to the ſimple, and he can take it from the ſubtile. Old men are not alwayes wiſe: Not only becauſe ſome never had wiſdom, but becauſe many looſe the wiſdom which once they had. And this is a loſs which we ſuſtain from no hand but the hand of God. Man may take our riches and worldly eſtates from us, and make us poor, but God only can take our underſtandings from us, and make us fools. Men can empty our purſes, but God, and God only can empty our brains.

Quos perdere vult Jupiter hos dementat.

Obſerve Secondly, That when the Lord will deſtroy a people, he takes away the underſtanding of the ancient.

Heathens ſaid, God bereaves them of underſtanding, whom he deſigns for deſtruction. Now as this is a ſad preſage of ruine to the party himſelf, ſo likewiſe of ruine to thoſe who have relation to him. And as it is a judgement upon a people when Princes refuſe the aged, and follow young Counſellours: So it is the ſame, if not a greater judgement upon a people, when God takes wiſdom from old Counſellours, and leaves them to act like young ones. A young man without underſtanding cannot do ſo much hurt as he that is aged: His youth leaves his advices under queſtion and diſcuſſion. But when old and experienced Counſellours, who have travelled in affairs many years, and have got the reputation of wiſe men, prove like empty casks without any filling of wiſdom, they quickly undo all with authority, and unſuſpected. No marvel then if God put this among his marvellous judgements, (Iſa. 29.14.) Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvellous work amongſt this people, even a marvellous work and a wonder. See how attention is raiſed, here is, Behold, and then, Behold I will do a marvellous work, and then, a marvellous work and a wonder: And what it is? The wiſdom of their wiſe men ſhall periſh, and the underſtanding of their prudent men ſhall be hid. No man wonders to ſee ſome men without wiſdom, they were never guilty of it: But to ſee wiſe men unwiſe, and prudent men (ſuch I mean as have given long proof of their prudence) without underſtanding, here's a wonder. As we ſay, young men may die, but old men muſt; ſo young men may be wiſe, but old men ſhould: and thoſe old men, who have once been thought wiſe, are ſeldom thought otherwiſe of, though God have indeed taken away their wiſdom. Now there are no fools do ſo much miſchief, as they who are thought to be wiſe. A fool that is wiſe in his own conceit only, endangers no body but himſelf, for no body will truſt him. But a fool that is wiſe in the conceit of others, may endanger thouſands, for all are ready, not only to truſt, but adore his foolſhip. It would not be ſo great a judgement to have underſtanding taken from the aged, if the reputation of it were not ſtill left upon them. It is a ſoar ſcourge to a land, when God, as the Prophet threatens (Iſa. 3. 2.) takes away that ſtaff, the prudent and the ancient, that is, young men who are wiſe, as well as ancient wiſe men. But it is a ſoarer ſcourge, when he takes away the prudence of the ancient: So that thoſe ancient men, who uſed to be prudent, become light and precipitate in their counſels. When ſtayed and ſober-paced men, run headlong, all, both things and perſons, are like to run headlong with them. By ſuch mens fooliſh counſels, the wiſe and juſt God brings the honourable into contempt, and the ſtrong to weakneſs; and when all this is done, there is nothing wanting for the ruine of a people, but their actual ruining. The next verſe ſhews us God doing both theſe.

Verſ. 21. He poureth contempt upon Princes, and weakneth the ſtrength of the mighty.

This verſe (I ſay) is a continuation of the former argument: giving us yet more prognoſticks of the approaching ruine of Kingdoms and Common-wealths. He had ſaid (verſ. 19th) He leadeth Princes away ſpoiled, now, He poureth contempt upon Princes. As underſtanding is moſt proper for the aged, ſo is honour for Princes, and ſtrength for the mighty. God, to make his judgements exact, puniſheth them in that which is moſt peculiar to them. He poureth contempt upon Princes, &c.

Solet effuſio magnā profuſi liquoris copiā denotare. Pined.

He poureth contempt.] That is, he makes them very contemptible. To pour out any liquid, implieth plenty of it; as the pouring out of the ſpirit, a plentiful giving of the ſpirit. When the ſpirit was poured out (*Act.*2.) The by-ſtanders ſaid, theſe men are full of new wine: No ſaith the Apoſtle, theſe men are not drunken (as ye ſuppoſe) but this is that which was ſpoken by the Prophet Joel, And it ſhall come to paſs in the laſt dayes (ſaith God) that I will pour out of my ſpirit upon all fleſh, that is, they ſhall have abundance of my Spirit. So, Iſa. 44. 3. I will pour out water upon him that is thirſty, and floods upon the dry ground; that is, they ſhall have much ſpiritual refreſhing, who now are quite deſtitute of it: ſuch are there ſhadowed out by the thirſty and dry ground. Again, (Zech. 12. 10.) I will pour upon the houſe of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the ſpirit of grace and of ſupplication. And as pouring, applied to the ſpirit, implies a great meaſure of the ſpirit, ſo in any other. Pſal. 42. 4. When I remember theſe things, I pour out my ſoul in me: The pouring out of the ſoul is the pouring out of ſorrows; and to pour out ſorrow, is to be exceeding ſorrowful: So the pouring out of fury, notes an exceſſive fury, Ezek. 20. 33. And when David as a Type of Chriſt complaineth (Pſal. 22. 14.) I am poured out like water, his meaning is, all my bodily ſtrength and comforts are departed. Whatſoever is poured out, poured in, or poured upon us, be it good or evil, we have enough of it. Much contempt is their portion upon whom contempt is poured. Here it is poured upon them, upon whom a little is very much,

Upon Princes.] Princes are veſſels of civil honour, yea many Princes are fountains of civil honor, they pour honour upon others; how great a turn is it, when contempt is poured on them, and they filled with diſhonour! Some are ſo contemptible, that they are not ſenſible of contempt: but nothing touches Princes ſo ſoon as contempt doth. 'Tis worſe to them to be deſpiſed, then to be deſtroyed; and they can eaſier part with their lives then with their honour. Here then is the very pinch of Princes, contempt, eſpecially if they be Princes of Noble and Princely ſpirits: Such are pointed at in this word, which properly ſignifies munificent, liberal and free-hearted; Princes are, or ſhould be ſo. Liberality or munificence is the vertue and honour of Princes. Such a free Princely ſpirit God expects from the meaneſt of his people toward his ſervice (Exod. 35.5.) Take ye from amongſt you an offering unto the Lord, whoſoever is of a willing heart, let him bring it. A true worſhipper is not thruſt and driven on by an outward written law, but findes a law written in his own heart: He (as it is ſaid of Araunah) like a King gives to the King. David prayeth, Uphold me with thy free ſpirit, (Pſal. 51. 14.) 'Tis this word: the ſpirit of the Lord is a Noble, free, Princely ſpirit. It is free two wayes, Firſt, Subjectively, or in it ſelf, giving out freely and liberally to us. Secondly, It is free in the effects, Where the ſpirit of the Lord is, there is liberty, it makes us free. They who have received this ſpirit, ſerve the Lord freely, and judge his ſervice freedom. Hence (Pſal. 110.3.) all the people of God are expreſſed by this word, a Princely people; Thy people ſhall be willing in the day of thy power, they ſhall be willing as Princes, liberal as Kings, they ſhall give up ſoul, body, name, eſtate, all to Jeſus Chriſt. They who have felt the day of divine power, are not acted by humane power, by the coercions and ordinances of men; they are under no conſtraint, but that of the love of Chriſt. Worldly Princes have that in their name, which the Saints have in their nature. And becauſe many worldly Princes have ſo little of that in their natures, which they have fully in their name, true Nobleneſs, I mean, and freeneſs of ſpirit to do good and defend thoſe who are good, therefore God poureth contempt upon them.

נרב Liberales, munificos denotat, quod liberalitas & beneficentia principes maximè deceat. Nadib eſt homo liberi ſpiritus, non invitè & coactè ſed ſua ſe voluntate impellens ad honeſta & laudabilia. Merc.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, If Princes uſe not their honour for Chriſt, Chriſt will pour diſhonour upon Princes.

1 Sam. 2. 30. Them that honour me I will honour, and they that deſpiſe me ſhall be lightly eſteemed. When Princes act unlike themſelves, God makes them unlike themſelves, vile and contemptible. The Apoſtle ſpeaks of himſelf and of his fellow Apoſtles in (1 Cor. 4.9.) I think that God hath ſet forth us the Apoſtles laſt, as it were appointed unto death; for we are made a ſpectacle unto the world, and to Angels, and to men. As the Lord ſuffers his Saints to have contempt poured upon them by the world, and to be made a ſpectacle of ſcorn; ſo he himſelf poureth contempt upon the greateſt of worldly Princes, he ſetteth them as upon a theater or open ſtage, that all may behold and look upon them, and ſay, Thus hath God done with the men who had no delight to honour him. Since thou waſt precious in my ſight (ſaith God of his meaneſt people, Iſa. 43.4.) thou haſt been honourable, that is, altogether honourable in thy ſelf, and honoured by all men who know thy worth: and when once higheſt Princes are vile in the ſight of God, they become diſhonourable, even altogether diſhonourable in themſelves, as alſo in the eye and eſteem of all men who know their unworthineſs. And when Princes are thus become diſhonourable, they are within a ſtep of becoming miſerable. The Pſalmiſt had no ſooner ſaid, He poureth contempt upon Princes, but preſently it follows, and cauſeth them to wander in the wilderneſs where there is no way, (Pſal. 107.40.) When Princes are under contempt, they are uncertain of their courſe, they are entangled in their counſels, they are in a maze, and know neither their way, nor their end, but are at their wits end, and at their honours end, both together. We have a Prophecy of a glorious Kingdom, (Iſa. 32.1.) Behold a King ſhall reign in righteouſneſs, and Princes ſhall rule in judgement, &c. Then (verſ. 5.) The vile perſon ſhall no more be called liberal, or Prince. Nabal ſhall not glory in this title Nadib. Nabal is a fool, and Nadib is a Prince. In that Kingdom, fools or vile perſons ſhall no more be honoured nor adored like golden Idols. Men ſhall be known what they are, and called what they deſerve. Then, Princes who miſapply their power, and refuſe to be nurſing fathers to the Church, then, Princes who bring not their glory to the new Jeruſalem, and ſubmit not their crowns unto the Lamb, even all they who are a terrour to the good, and praiſe them who do evil, ſhall no more be named gracious Lords, but ſhall go forth with everlaſting ſhame (inſtead of a crown) upon their heads. Swelling titles will be no Sanctuary againſt thoſe vials of contempt, ready to be poured out upon all contemners of Chriſt, and oppoſers of his throne, for ever.

Secondly Obſerve, They that have received much honour from God, ſhall receive much ſhame from him, if they abuſe their honour.

Proportional to the honour they have received will the contempt be which they ſhall receive. God doth not drop, but pour honour upon Princes; therefore he will not drop, but pour contempt upon them by whole buckets full, it ſhall come down as a ſweeping rain. As they who have had, not only as Moſes ſpeaks of his, doctrine dropping as the rain, and ſpeech diſtilling as the dew, but Goſpel knowledge pouring down upon them; theſe ſhall not have ſome drops of anger, but God will pour out his anger and his fury upon them, if they are unfruitful, or bring not forth fruit meet for his (their Maſters) uſe. They that have but a drop or two of the word, ſhall have comparatively but a drop of judgement. That's the reaſon why it ſhall be eaſier for Sodom and Gomorrah, for Tyre and Sidon, then for Bethſaida and Chorazin, at the day of judgement, Matth. 11.22. Juſtice looks to the meaſure, as well as to the matter of ſin, in pronouncing puniſhments. He poureth contempt upon Princes,

And weakneth the ſtrength of the mighty.

The Hebrew is, He weakneth the girdle of the mighty. The Vulgar and the Septuagint are very bold with this text, in their tranſlations, giving a ſenſe hardly reconcileable to the Original. He relieveth thoſe that are oppreſſed, ſaith the one: He healeth thoſe that are humble, ſaith the other: Both wide enough from our reading, He weakneth the ſtrength of the mighty. The word ſignifies rivers and torrents, which run with a mighty force. He looſeneth the ſtrength or girdle of the mighty: the ſame word notes a girdle and ſtrength, becauſe a girdle cauſeth ſtrength, or is an advantage to put out our ſtrength; for though now men uſually ungird themſelves when they go about ſtrong labor, yet in thoſe times it was not ſo; Job ſpeaks according to the cuſtom of thoſe Eaſtern Countries, who (wearing long garments) when they prepared for travel or labour, girded up themſelves, that ſo they might be more nimble and expeditious. Job had ſaid, verſ. 19. He overthroweth the mighty; here he ſaith, He weakneth the ſtrength of the mighty. There is a difference between theſe two: There, he bringeth a greater power, and ſo overthroweth them. As 'tis ſaid in the Goſpel, though a ſtrong man armed keep the houſe, yet when a ſtronger comes, he ſpoils him. But here 'tis ſaid, He weakneth the ſtrength of the mighty, that is, he abateth or draweth out their ſtrength. As the waters of a great river, being drawn out by ſluces, the ſtrength of the river is weakned: So the Lord drains and draws out the ſtrength of mighty men, and weakens them. It is ſtoryed, that when Cyrus beſieged Babylon, which was encompaſſed with a mighty river, the river Euphrates, he made many ſluces and cuts, which fetched out all the water from the river, and ſo ſurpriſed them in the height of ſecurity, they thinking the place impregnable, and having alſo a propheſie, That the city ſhould never be taken till the river proved their enemy. Thus the Lord, he ſluceth out the ſtrength of the ſtrongeſt men, their perſonal ſtrength, the ſtrength of their arms and legs; their relational ſtrength, the ſtrength of their friends, allies, and confederates; ſo ſome underſtand this place: There is a girdle of ſtrength wherewith one Nation is tyed to another, ſuch are leagues of amity and mutual aid: The Lord weakneth this ſtrength alſo, and makes them who were a help, a hurt unto their neighbours. He ſaith, Gird your ſelves, and ye ſhall

He overthrows ſtrength, not only by overpowering it, but by unpowering it. He can alwayes bring more ſtrength then we have, or leſſen the ſtrength which we have. As we cannot maſter Gods ſtrength, ſo we are not maſters of our own. Sampſon's ſtrength was a terror to the Philiſtims ; but as ſoon as God was gone from him, his ſtrength was gone, and then they deſpiſed him, who before trembled at him ; and called him out to make them ſport, whoſe preſence had ſo often ſpoiled their ſport. How many mighty men hath God weakned ? How many invincible Armies and Armadoes of men (as proud men have ſtiled them) hath God conquered ? How many potent Kingdoms and Commonwealths hath God reduced to confuſed heaps ? Once hath God ſpoken, yea twice have I heard thus, that power belongeth unto God ; alſo unto thee, O Lord, belongeth mercy (Pſal. 62. 11, 12.) 'Tis ſafeſt for us to fly to this mercy, ſeeing we can neither fly from, nor ſtand before this power. Thou haſt a mighty arm, O God, ſtrong is thy hand, and high is thy right hand, (Pſal. 80. 13.) The weakneſs of God is ſtronger then man : And before God all mans ſtrength is turned into weakneſs. All the Inſtances which Job hath already given, prove this great truth, That with God is wiſdom and ſtrength ; and leaſt any ſhould think it is not yet proved enough, he is ready in the two next verſes to give us yet a further, and (if a clearer may be) a clearer proof.

VERS. 22, 23.

He diſcovereth deep things out of darkneſs, and bringeth out to light the ſhadow of death.

He increaſeth the Nations, and deſtroyeth them : he enlargeth the Nations, and ſtraiteneth them again.

WE have ſeen, in the former context, how large a teſtimony Job hath given of the power and wiſdom of God ; producing many proofs which ſpeak both no leſs then infinite. And becauſe thoſe were particular and perſonal, therefore he giveth us (in theſe two verſes) two more which are general, and National. He diſcovereth deep things out of darkneſs. He increaſeth the Nations, &c. Here's providence unlocking ſecrets, opening thoſe things which were ſealed up : theſe acts are attended with ſutable effects, The increaſing and deſtroying, the enlarging and ſtraitening of the Nations.

Verſe 22. He diſcovereth deep things out of darkneſs.

גלה: מגלה: De revelatione occultorum propriè uſurpatur. Profunda tenebris obducta & aperta ſunt. Pined.

The word properly ſignifies to unfold that which is wrapped up, or to manifeſt that which is hidden. Deep places are hidden places. God diſcovereth thoſe things which are moſt hidden, even deep things out of darkneſs : Deep things, and darkneſs, are put together, becauſe that which is deep is dark. The further we remove from the fountain of light, the more darkneſs prevails over us ; and therefore every degree of deepneſs adds a degree of darkneſs ; all depth being downward, and ſo a departure from the Sun. In the beginning darkneſs was upon the face of the deep (Gen. 1. 1.) but darkneſs is alwayes in the bottom of the deep, He diſcovereth deep things out of darkneſs, that is, the remoteſt, loweſt, and moſt retired depths. Theſe deep things may be referred to two heads.

There are deep things of God : And deep things of men.

The deep things of God are, Firſt his thoughts (Pſal. 92. 5.) O Lord, how great are thy works ? and thy thoughts are very deep : ſo deep, that all the line of mans underſtanding is not able to ſound or fadom them. The thoughts of God are his Decrees and Counſels ; he doth not think to reſolve, but his thoughts are his reſolutions. The thoughts of God are ſo deep, that the Apoſtle (with a mixture of amazement and adoration) cries out, O the depth (Rom. 11. 33.) Secondly, The deep things of God are his Word, containing either Doctrines to be believed, or Prophecies to be fulfilled. The Word of God hath its ſhallows, and it hath its depths : there a Lamb may wade, and there an Elephant may ſwim.

Secondly, There are deep things of men ; which are of divers ſorts.

Firſt, His Word is deep. Though the words of men float upon their tongues, yet Solomon aſſures us, that The words of a mans (that is, as the word imports, of an excellent mans) mouth are as deep waters (Prov. 18. 4.) A wiſe prudent man ſpeaks Oracles ; and when you hear the ſound, and underſtand the Grammatical ſence, you do not preſently reach the depth of what is ſpoken. As ſome ſpeak ſhallowly, ſo they hear ſhallowly ; they dive not into thoſe deep waters which flow from a wiſe mans mouth. He ſpeaks wiſdom in a myſtery, or myſteries of wiſdom.

Secondly, There is a depth in a man, deeper then his words, and that is, the depth of his thoughts (Pſal. 64. 6.) Both the inward thought of every one of them, and the heart is deep. The heart is often put for the inward thought ; but here, the inward thought is an act of the heart ; and the heart is the faculty, or power of thinking : Counſel in the heart of a man is like deep water (Prov. 20. 5.) The heart of man is a great deep, ſo deep, that none can find it out but God himſelf, Jer. 17. 10. I the Lord ſearch the heart, &c. What man (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 2. 11.) knoweth the things of a man (that is, thoſe things which lye in the heart of man) but the ſpirit of a man which is in him ? Some men flatter themſelves, that God himſelf cannot find out the things of their ſpirit : Hence that woe in the Prophet (Iſa. 29. 15.) Woe unto them that ſeek deep to hide their counſel from the Lord. Doubtleſs they had ſome hopes to hide their counſels from God, elſe they would never have ſought to hide them. They ſhewed themſelves fooliſh enough in ſeeking to hide them ; but they had proclaimed themſelves more fools in ſeeking to hide them, if they had been convinced they could not. But though no depth of mans heart can hide his counſel from God ; yet many men have depth enough in their hearts, and to ſpare, to hide their counſels from men.

Thirdly, There is in man a depth of doctrine, or opinion ; which is alſo called the depth of Satan (Rev. 2. 24.) As many as have not known the depths of Satan : Thoſe depths of Satan were the dark opinions, and falſe doctrines of ſeducers : Theſe called their opinions depths, or profundities : And the holy Ghoſt addeth an Epithete, depths of Satan. As if he had ſaid, you call your opinions depths, and ſo they are, but they are ſuch depths as Satan hath brought out of Hell ; they are the whiſperings and hiſſings of that Serpent, not the inſpirations of God. The doctrine of Antichriſt (that great Merchant of error) is called a myſtery of iniquity (2 Theſ. 2. 7.) A myſtery is a truth ſhut up, or lying in the deep : The deep and dark myſteries of the wicked, will God reveal, verſ. 8. For he diſcovereth deep things out of darkneſs.

Darkneſs may be taken two wayes. There is a natural darkneſs, which is only the privation of natural light : And there is a metaphorical darkneſs, which is the privation of moral light. This darkneſs is in many through their ignorance ; and this darkneſs is made by others through their knowledge. The infinite knowledge of God makes a darkneſs to hide his ways and counſels in, and ſo doth the knowledge of men. They keep their projects and purpoſes under the vails and viſors of ſpecious pretences, and ſtudied ſecrecies. Out of all this darkneſs God diſcovers deep things.

The latter clauſe of the verſe is but an heightning of this, He bringeth out to light the ſhadow of death.

Shadow of death, is taken two wayes.

Firſt, For extream danger.

Secondly, For extream darkneſs.

For extream danger, Pſal. 23. 4. Though I walk through the valley of the ſhadow of death, that is, in deadly danger, yet I will fear no evil.

But here, ſhadow of death, is put for extream darkneſs. The grave is a place of darkneſs ; and things that are buried lye in the dark. (Job 34. 22.) There is no darkneſs, nor ſhadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themſelves ; that is, the workers of iniquity cannot be hid in the thickeſt darkneſs. The ſhadow of death is the higheſt, the moſt ſuperlative degree of thickeſt darkneſs : As if Job had ſaid, God doth not only bring deep things out of darkneſs, but the deep things out of the greateſt darkneſs; out of that darkneſs that is as deep and dark as the grave.

When counſels lye ſo deep, that the perſons who have laid them, have not ſo much as any jealouſie they ſhall be diſcovered; when counſels lye ſo deep, that others have no hope that ever they ſhould be diſcovered; yet then the Lord diſcovereth them, and this is to bring out to light the ſhadow of death.

Hence obſerve, Firſt in general, All things are known unto God.

He that makes all things known, muſt needs know all things: And he that makes thoſe things known, which are moſt unknown, cannot but know thoſe things which are eaſily known. He that can expound a riddle, can tell the meaning of a plain ſaying; and he that diſcovers deep things out of darkneſs, cannot but ſee thoſe things that lye in the open Sun. Unleſs God were infinite in knowledge, he could not make theſe things known. (Eccleſ. 7. 24.) That which is far off, and exceeding deep, who can find it out? The Wiſe man ſends a challenge to the wiſe men of the world, to find out the wiſdom of God: That's the thing which is far off, not only from our ſenſes, but from our underſtanding. That's it which is exceeding deep. Deep, deep, as the Original expreſſeth it; deep to men, deep to Angels, and too deep for both. Who can find this out? No man can find any thing of it by his own light: and there are none who receive light to find it all out. God is light, and he dwells in light: and as he hath no darkneſs at all in him, ſo nothing is dark to him. He perfectly knows his own creating wiſdom: Neither is there any creature that is not manifeſt in his ſight, but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do. Many things are covered as to the eye of the world; they have masks and clouds caſt over them, which eyes of fleſh cannot ſee through; but theſe are all naked before the eye of God: yea they are as manifeſt and open to his eye, as a body is, when diſſected by the hand of a skilful Anatomiſt; he ſees our bowels, and knows whether we are ſound at heart or no. It is not the fairneſs of the skin, the cleanneſs of the outſide, will deceive him; if there be any ſpots upon the ſpirit, he diſcerns them; God needeth none to tell him what is in the heart of man, he makes his way into the depths of that darkneſs with his own eye.

Secondly, Obſerve, As God knows deep things, ſo he makes them known.

What is alwayes open to himſelf, he ſometimes revealeth unto man. God diſcovers both the deep things which himſelf or man doth or ſpeaketh.

Firſt, He revealeth the deep things which himſelf ſpeaketh. Unleſs God expound his own word, all our gloſſes will but corrupt it: For, No Propheſie of Scripture is of any private interpretation (2 Pet. 2.20.) By private interpretation, the Apoſtle means not the interpretation of one or of a few private men, for poſſibly, one or a few, and he or they not inveſted with any publick commiſſion, may give a true ſence of Scripture, when many, and they called to a publick office, miſtake and go wrong. But by private interpretation, he brands that comment which flows from a mans own brain, or fancy, without the conſent of other Scriptures, or the teachings of the Spirit. No Scripture, whether Doctrinal, or Prophetical, is of any ſuch private, that is, humane interpretation. Man with all his wit, learning, and parts, cannot interpret the Word of God, only the Spirit of God can, or they can, who are aſſiſted by the Spirit.

Propriã interpretationem non opponit communi ſive publicæ, ſed adventitiũ Spiritus ſancti donũ, ei ſolertiæ, vel ei ingenii vigori qui fit à natura hominibus quantũvis ingenioſis inſitus. Bez.

So much the Text in Peter now cited, holds out clearly in the letter; and yet ſome of the Learned give another expreſſion of it. For the words ſhew us rather the authority and original of the Scriptures, then the way of their interpretation. The Apoſtles ſcope being to prove, that the Prophets did not declare their own private opinions, but the mind of God, in what they ſpake, And that therefore the word of prophecy, as the Apoſtle adviſeth in the former verſe, is to be heeded carefully. The words following lead us alſo to the ſame ſence (ver. 21.) For the prophecy came not in the old time by the will of man: but holy men of God ſpake as they were moved by the holy Ghoſt. The Prophets were the Interpreters of the mind of God to the people; not the meſſengers of their own minds. The falſe Prophets vended their own dreams, and ran of their own heads before they were ſent; therefore their propheſies were of a private interpretation; that is, they opened only that to the people, which themſelves were authors of; ſo did not the true Prophets. They ſaid, Thus ſaith the Lord; or as Paul, We have received of the Lord, that which we deliver unto you. From all it appears, that the Apoſtle is ſpeaking of the pedigree, not of the expoſition of Prophetical Scriptures. Yet the truth is as evident for the one as for the other. As the Scripture it ſelf is not the interpretation of mans mind, ſo neither is any true interpretation of Scripture from the meer mind of man. The Spirit of God (in man) ſearcheth all things, even the deep things of God, 1 Cor. 2. 10. And without the Spirit, man cannot find any thing of God; no not that which lyeth uppermoſt, or moſt in ſight.

Senſus Petri Apoſtoli hic videtur eſſe, Prophetas non ſuæ mentis ſenſũ edidiſſe, ſed fuiſſe interpretes conſilii divini, vel prophetas non ſuã ſed Dei mentem hominibus expoſuiſſe. Camer. Myroth. Evang.

Again, He revealeth the deep things which himſelf doth. Surely the Lord will do nothing, but he revealeth his ſecret unto his ſervants the Prophets (Amos 3. 7.) The ſecret intended by the Prophet, was the decree and purpoſe of God to bring evil upon that Land, to take away the voice of mirth and gladneſs, and to make them an aſtoniſhment, an hiſſing, and a perpetual deſolation. The ſecret of ſuch decrees God reveals to his Prophets, that they may warn the people, either to prevent or prepare for the evil which is to come. When God was about to deſtroy Sodom, he ſaith, Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do? Gen. 18. 17. God revealed the riſing and fall of the Kingdoms of this world, the riſing and fall of the Kingdom of Antichriſt, the making of the Kingdoms of this world, the Kingdoms of the Lord, and of his Chriſt; all theſe the Lord revealed by the Spirit unto the Apoſtle John, by him collected into that book called The Revelation. In the eighth of Daniel (verſ. 13.) Chriſt is ſtiled Palmoni, which we tranſlate, a certain Saint, but in the Margents of our Bibles we put, The Numberer of ſecrets, or, a wonderful Numberer. Chriſt is the Numberer of ſecrets, he tells them over, and hath them all (as we ſay) at his fingers ends: he can give an account of them at an inſtant, both how many they are, and what they mean. When Nebuchadnezzar deſired to hear the interpretation of his dream, Daniel aſcribes all to God, He revealeth the deep and ſecret things, he knoweth what is the darkneſs, and the light dwelleth with him, Dan. 2. 22.

Qui occulta in numerato habet. Jun.

Beſides theſe deep and dark things which concern future events, the Lord revealeth alſo the deep things of doctrine, the ſupernatural myſteries of Religion; the Incarnation of his Son, the Reſurrection of the body, the myſtery of juſtifying Faith, and of the new Birth, which are abſurdities to Nature; theſe are all revealed in the Word of God to our ears, and by the Spirit of God to our hearts.

Secondly, As the Lord revealeth the deep things which himſelf doth, or ſpeaketh, ſo alſo the deep things of mans doing, or ſpeaking, whether they be good or evil. Though the ſinner go as deep as hell, yet himſelf, and his ſin, are under the eye of God. Thou (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) haſt ſet our iniquities before thee, and our ſecret ſins in the light of thy countenance. When God intends to puniſh iniquity, he is ſaid to ſet it before him, but whether he do or no, it is before him. And as our ſecret iniquity is alwayes before him, ſo he ſometimes ſets it before men. (Eccleſ. 10. 20.) Curſe not the King, no not in thy thought; and curſe not the rich in thy bed-chamber; for a bird of the air ſhall carry the voice, and that which hath wings ſhall tell the matter. Solomon warns thoſe who wickedly conſpire againſt Kings, and perſons in authority, to conſider, as their ſin, ſo their danger; for though they carry the matter never ſo cloſely, God can make it known: 'Tis hard for a man to conceal his own thoughts (when the mind is full it may quickly run over at the mouth) but 'tis eaſie with God to find out a way for the revealing of our thoughts. A bird of the air ſhall carry the voice: But what's the voice of a thought? Or, how comes a bird into the bed-chamber? The bed-chamber is the ſecureſt place; and a thought is the moſt ſecret act: What can be more ſecret then a thought? Who can hear the ſound of our thoughts, or underſtand their language? We ſay, Thought is free. Thoughts fall not under the cognizance, or cenſure of any Court. That which fears no evidence, fears no ſentence: Yet God, to whom our thoughts are evident, can ſend in evidence againſt our thoughts. A bird of the air ſhall carry the voice of that which hath no voice. It is a proverbial ſpeech, to note, that by the moſt unlikely means, if other means fail, God will reveal thoſe curſes, and reveal them ſpeedily. As if he had ſaid, Rather then ſuch ſecret witkedneſs ſhall be undiſcovered, God will make birds ſpeak, and chamber-doors ſpeak, the ſtone out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber ſhall ſpeak, rather then ſilence ſhall cover ſuch a wickedneſs. More diſtinctly, when he ſaith, A bird of the air ſhall carry the voice, he implyes two things: Firſt, That it ſhall be revealed by ſome unexpected means, or by means as little ſuſpected for the doing of ſuch a thing, as a bird is. As, when Balaam went on ſinfully, the dumb Aſs, ſpeaking with mans voice, forbad the madneſs of the Prophet: Balaam little dreamt of ſuch a reprover; and theſe ſhall as little dream of ſuch a tale-bearer. Secondly, This phraſe of ſpeech implyes, that the matter ſhall be revealed by ſome ſpeedy means. A bird ſhall do it: The Meſſenger ſhall not go, but run; he ſhall not run, but fly; a Pegaſus ſhall be the Poſt, he ſhall have wings added to his feet; he ſhall have wings inſtead of feet. The Angels are deſcribed with wings in Scripture, to ſhew their ſpeed; a winged Meſſenger ſhall be diſpatcht on this errand. Once more, as ſome refer this diſcovery purely to the providence of God, ſo others to the policy of Princes, who have their ſpies flying like birds in all places; men no more feared to carry the report of what is ſpoken, then a bird is. They have their intelligencers in every bed-chamber, men no more feared to carry the report of what is ſpoken, then the chamber-doors are. In the ſame ſence that Kings are ſaid to have long hands, we may ſay alſo that they have long ears: They have long hands, becauſe they can uſe means to ſtrike thoſe that are far from them: and they have long ears, becauſe they can uſe means to hear thoſe who are far from them. But whether we take this, or the former interpretation, the point is equally performed; for even thoſe diſcoveries which are made by men, are ordered and brought on by the wiſe and holy providence of God, who doth ſo hate evil, and all the works of moral darkneſs, eſpecially the curſing of Kings and lawful Magiſtrates, that he will diſcover them out of all the deeps, either of natural or artificial darkneſs.

Principes & potentiores ſunt auritiſſimi, vix quicquam fit aut dicitur quod ipſorũ cognitionem fugiat. Jun.

Further, God bringeth good things as well as evil, juſt and holy actions, as well as ſinful and unjuſt, out of the deeps of darkneſs: Many works of light lye in darkneſs: Many excellent things are under concealment. David's integrity lay in the dark, yet God brought it forth as the light, and his innocency as the noon-day. God is not unrighteous, to forget or conceal, either our labour of love, or labours in holineſs, though men do.

Laſtly, How great an experiment hath God given us of this truth, in that grand diſcovery which he hath made to to the world (in this latter Age) of another world? A great part of the world, even ſo great as bears the name of a new world, was a deep thing of darkneſs, to this part of the world, for many and many ages and generations. No man ſo much as dream'd of ſuch Nations as are now diſcovered. The ſurface of thoſe huge Countreys was as little known to us as the center of the earth is: yea it was judged a kind of hereſie in ancient times, to ſay there were Antipodes. But now 'tis known, that the feet of our Brethren have walked oppoſite to the ſoles of our feet; and we have not only experience, but light of reaſon enough to evince it. God hath made Art a key to Nature, and hath diſcovered many deep things out of that darkneſs to us, which our fore-fathers never ſaw. Thus we ſee, that deep things, both Divine and humane, and theſe both practical and natural, are fetcht out of darkneſs by the mighty power, and unſearchable wiſdom of God.

There are three wayes by which God makes diſcoveries of evil plots, or practices, lying in deepeſt darkneſs.

Firſt, By the confeſſion of the perſon, whoſe head hath contrived, or his hand acted them. Evil in the heart drops out at the mouth; and this two wayes.

Firſt, By queries and queſtions put to the guilty. Such are often entrapt in their own anſwers, and their own tongues are a witneſs againſt themſelves. As ſpeech bewrayeth whence men are, ſo what they have been doing: (Prov. 20. 5.) Counſel in the heart of man is like deep water; but a man of underſtanding will draw it out. He draws it out by queſtions and examinations. When thoſe black waters will not flow out of themſelves, they are pumped up by the art and induſtry of others.

Secondly, A confeſſion of theſe deep things out of darkneſs is made by the workings of a mans own Conſcience. When Conſcience is touched, and beginneth to ake, that will tell tales: It is hard for a man, at ſuch a time, to keep his own counſel. It was the caution of an Ancient, Be afraid of doing any thing which is ill, though there be no witneſs but thy ſelf: If thou couldſt do it, thy Conſcience taking no notice of it, thou mighteſt poſſibly keep it ſecret; but whatſoever thou doeſt, is done in the eye of Conſcience, therefore take heed. We have a ſaying, That murther will out; and if nothing elſe bring it out, Conſcience will: Conſcience will examine a man as ſtrictly as any Inquiſitor in Rome. And as men, examined and tortured by ſevere Inquiſitors, confeſs what they would not; ſo alſo do they who are examined and put upon the Rack by their own Conſciences.

Turpe quid auſurus, te ſine teſte time.

Secondly, God revealeth deep things immediately by his own Spirit: As the Spirit revealeth the holy counſels of God to us, ſo the moſt ſecret evil deſigns and counſels of men. (2 Kings 6. 11.) When the King of Syria could take no counſel, but it was preſently diſcovered, he might well be caſt into a ſuſpition, that ſome about him were falſe to him, and held correſpondence with the enemy, Therefore (ſaith the ſtory) the heart of the King of Syria was ſore troubled for this thing; and he called his ſervants, and ſaid unto them, Will not ye ſhew me which of us is for the King of Iſrael? And one of his ſervants ſaid, None, my Lord, O King, but Eliſha the Prophet that is in Iſrael, telleth the King of Iſrael the words that thou ſpeakeſt in thy bed-chamber. The Spirit of God revealed the deep counſels of the Syrian King unto the Prophet, and the Prophet revealed them to men.

There is a third way which is more common, by which the Lord diſcovers deep things out of darkneſs, and that is, by wonderful providences; he makes ſome acts of his own providence as keys, to unlock the ſecrets of men; as hands, to pluck off the vails; as winds, to diſpel the clouds, and ſcatter the miſts which hid their actions, or intentions. In the hiſtory of Joſeph we have an admirable demonſtration of this: It was a ſecret, a deep thing of darkneſs that his Brethren conſpired againſt him, they ſold him into Egypt, and brought his torn coat home all bloody to his Father, which cauſed the plain-hearted old man to conclude, That ſome evil beaſt had devoured him. Thus the matter was locked up; yet God makes ſeveral acts of his providence as keyes to open it. Firſt, Famine pincheth Jacob and his Family; then Joſeph's Brethren muſt into Egypt; and after one journey, they muſt make a ſecond; and then Benjamin muſt be detained, and Simeon bound; here was a ſtrange ſeries and ſucceſſion of providences, till the whole matter was diſcovered. The Gunpowder-plot was a deep thing of darkneſs, a ſtrange monſter (Cui lumen ademptum) which ſaw no light, not only becauſe it never took effect, but becauſe it was kept ſo cloſe a long time, under oaths, and ſtrongeſt concealments, that there was not the leaſt ſuſpition of it; yet by a ſtrange providence God diſcovers this deep thing out of darkneſs: A Letter written with uncouth expreſſions, and by miſtake put into a wrong hand, was the occaſion of bringing all to light. Latter times have given us great experiences of this: The beſt intelligences have we have had of ſecret counſels have been from their cabinets, who contrived them.

Take four Corollaries from this.

Firſt, Be afraid to do, or to plot any evil ſecretly: The Lord diſcovers deep things out of darkneſs. Uſually they who do things that are not fit to be ſeen, conceive they are not, or ſhall not be ſeen either in doing them, or when they are done. Flatter not your ſelves in this vain hope; you may caſt a vail upon them a while, but out they will at laſt.

Secondly, Be not afraid of the ſecret plottings of evil men, or of the deep things of their darkneſs; how deep ſoever the wayes and counſels of men are laid, yet they are all above-board to God. Suppoſe enemies are taking counſel againſt us, yet we have a powerful friend behind the hangings, who hears every word they ſay, and ſets down in a book every reſolve they make, and will in fitteſt ſeaſon, both diſcover, and diſappoint them. Let this be encouragement to all the faithful; their Father in Heaven knows and over-rules the darkeſt deſigns of wicked men on earth.

Thirdly, When men are plotting, let us be praying. David knew Achitophel could give deſperate and deep counſel againſt him, therefore he prayeth, Lord turn the counſel of Achitophel into fooliſhneſs: As if he had ſaid, Lord, thou knoweſt what he hath adviſed, I do not; he is plotting againſt me, Lord take notice that I am praying unto thee. Plots were never any match for prayer; nor the counſels of the wicked able to ſtand before the ſupplications of the righteous.

Fourthly, No mans uprightneſs ſhall be alwayes hid: God will clear the innocent, for he diſcovereth deep things out of darkneſs; he that manifeſts the guilt of all, will alſo manifeſt the innocency of his. There is ſeldom any eminent or ſingular good thing done in the world, but it falls under miſconſtruction, and often ſuch gloſſes are given as corrupt the contexture of ſinccreſt works; for the concluſions of malice are ever like thoſe of Logick, following (deteriorem partem) the weaker and worſer part. How often is holineſs miſcall'd hypocriſie, and zeal vain-glory? How often is contending for the faith, miſjudged faction; and contending againſt error, humour? In the midſt of all theſe dark thoughts of men, concerning our works, this may bear up our hearts, that as God knows them what they are, ſo he will make them appear as they are. The Lord Chriſt comforts his Diſciples againſt all the calumnies, and miſapprehenſions of the world, though they ſhould be called Beelzebubs, and made as black as Hell by traducing pens, or tongues; yet ſaith he (Matth. 10. 25.) Fear them not, for there is nothing covered, that ſhall not be revealed; and hid, that ſhall not be known: Which words may have a double aim.

Firſt, To deter the Diſciples from concealing the Word of God for fear of men. As if Chriſt had ſaid, Be ye bold and conſtant in delivering the meſſage which I ſhall put into your mouths; declare to the world the whole counſel of God; keep not back, conceal not his truth, betray not his cauſe by a cowardly ſilence: for whatſoever plauſible excuſes you may make, to palliate and hide this lowneſs and falſeneſs of your ſpirits, yet at length all will out; and though you would not declare the truth of God to his glory, yet God will declare the whole truth concerning you, to your ſhame; as the madneſs of your perſecutors ſhall be manifeſt, ſo alſo ſhall your fearfulneſs; therefore fear them not: What I tell you in darkneſs, that ſpeak ye in the light, &c. for what ye do, or forbear to do in darkneſs, ſhall come to light, with the reaſons of it.

Secondly, Theſe words aim at the ſupport of the Diſciples under the ſlanders and ſpiteful opinions of men, when they fully and couragiouſly declare and preach the Word of God. As if he had ſaid, Your innocency may be hid, and your righteouſneſs unknown; you may be called Beelzebub, and Devil, for ſpeaking the truths of God; yet I will take a time to put off theſe ugly diſguiſes, and render you even to the eye of the world ſuch as you are, upright and honeſt men, my zealous and faithful meſſengers: for I aſſure you, there is nothing covered, that ſhall not be revealed: and therefore your faithfulneſs to my cauſe and Goſpel ſhall not; do ye reveal my hidden truths, and leave it to me to reveal your integrity, how much ſoever it may be hidden. Upon the ſame ground that wicked men are to fear, godly men are not to fear: Wicked men have cauſe to fear, becauſe their evil deeds ſhall be made manifeſt; and godly men are not to fear, yea they are to rejoyce, becauſe their goodneſs and good deeds ſhall be made manifeſt: All their uprightneſs, and faithful intentions, for the promoting of the honour of Chriſt, and advancing the Goſpel, ſhall be ſet in the open light.

Yet further, Though we ſhould do much good, which is in the dark too, or hidden from our ſelves (for there are, as ſins, ſo, in a ſence, good works of ignorance) or if we ſhould have forgotten the good which we have done knowingly, yet the Lord will redeem our works out of this darkneſs alſo; the darkneſs I mean, whether of our own ignorance or forgetfulneſs. Neither ſecrecy, nor inſcience, nor oblivion, our own, or others, can long cover a good work; let it be only our care to do good; it is the care of Chriſt, that no good which we have done ſhall be loſt, or left in perpetual darkneſs. God makes many diſcoveries of deep things out of darkneſs here, and he will make an univerſal diſcovery at laſt: As that Apoſtolical caution againſt raſh judgment clearly imports: (1 Cor. 4. 5.) Judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who will bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs (whether good or bad) and will make manifeſt the counſels of the hearts (whether juſt or unjuſt) and then ſhall every man (who is praiſe worthy) have praiſe of God. The Apoſtle in this aims rather at the encouragement of the Saints, whoſe beſt actions are often hid, then at the terror of the wicked, who deſire and hope that their evil actions ſhall be alwayes hid. Thus we ſee how God diſcovers dark and deep things. In the next verſe we ſhall ſee him altering and diſpoſing, turning and changing great things, even the Nations of the earth.

Verſe 23. He increaſeth the Nations, and deſtroyeth them; he inlargeth the Nations, and ſtraiteneth them again.

Here are two acts of providence, like checquer-work: a white and a black: An act of mercy, and an act of judgment; an act of the right hand, increaſing and inlarging; and an act of the left, deſtroying and ſtraitening Nations. God doth not only abaſe particular perſons, how great ſoever they are (Looſing the bond of Kings, and pouring contempt upon Princes, &c.) but he hath a controverſie with whole Nations and Kingdoms, they ſhall be abaſed and ſmart under his hand, if they go on provoking and ſinning againſt him.

Non ſolum Deus ſuæ potentiæ ac ſapientiæ documenta præbet, in his quæ unius vel alterius regis ſunt, ſed in univerſa aliqua multitudine & numeroſiſſimo populo. Merc.

He increaſeth the Nations.] The word which we tranſlate to increaſe, hath a double derivation. Some take it from a root, which ſignifies to augment, or multiply. Others take it from a root, which ſignifies to err, or wander, and in conſtruction, to deceive. Hence ſome render, He deceiveth the Nations, and deſtroyeth them: So the Septuagint; and it is a truth, God deceiveth the Nations, he leaveth them to their own miſtakes, or to the evil counſels of others, and then deſtroyeth them. Deſtruction is uſually let in by miſapprehenſion. The judgment of God upon the outward eſtate begins at a judgment upon the underſtanding. Seldom hath any Nation periſhed, but they ſee they have been befooled, and that they refuſed their own good before they were deprived of it. As the Text may bear this tranſlation, ſo the truth flowing from it, is very uſeful.

Πλανῶν ἔθνη ϗ ἀπολλύων αὐτά. Decipiens gentes & perdens eas. Sept.

But becauſe the ordinary acception of the word runs faireſt, He increaſeth the Nations, &c. I ſhall inſiſt only upon that.

When God made the world, he ſaid to man, yea to every thing that had life in it, and ſo power of increaſing, Increaſe and multiply: A word from God makes the creature multiply. The increaſe of every thing is from God, as well as the conſtitution of it. There is a threefold increaſe. Firſt, In number: God ſaid to Abraham, I will multiply thy ſeed as the ſand of the Sea, and as the Stars of Heaven; and it was ſo. Secondly, He increaſeth Nations in riches and plenty; he bleſſeth their basket and their ſtore; they lend to others, and do not borrow. Thirdly, He increaſeth Nations in honour and reputation; they are the head, and not the tail; the ſheaves of their neighbours round about, fall down to their ſheave. Such honour is promiſed the Jews, That ten men ſhall take hold out of all languages of the Nations, even ſhall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, ſaying, we will go with you, for we have heard that God is with you, (Zach. 8. 23.) Thus the Nations are increaſed by a word of bleſſing from the mouth of God.

And as he increaſeth, ſo he deſtroyeth. The decayes of Nations are from God, as well as their improvements are. God declareth his power by pulling down, as well as by raiſing up; by killing, as well as by making alive; by deſtroying, as well as by increaſing.

This deſtruction is wrought two wayes, openly, or ſecretly. Sometime God is a moth and rottenneſs to a Nation, he deſtroyes them ſilently, and unſeen (Hoſ. 5. 12.) they decline and moulder away, they know not how. Sometimes he is a Lion, and as a young Lion unto a Nation, he will tear and go away, and none ſhall reſcue (Hoſ. 5. 14.) he deſtroyeth them viſibly, by Diſeaſes and Plagues, by Famine and the Sword. By ſome one, or by all theſe, he deſtroyeth them, till, as he threatned the Jews (Iſa. 6. 11.) The Cities be waſted without inhabitants, and the houſes without man, and the Land be utterly deſolate.

The laſt branch of the verſe is of the ſame importance with the former.

He inlargeth the Nations, and ſtraiteneth them again.

There is a different reading, for ſome render the former as an act of judgment, He ſcattereth, or ſubverteth the Nations; and the latter as an act of mercy, He reſtoreth them again. Thus he baniſhed the Jews into Babylon, and after ſeventy years brought them back to their own Land. We underſtand the former clauſe as an act of mercy; the latter of wrath and judgment.

The Original word ſignifies, to expand, or ſtretch a thing forth. When God increaſeth a Nation, he inlargeth their borders, and, having multiplied their number, gives them more room. As the inlargement of the Church is deſcribed by the Prophet (Iſa. 49. 20.) ſuch is the inlargement of Nations. The children which thou ſhalt have after thou haſt loſt the other, ſhall ſay again in thine ear, The place is too ſtrait for me; give place to me that I may dwell. As Bees ſwarm when the Hive is overcharged, or as Rivers overflowing break their bounds, ſo do the Nations of the earth, who are compared to great Rivers. God ſometimes opens theſe flood-gates, and lets them out like a mighty torrent. The irruptions of the Gothes and Vandals, of the Huns and Heruli, are famous among Hiſtorians. And as barbarous Nations ſpread out themſelves becauſe of numbers, ſo do other Nations by their power. The Babylonian, the Perſian, the Grecian, the Roman Empires, extended the wings of their ſovereignty all the world over.

Mr. Broughton tranſlates, He ſpreadeth the Nations, and governeth them: So both parts of that verſe ſpeak mercy to Nations. Others of the Learned joyn in that tranſlation. The Hebrew word beareth that ſence moſt properly, ſignifying to lead, yea, to lead gently, peaceably and quietly, as a Shepherd leadeth his Flock, or as a father his child. Many offerings of the Jews in their ceremonious worſhip, were denominated from this word, Minchah, becauſe they were brought in ſuch an honourable way, and preſented before the Lord. The providence of God leads all people; his own people are led by a ſpecial providence, as the Iſraelites were, in the day by a Cloud, and in the night by a Pillar of fire. The Lord alone did lead them, and there was no ſtrange God with him (Deut. 32. 12.) The Lord in mercy led forth the people, which he had redeemed; he guided them in his ſtrength to his holy habitation (Exod. 15. 13.) This interpretation runs fair. And while we in ſtead of he leadeth, render, he ſtraiteneth them; we mean, he leadeth them into ſtraits. As he ſpreadeth them out by proſperity, ſo he ſtraiteneth them by affliction. In this variety of reading, the ſcope and general ſence of the Text is the ſame, ſetting forth the irreſiſtible power of God, in diſpoſing Nations for the better, or for the worſe, as he ſeeth cauſe, or as they give it him.

Firſt, Obſerve, There is a viciſſitude and change in Nations as well as in perſons.

In this verſe the ſcales go up and down, He increaſeth the Nations, and deſtroyeth them; he inlargeth them, and ſtraiteneth them again. Particular men, are ſometimes up, and ſometimes down; ſometimes well, and ſometimes ſick; ſometimes inlarged, and ſometimes ſtraitened. Now as it is with the parts, ſo with the whole; and though the world be a diſſimular body, yet in one notion it is a ſimular body, being all alike in ſubjection to vanity and change. What Nation is there but hath ſuffered many changes? This Nation hath been a great example of it, and ſo it is at this day: And unleſs we humble our ſelves before God, and kiſs the Son, leaſt he be further angry, we have cauſe to fear greater changes then ever we have had. Who knows what changes a year, yea, a day may bring forth? Theſe two things are out of all queſtion: Firſt, That we have deſerved the worſt of changes. Secondly, That the face of affairs looks as if we ſhould every day change for the worſe, till we come to the worſt.

Secondly, Obſerve, All the changes in Nations are from God.

He increaſeth and ſtraiteneth them; his providence (not fate) watcheth over them, to order all their motions. As the motions of ſingle perſons, ſo the motions of whole Kingdoms are ordered by a higher hand. Divine providence acts upon every ſtage of worldly affairs in the world. There is a wheel in a wheel; Gods wheel moves in all the wheels of the creature: States cannot do what they pleaſe, and go on after their own pleaſure; God governs the Governors, as much as thoſe who are governed. He leadeth them into wayes of peace and proſperity; he alſo leadeth them into wars and troubles. We have both expreſt (Jer. 31. 28.) Like as I have watched over them, to pluck up, and to break down, and to deſtroy, ſo will I watch over them, to build and to plant, ſaith the Lord. No people in the world did ever find God more increaſing, or ſtraitening them, then the Jews did: They were as ſet upon a Beacon, for all the world to look and gaze at: They were Gods peculiar treaſure; yet he caſt them out as dung, or droſs. He increaſed them in number, in riches, and in honour. When the ſevereſt courſes were taken to diminiſh them (as in Egypt by ſlaying the males) he then increaſed them: yet the hand of God was as eminent in deſtroying, as increaſing them. More then ſix hundred thouſand came out of Egypt, all whoſe carkaſſes (excepting two) fell in the wilderneſs. God increaſed them again in Canaan; they were almoſt innumerable, when David numbred them; yet he deſtroyed and waſted them by the Babylonians. After their return from Babylon, they grew mighty again; at laſt God ſent the Romans, who took their City and Temple from them: And how they have been ſcattered and emptied ever ſince, the Records of ancient times, and the experiences of this declare. What God did, and hath done, with the Nation of the Jews, he hath alſo done in many other Nations, and can do in all. He can lift them up, or caſt them down; give them a being, or no being; a well-being, or a miſerable being, at his pleaſure. The abſolute ſoveraignty and greatneſs of God, will bear him out in theſe great works, upon the greateſt Nations. What's the greatneſs of any one, or of all Nations put together, to the greatneſs of God? Behold (ſaith the Prophet, Iſa. 40. 15.) the Nations are as the drop of a bucket, and are counted as the ſmall duſt of the ballance. A bucket full of water is no great matter to the Ocean; what then is a drop? All the weight that can be put into a pair of ballances is not much; what then is the light duſt, which hangs about it? We know that bears no weight at all. It is no more for the great God to move the greateſt Nation upwards or downwards, into an increaſe or a diminution, then to blow away the ſmalleſt duſt. And as if a drop, or a duſt were too much, the ſeventeenth verſe aſſures us, that All Nations before him are as nothing; and they are counted to him as leſs then nothing and vanity. Nor can God ever want means to increaſe, or deſtroy whole Nations, who made the whole world without means: Cannot he ſpeak a Nation into any thing, who ſpake the world out of nothing? When a people increaſe in ſin as much as in ſovereignty, and are ſtraitened in obedience and thankfulneſs to God, who hath enlarged them, then he reduces them to their former nothing.

Fata quædā regnarum & gentium quidam eſſe volunt, ſed omnia talia nos docet Scriptura Dei nutui & conſilio immutabili tribuere. Merc.

Job hath not yet done with this argument; as he had told us of the judgments of God upon greateſt perſons before he ſpake of Nations; ſo now having ſpoken of the judgments of God upon Nations, he deſcends, in his concluſion, to thoſe again which God ſends upon eminent perſons, in the two laſt verſes of this Chapter.

VERS. 24, 25.

He taketh away the heart of the chief of the people of the earth, and cauſeth them to wander in a wilderneſs where there is no way.

They grope in the dark without light, and he maketh them to ſtagger like a drunken man.

THeſe two verſes are the continuation and concluſion of Job's Argument, lifting up the power and wiſdom of God in his diſpenſations towards men.

In the former part of the Chapter we have diſcuſſed what God doth to perſons, and what to Nations. Here Job turneth his ſpeech upon a point which he had touched before, He maketh the Judges fools, or turneth their counſels into folly: Now, He taketh away the heart of the chief of the people of the earth.

He

מסיר לב סיר Eſt recedere, declinare, in Hiphil removere recedere faciens.

He taketh away.] Some read, He changeth; Others, He removeth, or cauſeth to decline. The Hebrew will bear either of thoſe readings, He taketh away

The heart of the chief of the people of the earth.

The heart is the chief piece in any of the people of the earth: And here he taketh away the heart of the chief of the people of the earth. 'Tis ſad when the chief part is taken away from the chiefeſt of the people.

Cor per metaphorã ſignificat mediũ & interius cujuſq; rei, per ſynechdochen omnia quorũ ſedes eſt in corde, mens, voluntas, &c. Pined.

The heart under a natural conſideration is that noble inſtrument of life ſeated in the midſt of the body: by a metaphor it ſignifies any thing which is ſeated in the middle, or toward the center, becauſe the heart is ſo placed in the body. And by a Synechdoche, the heart is put frequently in Scripture for the motions of the heart, or for whatſoever acteth there. The underſtanding, will, affections, purpoſes, reſolutions, or courage of man, any or all of theſe are expreſſed by the heart, becauſe any or all theſe are wrought in, or iſſue from the heart.

To take away the heart, hath reference chiefly to theſe three things.

Firſt, He taketh away the underſtanding, and leaveth men to the guidance of ignorance: and then they are hurried by guſts of paſſion, not ordered by the dictates of reaſon. God benights their minds, their fooliſh hearts are darkned, and ſo they become vain both in their imaginations and reſolves: The chief of the earth are then neither able to give good counſel nor recieve it; they who formerly were as Oracles, betray a feebleneſs of judgement, and the graveſt States men prove infants in underſtanding. All wholſom remedies, and proper expedients for their own good, or the publick ſafety, are taken from them when God taketh away their hearts. This was further ſhewed at the ſeventeenth verſe, whither I refer the reader.

Cordis nomen ad voluntatẽ potius quã ad intellectum hoc loco pertinet. Aquin.

Secondly, The heart is put for the will. Some interpret this text, rather of the will then of the underſtanding: God is ſaid to take away the will, when he takes it off from what it was ſet upon before, and cauſeth it to move and encline to another object. (Prov. 21. 1.) The Kings heart is in the hand of the Lord as the rivers of water, he turneth it whitherſoever he will. By the heart we are to underſtand the will of Kings; turning properly concerns the will: The will putteth it ſelf out to proſecute what the underſtanding dictates: The will uſually walketh in, or after the light of the underſtanding: God works ſo effectually in the heart of the chief of the people of the earth, that though their underſtandings give them light to walk in ſuch a way (whether it be a falſe or a true light or way, is not the point here) yet he can take their wills off from it, and turneth them whitherſoever he will. As the perſons of Kings are in the hand of God to protect them, ſo their wills are in his hand to guide and over-power them. They who are maſters of men, are not maſters of their own will. A King who rules others, is not under his own rule. The ſimilitude is very elegant, God turneth his heart even as the rivers; or ſprings of water: Rivers of water are led by their channels, you may draw them this way or that way by cutting out water-courſes. When the will of any one of the chiefs of the earth runs ſtrongly in ſuch a conſtant ſtream, God can ſtop it, cut out ſluces (as it were) and give it a new channel, he can empty the ſtream of a Kings will, into a channel of his own making, and cauſe this river to run upon what ground he pleaſeth. Some of the Ancients obſerving what ſtrange courſes the hearts of moſt Kings have run, turn the interpretation of this text into another channel, telling us it muſt be expounded of the Saints who are ſpiritual Kings. Do you think, ſay they, that the heart of Pharaoh, Antiochus, Herod, or of Julian, was in the hand of God? Doth God turn the heart into the wayes of blood and perſecution againſt his people? ſurely ſuch mens hearts are in the hand of the devil, not of God: ſo they argue. But by their leave, we are not afraid to ſay, that even the hearts of wicked Kings are in the hand of God; yet he hath no hand in their wickedneſs, unleſs to bound it. The wills of the moſt wilful Princes are flexible and moveable at the will of God, even while they move, yea ſpurn againſt it: he makes them ſubject to his ſecret will, while they are rebelling againſt his revealed will. They will not do the latter, but the former is done upon them whether they will or no. Some men are ſo wilful that they turn their whole ſoul into will; there is nothing of reaſon or underſtanding, nothing of love or affection appears in them, but all of will: Their ſouls are loſt in their wills: yet theſe wills God findes out and diſpoſeth of. The will of Princes (ſaith a heathen) is ſtiff and ſtrong, unready and unwonted to the direction of others. They who are full of power think all muſt obey their wills; therefore to make their wills either ſubject or obedient, argues tranſcendent power. The wills of moſt men are ready to follow the wills of Princes, as the ſhadow doth the body: therefore to make their wills follow, is the work of God (Eccleſ. 8. 4.) Where the word of a King is, there is power; and who may ſay unto him, what doſt thou? Princes will not be ſtopped but by a ſuperiour power; their priviledge is great, and many times the violence of their ſpirits greater. As Pilate, when ſome adviſed him to alter the inſcription upon the croſs of Chriſt, anſwers, What I have written I have written, it ſhall ſtand: ſo the chief of the earth ſay, what we have done, we have done, what we have reſolved, we have reſolved. Yet God who is chief above all the chiefs of the earth, taketh away, or removeth the hearts of the chief of the earth, they ſhall not alwayes will what they would. A good man doth the evil which he would not, and evil men do the good which they would not. God cauſeth them to will that the thing ſhall be done, though they have no will, either to the thing or to the doing of it.

Putas quòd cor Juliani impiiſſimi in manu Dei fuit? abſit, ſed de illis dicit, qui regnant ſuper peccata. Hieron. in Pſal. 137.

Nec me fugit quàm durus & verè inſolens ad recta flecti regius nolit tumor. Senec. Act. 1.

Principum virorũ illa vox eſt, Quod ſcripſi, ſcripſi.

Thirdly, The heart is put for courage and fortitude. God takes away the heart under this notion; he can make the moſt valiant men cowards, and pull down the higheſt ſpirits. As he gives women the courage of men, ſo he can make men leſs then women in courage (Amos 2. 14, 15.) The Prophet ſheweth God taking away, not only fighting courage, but flying courage (ſo ſome underſtand that text) The flight ſhall periſh from the ſwift, they ſhall not have a heart to ſhift for themſelves: they once made ſure of it that they had legs to run, though no hands to fight, but their flight ſhall periſh, they ſhall not have ſo much ſpirit left as to run away. The fighting courage of Iſrael was quite ſunk, (Joſh. 7. 5.) The hearts of the people melted, and became as water, that is, their courage failed. And it is threatned as a judgment, (Lev. 26.36.) I will ſend a faintneſs into their hearts: And what ſhall the effect of this be? The ſound of a ſhaken leaf ſhall chaſe them, and they ſhall flee as fleeing from a ſword: they ſhall not only flee at the beating of a drum, at the ſound of a trumpet, or at an Alarm to the battel, but at the ſound of a ſhaking leaf, Deut. 28. 65. The Lord ſhall give thee a trembling heart.

Any of theſe wayes, the heart is in the hand of God; he can make an underſtanding heart fooliſh, a reſolved wilful heart flexible, and a ſtout couragious heart faint and fearful. He that had a heart like a lion, ſhall quake and be (as we ſay) white-liver'd at the real appearance, yea at the ſhadow of danger. Thus the Lord ſheweth his mighty power among the chief of the earth, in taking away their hearts.

God in Scripture calleth upon man to give him his heart: My ſon give me thine heart. This act of God in the text is a chaſtening of the former neglect.

> Hence Obſerve, God taketh away their hearts, who will not give up their hearts unto him.

If we graciouſly give our hearts unto God, he will not judiciarily take our hearts from us. We never have our underſtandings, our wills, our courage, ſo much in our own cuſtody, as when we reſign them to Gods keeping. God would ſo order them in us and for us, that we ſhould have the command of them, were they once at his command. But if when he calleth, Give me thine heart, we or any of the chief of the earth ſay, no, we will not give our hearts to thee, not our underſtandings to judge for thee, not our wills to ſubmit to thee, not our courage to act for thee: Then ſaith God, I will take away your hearts from you; you that uſe your underſtandings, your wills, your courage againſt me, ſhall not have them to uſe (Hoſ. 7. 11.) Ephraim is called a ſilly dove without heart: then the chief of the earth are like ſilly doves (though indeed ravenous Harpies) when God taketh away their hearts. The Saints are innocent doves, without gall; and the wicked are ſilly doves, without a heart. God threatneth his people to ſend them ſuch Chiefs, Chiefs without an heart, (Iſa. 3.4,12.) I will give them children to be their Princes, and women ſhall rule over them. He doth not mean children in age, or women in ſex; for ſome women are of maſculine ſpirits, and have done valiantly. 'Twas Deborah, a woman, who ſaid, O my ſoul thou haſt trodden down ſtrength; no man ever ſpake more like a man: Some children in years have acted like the aged, Joſiah did ſo. So then the Prophets meaning is, I will give them rulers that ſhall be as little in underſtanding, as children are in ſtature, their reaſon ſhall ſcarce be a cubit high; I will give them Chiefs, that ſhall be as timerous as women naturally are: Their courage ſhall ſcarce ſerve them to ſee their own bloud without ſwooning, much leſs to venture their blood in any honourable ſervice. Thus God takes away the hearts of the chief of the people, when either they or the people refuſe to give God theirs.

ראשי עם Capitum populi.

Again, The Hebrew is, He taketh away the heart of the [Heads] of the people of the earth. The Leaders and Governours of a people, are their Heads: That's the language of the old Teſtament every where. It is ill when the heart is taken from the heels or loweſt of the people; but how miſerable is it, when the heart is taken from the heads or higheſt of the people. A people whoſe heads have no heart, are upon the matter headleſs. A heartleſs head, is no better then no head.

Laſtly Obſerve, All mankind is not of one rank.

We have here the people, and the Heads of the people. As the natural body is diſtinguiſhed into ſuperiour and inferiour, into noble and ignoble parts, ſo is the political body: As that body is a monſter, which is all head, or whoſe head is too big for the body, ſo is that which hath no head, or a head too little for the body. Where all govern there is no government, and where all are chief there can be no order. And as God hath appointed ſome to the dignity of Headſhip, for the preſervation of order, ſo it is their duty who are Heads to preſerve order. The head takes care natura'ly for the whole body, the head ſees for the foot, and reſpects the little finger. Magiſtrates are rulers over the perſons of the people, but they are ſervants to the good of the people. A people ought to ſerve their rulers, yet rulers are the greateſt ſervants. As it is the duty of all to ſerve them, ſo it is their office to ſerve all. He taketh away the heart of the chief, or, of the heads of the people. And what then?

None of the works of God are without effect; when he acteth, ſomewhat will come of it. Here is a threefold effect following this judiciary act of God in taking away the heart of the chief of the earth.

First, They wander in a wilderneſs where there is no way.
Secondly, They grope in the dark without light.
Thirdly, They ſtagger like a drunken man.

The firſt of theſe effects is laid down in the latter clauſe of the 24th verſe.

He cauſeth them to wander.] The word which we tranſlate, to wander, ſignifies both corporal and mental wandering; the errour of the foot, and the errour of the mind. 'Tis put for corporal wandering (Gen. 20.13.) When God cauſed me (ſaith Abraham) to wander from my fathers houſe; and again, Gen. 37.15. 'Tis put for mental wandering, Pſal. 119. ult. I have gone aſtray like a loſt ſheep, ſeek thy ſervant; Iſa. 63.17. O Lord, why haſt thou made us to erre from thy wayes?

But that which is moſt conſiderable here, is the act of God, He cauſeth them to wander; This intimates an efficiency: Hence 'tis queſtioned, How doth God cauſe man to wander? God doth not lead man into falſe wayes: nor doth he hinder man from going in thoſe wayes which are good and right; thus God cauſeth no man to wander: And yet he doth more then barely permit or ſuffer man to wander; he is active in it, He cauſed them to wander. For the clearing of it, I anſwer, Firſt, God judgeth and pronounceth ſuch unworthy of light, who have abuſed it; or that he ſhould clear their mindes with the knowledge of his truth, who have not obeyed his truth, but held it in unrighteouſneſs.

Secondly, Upon the paſſing of this dreadful ſentence, he withdraweth or withholdeth his light from them. They muſt needs wander who walk in darkneſs; and unleſs God continue his light, we return to our own darkneſs. The ſetting of the Sun is enough to make the ſurface of the earth and the air dark, becauſe they have no inherent light: God needs not infuſe darkneſs into us, to make us dark, we in our ſelves are nothing but darkneſs.

Nō quod in falſitatē eos inducat, ſed quia lumen ſuū iis ſubtrahit ne veritattm cognoſcant, &c. Aquin.

Thirdly, Having withdrawn his light, God proceeds to an act of tradition, delivering ſuch up into the hands of their own dark luſts and black affections, yea he delivers ſuch up into the hand of Satan, who is the Prince of darkneſs, and who hath darkneſs enough to caſt into the mind of man, till it be filled with darkneſs. If our Goſpel be hid (ſaith the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 4. 3,4.) it is hid to them that are loſt, in whom the God of this world hath blinded the eyes of their mind, leſt the light of the glorious Goſpel of Chriſt, who is the Image of God, ſhould ſhine unto them. Satan is Gods executioner: the God of this world blindes their eyes who ſee not the offered light of God: and the more it is offered and neglected, the more he blindes them, and the more they wander. They wander who never ſaw the light, but they wander moſt dangerouſly who are blinded with the light, or becauſe they abuſed it.

Fourthly, The Lord is ſaid to cauſe men to wander, becauſe he ordereth the objects and occaſions, the means and manner, the ſteps and degrees of their aberrations. They who wander moſt out of the way of obedience, cannot wander out of the eye and way of providence. The providence of God is ever in its way, even in reference to them who wander out of the way. They who act moſt confuſedly, indiſpoſedly, and erroniouſly, are kept in a due courſe and method, as to the purpoſe and deſign of God. The Prophet Iſaiah (chap. 20.20.) ſpeaks of a bridle that ſhall be in the jaws of the people, cauſing them to erre or wander. A bridle is rather to keep in the way then to carry out of the way. The place is of difficult interpretation: moſt expound it of the power of the Babylonians, which being put into the jaws of the Jewiſh nation, cauſed them to wander out of their own countrey into captivity, yea and cauſed many of them to erre and wander from the way of holy doctrine and worſhip. However, we may allude to that Scripture for the clearing of the point in hand, though we make no proof of it. The bridle of providence is in the jaws of many men, even in the jaws of the heads of the earth, cauſing them (as Job ſpeaks here) to wander; and yet while they are wandering, that bridle rules and holds them within the compaſs of divine pleaſure. Thus the Lord who guides his people in his own way, cauſeth many to wander in a wilderneſs where there is no way, and yet guideth them in their wanderings. For as the darkneſs is no darkneſs to God, ſo the wilderneſs is no wilderneſs to God: his providence is in a clear way to the fulfilling of his own counſels, how much or how long ſoever he cauſeth men to wander from theirs.

In a wilderneſs.] We are not to take this wilderneſs literally, as if the meaning were, that God bringeth men into deſerts and waſts, as he did Iſrael his people fourty years together. To wander in a wilderneſs is a proverbial ſpeech, and implies theſe two things.

Firſt, He is ſaid to wander in a wilderneſs, who is ignorant of his way, or knoweth not how to direct and make his courſe: we ſay, The man's in a wood, when we perceive one intangled in ſpeech or action. Hence,

Secondly, To wander in a wilderneſs, notes improbability, yea extreameſt difficulty of attaining our end. A man that is in a wide vaſt wilderneſs, gives himſelf for loſt, every ſtep may be backward as well as forward: As he knows not where he goes, ſo he knows not whither he goes: He is in a wilderneſs, who knoweth not his way, or deſpaireth of his end.

תהו Inanitas, vacuitas, confuſio, res informis, errare eos facit in invio vel inani ubi nullus ſit difficultatū exitus. Pined.

The Original word is Tohu. Moſes hath it to expreſs the Chaos, Gen. 1. 1. The earth was without form and void: Before God planted the world, all the world was a wilderneſs, a place without form, it had no method in it: Creation methodiz'd that rude heap, and drew the wilderneſs into a garden. A wilderneſs notes any ſtate or condition without ſhape or order: and thoſe men wander in a wilderneſs, who wanting the true leadings of humane reaſon, and a divine rule, run dangerous and pernicious wayes, both to themſelves and others: He that goes in ſuch wayes, goes out of his way, yea (as the next clauſe of Mente deſtituti vias & rationes ineunt incōmodas & perniciosas.

of the verſe ſpeaks) he goes without all wayes. They wander in a wilderneſs דרך Iter, via quæ calcatur pedibus, per metaphoram curſus vel inſtitutum vivendi.

Where there is no way.] The way is to be underſtood as the wilderneſs, metaphorically: The word ſignifieth, not only a way which we tread with our feet, but the way which we tread with our actions: A right courſe of life is the way of man. Theſe (through the juſt judgement of God) wander in a wilderneſs where there is no way; that is no plain, no right, no beaten way, unleſs beaten by the ſons of Belial, or by the travellers to the land of trouble and darkneſs. When God takes away the hearts of men, they run ſtrange courſes, and go wayes which wiſe men never went; the foot of honeſty or of juſtice, treads not their paths, They who go in ſuch wayes, go in a wilderneſs where there is no way.

Obſerve from this effect, Firſt, That the very miſtakes and errours of men are from God.

Firſt, Spiritual miſtakes, or miſtakes in ſpiritual things, (Iſa. 63. 17.) O Lord, why haſt thou made us to erre from thy wayes (ſo the Church crieth out) and hardened our heart from thy fear? God made them to erre when he did not effectually ſhew them the truth; he hardened their hearts when he did not ſoften them. God left them a while to the conduct of their own luſts, becauſe they had long refuſed the conduct of his Spirit. They vexed his Spirit (verſ. 11.) and therefore he gave them up to their own ſpirits (Pſal. 81. 12.) All the motions of man are aberrations, when he moves without, or againſt the Counſel of God.

Secondly, Miſtakes in civil things (which is the buſineſs of this text) are from God too. God took away the heart of Rehoboam, and then rejecting good counſel, he wandered in a wilderneſs where there was no way. Wherefore the King hearkened not unto the people, for the cauſe was from the Lord, that he might perform his ſaying, 1 King. 12. 15. The Lord left Rehoboam to the pride of his heart, and to the blindneſs of his mind, and then he ran into that extream miſtake, which loſt him ten parts of his kingdom.

Secondly, From the connexion, He taketh away the heart of the chief of the earth; and what followeth, They wander in a wilderneſs where there is no way, Obſerve, When the heart is diſordered, the whole man is diſordered.

Put the heart out of frame, and all is out of frame: The heart is the prime mover in man, whether it be to do good or to do evil. Therefore the work of converſion beginneth at the heart, or is the giving of a new heart: God doth not give a new hand, or a new eye, a new tongue or a new foot, but a new heart, becauſe he knows that if once the heart be new, the whole man will be renewed. If the heart be ſetled, all is ſetled: His heart is fixed (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) and he ſhall not be afraid. The heart runs before the foot ſtirs, either into the wayes of ſin, or from the approach of danger. The heart is Pilot and guide (under God) of mans life and way. Where God takes away the heart, he never ſtayes himſelf; and he that hath not a heart within him, nor God near him, may do any thing rather then what he ought, or go any whither rather then where he ſhould. He that is deſerted of God intangles himſelf at every ſtep, he is in a wilderneſs, and the further he goes, the more he is out of his way. As it was with Pharaoh, God took away his heart, he would not hear the counſel that was given him to let the people go, and then he wilder'd himſelf from day to day, till he was utterly ruined, every ſtep he took was out of the way of his own ſafety and honour.

Thirdly Obſerve, They that will not take Gods wayes, ſhall be carried where there is no way.

God ſheweth man his way, Go here (ſaith God) it is a way of holineſs; go there, it is the way of juſtice; come hither, this is the way of truth: Thus God beckens and invites man into his way. If we ſay, no, but we will walk in our own wayes, then God reſolves, ſeeing you love to go out of my way, you ſhall go in a wilderneſs where there is no way; you ſhall meet with buſhes, thorns and briers to ſcratch and vex you; yea, you ſhall meet with wild beaſts, with Scorpions and Serpents, to ſting and devour you. God meeteth thoſe that rejoyce and work righteouſneſs, even thoſe that remember him in his wayes (Iſa. 64. 5.) But Buſhes and Briers, Serpents and Scorpions ſhall meet thoſe who turn from the wayes of God, even thoſe who rejoyce in and work unrighteouſneſs: Theſe run into danger, as faſt as they run into ſin. There's no ſafety out of Gods way: many have died in Gods way, but no man ever periſhed in it. It is ſaid of Abraham, (Heb. 11. 8.) That he went out he knew not whither. The Saints go at Gods call where there is no way, that is, no way known to them, but yet they are aſſured there is a way cut out and meaſured for them, by the wiſdom of God: Abraham was ſure of a good way, and of a good end, yet he went he knew not whither. Abraham knew he had God for his guide, though he knew not a ſtep of the way he was to go. It becometh us to follow God blindfold; blind obedience (in that ſenſe) is good, but due to none but God. Faith bids us do that, for which we can give no reaſon but this, we are commanded to do it. So ſome expound that of David, (Pſal. 119. 104.) Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path; he doth not ſay, the word was a light unto his eyes, but a light unto his feet. The word is a light to the eyes, that is, it ſhineth to the underſtanding; yet the word is ſometimes a light unto our feet, when it is not a light unto our eyes, that is, God will have us go where we cannot ſee our way. Anſwerable to that of the Apoſtle (2 Cor. 5. 7.) We walk by faith, and not by ſight; Faith hath a light for our feet, but not to our eyes. Full viſion ſwallows up faith in heaven: And the more viſion we have on earth, the leſs we act by faith. Believers have not a clear ſight, but they have a ſure guide. Wicked men would be thought to ſee much, but their ſight leads them out of the true way, or into the wilderneſs where there is no way, but that of ſin, nor end, but that of ſorrow. Here is the firſt effect of Gods taking away the heart of the chief of the earth, they wander in a wilderneſs where there is no way. We have two other effects, verſ. 25.

Deus requirit ut ſinamus nos ab illo duci quāvis videamur per inviā duci. Dum enim ille dux noſtri itineris fuerit noſtros pedes diriget quāvis nos viæ rationem nō teneamus. Pined.

Via fidei eſt obſcura non aperta & claræ viſionis.

Verſ. 25. They grope in the dark without light, and they ſtagger like a drunken man.

משש Palpavit, attigit, tangendo exploravit. Deſcriptio hominis cujus mutatū eſt cor, & mens aut erepta aut conturbata vehementer. Sanct.

They grope in the dark without light.] The word ſignifies to find out or prove our way by feeling, this we call groping. In the dark, hands or ſtaves are to us inſtead of eyes. A blind man though he be in the open Sun, yet he gropes for his way, for he wants the light of his eyes: a man who hath the light of his eyes, yet wanting the light of the air, and being in outward darkneſs, even he muſt grope his way, (Job 5. 14.) Eliphaz deſcribing the judgment of God upon the men of the world, ſaith; They meet with darkneſs in the day time, and grope in the noon day as in the night, that is, in things that are clear and evident they are puzzled, and know not which way to turn themſelves, when the way lies ſtrait and is without turnings. It is a great judgment of God, when in buſineſſes that are as clear as day, men ſtand beating their brains, and troubling themſelves, as if they were in the dark. It is very ill to want light, but it is worſe to have light, and not to uſe it. Theſe grope in the dark without light.

There is a twofold darkneſs; Firſt, Natural, that is not here meant. Secondly, Metaphorical; and that is of two ſorts. Firſt, The darkneſs of ignorance. Secondly, The darkneſs of trouble or of affliction. We may underſtand the text, of darkneſs in either of the two latter ſenſes; they grope in the dark, that is, in the darkneſs of ignorance, or, in the darkneſs of trouble. Rather joyn both together, they are in trouble, and they are ignorant, not knowing which way to get out, and clear their way.

But why doth he ſay, They grope in the dark without light.

Light and darkneſs are contrary, what agreement is there (ſaith the Apoſtle) between light and darkneſs? Though there be no agreement between light and darkneſs, yet ſometimes there is a mixture of light and darkneſs; ſome darkneſs hath ſome light in it; that's it we call twylight, the dusk of the evening or of the morning, there is a time when it is not perfectly dark, yet the light is gone, the Sun is down. Such a day is deſcribed in the book of Zechary, A day which ſhall be neither dark nor light, but it ſhall be between both. It is mercy, that when we have not a clear light, yet to have ſome glimmering, or appearance of light. The judgment here is, They ſhall grope in darkneſs without light; that is, they ſhall have pure darkneſs.

Hebræis uſitatum eſt dum vim & pondus afferre volunt ſententiæ aſfirmativæ, addunt contrarii negationem. In tenebris & non in luce, i.e. in tenebris omnis lucis expertibus.

The Hebrew is yet ſomewhat more emphatical. They feel darkneſs, and not light. Repetitions with a negative are frequent in Scripture, to ſhew a vehement negation (Amos 5. 18.) The day of the Lord is darkneſs, and not light. Iſa. 38. 1. A meſſage was carried to Hezekiah; Thou ſhalt die, and not live; that is, thou ſhalt ſurely dye. John 1. He confeſſed, and denied not; that is, he confeſſed ſtrongly or peremptorily. So here, They feel darkneſs, and not light; that is, they feel extream darkneſs, or the extremity of darkneſs, the greateſt darkneſs imaginable.

Two things I ſhall obſerve from this (taking the paſſage as an expreſſion of the judgment of God upon a ſinful people.)

Firſt, They who abuſe light ſhall be deprived of light.

He taketh away the heart; then they wander, and then they grope in darkneſs without light. They had light, yet acted like men in the dark, or like blind men: They walked in darkneſs when they had light. Hence God pronounceth againſt them, You ſhall grope in darkneſs, and have no light. God threatned his ancient people the Jews with this dreadful plague (Deut. 28. 28, 29.) I will ſmite thee with madneſs, and blindneſs, and aſtoniſhment of heart; and thou ſhalt grope at noon-dayes, as the blind gropeth in darkneſs; and thou ſhalt not proſper in thy wayes. Light is the gift of God; he giveth, and he taketh it away. As when he created the world, there was nothing but darkneſs, and he ſaid, Let there be light, and there was light; ſo he ſaith now to perſons, yea to Nations, who are in light, and have abuſed the light, the light of the Goſpel, or the light of outward proſperity, Let there be darkneſs upon them, and it is ſo. He can make light without darkneſs, and darkneſs without light. Take heed of ſinning againſt light, leſt ye grope in the dark without light. Thoſe ſins leave the ſoul, yea the whole man in greateſt darkneſs, which are committed in or againſt the greateſt light.

Secondly, Obſerve, That perſons forſaken of God, and covered over with darkneſs, are uſeleſs and unfit for any thing.

He that is in the dark cannot act. Prov. 4. 19. The way of the wicked is as darkneſs; they know not at what they ſtumble: They who know not at what they ſtumble, know not where they go. A blind man fears in a plain way, and goes ſometimes confidently where there is greateſt danger: Wicked men are blind; they know not whither they go, nor what they do. He that knows not what he doth, may too late know what he hath done; and he that knows not whither he goes, may know too late whither he is gone; having ſtumbled often, he falls at laſt into that pit of darkneſs, from whence he ſhall never ſee nor find his way out. Remember the counſel of Chriſt (John 12. 35.) Walk while ye have the light, leſt darkneſs come upon you; for he that walketh in darkneſs knoweth not whither he goeth: They who know not where they go, know not whither they go: If our way be hidden from us, ſo alſo is our end. This is the ſecond effect which follows the taking away of the heart, They grope in darkneſs without light.

The third effect is,

He maketh them to ſtagger like a drunken man.

Ebrietas eſt turbatio capitis, ſubverſio ſenſus, tẽpeſtas linguæ, procella corporis, naufragium caſtitatis, inſania voluntatis. Aug.

They who are overcome with wine, or ſtrong drink, are unable, not only to manage buſineſſes, but to order themſelves. Drunkenneſs is the diſturbance of the brain, and the overthrow of our ſenſes. Drunkenneſs maketh a ſtorm in the tongue, and a tempeſt all the body over. Drunkenneſs drowneth reaſon, and maketh ſhipwrack of chaſtity. There is a mental, as well as a corporal drunkenneſs: A dry drunkenneſs, as well as a wet drunkenneſs. Sober, grave, diſcreet, and prudent men, who by their wiſdom and judgment have overcome all oppoſitions, and carried all before them, even theſe ſhall ſtagger and reel too and fro, not knowing where they are, or upon what ground they ſtand.

The wrath of God taketh away the reaſon of man. The drunkards reaſon is ſuſpended: We ſay commonly, they are beaſts; and we call drunkenneſs a beaſtly ſin, becauſe ſuch act more like beaſts then men. I (ſaith the good Prophet, Jer. 23. 9.) am like a drunken man, becauſe of the Lord, and becauſe of the words of his holineſs: That is, I do even ſtagger and reel, I am as a man aſtoniſhed and ſenſeleſs at the apprehenſion of Gods diſpleaſure, and becauſe of that cup of his fierce indignation, which his holy Word threatens againſt an unholy people. The Prophet was as a drunken man, while he foreſaw a cup in the hand of God, the wine whereof was red with wrath; how drunken then were they, who were made to drink it, dregs and all to the very bottom? Of ſuch Iſaiah ſpeaketh (Chap. 29. 9.) They are drunken, but not with wine; they ſtagger, but not with ſtrong drink: For the Lord hath poured upon you the ſpirit of deep ſleep. Men ſin greatly againſt God, when they are drunken with wine; and God puniſheth man greatly, when he makes him drunken without wine: when he takes away the heart, and leaves ſober men to act and perſonate the drunkard.

To clear which, I ſhall ſhew you a ſeven-fold parallel between a man who hath too much drink in him, and no heart in him; God having taken away his heart.

Firſt, They who are drunken, think every thing moves and reels; the very earth ſeems to totter under them, and the whole world to turn about them: Whereas indeed, 'tis only their heads that turn, and themſelves that reel. 'Tis ſo with many great Politicians and Chiefs of the people: God in judgment taketh away their hearts, and then (to their apprehenſion) every thing turns. They fearfully ſuppoſe ſometimes, that all turns againſt them; and ſometimes flatteringly, that all turns for them. This giddineſs of their heads, muſt needs produce giddy counſels, and unſettle all they ſet themſelves unto. God took away the heart of Cain, and then in this ſence alſo, as well as in the letter, he dwelt in the land of Nod, that is, in a trembling moving land: yea, Cain thought every mans hand was turned againſt him to ſlay him, ſo ſoon as God was turned from him, Gen. 4. 14. Pharaoh's ſuſpicious head forecaſt great dangers to himſelf from a people, who intended him no harm. Theſe Iſraelites (ſaith he) will ſurely turn from me, and joyn with my enemies: This unjuſt and groundleſs fear, put him upon ſuch counſels, as proved the juſt ground of his own overthrow.

Secondly, Drunkenneſs makes the object appear double or crooked to the eye. For as he that looks upon objects through the water that is without him, ſo he that looks upon them through the watry liquor that is within him, ſees that which is ſtrait, as if it were crooked, and that which is ſingle doubles in his ſight. Thus when the Lord poureth a ſpirit of penal drunkenneſs upon the wiſeſt in the world, the ſtraiteſt and juſteſt actings of righteous men are judged crooked and indirect; what they do with greateſt ſimplicity and plainneſs, is counted doubling, yea, juggling with God and man. Chriſt himſelf was called a deceiver by ſuch a generation. And Paul ſpeaks of himſelf, and his fellow Apoſtles, we are, as deceivers, yet true. And as the actions of others, ſo their own dangers and enemies ſeem double, yea treble, and twenty-fold, to what indeed they are. Troubled imaginations are a diſtorting and a multiplying glaſs, to every work, thing, or perſon they look upon.

Thirdly, Drunkenneſs dims the bodily eye. The mental eye of theſe men is ſo dimmed, that they cannot diſcern between right and wrong, between good and evil. They put light for darkneſs, and darkneſs for light; bitter for ſweet, and ſweet for bitter. Their minds are blinded, and their underſtandings as much diſabled from knowing what is juſt, as their wills and affections are from chuſing and embracing it. The Prophet (Iſa. 28 7.) reproving drunkenneſs in the letter, ſaith, They have erred through wine, and through ſtrong drink are out of the way; the Prieſt and the Prophet have erred through ſtrong drink, they are ſwallowed up of wine, they are out of the way through ſtrong drink; they err in viſion, they ſtumble in judgment. Now as men that are corporally drunk, wear out their wits, drown their brains, weaken their judgments, and when they are actually drunk are not able to make any judgment at all; ſuch dotards do they proceed, who are intoxicated with the wine of divine revenges. The Prophet deſcribes them fully (Iſa. 19. 14.) The Lord hath mingled a perverſe ſpirit rit in the midſt thereof, and they have cauſed Egypt to err in every work thereof, as a drunken man ſtaggereth in his vomit. They who err in every work, muſt needs draw them into error, who work by their direction. If the blind lead the blind, both fall into the ditch. They who have loſt their own eyes, will make but ill guides for others.

Fourthly, A drunken man defiles and pollutes himſelf with his own vomit; he pours that out loathſomly, which he poured in delightfully. Thus alſo men left of God, defile whatſoever they put their hands or tongues unto: They continually vomit up the filthineſs of their hearts, the pride, the cruelty, the injuſtice, the baſeneſs of their ſpirits, in all they ſpeak, or act: Their beſt counſels are like ſhameful ſpewing upon all their glory, as the Prophet ſpeaks (Hab. 2. 16.) Their ſtink and their ill ſavour goeth up when they do great things (Joel. 2. 20.) And the greater the things are which they do, the greater is the ſtink that goeth up: Their own dung, or vomit, is of a better ſavour, then their deſigns and workings are. Plain-hearted Jacob was afraid that the fraudulent and cruel dealings of his two ſons, Simeon and Levi, would make him ſtink among the inhabitants of the land (Gen. 34. 30.) Cruelty and treachery are odious, both in the ſight of God and man; good and bad; they are ſo in the good, whoſoever commits them; and they are ſo in the ſight of the bad, if any commit them but themſelves.

Fifthly, Drunkenneſs doth not only empty men of reaſon, but filleth them with paſſion, it makes them mad and furious: We ſay of ſome, they are mad-drunk. This effect of drunkenneſs is often viſible in the counſels and wayes of men deſerted, and diſhearted by God; they become raging mad; they like Jehu, drive furiouſly, they fume and foam, they make all both weary and aſhamed of their company. Why do the heathen rage (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) and the people imagine a vain thing? 'Tis a fit of this drunkenneſs that makes them ſo. The inhabiters of the earth being drunk with the myſtical wine of Babyloniſh whoriſh fornication, rage againſt Chriſt and his Laws: yea, then they are full of the fury of the Lord, lying like a wild Bull in a net at the head of every ſtreet, Iſa. 51. 10.

Sixthly, The Text tells us, that drunkenneſs makes men ſtagger, they cannot keep their feet, nor ſtand their ground. Such a judgment God ſendeth upon wicked men; their minds are full of irreſolutions, they are not able to ſtand to their own purpoſes and promiſes; they ſtagger from this part to that, from this ſide to that; they change intereſts as faſt as there is any change in affairs, or outward accidents; now they are for the truth, and preſently they oppoſe the truth; they are like the double minded man, of whom the Apoſtle James ſpeaks, Unſtable in all their wayes.

Laſtly, Drunken men often run upon their own ruine. We have a ſaying, That drunkards ſeldom take hurt; the meaning is, they are not ſenſible of the hurt they take; they indeed take hurt oftner then any men, and run deſperately upon their own death. Thus men left of God run courſes as unſafe, as they are unjuſt: And while they make too much haſte to ſave, deſtroy themſelves. They ruſh like Balaam upon the ſwords point; and while they are moſt afraid of trouble, no advice, ſcarce any force of friends can keep them off from it. They will ſtagger till they fall; and fall ſo, that they can never riſe again. We may find many parallels of it abroad, and among our ſelves not a few. Do we not ſee men groping in the dark without light, wandring in the wilderneſs where there is no way, ſtaggering like drunken men? It were eaſie to give particular examples of theſe three effects in all Ages and Hiſtories of the world: But I ſhall conclude with three general Inſtances held out in Scripture.

The firſt is that of the Apoſtle concerning the Gentiles, (Rom. 1. 21.) They knew God (they had light) but they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful, but became vain their imaginations, and their fooliſh heart was darkened: They obſcured the light which God gave them in the creature, or benighted themſelves in the day time of natural light: And what followed? Profeſſing themſelves to be wiſe, they became fools. They wandred in the wilderneſs of their own luſts and vile affections, where there was no way: They groped in the darkneſs of a reprobate mind, without light. They ſtaggered like a drunken man, from one evil to another, being filled with all unrighteouſneſs, fornication, wickedneſs, covetouſneſs, maliciouſneſs, full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity, whiſperers, &c.

Secondly, We read another parallel in the whole Nation of the Jews (Rom. 11. 8, 9, 10.) God hath given them the ſpirit of ſlumber, eyes that they ſhould not ſee, and ears that they ſhould not hear unto this day; that is, in the ſtile of Job, he hath taken away their hearts; and have not the Jews wandred ever ſince in a wilderneſs where there is no way? Have they not groped in darkneſs without light?

Thirdly, Take the inſtance of all apoſtate Chriſtians, according to that grand Prophecy of the Apoſtle (2 Theſ. 2. 11, 12.) They had the light of truth ſhining to them, but did not receive the love of it: For this cauſe God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſions, that they ſhould believe a lye; they ſhould be ſeduced and led into a wilderneſs of error; they ſhould grope in the dark without light, and ſtagger from one lye to another, from one falſe way to another, like a drunken man, till they fell into that bottomleſs pit of deſtruction; as the Apoſtle ſhuts up that dreadful Prophecy (verſ. 12.) That they all might be damned, who believed not the truth, but had pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs. God takes away the heart of the chief of the people of the earth, in reference to civil things; he alſo takes away the heart of the people of the earth, in reference to ſpiritual things; wandring, groping, tottering, are the effects of both. When God doth the former, Kingdoms wander, grope and totter: when God doth the latter, Churches do ſo: By the former, the outward glory and beauty of mankind decayeth; and their inward, by the latter. Churches and Kingdoms, the bodies and ſouls of men, decay, dye and periſh for ever, when God taketh away their hearts. And when he in juſtice doth this (as when he doth it, he alwayes doth) then he declares (which is Job's ſcope in this whole diſcourſe) that with him is wiſdom and ſtrength, and that he alſo hath counſel and underſtanding. And leſt any ſhould think that Job had all this while told ſtories, and ſpoken at random, he aſſures us in the next words, that he had ſpoken only what his own experiences and obſervations gave teſtimony unto: Lo, mine eyes hath ſeen all this, &c.

CHAP. XIII. Verſ. 1, 2, 3, 4.

Lo, mine eye hath ſeen all this, mine ear hath heard and underſtood it.

What ye know, the ſame do I know alſo, I am not inferiour to you.

Surely I would ſpeak to the Almighty, and I deſire to reaſon with God.

But ye are forgers of lyes, ye are all Phyſitians of no value.

THe Friends of Job charged him with ignorance of God, and of his wayes: To refute which, he made that excellent confeſſion, both of the Power and Wiſdom of God, in the Chapter foregoing, and concludeth his diſcourſe upon thoſe points, at the beginning of this, with an atteſtation to all, from his own knowledge and experience. Some joyn the two firſt verſes of this thirteenth, to the laſt of the twelfth Chapter, beginning this at the third verſe. And they who conſent to their ſtanding, as a part of the thirteenth Chapter, yet interpret them as a tranſition, or paſſage to the matter here further diſcuſſed and enlarged.

Caput malim ordiri à ver. 30 ſed tranſitio eſt. Merc.

Lo, mine eye hath ſeen all this, mine ear hath heard and underſtood it.

As if he had ſaid, To aſſure you that all is true which I have ſpoken and aſſerted, mine own eyes and ears are witneſs. We may give you the ſum of his reaſoning thus:

That which I have clearly ſeen, that which I have received from good hands, and from approved Authors, that which I have fully underſtood to be, is a truth.

But the whole matter, which I have declared in the former Chapter, is ſuch, as mine eye hath ſeen, mine ear hath heard, and my underſtanding hath fully apprehended.

Therefore thoſe things are true, and ought to be received by you as truths.

Lo, mine eye hath ſeen all this, &c.

Triplex cognitio, 1. oculorum per experientiam, 2. auris per traditionē, 3. intellectus per diſcurſum.

Here is a threefold knowledge laid down in this verſe: First, Knowledge by experience, Lo, mine eye hath ſeen.

Secondly, Knowledge by tradition, or by teaching, Mine ear hath heard.

Thirdly, Knowledge by diſcourſe, Mine ear hath heard and underſtood it; that is, I have underſtood what I have ſeen and heard.

Lo, mine eye hath ſeen.] The eye is taken in Scripture two wayes.

In oculis mens & ratio intelligitur, quâ, quæ cognovimus vidiſſe dicimur. Sanct.

Firſt, Figuratively, So it is put for the underſtanding; becauſe as the eye is the light of the body, ſo the underſtanding is the light of the mind. An ignorant man is a blind man, how clear ſighted ſoever the eye of his body is (Deut. 29. 4.) The Lord hath not given you an heart to perceive, and eyes to ſee, and ears to hear unto this day. Here are three faculties, and three acts: Firſt, The heart to perceive. Secondly, The eye to ſee. Thirdly, The ear to hear. The heart is ſometimes put for the whole inward man, and then the eye and the ear are taken properly for the organs of the outward man: But we cannot interpret Moſes ſo, for though the Lord had not given them an heart to perceive, yet they had bodily eyes to ſee, and ears to hear, they were neither deaf nor blind ſenſitively: ſo then, the two latter expreſſions import no more then the firſt; he hath not given you eyes to ſee, he hath not given you ears to hear; that is, you are utterly ſhut up in blindneſs and ignorance, or you have not hearts to perceive (Luke 24. 31.) Their eyes were opened, and they knew him. They ſaw before, but they did not ſee diſcerningly, or with the light of their underſtandings. The buſineſs of the Goſpel is to open the eye, to turn from darkneſs to light, and from the power of Satan unto God (Acts 26. 18.) That is, to convince the underſtanding, that, a ſtate of ſin is a ſtate of darkneſs, and that the grace and favour of God to ſinners is light; that, to be under the power of ſin, is to be under the power of Satan; and that it is both our duty and our happineſs to turn to God. To ſee theſe things, and theſe our underſtandings only can ſee, is to have our eyes opened.

Some underſtand the Text in Job, of the eye, in this tropical ſence, and then it is coincident with the latter clauſe, the eye is the underſtanding. But rather take it literally, for the corporal eye, and ſo the eye importeth experience and obſervation, which come in, or are entertained at the eye.

Mine ear hath heard.] The ear is the ſenſe of diſcipline, knowledge enters at this port, when that of the eye is ſhut up, either by a defect in Nature, or by accident. They who are born blind, may be bred great ſcholars; the ear can let in learning enough without the aſſiſtance of the eye. Hearing is a nearer ſervant to the underſtanding, then ſeeing is.

Mine ear hath heard.] The ear hears, either by inſtruction from man, or by revelation from God, of which Eliphaz ſpake (Chap. 4. 12.) Now a thing was ſecretly brought to me, and mine ear received a little thereof. Here I conceive Job intends the former, having learned what he here avouches, from men learned and knowing in the wayes of God.

Further, We may take both ſight and hearing more largely, and then the whole is no more but a vehement affirmation, that Job did underſtand what himſelf had affirmed, as alſo what his friends had ſo largely argued. As if he had ſaid, I very well perceive what ye (my friends) have ſaid, and indeed they are not new to me, experience hath taught me them before, and I have heard of them often, they are the received principles of wiſe and godly men, even ſuch as I have ſeen, heard and underſtood, before ever I converſ'd or changed a word with you. And ſo theſe three expreſſions, I have ſeen, heard, and underſtood, are but an amplification of the ſame thing, either implying, that he underſtood them as clearly, as if his eye had ſeen them; or that which way ſoever any mans underſtanding can be helpt, his had, even by the ear, and by the eye, both which had contributed their beſt furtherance, to furniſh him with thoſe notions. Lo, mine eye hath ſeen, &c.

Vidi, audivi, intellexi, aſſeverationem continent & amplificationē rei benè perſpectæ ac ſi eadem res per eandem vocem & ſynonimiam repeteretur. Bold.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, That our ſenſes are inlets to the underſtanding.

Job placeth the underſtanding laſt, Mine eye hath ſeen all this, and mine ear hath heard and underſtood it; or underſtood it by the ſervice of mine eye, and of mine ear. The ſenſes of the body are advantages to the mind: The eye doth not ſee for it ſelf, or for the body only, but the eye ſees for the underſtanding: The ear doth not hear for it ſelf, or for the body only, but the ear heareth for the underſtanding. The right uſe and diligent improvement of ſenſe, improves us both in knowledge and in holineſs. While we look with the eye upon what God doth, while we attend with the ear what God ſpeaks, we learn who God is, and what we muſt be. As the eye and the ear are ſervants to ſin, ſo they are ſervants to grace: They are alwayes ſervants to ſin in wicked men, and ſometimes they prove ſo in good men: An eye not watched takes in vain objects: Thine eye (ſaith Solomon) ſhall behold the ſtrange woman, and thine heart ſhall utter perverſe things: The eye carrieth the meſſage to the heart, and preſently corrupts the ſpirit with the object which it beholds, if the object be corrupt. Hence the counſel of Solomon (Prov. 23. 31.) Look not upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his colour in the cup: Look not upon the wine; Why not? Will the colour hurt us? Yes; The colour of the wine will ſtain the eye, and the eye will ſtain the heart. As ſad objects go quickly from the eye to the heart (Mine eye affecteth mine heart, Lam. 3. 51.) ſo do luſtful and vain objects; they being taken in at the eye, do both affect and infect the heart in a moment. Let not theſe ſenſes which the Lord hath given us for natural uſes, to the body, and for ſpiritual uſes, to the ſoul; let not theſe (I ſay) be abuſed, or turned to the diſſervice of the body (much leſs) to the deſtruction and damnation of the ſoul.

Secondly, Job having ſpoken with much plainneſs and confidence in the former Chapter, about the diſpenſations of God, clears it here, that he had not ſpoken by rote, or without book, or tumbled out what he could not prove: No (ſaith he) mine eye hath ſeen all this, mine ear hath heard and underſtood it.

Note from it, It becometh us to be well aſſured our ſelves of what we teach unto others.

He that inſtructeth another ſhould firſt be inſtructed himſelf, and ſhould have, not only a ſound of words at his tongue, but ſound knowledge at his heart. As it is the duty of him that inſtructeth others, to practice what he ſpeaks; ſo, to be well aſſured of what he ſpeaks: As his life ſhould hold forth a pattern of that doctrine which he delivereth, ſo his underſtanding ſhould hold the model of that doctrine which he delivereth: Thou that teacheſt another, art not thou taught thy ſelf? 'Tis ſinful not to do what we teach; or to teach what we do not know. A good man will adviſe no more then he will do; and a wiſe man will ſay no more then he underſtands. Job was much aſſured that he knew what he taught his friends, when he affirms in the next verſe, that he knew as much as any of his friends.

Verſe 2. What ye know, the ſame do I know alſo; I am not inferiour to you.

The Hebrew is, According to your know or knowledge, is my knowledge; I am not below you in knowledge; Take knowledge in the matter, or in the meaſure, I am not inferiour to you. I know the ſame things which ye know; I have extended my knowledge to as many particulars as you, and I know every particular as fully, and am as clear in it as your ſelves.

Secundum ſcire vel ſcientiam veſtram & ego novi.

But doth not Job play the boaſter? Doth not pride put forth its head at his tongue, while he ſpeaks ſuch language as this?

Job ſpake this ſence, and almoſt the ſame language at the third verſe of the twelfth Chapter, where he ſaith, I have underſtanding as well as you, I am not inferiour to you; yea, who knoweth not ſuch things as theſe? Thither I refer the Reader for the meaning of this ſeeming, unbeſeeming boaſt. I ſhall here only anſwer in general, that Job ſpeaks not this ambitiouſly, or arrogantly, as they do, who love to live in the ſound of their own commendations; who, if others commend them not, will not fail to commend themſelves: What know ye that I know not? Neither doth he ſpeak this in contempt of his Friends, as if he ſlighted or undervalued them: Job knew it to be, not only uncivil, but ſinful, to trample upon the reputation of his Friends; to ſpeak high words of himſelf, and baſely of other men. Job ſpeaks this, not becauſe he delighted in it, but becauſe he was neceſſitated to it. The Apoſtles Apology may be his (2 Cor. 11. 5.) I ſuppoſe I was not a whit behind the very chiefeſt Apoſtles (here Paul ſpeaks in as bragging language as Job doth) but I am become a fool in glorying: 'Tis folly to do ſo, yet he hath enough to vindicate his own wiſdom, while he ſpake like a fool; even this, You have compelled me. If any ſhould ſay, Job became a fool in glorying, he had the ſame to ſay of his Friends, which Paul had of the Corinthians, You have compelled me, you have put me upon it, I could not avoid it; while you have laid me low, and ranked me, not only among ignorant men, but even among the beaſts; was I not forced to ſtand up for my ſelf, and tell you plainly, that I know as much as you, and that I am not inferiour unto you? Some, in contempt of their Teachers, are ready to ſay, what need we hear Sermons? we know as much as the Preacher can tell us? Job was not unwilling to hear the counſel of his ſervant, much leſs did he contemn the counſel of his Friends. So then, Theſe words are a neceſſitated vindication of himſelf, he could not ſo forſake his own honour and reputation, as to let it lye in the duſt, for fear he ſhould ſeem proud in ſpeaking for it. Though all ambitious contending with others, is odious, yet no man ought to betray the truth, or his own integrity, leſt he ſhould be counted contentious. He buyes the opinion of an humble and of a peaceable man too dear, who either payes the Faith of God for it, or his own credit.

Non dicit hæc arroganter & ambitioſè, ſed ſumma neceſſitate impulſus. Pined.

Verſe 3. Surely I would ſpeak to the Almighty, and I deſire to reaſon with God.

The word which we tranſlate [Surely] is not only a particle of aſſertion, but of illation, rendring a reaſon of what was ſaid before. Some render it here, not Surely, but Therefore I would ſpeak to the Almighty; as if he ſaid, I am aſſured that God is good and juſt, and I have found men harſh and unequal to me, Therefore I will ſpeak to the Almighty.

There is alſo a different tranſlation of the whole verſe, thus, Surely I would ſpeak for the Almighty, and I would reaſon for God. And ſo he confutes the ſuſpition of his Friends concerning him, and their confidence of themſelves; as if he had darkened the glory of God, and they only were the aſſertors of it; as if he had oppoſed God, and they only had ſtood up to defend and maintain his cauſe. You think that you only have ſpoken on Gods ſide, and that I have ſpoken either to his diſſervice, or for my ſelf, but indeed, I would ſpeak for God, I deſire to maintain the juſtice, honour, holineſs, mercy, and goodneſs of God as much as any of you all; and I would as readily engage for him, as you or any man elſe; I would ſpeak for the Almighty, and I would plead for God. We cannot have a better cauſe to plead then Gods; nor can any give us a better fee. It is our duty to be Advocates for God, though we have nothing for our pains; how much more, when all that we have already, we have from him; and what ever we ſpeak or do for God and his cauſe, ſhall ſurely be remembred: God keepeth a book of remembrance of what the Saints ſpeak one to another, concerning their own caſes or troubles: then much more doth he keep a book of remembrance, when (according to this tranſlation) they ſpeak for the Almighty, and plead for God.

Profectò ego pro omnipotente loquar & diſceptare pro Deo forti volo. Jun.

But the ſence runs more generally with our tranſlation, I would ſpeak to the Almighty, and I deſire to reaſon with God. And then the meaning is, as if Job had ſaid, I ſee I ſhall avail or profit my ſelf but little by any further conference with you, therefore I deſire to turn my ſelf to God, from whom I am ſure of a good anſwer.

Again, Job ſeemeth to comply with what Zophar had ſpoken (Chap. 11. 5.) O that God would ſpeak, and open his lips againſt thee! Job accepts his wiſh; You have ſaid, O that God would ſpeak, I deſire no other; I alſo would ſpeak to the Almighty, I would reaſon with God; what in your account would be my puniſhment, I ſhould receive as a great happineſs; yea I make it my requeſt, that I may ſpeak with the Almighty, and that I might reaſon with God, Thus he declareth the confidence which he had in the goodneſs of his cauſe, as alſo the clearneſs of his conſcience, both which were ſuch as did not fear, no not the preſence of God himſelf.

And I deſire to reaſon with God.

This part of the verſe is of the ſame intendment with the former. The word ſignifies to reaſon by way of formal diſpute, where arguments or mediums are held out, upon which we conclude the truth of our opinion, or poſition. The Jews call Logick by this name.

The Septuagint do ſomewhat allay and modifie the words, ſuppoſing Job too bold and free in this offer; therefore they add, I would reaſon with God, if he pleaſe to give me leave, or if he will accept of me in it: The ſupplement is pious, and is to be underſtood in all expreſſions of this nature. What any man at any time deſires of God, he muſt do it with ſubmiſſion to the will of God, unleſs God hath already declared his will concerning that deſire.

But ſuppoſe God ſhould have hearkened to Job, and granted him this requeſt, could Job make any improvement of it? Is it poſſible for duſt and aſhes, for fleſh and blood, to proſper in a contention with the Almighty, or to reaſon the caſe with God, and carry it? Yea, is it poſſible for man to ſpeak at all with the Almighty, or to reaſon with God?

I anſwer, Job ſpeaks thus, not as if he thought that God and he could perſonally, or, as we ſay, hand to hand, ſpeak together, together, and reaſon out the caſe. 'Tis true, God ſometimes hath ſpoken with man; but then it was in a humane ſhape (Gen. 18. &c.) And when it is ſaid that he ſpake with Moſes face to face, as a man ſpeaketh to his friend, Exod. 33. 11. yet Moſes did not, nor indeed could he, ſee the face of God (verſ. 20.) God maniſeſted himſelf familiarly and plainly to him; this was ſpeaking face to face. So, all that Job deſires, is but a liberty to open his mind freely to God, and to receive anſwer from God in what way he ſhould appoint. As if he had ſaid, I had rather ſpeak with God himſelf, then with you my friends, and I doubt not but I ſhall find at laſt a more favourable hearing from him, then I have yet had from you.

Non ipſius accuſandi ſed criminationis veſtræ refellendi gratia, cauſam meam apud ejus tribunal agere deſidero; non ut ejus judicia diſputare velim, ſed ut veſtros errores deſtruerem. Aquin.

Again, Job doth not deſire to reaſon, or ſpeak with God as an Adverſary, but as a Judge: He had no controverſie with God, but he applyes himſelf to God for the determining and ending of the controverſie which he had with his Friends.

Laſtly, Job did not ſuſpect that there was any the leaſt error in the proceedings of God with him, but his hope was to make it appear, even before the Tribunal of God (if he could be admitted thither) that his Friends had erred in their proceedings with him, and opinion of him. Hence Obſerve,

First, That man naturally ſeeks refuge, when he finds himſelf oppreſt,

Job found himſelf oppreſt upon earth, therefore he hath recourſe to Heaven. This Text is Job's Appeal. When the Apoſtle Paul found himſelf overborn by the clamours of the Jews, he ſaith, I appeal unto Ceſar: We, in ſuch a condition, may appeal to Chriſt. When we are pinched by men, Faith turns to God. And, that is one of the advantages which the Saints gain by their hard uſage in the world, and the troubles of this life; they converſe more with, and draw nearer unto God, who is the comfort of our lives. We are never happy in our diſtances from God; and when we are near him, nothing can make us unhappy.

There are three things in God, which may encourage us to communicate our condition, and ſpread our cauſe before him.

Firſt, The clearneſs of his underſtanding: He knoweth all things and perſons, and he knoweth them infallibly. 'Tis a miſery to be bound to the award of blind Judges, or of thoſe who will not ſee. There is no ignorance at all in God, neither can any thing pervert his knowledge. That which deters hypocrites, invites the ſincere into the preſence of God, his omniſcience. They can daub up their matters with men, but God looks through all their morter, and ſearcheth that which they would not have ſeen at all, the heart, Our hearts are as open to him as our faces are; and our thoughts as conſpicuous as our actions. Now (I ſay) that which diſcourageth hypocrites, incourages the upright in heart, though they have many ſins and corruptions about them, yet they know God knoweth that their corruptions are a burden to them, and their ſins their ſorrow: They know, he knows alſo the integrity of their hearts, and the ſtate of their cauſe. God is ſuch a Judge as needeth none to inform him, neither can any, by miſinformations, miſlead his judgment.

Secondly, As God knows the right ſtate of our cauſe, and of our hearts, ſo he will do us right; he cannot be deceived, neither will he deceive; he rewardeth every man according to his works. And as he commands his Miniſters, to ſay unto the righteous, it ſhall be well with him, ſo he will ſay nothing but well unto the righteous. Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?

Thirdly, God is patient, he hears us out: He will not ſnap us up, or cut us off in the managing of our cauſe. As he hath a piercing eye, ſo a patient ear; yea, it is no burden to him to hear, how much ſoever he hears; though we are long in drawing out our minds, even ſo long as would be tedious unto men, and tire the ear of an Angel, yet God bids us ſay on, and ſpeak out all. Thus the unerring knowledge, the unſtained juſtice, and the unwearied patience of God, may invite all that are upright into his preſence, Who would not ſpeak unto the Almighty, and deſire to reaſon with him? And ſo we do in prayer and holy meditation, in the ſecret diſputes and reaſonings of our ſouls. In all theſe we ſpeak to the Almighty, and he hath promiſed to give us anſwer to our doubts, eaſe and ſatisfaction to our ſpirits. Though God doth not appear viſibly to us, or make anſwer audibly, yet when we ſpeak in faith, and with ſincerity, he anſwers us really, and the effect is often made as clear to our experience, as if God had condeſcended to a free conference face to face.

Secondly, Foraſmuch as Job, after all theſe arguings with his Friends, being ſtill unſatisfied, deſires to reaſon with God, Obſerve, That when we cannot get ſatisfaction from men, we may yet expect it from God.

The reaſon of all things is in God; and though we muſt not reaſon with him, as contenders, yet we may and ought, as learners. As it is the honour of Chriſt, that we ſhould go to him for ſalvation, ſo for inſtruction. He is our Prophet, as well as our Prieſt; our Oracle as well as our Advocate. He ſpeaks to us, as well as for us. What man cannot teach us, he will: We may carry our doubts from friend to friend, from Preacher to Preacher, and yet remain unreſolved. As ſome ſickneſſes of the body are the Phyſitians reproach, he cannot remove them; ſo ſome diſtempers, and trouble of mind are (in that ſence) the Preachers reproach, he cannot cure, or quiet them: yet, both body and mind may find remedy in ſpeaking unto the Almighty, and in reaſoning with God. 'Tis a fault in many, that they are ſo ſlow in asking God, and ſo forward in asking men. We ſhould ask God before men, and make him not our refuge only, but our choice: We ſhould ſpeak to the Almighty, not only when men give us no anſwer, but before we ſeek their anſwer. It becometh us upon any doubt to inquire, firſt, of God by prayer, and to hearken what he will ſay to us in it. Many have had their ſcruples and troubles taken away by an immediate work, or moving of God upon their hearts; and 'tis ſweeteſt and moſt refreſhing when we have it ſo. It is the will of God that we ſhould uſe means, and take advice, both of Chriſtian friends, and of the Miniſters of Chriſt; God often goeth forth with their counſels, and makes them proſper: But if he withdraw his help from men, and appear not in their teachings, it is to draw us out yet more in ſeeking to be taught by him, and in deſiring that he would give us our comforts with his own hand, and tell us good tidings of peace and mercy with his own mouth. So he may be ſaid to do, when after prayer and wreſtlings with him, we find our ſpirits inlightened with the truth, or refreſhed with the comforts we have been ſeeking for.

Thirdly, Obſerve, That an upright heart is not afraid to reaſon with God himſelf.

The Juſtice and Majeſty of God, which make rotten hearts tremble, make the righteous rejoyce: It glads them, not only that God is gracious and merciful, but that he is juſt and holy: Sing unto the Lord (O ye Saints of his) and give thanks at the remembrance of his holineſs, Pſal. 30. 4. The remembrance of Gods holineſs, fills them with joy who are holy. Such love to reaſon with God, as much becauſe he knows them, as becauſe he is ready to pardon them. A godly man knows himſelf ſo ſinful, that he needs the grace of God to pardon him; and yet he knows himſelf ſo ſincere, that he fears not the juſtice of God ſhould behold and try him. We ſay that is a good piece of cloath, or ſtuff, which the Merchant offers to a clear light; that is a good piece of gold which the Pay-maſter willingly brings to the ballance and touchſtone: So it is an argument of ſoundneſs and integrity, when the ſoul ſets it ſelf in the ſight of God, who is light, and whoſe eye diſcerns what every one is; who alſo hath a ballance and a touchſtone in his hand, to weigh all men, and to try what metal they are. David prayeth as hard to be ſearched, as to be ſaved (Pſal. 139. 23, 24.) Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts, and ſee if there be any wicked way in me. He knew he was a ſinner, and he was aſſured God knew he was not wicked: had he been wicked, he would have had little mind to be ſearcht; or had his way been evil, he had never called to have it tryed. They that are deformed, or foul-faced, hate the looking-glaſs. And every one that doth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, leſt his deeds ſhould be reproved (John 3. 20.) The Word of God, which is doctrinal light, deters ſinners, how much more doth God himſelf, who is eſſential light? The ſinners in Zion (ſaith the Prophet) are afraid, fearfulneſs hath ſurpriſed the hypocrites: who among us ſhall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us ſhall dwell with everlaſting burnings? Iſa. 33. 14. But the Saints in Sion, they, who (as the ſame Prophet deſcribes them in the next words) walk righteouſly and ſpeak uprightly, they rejoyce in God as he is an everlaſting burning, and as he is a devouring fire, for they know he will neither devour nor burn them. God, who is a devouring fire to wicked men, is a reviving ſun to thoſe who fear his name, Mal. 4. 1, 2.

Verſ. 4. But ye are forgers of lies, ye are all Phyſicians of no value.

But] or, For (ſo it may be rendered) ye are forgers of lies, &c. This verſe giveth a reaſon why Job would not continue any further debate with his friends, but apply himſelf to God. Ye are forgers of lies. Lying words can no more cure the mind, then improper medicines can heal the body: And he that ſpeaks lying words, gives not only improper, but poiſonous medicines to the mind.

Ye are forgers of lies.] This is a ſevere charge and a high one. To tell lies is bad enough, but to forge lies is far worſe. The word ſignifies to diſpoſe or put any thing into exquiſite order and method: As if he had ſaid, You are compoſers of lies, you have the art of it, you are lie-makers, maſter-workmen at the trade, the chief of liars. It notes alſo the putting of one thing upon another, or the fitting them together, which is a further aggravation, you (which is the cuſtom of common liars) put this lie upon that, and fit one to another, as a Joiner doth board to board in one frame. The Italian reads, ye are hatchers of lies, you gather up without order whatſoever comes next to hand for the ſtrengthening of your cauſe. But forging doth properly belong to a Smith, who puts his Iron in the fire, to heat, and mollifie it, that he may work it with his hammer into what ſhape and form he pleaſeth. Thus liars do: they find a matter which is not ſhap'd fit for their turn and purpoſe, therefore they put it into the fire of their own imaginations, or into the flames of malice, and there they heat it, and then with their wit they hammer and faſhion it, and make it up into an inſtrument to wound the honour and reputation of others. So David complains (Pſal. 50. 19.) Thou giveſt thy mouth to evil, and thy tongue frameth deceit. And again (Pſal. 119. 69.) The proud have forged a lie againſt me.

Obſerve from the propriety of the word, which he uſeth to aggravate the greatneſs of their ſin.

That to be a plotter or contriver of ſin is worſe then to be an actor of it.

As every good action is by ſo much the better, ſo every evil action is by ſo much the worſe, by how much it hath more, either of the head or heart in it, (Pſal. 5. 9.) Thou hateſt the workers of iniquity, (Mat. 7. 23.) Depart from me ye that work iniquity. You that ſet your wits on work, you, who as it were keep a ſhop to work evil in, and make trade of it, depart from me. They that will not part from ſin, muſt depart from God, whether they will or no. The beſt of Saints on earth, do that which is ſinful; but they are (as we may ſay) bunglers at it in compariſon of theſe who make it their work, or make a buſineſs of it.

The Saints do evil as natural men do good, or perform holy duties; theſe do but ſlubber over holy duties; and they (in this ſenſe) do but ſlubber over evil, they have not the skill, that helliſh skill, to form it up and make it a curious piece. Here lies the ſpirit of wickedneſs: That ſin is moſt ugly and deformed in the ſight of God and of thoſe who are godly, which is contrived and compleated with greateſt exactneſs and curioſity.

Ye are forgers of lies.] A lie may be taken two wayes. Either more largely, for any falſity or untruth: Or ſecondly, more preciſely and ſtrictly, for that which is ſpoken, not only falſely, but knowingly, and with an intent to deceive. To lie, is to go againſt our own mindes, or to affirm a thing which we are aſſured is not ſo. Job doth not charge his friends with lies ſtrictly taken, as if they had knowingly ſpoken that which wa falſe, or as if they had done it with an intent and purpoſe to enſnare him: Such lying continued in, is inconſiſtent with godlineſs, and any one act of it ſtrikes at the vitals of godlineſs. His friends ſuppoſed, and were very confident that they ſpake truth, and their aim was to inſtruct, not to entangle him by what they had ſpoken. As that which is well-ſpoken, is often ill-taken; ſo, that which is ill-ſpoken, may have a good intent. 'Tis poſſible for a man to ſpeak that which is falſe, with more honeſty then ſome ſpeak the truth: ſo did theſe friends of Job, who though they cannot be altogether excuſed, yet they muſt not be raſhly cenſured. To clear up the matter yet further, conſider, that

There is a threefold lie, as was ſhewed at the third verſe of the eleventh Chapter.

Firſt, A verbal lie, When we either make an untrue relation, or being asked, give a falſe anſwer to the queſtion. Such was the lie of Ananias, (Act. 5. 3.) Why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the holy Ghoſt? The Apoſtle asked him if he ſold the land for ſo much; yea, for ſo much, ſaid he, when his own heart gave his tongue the lie for ſaying ſo.

Secondly, There is a practical lie, When we act againſt what we ſpeak, and unſay with our lives what we ſay with our lips: Many a mans hand gives his tongue the lie, and his works ſpeak the falſity of his words. Lying is very abominable when it is only a tongue-craft, but it is then moſt abominable, when it is alſo a handy-craft.

Thirdly, There is a doctrinal lie, So is every errour and unſound opinion. Falſe notions are a lie in the underſtanding: The judgement miſlead, miſleads others. The Lord by his Prophet reproves ſuch liars, (Ezek. 13. 9.) Mine hand (ſaith the Lord) ſhall be upon the Prophets that ſee vanity and divine lies; that is, lying doctrines, as is expounded (verſ. 22.) Becauſe with lies ye have made the heart of the righteous ſad, whom I have not made ſad, and ſtrengthened the hands of the wicked that he ſhould not return from his wicked way, by promiſing him life. The Apoſtle John concludes againſt this ſort of lies, (1 John 2. 21.) No lie is of the truth, that is, no doctrinal lie, either about matters to be believed, or to be done, either concerning the myſteries of faith, or the rules of a holy life, is of the truth. Nothing but truth can flow out, or follow from that which is true; as that old rule in logick teacheth us. Many lies have a likeneſs to truth, and moſt lies are ſo bold as to claim kindred and alliance to the truth, but no doctrinal lie doth indeed receive life or breath or any thing from any doctrinal truth, much leſs from him who is eſſential truth: To both which we extend S. Johns negative concluſion, No lie is of the truth.

Ex veris poſſunt nil niſi vera ſequi.

The lie which Job chargeth upon his friends in this place, is not a verbal lie, no nor a practical lie, but a doctrinal lie, as if he had ſaid, You have taught and maintained an errour, though you have ſo great an opinion that you have all truth on your ſide, and that you are only upon the ſide of truth.

Mendacium eo reſtrendū eſt, quod neque rectum in cōſulādo nec in admonendo modū teneant, ſed inutilibus & importunis cōſiliis & orationibus utātur. Pin.

But how doth it appear that his friends had forged doctrinal lies, or maintained errours?

There are four things obſervable in their diſcourſe with him, which give evidence to this accuſation.

Firſt, Becauſe to defend the juſtice of God they concluded Job guilty: They knew not how to reconcile it, that God ſhould be righteous in laying ſuch afflictions upon him, unleſs he were unrighteous; this was a doctrinal lie. The ſevereſt dealings of God with man in outward things, are no infallible marks of his disfavour, as hath been cleared more then once from the ſubject of this Book.

Secondly, He might charge them with forging of lies, becauſe when they profeſſed they came to mourn with him and to comfort him, (Chap. 2.) they, in ſtead of comforting him, made him mourn, and in ſtead of wiping off his tears, cauſed him to weep. Their words were gall and vinegar, not oyl and honey, as he both expected and needed. They ſpake much of the law, much of juſtice, but not a word, or but very little of free-grace, and mercy, and when they did, they did ſo cloud and clog it with conditions, and legal reſtrictions, that the poor man could not at all lift up his head in any ſolid conſolation. They were not careful to ſtate his caſe right, or elſe it was hidden from their eyes, notwithſtanding all their care: hence it was that they ſpake ſo much at random, as if they had not minded his condition, and laid load upon, inſtead of eaſing his wearied ſoul.

De lege multa, de gratia nihil loquebantur. Merc.

Thirdly, He calleth them forgers of lies, becauſe Zophar had charged him with an affected curioſity in ſearching into the ſecrets of God, and in prying into thoſe things which he would have hidden, Chap. 11. For, while he puts him that chiding queſtion, (verſ. 7.) Canſt thou by ſearching find out God? Canſt thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? He intimates plainly that Job had been attempting to ſearch out God, and had hopes to find him out unto perfection: This he ſpeaks out, verſ. 12. For vain man would be wiſe, though he be born like a wilde aſſes colt. As if he had ſaid, Thou haſt an itch to be wiſe beyond ſobriety, thou haſt a moneths mind to feed thy fancy with hidden myſteries, the open truths of God will not ſerve thy turn: Whereas indeed, Job only deſired to have his cauſe cleared up to his own ſpirit, and to ſee the reaſon why God contended with him. He did not curiouſly intrude himſelf into the counſels of God, but ſought that he might be better fitted to anſwer the call of God.

Fourthly, He taxeth them as forgers of lies, becauſe they thought he only made a ſhew of holineſs, but was really wicked and falſe at heart. Is this thy fear (ſaid Eliphaz) Is this thy hope? Is this thy uprightneſs? ſee what an upright man thou art: Here's a goodly profeſſion. While they charged him unjuſtly with hypocriſie, which is a practical lie, he juſtly charged them with errour, which is a doctrinal lie. If any man ſaith that himſelf is ſo holy that there is no ſin in him, he lies (ſaith the Apoſtle John, 1 Epiſt. chap. 1.) and the truth is not in him: and if any man ſay of another, becauſe he is outwardly unhappy, that he lives in ſin, and hath no goodneſs in him, this man lies too, and hath not that particular truth in him, which would teach him not to judge of mens perſons by events. Theſe things laid together might ſtir up the paſſion of Job to that high and unfriendly language againſt his friends, Ye are forgers of lies, and Ye are all Phyſicians of no value.

There are two ſorts of Phyſicians, the one in a proper, the other in a metaphorical ſenſe. A Phyſician properly taken, is a Student in nature, and learned in the temper, conſtitution and parts of the body: his buſineſs lies either in the preventing or curing of bodily diſeaſes, which are enemies to the life and ſubverters of the ſtrength of man. Jobs friends were not Phyſicians in this ſence, or if they were, yet he oppoſeth them, not in their Philoſophy, but divinity: And their errand to him, was not to heal the diſeaſe in his fleſh, but to remove the ſorrows and diſtempers of his ſpirit. His friends were his Phyſicians in a figure. In the ſame ſence that the ſoul is ſaid to be ſick, and the mind diſeaſed, the ſoul and the mind have their Phyſician. The Soul-phyſician doth not give counſel for the preparing of medicines, but his very counſels are the medicines, his word (that being the word or mind of God) is both the purge and cordial: Such Phyſicians Jobs friends would have been, but he complains of them, that, either their medicines were ſpiritleſs, and had no effect at all, or elſe that they wrought too violently; and hence it is that though he call them by an honourable name, Phyſicians, yet he abates it by an undervaluing Epithete, Phyſicians

ופאי אלל Medici nihili, i. e. prorſus vel omnino vos eſtis falſi medici

Of no value.] The word is uſed, though not in the ſame conſtruction (Zach. 11. 17.) Wo to the Idol ſhepherd: Some render there to the ſhepherd of an Idol, or of a vain thing: others, Wo the ſhepherd of no value, or who is good for nothing, unleſs it be to feed upon, and devour the flock. The word Elil, ſignifieth vanity or falſhood, it ſignifieth alſo an Idol, ſome ſay from the root, Al, in Engliſh, not, and ſo Elil, is as much as nullity, or nothingneſs. Idols are nullities, an Idol is nothing in the world, (1 Cor. 8.) and to ſay that a man is an Idol Phyſician, is all one, as to ſay, he is no Phyſician, or a Phyſician of no value. Rabbi Levi notes that the duplication of the letter lamed, ſhews the extream nothingneſs that was (as to this purpoſe) in theſe Phyſicians.

Væ paſtori meo nihili, Jun. Simpliciſſimum eſt אליל pro nihilo exponere ab אל non, hinc Idola dicta quaſi nihilitates. Merc. Rabbi Levi notat eſſe deductū ab אל non, geminata litera lamed, ad extremam nullitatem indicandā.

There are divers conjectures among interpreters about the reaſon of this ſtile.

Some thus, Phyſicians of an Idol, that is, you are to me like thoſe Phyſicians who undertake to cure a dumb Idol, a ſtock or a ſtone: For as they that give phyſick to an Idol, or apply medicines to a liveleſs Image, cannot profit it at all, or cauſe it to live, ſo you have done no more good to me then if you had beſtowed all your potions and medicines upon an Idol, for I am not at all healed nor recovered by them.

Medici Idoli, i. e. ſicut medici qui curant Idolū, truncum aut ſtipitē, qui quāvis multa adhibeant pharmaca nihil efficiunt. Pined.

Secondly, One of the Rabbins tells us from the Talmud, that Alal, ſignifies the ſinew in the neck, or the neck bone, and ſo it is a proverbial ſpeech; when they would expreſs a vain boaſting Phyſician, they ſay he is a Phyſician of the neck-bone: he that undertakes an impoſſible cure, is as one that undertakes to ſet the neck-bone, which our Engliſh proverb puts among impoſſibles, If you have broke your neck, come to me, and I will ſet it. This ſenſe may have ſome admittance here. As if Job had ſaid, You are as Phyſicians of the neck-bone, you promiſed to do great matters, to reſolve my doubts, and eaſe me of my ſorrows, but I ſee (the way you go to work) it is impoſſible to be done. If a man, ſaith the Apoſtle (Gal. 6. 1.) be overtaken with a fault; ye that are ſpiritual reſtore ſuch a man in the ſpirit of meekneſs. The word in the Greek ſignifies to ſet a bone, put him in joynt again, handle him gently and tenderly, reſtore him with a ſpirit of meekneſs, ſo it becomes a ſpiritual Phyſician.

Apud Thalmudiſtas אלל eſt nervus colli, qui ſi læſus fuerit nunquam poſtea curari poteſt, unde medici אלל dicti, qui quod promittūt præſtare nō poſſunt. R.Sol.

Thirdly, A Phyſician of no value, or an Idol Phyſician, is a Phyſician who can do no more good then an Idol, which is none at all. The Pſalmiſt ſaith of Idols, They have eyes and ſee not, hands and handle not, ears and hear not, feet and cannot walk; that is, there is no help to be had from them. Jobs friends gave him cauſe to call them Idol Phyſicians in this ſenſe alſo. As if he had ſaid, A ſtatue upon a wall, or the picture of a Phyſician, an Apollo cut in a ſtone, or an Æſculapius in a wood, might have cured me as much as you have done: yea you have rather done me hurt then good. Whereas a man ſhould be not only a Phyſician, but a God to man, you are not ſo much as men, ye are but Idols; your words help me no more then a ſtock or a ſtone, which cannot give to him that is in want, nor refreſh him that is weak.

Medici Idoli, i. e. veluti Idola mortua ſine ſenſu ſine auxilio, ut lapideus Apollo, aut ligneus Æſculapius. Homo homini Deus.

Fourthly, We may take the words in a more mollifying ſenſe. Ye are Phyſicians of no value, that is, you are unskilful Phyſicians, you have neither brought that credit to your ſelves, nor that comfort to me which I expected; your art hath failed you, and your practice is unſucceſsful.

There are four things that make a Phyſician of no value, or his labour of no effect, and all theſe did meet in Jobs friends.

Firſt, When a Phyſician doth not fully know the name or nature of that diſeaſe, under which his patient laboureth. We ſay, If a diſeaſe be known it is half cured; whereas he that doth not know it can never cure it, unleſs by gueſs or accident. Such cure as Empericks, not as Phyſicians, if they cure at all.

Secondly, As a Phyſician ſhould know the name and nature of the diſeaſe, ſo, that he may be a Phyſician of value, he muſt know the cauſe of the diſeaſe. The cure is found in the cauſe: to diſcover whence the diſtemper grew, and what the occaſion of it was, directs unto the remedy.

Thirdly, He is a Phyſician of no value, who giveth hurtful medicines, medicines that are unſafe and noxious, ſuch as rather kill then cure.

Fourthly, Suppoſe the medicine be in it ſelf good, yet if it be not rightly applyed, or not applyed at a right time, the effect is loſt. A man may do as much hurt by giving a good medicine, as by giving an ill one: For as we ſay of food, that which is one mans meat is another mans poyſon, ſo much more of phyſick, what is one mans help is another mans death. Theſe four things muſt concur in a good Phyſician, and a failing in any of them makes a Phyſician of no value.

Vanus medicus eſt qui etſi bona medicamēta ægroto exhibuerit, non habita tamē ejus corporis vel morbi ratione, &c. Merc.

Jobs friends (in ſome degree or other) failed in all theſe. They did not ſee into the nature of his trouble: they thought it to be a puniſhment from the revenging hand of God as a Judge, whenas it was but a tryal or a temptation from the chaſtening hand of God as a father: They did not diſcern the true cauſes of it, they thought it was for the diſcovery of his hypocriſie and of the juſtice of God: whereas it was for the diſcovery of his ſincerity and of the goodneſs of God: They prepared ſome medicines of unſound ingredients; as that God will ſpeedily give outward good things to ſuch as are good. And Aſſerebant bonis ſemper benè evenire quod falſum eſt. Merc.

laſtly, thoſe that were ſound they miſapplyed: Thus Job was wounded with their ſalves; made ſick with their medicines; and his very Phyſitians were a diſeaſe unto him.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, From the alluſion, That the ſoul hath its ſickneſs as well as the body.

The ſoul hath its Feavers, Conſumptions and Impoſthumations: There is not any diſeaſe of the body, but ſome have curiouſly found out a parallel diſtemper in the ſoul. Solomon in his prayer at the dedication of the Temple, calls every one to know the plague of his own heart. Tis hard to know our own ſpiritual diſeaſes; but it is harder to know the diſeaſes of other mens ſpirits.

Secondly, Obſerve, Good counſel and wholeſome inſtruction is as phyſick and medicines to the ſoul.

Animæ ægrotantis medicus eſt oratio.

As the Word is meat, ſo medicine too: The Word is meat to feed and refreſh the healthy ſoul, and the Word is medicine to cure and raiſe the ſoul that is weak and ſickly. There is no ſoul-diſeaſe, but we may find a remedy for it in the Word. The Lord (ſaith the Prophet, Iſa. 50. 3, 4.) hath given me the tongue of the learned (What learning was it? was it the learning of Philoſophers? No, it was this) That I ſhould know how to ſpeak a word in ſeaſon to him that is weary. There is a word which will eaſe the ſoul of its burthen, and cure the ſoul of its diſeaſe, if it be ſpoken in its ſeaſon.

Thirdly, Obſerve, He is a ſoul-phyſitian of no value, who makes wrong application of truths, as well as he who applyes that which is falſe.

To preach the Law and the terrors of it, to preach the Juſtice of God and the ſeverity of it, theſe are truths; but for a man to preach theſe to a poor broken ſoul, to a ſoul that lyeth languiſhing and trembling under the hand of God, to a ſoul that hath the pillars of its comfort ſhaken with the breakings in of divine wrath, this man is a Phyſitian of no value. For though the things are true, yet they are ill tim'd and applied; ſuch a ſoul ſhould have ſupports and cordials from the Covenant of grace, to refreſh his fainting ſpirits; ſuch a one ſhould have the oyl of gladneſs poured into his wounds, his belly ſhould be filled with the ſtrongeſt wine of conſolation. On the other hand, when a ſoul is ſtubborn in impenitency, or high flown with preſumption, going on in the pride of his heart, yet ſaying, I ſhall have peace: to apply promiſes of mercy, the glad tidings of ſalvation, the freeneſs of grace to ſuch a ſoul, may be its hardening and undoing: Though mercy may be tendered to the ungodly, for God juſtifieth the ungodly; yet we muſt not ſay to a man, that perſeveres in his ungodlineſs, that God will juſtifie him, but that God will condemn him. The worſt of ſinners may be ſaved, but we muſt let him know, God will not ſave him in his ſin. Woe unto us, if we cry peace to thoſe who make war with God. To deal gently with ſuch, is to be cruel both to theirs and our own ſouls. Such muſt be thundred at, as Paul did at Elymas (Acts 13. 10.) Thou child of the devil, and enemy to all righteouſneſs: This was the language even of Paul, who preached the grace of the Goſpel as high as ever man did. To flatter thoſe that perſevere in ſin, is to deſtroy them: ſmooth words to the wicked are as drawn ſwords. The doctrine of the law, and the doctrine of free grace, muſt be preached diſtinctly, and ſet out in their ſeveral natures, and rightly applyed to their proper objects. We may be Phyſitians of no value, while we preſcribe that which in its own nature is wholeſome phyſick. The Word of God muſt be rightly divided: Every ſoul muſt have his own portion. The childrens bread is not for dogs: And though they who are dogs in the ſence of their own unworthineſs, may gather up the crumbs that fall from, yea may eat the whole loaf (whole Chriſt) which is upon the childrens table; yet they who are dogs indeed ought not to be offered a crumb of it. The Prophet Ezekiel reproves the falſe Prophets ſeverely for miſapplying the threatnings and promiſes of God; for giving bread to the dogs, and throwing ſtones at the children. Will you pollute me (ſaith God, chap. 13. 19.) among my people? How is God polluted? He is infinitely above all pollution. He is polluted when any ſhall make him the author and maintainer of their lyes, or when they ſpeak ſo of his truths, that they incourage any in their pollutions. We pollute the Word of God (yea God himſelf) when we miſapply it, to favour and ſide with the pollutions of evil men; or when we do not apply it to eaſe and revive the ſpirits of good men Will ye pollute me among my people, to ſlay the ſouls that ſhould not die, and to ſave the ſouls alive that ſhould not live? The ſouls that ſhould not dye, are ſaid to be ſlain, when we threaten where we ſhould promiſe; and we ſave the ſouls alive that ſhould not live, when we promiſe where we ſhould threaten. Though the unskilſulneſs or unfaithfulneſs of man cannot make the faithfulneſs and counſels of God of none effect, either by ſlaying one ſoul, of whom he hath ſaid, live; or by ſaving one ſoul, of whom he hath ſaid, dye: Yet they whoſe words run knowingly croſs to the word and will of God, are juſtly charged with ſlaying thoſe whom God will ſave; and with ſaving thoſe whom God will ſlay. As they who willingly ſcandalize a brother by any, to him doubtful, practice, are ſaid to deſtroy him for whom Chriſt dyed (Rom. 15. 15. 1 Cor. 8. 11.) becauſe they do as much as in them lyes, to deſtroy and cauſe him to periſh, for whom Chriſt dyed; though indeed it be impoſſible for ſuch to periſh, or be deſtroyed. So alſo are we to expound the Prophet, theſe do what in them lies to ſlay the ſouls that ſhould live, though indeed ſuch ſhall not be ſlain: and this, if any thing, is to be, as Job rebukes his Friends, A Phyſitian of no value: An Idol, a no Phyſitian, or one as good as none: ſeeing it were as good to do never a whit, as never the better.

Job having thus reproved his Friends, and made an appeal to God, gives them advice in the next words, not to ſpeak a word more, unleſs it were to better purpoſe then what they had already ſpoken. O that you would altogether hold your peace.

VERS. 5, 6, 7, 8.

O that you would altogether hold your peace, and it ſhould be your wiſdom.

Hear now my reaſonings, and hearken to the pleadings of my lips.

Will you ſpeak wickedly for God? and talk deceitfully for him?

Will ye accept his perſon? will ye contend for God?

JOB having ſhewed his Friends their error in what they had ſpoken, deſireth they would ſpeak no more, unleſs they could do it to better purpoſe: He calls upon them aloud to ſtop their mouths (verſ. 5.) and to open their ears (verſ. 6.) being men (as he conceived) more fit to learn then teach. He preſſeth this counſel by divers arguments: two of which we have in this Context.

The firſt at the cloſe of the fifth verſe, And it ſhould be your wiſdom. The Argument lyes thus, It is beſt to do that which will be your wiſdom if you do it. But to ſtop your mouths, and open your ears, to be ſilent and hear, will be your wiſdom: Therefore you were beſt to follow my advice, and hold your peace.

A ſecond Argument is contained in the ſeventh and eighth verſes; and it is drawn from the ſin and danger of it, in caſe they ſhould proceed to ſpeak as they had done; Will ye ſpeak wickedly for God? &c. He ſeems to reaſon with them thus, It is not good for you to go on in ſin and wickedneſs. But in ſpeaking thus, ye ſin, and do wickedly: Therefore it is not good for you to go on in ſpeaking thus: Be ye therefore ſilent, and attend unto what I have now to ſay.

O that ye would altogether hold your peace.

Quis det ut tacendo taceretis?

O that ye.] The Hebrew is, Who would give this to you? Or, O that ſome body would beſtow this gift, the gift of ſilence, upon you, unleſs you had a happier gift in ſpeaking.

חרש Fodit, aravit, per antiphraſin, nihil egit; ſiluit.

That ye would altogether hold your peace.] The word which we tranſlate, to hold the peace, or, to be ſilent, ſignifies properly, to dig, or plow the ground, to be very buſie; and by an Antiphraſis (frequent in the Hebrew tongue, which imployes many words to contrary ſences) it ſignifies, to do nothing, and to be ſilent, to be altogether idle: ſo they are, who neither do, nor ſpeak. Further, Here is more then a bare wiſh for ſilence; here is an inforcement of it, O that ye would altogether hold your peace: The letter is, O that you in being ſilent, would be ſilent; or, O that you would be moſt ſilent in ſilence. Job thus ſtrongly beſpeaking the ſilence of his Friends, may have a threefold reference; or, at leaſt, he referreth to ſome one of theſe three things.

Firſt, To the ſpeech of Zophar, at the third verſe of the eleventh Chapter, who had thus reproved Job, Should thy lyes make men hold their peace? Here Job replyes, as if he had ſaid, You told me that it was uncomely, my lyes ſhould make men hold their peace; or that no man could hold his peace at my lyes; but ſurely you have ſpoken ſuch lyes (ſo he charges them in the verſe foregoing) and have talked ſo much at random, that it would very well become you to hold your peace, and to be as mute as fiſhes: to ſpeak no more, will be your beſt Rhetorick; or rather, you will ſpeak moſt when you ſpeak no more; your ſilence will be more perſwaſive then your ſpeech hath been.

Secondly, This deſire of perpetual ſilence, may have reference to that ſeven dayes ſilence which we read of in the ſecond Chapter of this Book; when Job's Friends came to mourn with him, and to comfort him; the Text ſaith, that They ſat down ſeven dayes, and no man ſpake a word to him. Now ſaith Job, Ye held your peace a great while when you came to me; truly it had been very well for me if you had altogether held your peace; and I would you would now remember your firſt poſture, and as you began with ſilence, ſo conclude: ſit and ſay nothing. O that you would altogether hold your peace.

Thirdly, We may refer it to the whole matter of the conteſt between him and his Friends: As if he had ſaid, Foraſmuch as by all that you have ſpoken, you have not at all abated my pain, nor reſolved my doubts, nor comforted my ſpirit, nor done me any good, I wiſh you would give over ſpeaking. Seeing your ſpeech is ſo fruitleſs, I wiſh you would be ſpeechleſs: O that you would altogether hold your peace: And whereas you have gained no reputation of wiſdom by ſpeaking, you may by forbearing to ſpeak, as it follows in the Text,

And it ſhould be your wiſdom.] Properly there is no wiſdom in ſilence. Silence is a privative, at leaſt a negative. As dumbneſs is a total, ſo ſilence is a temporary privation of ſpeech: But wiſdom is a poſitive, and among habits the moſt excellent habit. He that is really a fool, is a fool though ſilent; he is not wiſe, becauſe he hides his folly. So that, when Job ſaith, It ſhould be your wiſdom, his meaning is, this would be your wiſeſt courſe; of the two you would ſhew your ſelves wiſer men by ſilence, then by talking at ſuch a rate of indiſcretion as ſome of you have done. Silence may be the covering of folly; but no ſilence can be the cure of it; or ſilence may cauſe others to think we are wiſe; but it cannot make any man wiſe. (Prov. 17. 28.) Solomon giveth us that rule, Even a fool, when he holdeth his peace, is counted wiſe; he doth not ſay he is wiſe; but he is counted ſo: he is counted wiſe, becauſe he hath this happineſs, not to diſcover his want of wiſdom. Yet further, as a fool may gain the reputation of that wiſdom, which he hath not, if he be but wiſe enough to hold his peace; ſo a wiſe man may ſhew the wiſdom which he hath by holding his peace, when ſpeaking is unſeaſonable, or when himſelf may learn by giving others, who are wiſer and more able then himſelf, the greater liberty of ſpeaking. It is a good piece of learning to learn not to ſpeak, as well as to ſpeak well: Nature teaches us to ſpeak; Art teaches us to ſpeak well; but Vertue and Grace teach us not to ſpeak. A wiſe man will be ſilent as a learner, that he may be fitted to ſpeak as a Teacher. The Apoſtles Canon concerning women, hath its uſe in reſpect of many men, Let them learn in ſilence, 1 Tim. 2. 11.

Atque utinam taceretis, ut putaremini eſſe ſapientes. Vulg.

Diſcamus prius non loqui, ut poſt modum ad loquendum os reſeramus, & poſt multum ſilentium ex diſcipulis efficiamur magiſtri. Hieron in 3. cap. Eccleſ.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, That in ſome caſes it is wiſdom to be ſilent.

Solomon tells us (Eccleſ. 3. 9.) that there is a ſeaſon for ſilence, Every thing is beautiful in his ſeaſon; ſo is ſilence, and ſo is ſpeech. It is a great part of prudence to know when to be ſilent, and when to ſpeak. There is (ſaith he) a time to keep ſilence, and a time to ſpeak: When it is a time to ſpeak, ſilence is our folly; and when it is a time to keep ſilence, ſpeaking is our folly. There are ſeven ſpecial ſeaſons of ſpeaking, and ſeven of ſilence.

The ſeven ſeaſons of ſpeaking are theſe,

Firſt, (Which is a general) When by ſpeaking we may bring glory to God, and do good to our brethren.

Secondly, When we have an opportunity to vindicate the honour and truth of God.

Thirdly, When we may relieve the credit of a brother that is wronged.

Fourthly, When by ſpeaking, we may inſtruct or direct thoſe that are ignorant.

Fifthly, When we may comfort and ſupport thoſe that are weak.

Sixthly, When we may reſolve and ſettle thoſe that are in doubt.

Seventhly, When we may duly reprove and convince thoſe that do evil.

At ſuch times as theſe we have a ſeaſon to ſpeak; and then it is our ſin, or our weakneſs, nothing at all of wiſdom, to be ſilent.

There are alſo ſeven ſpecial ſeaſons of ſilence, and then it is our wiſdom not to ſpeak. Such as theſe, Firſt, It is never in ſeaſon to ſpeak, till we have a call. 'Tis as impertinent to be buſie with our tongues, as with our hands, in other mens matters, unleſs they, or the providence of God, or our preſent duty, beſpeaks us.

Secondly, It is a ſeaſon to be ſilent, when we are not rightly informed in or about the ſtate of the matter or queſtion, to which we muſt ſpeak: Such ſhall do well to ſpeak their own doubts, but they are unfit to give others reſolution. He muſt be a maſter of the queſtion, who makes a determination upon it: And until he hath the compaſs of it in himſelf, he can never draw it to a good concluſion.

Thirdly, When we know the ſtate of a queſtion, yet we muſt not ſpeak without a ſutable preparation, either actual, or habitual: Be not raſh to utter a thing before God or man. The Apoſtle James bids us be ſwift to hear, and ſlow to ſpeak; yet we muſt not hear till we are prepared, then much leſs may we ſpeak.

Fourthly, It is a ſeaſon to be ſilent, when what we ſpeak is like to be a ſnare unto our ſelves. When they hate him that rebuketh in the gate, and abhor him that ſpeaketh uprightly, when they afflict the juſt, and turn aſide the poor in the gate (Amos 5. 10, 12.) Then (verſ. 13.) the prudent ſhall keep ſilence, for it is an evil time. But muſt not evil times, or the worſt evils of worſt times be ſpoken againſt, leſt we bring our ſelves into an evil ſnare? Muſt we never ſpeak, but when we are ſure to come off well, and ſave our skins? Yes, at our peril we muſt ſpeak, when there is greateſt peril: So did the ancient Prophets; ſo did the holy Apoſtles: Yet (though another interpretation may be given of that place in the Prophet, making the ſilence of the prudent in evil times to be their acquieſcence in the evils of puniſhment, which God brings; not their quietneſs with the evils of ſin, which men commit: And ſo their ſilence is oppoſed to murmuring againſt God; not to their ſpeaking againſt, or reproof of men) yet (I ſay) we may be ſilent from reproving men. Firſt, When there is no probability, that the evil which we bring our ſelves into, ſhall be ballanced with any proportionable good to others. Secondly, when thoſe ſins have been ſufficiently witneſſed againſt already; ſo that men ſin, not for want of light, but directly againſt it. In ſuch a time as this, we have no obligation to run upon our own danger. That's the rule of Chriſt (Matth. 7. 6.) Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither caſt ye your pearls before ſwine, leſt they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rent you. Where we ſee, as Chriſt will not have his Word offered ſome ſort of obſtinate hardened ſinners (ſhadowed under the names of ſwine and dogs) leſt they ſhould abuſe it; ſo leſt they ſhould abuſe thoſe that bring it. He provides, as for the honour of the Goſpel; ſo for the ſafety of thoſe who publiſh the Goſpel.

Fifthly, As it is a ſeaſon for ſilence, when the paſſions and corruptions of others are up; ſo when our own paſſions or corruptions are up. It had been better for meek Moſes to have held his peace, then to have ſpoken when the people provoked him to anger: for then he ſpake unadviſedly with his lips. Paſſion is an ill counſellor, and as bad a ſpeaker. A man is not fit to reprove, or ſpeak angerly, when he is angry. Storms at the tongue are never ſo ſeaſonable, as when there is a calm upon the heart: He was a wiſe man, who when he ſaw a man angry, would adviſe him, to ſay over all the letters of the Alphabet, before he ventured to put any two of them together, or ſpeak a word.

Sixthly, It is a ſeaſon for ſilence, when men are not capable of what we ſpeak. Words are loſt, not only upon a meer ſot, a fool, a madman, but upon ſuch as are indiſpoſed to hear them. Abigail ſaw it was no time to ſpeak to Nabal when he was drunken, and his heart merry with wine, Therefore ſhe told him nothing leſs, or more, till the morning light, 1 Sam. 25. 36. Chriſt tells his Diſciples (John 16. 12.) I have many things to ſay unto you, but you cannot bear them now. The now, was not ſeaſonable, therefore Chriſt was ſilent.

Seventhly, It is a ſeaſon of ſilence, when what we ſpeak may be a grief and burthen to the ſpirits of any, eſpecially of thoſe that are already afflicted. We muſt not make the green wound bleed afreſh; nor at any time ſpeak to the wounding of any whom God would have us heal. In theſe caſes it is our wiſdom to hold our peace.

There are three ſorts of peace-holders.

Firſt, There are ſome who hold their peace, and it is their cunning; they are ſilent upon deſign: It is not their wiſdom, but their craft; they will ſay nothing, leſt they ſhould diſcover themſelves.

Secondly, There are others who hold their peace, and it is their weakneſs: They ſpeak not, becauſe they cannot ſpeak, either what they ought, or as they ought.

Thirdly, There are thoſe who hold their peace, and it is their wiſdom; as in the caſes before alledged.

Secondly, Obſerve, Speech diſcovereth what we are.

Eloquere ut te videam.

When Job ſaith, if you would hold your peace, it ſhould be your wiſdom, it was an argument, that the ſpeech of theſe men had diſcover'd their folly: We may ſee what men are by what they ſpeak, as well as by what they do: And by theſe two, all of man, that is knowable by man, may be known. What we are in being, the ſame we are in acting and in ſpeaking, if we act or ſpeak our ſelves. Man is made as viſible by what he ſpeaks, as what he ſpeaks is audible. Speech is the image of the ſoul, or the looking-glaſs of the mind. As we may ſee our faces in a glaſs; ſo others may ſee the face or repreſentation of our ſpirits upon our ſpeech. The faſhion of the body ſhines by reflexion in the glaſs; and the form and frame of our hearts is reflected from our lips. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaks: And as we take veſſels, or glaſſes, and knock upon them, that by the ſound we may perceive whether they be whole or crackt; ſo the ſound which we make diſcovers whether we be crackt or ſound: The crack in the glaſs would not be ſeen eaſily, if it were not heard; and many a mans folly and ignorance would not appear, could he but keep his own counſel.

Oratio eſt imago vel ſpeculum animi: ut vir eſt, ita ejus oratio.

Job, having laboured to ſpeak his Friends into ſilence; now labours to gain audience whilſt himſelf ſpeaks.

Verſe 6. Hear now my reaſoning, and hearken to the pleadings of my lips.

Both the parts of the verſe are of one interpretation, only the ſence is heightened in the latter.

Hear now my reaſoning.] The word which we tranſlate reaſoning, ſignifies alſo, reproof, redargution, correption, or conviction.

יכח Correptionem, confutationem, reprehenſionẽ, objurgationẽ denotat, ut apud Græcos ἔλεγχος. Non imperiosè jubet ſed vehemẽter optat. Pined.

We may take it for any diſcourſe by way of argument, wherewith a man doth either defend what himſelf, or reprove what others have done or ſpoken.

The form of ſpeech is imperative, or by way of command; yet we are not to take it, as if Job, in a Lordly tone, impoſed ſilence upon his Friends: Though his language was Imperative, yet his ſpirit was not Imperious. His words carry a vehemency in counſel; not the authority of a command: As if he had ſaid, O that I could obtain thus much favour from you, that, forbearing a while to ſay any more, you would now hear what I have to ſay.

And hearken to the pleadings of my lips.

To hearken, is more then to hear; for it imports a man purpoſely ſetting himſelf in a poſture to hear, or taking pains to hear; we may ſee the attention of the mind in the compoſedneſs of the body. He that hearkens puts himſelf into a learning frame. Careleſs behaviour ſhews a careleſs hearer. The word here uſed, notes mind and body in a readineſs to catch any thing that is ſpoken; or the attention and intention of the ear and heart together.

קשב Notat geſtũ diligentèr auſcultãtis: plus valet quam שמע ſc. non ſolũ attendere, ſed intendere animum.

To the pleadings of my lips.] Or, To the chiding of my lips: As if he had ſaid, I muſt deal ſharply, ſeverely and plainly with you; I muſt ſpeak home, and tell you your own. Some conceive that Job uſeth this word, to meet with the conception of his Friends concerning what he had ſpoken. Come (ſaith he) I know you think I have been too ſharp all this while; that I have been rather chiding then diſputing; well, if you have that opinion of my former diſcourſe, let it be ſo; now come on, hear my chidings once more; hearken to my earneſt pleadings. Or (as others) to that Apologetical narration, which I make for my ſelf.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, It is the duty of a man to make defence for himſelf, and to apologize in his own cauſe.

He that is innocent muſt not let his integrity lye ſtained, or blotted, and not ſtir his tongue to vindicate and diſaſperſe it. It is a duty to ſtand up for one another who is wronged, much more for our ſelves, we being nearer to our ſelves then to any other.

Secondly, It becomes us, not only to hear, but diligently to hearken unto them, who deſire to ſet themſelves right in our thoughts.

Some ears thirſt for ſlanders, and can greedily drink in an ill report of their brethren, yet, will not have the patience to hear their defence. 'Tis hard to poſſeſs thoſe with the truth of a mans cauſe, who are prepoſſeſſed with an ill opinion of him. Love thinks no evil of others, and is not willing to hear it. Juſtice thinks no evil of others, till it hath heard it; and concludes no evil of others till it hath heard them. As the Judge muſt hear what the witneſs can ſay againſt the party accuſed; ſo what the party accuſed can ſay for himſelf: In this ſence, that of the Apoſtle James ſhould obtain with us; Be ſwift to hear, ſlow to ſpeak, and ſlow to wrath, Jam. 1. 19. We ſhould be more forward to hear what a man can plead in his own juſtification, then we are to ſpeak to his condemnation; we ſhould be more forward to hear him, then to be wroth and angry with him.

Thirdly, Man accounts it a diſhonour, if he be not heard and hearkened to when he ſpeaks.

Not to hear a mans words, is within a degree, as diſgraceful, as to give him diſgraceful words. 'Tis ill when we only give another the hearing, who ſpeaks the truth; but it is worſe, when we will not ſo much as give him a hearing. Some hear much, and do not regard it; others regard ſo little, that they do not hear; either of theſe is a ſleight put upon man. Now if it be a diſhonour to man, to be ſlighted when he ſpeaks; what a diſhonour do they put upon God, who ſlight what he ſpeaks? How often (as Job here with his Friends) doth God plead with man for audience? (Pſal. 81. 8.) Hear, O my people, and I will teſtifie unto thee; O Iſrael, if thou wilt hearken unto me. How often did he ſend his Prophets, with, Hear now the word of the Lord? And when after theſe, his own and his Prophets wooings for attention to the words of his counſel and command, he found the people ſtopping their ears, and refuſing to hear, how doth he again open his mouth in wrath, and thunder out words of curſing and conſumption, which whether they would hear, or whether they would forbear, they muſt both ſee and feel. Neither God nor man can bear it, to ſpeak and not be heard. Hear now my reaſoning (ſaith Job) and hearken to the pleadings of my lips.

Job having made his preface, and called for attention, enters upon the matter of his reproof.

Verſe 7. Will ye ſpeak wickedly for God? and talk deceitfully for him?

In this, and the next verſe, Job doubleth his words; and that he might make them hear twice, he ſpeaks the ſame thing more then once. Will ye ſpeak wickedly for God? is the ſame with, and talk deceitfully for him. Will ye accept his perſon? is the ſame with, Will ye contend for God? In the heat of his diſcourſe, he doth not only propoſe, but preſs; not only ſpeak, but repeat what he had to ſay over and over. Will ye ſpeak wickedly for God? and talk deceitfully for him? When we earneſtly oppoſe what another ſaith or doth, we ſay, Will ye, will ye?

Jam incipit dictã ſociorum refutare. Merc. הלאל תדברו

Numquid non coram Deo loquamini, & ante conſpectū ejus proferetis dolum?

Will ye ſpeak wickedly for God?] The letter is, Will ye ſpeak iniquity for God? There is a threefold reading of that clauſe, Will ye ſpeak wickedly? Firſt, Of God? Secondly, To God? Thirdly, For God? Mr. Broughton takes the firſt, Will ye ſpeak unright of the Almighty? Wee the laſt, Will ye ſpeak wickedly for God? The ſence comes near to one in all three. The Septuagint render it as an argument why they ſhould take heed what they ſpake, becauſe of the perſon before whom they ſpake. Do you not ſpeak before God? and will ye ſpeak deceitfully in his preſence? Do you not know where you are? Remember that you are in Gods preſence, he ſees, and he hears you: Do you think that none hears you, but I that am a poor creature in pain and miſery? The great God of Heaven and earth heareth you. Do you not ſpeak before God? and if you believe you do, will you ſpeak deceitfully? This ſence is very ſavoury, uſeful and cloſe; but this reading is too wide for the Original text: Which though it may bear ſuch an expoſition, yet it cannot bear ſuch a tranſlation.

Dum ejus defenditis juſtitiam me accuſatis ut impiū: itane Dei cauſa agenda ut ejus gratia mihi ſitis iniqui? Merc.

The words are clearer according unto our reading, Will ye ſpeak wickedly for God? That is, Will you ſtrain the truth for his ſake? Will ye reproach me under pretence of honouring God? Job's Friends had great thoughts of God, doubtleſs they had; yet, their miſtake was great, when, to ſet up the glory of God, they darkened the innocency of man: In ſpeaking thus, they ſpake wickedly for God. As if Job had ſaid, Speak righteouſly for God as much as you will; ſo I deſire to ſpeak for God as much as you; but you are ſo tranſported in defending the righteouſneſs of God, that you care not how you wrong me: The cauſe of God needs no ſuch Advocates: He will never thank you for condemning me, to juſtifie his dealings with me: He is righteous in afflicting me; and I am not wicked becauſe afflicted.

> Hence Note, Firſt, That a good cauſe may be ill mannaged; and we may exceed our duty, while we are doing it.

There is no greater duty then to ſpeak for God; yet it is poſſible to ſpeak ſinfully when we ſpeak for God. That zeal is without true knowledge, which obſcures one truth, while it is clearing up another.

> Secondly, Obſerve, We muſt take heed we break not the rules of juſtice and charity to man, while we maintain the juſtice or truth of God.

Numquid Deus indiget veſtro mendaci? Vulg.

Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God, is the firſt and great Commandment; and the ſecond is like unto it, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf: We cannot expreſs our love to God, while we ſhut out love to man. God hath no delight in ſuch love: And that doctrine which diſ-joyns the love of God and man, is a lye for God. The Vulgar reads the Text clearly to that ſence, though with too much variation from the Original, What? hath God need of your lye? The truth of God hath no need of our lye againſt man: We may beſpeak many at this day, who undertake the Cauſe of God, or at leaſt pretend they do, What? hath God need of your ſlanders, or of your paſſions? hath God any need of your anger, of your revilings, wrath? The wrath of man works not the righteouſneſs of God. It is a diſhonour unto God to be helped thus. As we muſt not do evil, that good may come to our ſelves; ſo we muſt not do evil, that good may come to God, Rom. 3. 8. The Apoſtle rejects the very thought of ſuch a deſign, with a kind of horror and deteſtation; for he had no ſooner repeated that impudent and blaſphemous ſlander (ſome affirm that we ſay, Let us do evil, that good may come) but preſently he blaſts both it and them, with this dreadful judgment, Whoſe damnation is juſt: If they deſerved damnation, who put ſuch an opinion upon the Apoſtles, what do they who practice it? They who ſuppoſe themſelves ſuch skilful Alchymiſts, in drawing good out of evil, that (to try their skill) they will do evil, hoping to draw good out of it, ſhall find at laſt, that they have drawn damnation upon themſelves by that tryal. But ſome may object, Doth not the Apoſtle confeſs at the ſeventh verſe, that he had done evil for that end; and that having attained a good end, he thought himſelf excuſed for the evil of his way: If the truth of God hath more abounded through my lye, unto his glory, why yet am I judged as a ſinner? It ſeems then the Apoſtle had told lyes for the upholding of truth; and that the truth of God had abounded to the glory of God through his lyes. I anſwer, The Apoſtle doth not ſpeak thoſe words in his own perſon, or in the perſon of a godly man, but in the perſon of a profane Objector, whom he confuteth: As if he had ſaid, Some man poſſibly may plead thus for his ſin; The truth of God hath gained by my lye; and if ſo, why am I judged as a ſinner? They are ſhining ſins indeed, which cauſe the glory of God to ſhine more bright. Can I be a looſer where God gains? Surely I cannot. I may rather encourage my ſelf to do evil (as we (ſaith the Apoſtle) are alſo affirmed to ſay) that good may come. So then the Apoſtle doth but repeat and refute what ſome ſaid for themſelves, and of the Apoſtles; he doth not in the leaſt affirm it of himſelf. God often brings good out of the worſt of evils; but that's no thank to thoſe who commit the evil. Evil can produce nothing naturally but evil; it is a Divine power and wiſdom which overmaſters it unto good. The way which God hath taught us to glorifie him by, is to do that which is good, and to ſpeak the truth; and though he can raiſe glory to himſelf out of the evil which we do, and out of the lyes which we publiſh; yet he never calls for our evil, or for our lye, to raiſe his glory. The Pſalmiſt aſſures us (Pſal. 16. 2.) My goodneſs extendeth not to thee: And if God hath no need of our goodneſs, ſurely he hath no need of our evil: He wants not our help, though he beſpeaks it, and may command it: Why then ſhould any man ſpeak wickedly for God?

And talk deceitfully for him? Or, Talk deceit for him.

Piger dicitur איש רמיה Quia decipitur ipſe ſpe & fruſtrantur qui ei quicquam committunt. Coc.

The ſence is the ſame as before. The word which we tranſlate deceit, is a Noun, and ſignifieth hope fruſtrated, or the deceiving of expectation. A Bow which carries the Arrow falſe, is thus expreſt, a deceitful bow, becauſe it fruſtrates the Archers aim, ſending the Arrow beſide, or above the mark. It ſignifies alſo a man that is ſlow of foot, dull, and lazy, a man of a flegmatick and unactive ſpirit: A ſlothful man is a deceiver, he deceiveth himſelf, and he deceiveth thoſe that imploy and ſet him a work: He doth his own buſineſs but by halves; and if any truſt him, he will deceive them wholly.

Job giveth yet a further charge upon his Friends, in the expoſtulation of the next verſe.

Verſe 8. Will ye accept his perſon? Will ye contend for God?

נשא In hac phraſi, non tollendi ſed accipiendi notionem habet. Naſa ſuſtinere, ſuſtentare, eo quod patroni clientum perſonam quodāmodo ſuſtentant. Bold. Faciem Dei accipere eſt perſonā Dei agere & repreſentare & ejus vice ac munere judicandi fungi. Philip. Fresb.

Will ye accept his perſon?] There is a different reading of theſe words. Some thus. Will ye put your ſelves into the room or place of God? Will ye perſonate God? ſo the word bears; ſignifying, as to accept, ſo to ſuſtain or repreſent another perſon. Will you take upon you the place of God, or ſtand in his ſtead? Will ye be as Gods Deputies and Vicegerents, as if you had commiſſion under the great Seal of Heaven, to deal thus with me? Or will ye take the office of God upon you, to judge the heart, and of the ſecrets which are lodged there? You judge me an hypocrite; let me profeſs what I will of my own integrity, let me produce the faireſt proofs of my uprightneſs, yet you judge me an hypocrite, and conclude me a wicked man: Will ye thus take the ſole priviledge of God upon you, and judge my heart?

> Hence obſerve, They that take upon them to judge the heart, or to judge of that which doth not appear, take upon themſelves the place of God.

The heart is deceitful above all things, and deſperately wicked, who can know it? (Jer. 17. 9.) Man cannot know his own heart, much leſs can he know the heart of another man. God takes that honour to himſelf (verſ. 10.) I the Lord ſearch the heart. Only he that is inviſible, is able to ſee into that which is inviſible. Chriſt gives a rule for judgment: Judge not according to the appearance (John 7. 24.) yet we muſt not judge of that which doth not appear; we muſt ſearch before we judge, becauſe many things are not, either in regard of good or evil, as they appear; but if nothing appear after ſearching, we muſt ſuſpend our judgment. That which doth not appear, muſt be left to the judgment of God, at his appearing; ſo the Apoſtle directs (1 Cor. 4. 5.) Judge nothing before the time: What is the time? The next words ſhew it, Till the Lord come; that is, till he come to judgment. But muſt we reſerve all judiciary proceedings to that day? No, Magiſtrates muſt do juſtice; and therefore they muſt judge every day. His meaning ing then is, judge nothing which doth not appear: He takes not away civil judgment upon proof (as ſome have abuſed that Text) but only that judgment which hath no proof; as the Apoſtle explains himſelf in the ſequel of that dehortation. Judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and will make manifeſt the counſels of the heart. As if he had ſaid, That kind of judgment you muſt refer to the day of judgment; you muſt not judge of things hidden in darkneſs, or of the heart of man; ye may judge the works of men, or whatſoever ſhews it ſelf in the open light.

We read, Will ye accept his perſon? Here two things are to be opened: Firſt, What it is to accept a perſon. Secondly, In what ſence the Friends of Job might be ſaid to accept the perſon of God; or how his perſon may be ſaid to be accepted.

The letter of the Original is, Will ye accept, or lift up his face? This phraſe, of lifting up the face, hath a threefold different uſe in Scripture.

Firſt, God is ſaid to lift up his own face; and that intimates favour and kindneſs to man (Numb. 6.26.) The Lord lift up his countenance (or face) upon thee, and give thee peace: That is, the Lord bleſs thee, and do thee good.

Secondly, Man is ſaid to lift up his own face; and that noteth boldneſs and confidence, (Job 11. 15.) Then ſhalt thou lift up thy face without ſpot: That is, thou ſhalt not be afraid to look any man in the face.

Thirdly, Man is ſaid to lift up the face of another; either the face of another man, or (as here) of God himſelf: and this ſignifies alwayes extraordinary favour; ſometimes illegal favour. (Gen. 32. 20.) Jacob ſends a preſent unto Eſau, and ſaith, Peradventure he will accept, or lift up my face: So (Deut. 28. 50.) the Lord threateneth his ancient people, that he would ſend ſuch enemies among them, as ſhould not regard the perſon (ſo we tranſlate) or not lift up the face of the old: An old man full of gray hairs, and venerable gravity, ſhall have no more regard then a child, or a beardleſs boy. The honourable man, is the man eminent in counſel, or whoſe face is lifted up (Iſa. 3. 3.) The Lord threatned that he would make the Prieſts contemptible, becauſe they had been partial in the Law, or becauſe they had accepted faces in, or againſt the Law (Mal. 2. 9.) that is, becauſe they had done, or required ſuch and ſuch things to be done; not becauſe the Law required them, or becauſe they ſaw it was the will of God in the Law, but becauſe they ſaw it was for their own advantage and convenience: They perverted the Law, both in opinion and practice, to pinch or favour men as they pleaſed. 'Tis ſaid of the jealous man (Prov. 6. 35.) that he will not regard (or not accept the face of) any ranſom; that is, he will not be moved by any gift, to ſpare him that hath diſhonoured his bed.

Tranſfertur ad res inanimatas ut cum quis rē aliquā revereri & permagni æſtimare videtur, non tam rei dignitate, quam peculiari aliqua ratione, aut ſpe lucri permotus. Pined.

More diſtinctly, To accept a perſon, conſiſts in theſe two things. Firſt, When to thoſe who are like, we give an unlike judgment. Secondly, When to thoſe who are unlike, we give a like judgment: To do this, is to be partial, and to accept perſons in judgment. Liberality or bounty is not obliged to give like to thoſe who are like; but Juſtice is. We may give as we will; but we muſt judge by a rule. God elects according to what is in himſelf; but he judges according to what is in us, or according to what we have done. When Jacob and Eſau were yet unborn, neither having done good or evil, God loved Jacob, and hated Eſau: This was not accepting of perſons, becauſe the Lord did this, not as a Judge, but as an Elector; ſo the Apoſtle ſtates it (Rom. 9. 11, 12, 13.) He loved the one, and hated the other, though both were alike, That his purpoſe, according to election, might ſtand, not of works, but of him that calleth. Thus God elects perſons; but he is no reſpecter, or accepter of perſons; for, In every Nation he that feareth God, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted with him, Acts 10. 34. God will not ask any man what countrey-man he is, or of what kindred he is, before he accepts him; For the Scripture ſaith, whoſoever believeth on him ſhall not be aſhamed, for there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the ſame Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him (Rom. 10. 11, 12.)

Proſopolepſia definitur, ſiquis paribus imparia, vel imparibus paria tribuat. Coc.

But if this be to accept perſons, how could Job charge his Friends with accepting the perſon of God?

For the clearing of this Query, I ſhall ſhew firſt negatively, how we are not to underſtand it; and then affirmatively, how we are.

Firſt thus, We are not to underſtand it, as if Job's Friends imagined that God had need of their favour in his cauſe; The uſual reaſon, why the perſons of men are accepted, is, becauſe their cauſe cannot bear them out; he that hath a good cauſe never deſires to have the ſentence carried by any byaſs to his perſon; but he that diſtruſts his cauſe, uſeth all the means he can, he turns every ſtone to ingratiate his perſon, or, as we ſay, to curry favour with the Judge. Job and his Friends knew well enough, that (as the Apoſtle affirms out of the Pſalm, Rom. 3. 4.) God muſt be juſtified in his ſayings, and overcome when he either judgeth, or is judged: The juſtice of his cauſe will carry him out againſt all men, Yea every mouth muſt be ſtopped, and all the world become guilty before God.

Secondly, As God needs not any reſpect or favour to his perſon from the creature; ſo it's impoſſible that God ſhould receive more reſpect or honour from the creature then doth belong to his perſon: We may quickly out-act our reſpects to the beſt of men, and offer them more then they are fit to receive: but God is infinitely exalted above all our praiſes, and is fit to receive more then we can offer. The Pſalmiſt indeed ſaith, that the Iſraelites flattered God: When he ſlew them, then they ſought him, and they returned and enquired early after God: nevertheleſs they did flatter him with their mouth, and they lyed unto him with their tongues, (Pſal. 78. 36.) But could they flatter God? Man is flattered when that is aſcribed to him which he hath not; or when he is applauded for what he hath, beyond the worth of it. God cannot be flattered thus: He is as much beyond flatterings, as he is beyond ſufferings. The Jews, then, are ſaid to flatter God, not becauſe they applauded him by fair ſpeeches more then was his due; but becauſe by fair ſpeeches they hoped to prevent what themſelves did deſerve; or they flattered God with their own promiſes, not with his praiſes. They ſinned againſt him, and he ſlew them; and when the ſword found them, they ſought God, they creep'd to him, and fawn'd upon him, they came as with ropes about their necks, confeſſing they were worthy to dye, yet humbly begging for life; and if God would but ſheath his ſword, and ſpare them, O what manner of men would they be in all holy converſation and godlineſs. Thus they flattered God with their mouth, while their hearts were not right: They made great ſhews of repentance and turning to God; but they meant no ſuch thing: this was their flattery; neither can the Lord be flattered any other way. And as he cannot be flattered by over-praiſing him, ſo his perſon cannot be accepted by over-reſpecting him.

So then the meaning of Job, in charging his Friends with accepting the perſon of God, is only this, that he conceived his Friends ſo zealous in lifting up the glory of God, that they cared not under what temptations and diſadvantages they left him poor man; they did not attend the law of love and pity towards him, in conjunction with the law of love and honour towards God. As if he had ſaid, You ſee me miſerable, and you know God is juſt (I know he is ſo too:) Hence you infer, God being juſt, he would never puniſh me thus, if I were not unjuſt. Thus to advance the righteouſneſs of God, you ſuſpect me of wickedneſs; and to maintain his truth, you charge me with falſeneſs of heart, and ſecret hypocriſie: The former is your duty, but the latter is your ſin; will ye thus reject my perſon, that ye may accept his?

Hence obſerve, Firſt, That to accept perſons in judgment croſſeth the rule of juſtice.

'Tis injuſtice to accept the perſon of God (in the ſence explained) how much more to accept the perſons of men? The Apoſtle profeſſeth ſtrongly, (2 Cor. 5. 16.) Henceforth know we no man after the fleſh; yea though we have known Chriſt after the fleſh, yet now henceforth know we him no more; that is, we do not reſpect him for any fleſhly conſideration. That was once our error, we expected a Chriſt in outward pomp, and worldly ſplendor; we looked for a Chriſt in robes of royalty, and in the majeſtick ſtate of earthly Princes; we were offended at his meanneſs and poverty, becauſe we ſaw no form nor beauty in him; but we have learned to think and judge otherwiſe of Chriſt. Now, if it be a ſin, or beſides our duty, to reſpect Chriſt after the fleſh, how much more any Chriſtian? We may argue ſo here. If it be a ſin to accept the perſon of God, or by inclining to him to wrong men, how much more to accept the perſon of man, or by inclining to one man to wrong another. Ye ſhall do no unrighteouſneſs in judgment: Thou ſhalt not reſpect the perſon of the poor, nor honour the perſon of the mighty (Lev. 19. 15.) As if he had ſaid, ye cannot do that which is right in judgment, if ye reſpect the perſon of any man, high or low, rich or poor: Some, poſſibly, may reſpect the perſon of the poor (though uſually reſpect of perſon is given to the rich) but the Law of God is ſo exact in this point, that if a poor man (or a man in forma pauperis) contend with, and ſue him that is rich, yet, thou ſhalt not do the rich man wrong, and ſay he is rich, he can bear it well enough; no, but if his cauſe be right, though his adverſary be poor, let the rich man have his due. Magiſtrates are not called to do acts of charity, but of juſtice. Laws are made without reſpect of perſons; but they are ſeldome executed without reſpect of perſons. While the Law is moulding and framing, the Legiſlators know not what particular perſons ſhall fall under it; therefore it is made without partiality or reſpect of perſons. But the Judge too often remembers and ſtudies the perſon as much or more then the Law: His friend, or his kinſman is in the cauſe; ſuch a man recommends the buſineſs to him, who hath done him a courteſie, or may do it hereafter: Such a great man is concerned in it, who may do him an ill turn, or make an unpleaſing repreſentation of him at Court, and in the Princes ear. Theſe conſiderations corrupt the Judge, and turn him aſide in judgment.

Secondly, Obſerve, We accept the perſon of God, when under the title of doing him right, we wrong man.

Some are zealous for God to the hurt of their brethren: And while they can ſuppoſe themſelves acting for God, they care not what they act againſt man. Such a ſpirit the Prophet deſcribes (Iſa. 66. 5.) Your brethren that hated you, that caſt you out for my names ſake, ſaid, Let the Lord be glorified: As if he had ſaid, while you ſhew hatred towards your brethren, you ſay it is in love to God; while you caſt their perſons out of your ſociety, you ſay it is for the Name of God: and that the Lord (ſay you) may be glorified, we muſt not ſpare any man, brother, or friend, one or other. So (Jer. 50. 7.) All that found them have devoured them (he ſpeaks of thoſe that went to ſeek God with their faces towards Zion, who ſought to worſhip God in the exacteſt manner) and their adverſaries. ſaid, we offend not: (They thought they might eat up a man, with as little offence to God or man, as to their own ſtomachs, when they had this to ſay for it.) Becauſe they have ſinned againſt the Lord, the habitation of juſtice, even the Lord, the hope of their fathers. Theſe men have ſinned againſt God, and we hope we muſt not bear with ſuch: If we did not find them in an error, did they not wrong God and his truth, we would not do thus; but we offend not, for they have ſinned againſt the Lord, the habitation of juſtice, even the Lord, the hope of their fathers: They concluded they might uſe them as they liſt, when they had this plea, it is for the Lord. That's the reaſon of Chriſts premonition (John 16. 2.) They ſhall caſt you out of the Synagogues; yea, the time cometh, that whoſoever killeth you will think that he doth God ſervice. 'Tis poſſible for men to ſeem inflamed with a zeal for God, while they put their brethren into flames.

And as this is true in regard of the perſons of men, ſo of their doctrine: Some ſay, God is honoured by ſuch an opinion, and therefore it muſt needs be right. Papiſts maintain the doctrine of free-will, and tell us it is that God may be glorified; how elſe (ſay they) can we anſwer thoſe exhortations and commands to repent and obey his voice, if man have not free-will, or a power to obey? Were it not a mock if God ſhould bid man do that which he cannot do? Therefore that the honour of God may not be ſtained, the will of man muſt be advanced.

Arminians hold univerſal redemption, or that Chriſt died equally for all men. Now as the Papiſts pretend zeal for God in maintaining free-will, leſt he ſhould ſeem to mock in his commands; ſo theſe maintain univerſal redemption, leſt God ſhould ſeem to mock in his promiſes: For, ſay they, God offers grace and mercy, forgiveneſs of ſins and life eternal unto all; hence they argue, if Chriſt dyed not for all, he doth but delude us in making theſe offers: Thus out of a reſpect to the perſon of God, they deſtroy the truths of God. For the truth is, man hath no free-will (before converſion) either to obey the commands of God, or to believe his promiſes; and yet the Lord in unſpeakable wiſdom and juſtice, yea and in mercy too, commands him to obey, and preſents him promiſes to believe. Theſe adminiſtrations of God are not arguments of mans ability, but of his duty; and while God in them ſhews man his duty, he conveys an ability: he doth not bid a perſon unconverted obey and believe, becauſe he hath an inherent power to do them; but becauſe out of his free love and grace in Chriſt he intends to give him that power. And therefore the expedient for the removing of the former difficulties, is not to be found in the free-will of man, but in the free-grace of God: who though he requires what we are not able to do, yet enables us to do what he requires. If we ſeek other helps to eaſe us of theſe ſcruples, we ſhall be convinced at laſt, to have overthrown the truth of God, while we would be thought zealous for his honour: And that is the ſin of accepting the perſon of God, whom we can never honour enough, either in his perſon, works, or truths. Will ye accept his perſon?

Will ye contend for God?

It is not a fault, but a duty, to contend for God; to contend for God with our tongues, and to contend for God with our hands (Jude 5. 23.) Meroz was curſed, becauſe they came not to the help of the Lord againſt the mighty. Therefore when he ſaith, Will ye contend for God? He doth not blame them for the matter, their taking Gods part; but for the manner in which they did it. As if he had ſaid, If you will ingage as patrons of Gods cauſe, and contend for him, you muſt do it ſo as becomes the cauſe of God; you muſt not, to gratifie God, oppreſs the pooreſt man.

Secondly, We may give this ſence, Do ye contend for God? That is, do ye think God cannot maintain his own cauſe without you? When Gideon had deſtroyed the Altar of Baal, and Joaſh his father defended the action, Joaſh ſaith, Will ye plead for Baal? will ye ſave him? if he be a God, let him plead for himſelf, becauſe one hath caſt down his altar (Judg. 6. 25.) You need not trouble your ſelves, for if Baal be a God, he will do well enough; he will ſet himſelf right, and maintain his own divinity. In that ſence alſo Job might here ſpeak to his Friends, Will ye contend for God? Do you think he is Baal, one that cannot ſave himſelf, and manage his own cauſe? Doth he need you? He being the true God will plead for himſelf: therefore hold your peace, and hear what I have to ſpeak. You have ſpoken wickedly for God, and talked deceitfully for him: You have ſo accepted his perſon, and contended for him, that he will give you no thank for your labours. Job yet proceedeth to give ſome further Arguments, why they ſhould forbear to ſpeak, and give him further audience.

VERS. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13.

Is it good that he ſhould ſearch you out? or as one man mocketh another, do you ſo mock him?

He will ſurely reprove you, if ye do ſecretly accept perſons.

Shall not his excellency make you afraid, and his dread fall upon you?

Your remembrances are like unto aſhes, and your bodies to bodies of clay.

Hold your peace, let me alone, that I may ſpeak, and let come on me what will.

JOB ſtill perſiſts preſſing his Friends to ſilence, and requiring audience for what he had to ſpeak. The ninth and tenth verſes are an appendix to, or an inlargement of his ſecond Argument, which began at the ſixth verſe. There he expoſtulates, Will you ſpeak wickedly for God? and talk deceitfully for him? Will ye accept his perſon? Will ye make ſuch adventures? and run ſuch hazzards as theſe? Here he diſſwades them from it. Is it good that he ſhould ſearch you out? (ver. 9.) if he do, you will have the worſt of it: for, he will ſurely reprove you, if ye do ſecretly accept perſons, verſ. 10. If you give wrong judgment for God, you ſhall not eſcape the juſt judgement of God.

His third argument is grounded upon the Majeſty and greatneſs of God, verſ. 11. Shall not his excellency make you afraid? &c.

His fourth, upon their frailty and weakneſs, verſ. 12. Your remembrances are like unto aſhes; and will you who are but duſt and aſhes ſpeak thus, not only before, but concerning the high and the holy God?

From all theſe premiſes, he draws the wiſh of the fifth verſe, O that you would altogether hold your peace, into a concluſive charge at the 13 verſe, Hold your peace, &c.

Verſ. 9. Is it good that he ſhould ſearch you out?

The ſenſe of this phraſe (is it good?) was given at the third verſe of the tenth chapter. Good is here put for profitable or advantageous.

Some refer it to God, and expound it as if he had ſaid, Do you think it will be profitable for God to ſeek after you, to draw you to his party, or to the patronage of his cauſe? Miſtake not your ſelves. God doth not want your help; he can maintain his cauſe, though he fee not you for his advocates, though he make not you of his counſel. But I paſs this as too ſtrained an interpretation.

Nũquid exiſtimatis utile Deo futurũ quærere & adſciſcere vos in ſuæ cauſæ patronos? Non bene cedet nobis ſi factũ veſtrũ diſcuſſerit & propius inſpexerit ac diligentius expenderit. Merc.

For Job intends this directly to his friends: and while he ſaith, is it good that he ſhould ſearch you out? his meaning is, it will be ill for you. It will be ſo far from your profit or benefit, from your eaſe or credit, that you will find it both your loſs and your ſhame, if once God come and ſearch you out. If God look more narrowly into this buſineſs, you will get nothing by it but a chiding, as is expreſſed in the next verſe, He will ſurely reprove you.

חקר Inveſtigare, ſcrutari.

The word ſignifies not only to ſearch diligently, but to ſearch judiciarily, or as a judge ſearcheth and tryeth a man or his cauſe. Job ſpeaks of himſelf under this language in the exerciſe of his Magiſtracy, (chap. 29.16.) The cauſe which I knew not, I ſearched out. If any, under the law, enticed their brethren to idolatry, ſaying, Let us ſerve other gods, Then (ſaith the Lord by Moſes, Deut. 13.14.) ſhalt thou enquire and make ſearch, and ask diligently, &c. Man ſearcheth what he doth not know; God knoweth all things, and yet he ſearcheth. He doth not ſearch to inform himſelf in what he knoweth not, but he ſearcheth to inform or to aſſure us that he doth know. David prayeth, ſearch me O Lord, and know my heart, (Pſal. 139.23.) yet he confeſſeth (verſ. 1.) O Lord, thou haſt ſearched me and known me; yea he knew God knew him without ſearching. There are no ſecrets to God: He knows by immediate intuition, not by diſcourſe or inquiſition.

So then, Job ſpeaks of God after the manner of men, who make enquiries that they may know, and ſearch that they may find.

But why would it not be good, or what hurt would it be to his friends, if God ſhould ſearch them out? I anſwer, Job ſuppoſed that his friends had not dealt fairly nor ſincerely with him; and though he could not find out the unevenneſs of their ſpirits towards him, yet God could: He ſaw perfectly that they did not move upon right principles, that there was more of anger and animoſity, then of zeal and charity in their diſcourſe; that they had a deſire rather to conquer him, then to comfort him; and that they were more buſie in judging his perſon, then in applying remedies to remove his grief. Now, when God upon the ſearch ſhould find out ſuch ill matter as this againſt them, could it be good to them? Surely ſuch a diſcovery as this could not gain them either reward or approbation. Is it good that he ſhould ſearch you out?

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, God is able to ſearch out and diſcern the hearts and ſecret wayes of all the children of men.

He knows not only what we do, but with what heart and for what ends we do it. His eyes (do not only ſee, but) conſider, his eye-lids (do not only behold, but) try the children of men, (Pſal. 11.4.) The eye-lids of man do not ſee at all, they only protect and fence the ſight of the eye: But to ſhew that God is all ſight, and all eye, his very eye-lids are ſaid to do more then ſee, to try the children of men. O Lord (ſaith David in the place lately cited) thou haſt ſearched me, and known me. Man ſearches man, and cannot know him, for, what man knoweth the things of a man, ſave the ſpirit of man that is in him? (1 Cor. 2.11.) but the Spirit of God knows what is in man, he hath a threed which leads him unerringly, quite through the labyrinth of mans heart. Thou haſt known me, all over, thou knoweſt my down-ſitting and up-riſing, that is, whatſoever I go about or take in hand: Yea thou underſtandeſt my thoughts afar off; that is, before I think them, or before they are born.

We cannot draw a curtain between God and our ſouls, nor ſpread a vail of ſecrecy over any of our actions. The wayes of a man are before the Lord, and he pondereth (as in a ballance) all his goings, (Prov. 5.21.)

Secondly Obſerve, It will be little to the profit or credit of hypocrites and evil doers, when God comes to ſearch them.

Chriſt quickly eſpied among all his gueſts, the man that had not on him the wedding garment; and as ſoon as Chriſt ſpake to him, he was ſpeechleſs. He was condemned in himſelf, becauſe he had not prepared himſelf.

Three things ariſe from this conſideration by way of corollary.

Firſt, Take heed of ſin, for God will ſearch you out. Moſes tells the two Tribes who deſired to take up their inheritance on the other ſide Jordan, that if they ſhould prove falſe to their own propoſals, their ſin would ſurely find them out. But doth ſin make ſearch for the ſinner? or will ſin diſcover and betray it ſelf? When he ſaith their ſin would find them out, his meaning is, the revenging hand of God for ſin would find them out. When we feel the effects, and receive the rewards of ſin, our ſin findes us. Many loſe both the ſight and memory of the ſins they have committed; but their ſins keep the ſight of them, or will follow them (as the hound doth the fleeing game) upon the ſent, till they have found them out.

Secondly, It is good for man to ſearch himſelf before the Lord ſearches him, or becauſe the Lord will ſurely ſearch him. It will be our wiſdom to bring our own works to the touchſtone, for God will; to travel into our own hearts and over our own lives, for God will. Let not any region of thy ſelf be (terra incognita) an unknown land to thy ſelf, for God walks through thee every day. God threatned to ſearch Jeruſalem with Candles, becauſe they had not ſearched themſelves by the clear ſun-ſhine of his word. A ſin of ignorance committed is leſs then a ſin againſt knowledge; but to hide a ſin we have committed, or to be wilfully ignorant of it, encreaſes it.

Laſtly, It is beſt for us by humble confeſſion to make our ſins known to God, ſeeing God doth ſearch out our ſins, and will know them, whether we will or no. Concealment doth not hide the eye of God from ſin, but the mercy and pardoning grace of God from the ſinner. The diſguiſes which we put upon the evil which we have done, cannot make them leſs viſible to, but more ugly in the ſight of God. To aſſure that, is Jobs ſcope in the next clauſe of this verſe.

Or as one man mocketh another, do ye ſo mock him?

The word ſignifies to illude, to lie, to deceive; to lie that we may deceive, or to deceive by lying. One man, or (as the propriety of the Original ſounds) one poor, weak, ſorry, ſorrowful man, may thus mock and deceive another; but can weak, ſorry, ſilly man put cheats and deceits upon the ſtrong, the wiſe, the only wiſe God?

But may we conceive that Jobs friends had any ſuch deſign in hand, or that they were contriving a plot againſt God?

'Tis equally as vain and ſinful to ſtrive with God by our wit, as it is by our ſtrength; and we can as ſoon overcome him, as over-reach him.

Neither did Job impute this to his friends, that they ſet themſelves induſtriouſly to deceive or mock God; yet he might ſpeak thus,

First, Becauſe they handled the cauſe with weak and improper arguments ſuch as had only a ſhew of reaſon or divine authority in them, not the ſubſtance or reality of it; which imported, as if they ſuppoſed God himſelf would be taken with appearances and very ſimilitudes: to be ſo, is indeed to be mocked and deceived. Upon this account Job chargeth them with mocking God. Neither is it againſt the laws of diſputation to put ſuch inferences upon anothers aſſertions or argumentations as may poſſibly flow or follow from them, though the arguer be free and far enough from any ſuch intendment.

Sane inter diſputandũ ſpectamus non quid quiſque ſibi propoſitum eſſe dicat, ſed quid ex ipſius oratione conſequatur. Merc.

Secondly, Becauſe they (undertaking to plead the cauſe of God) might ſeem to deal like thoſe Advocates, who to draw on their clients, and multiply their own fees, tell them their cauſe is good, and that they doubt not of the day. Which though it were moſt true in regard of God and the cauſe it ſelf he had in hand with Job, yet it was not true in regard of the grounds upon which his friends managed it and held it forth.

Referendum videtur ad incorrupũ Dei judiciũ, quod depravari detorquerìq; à recto humanâ perſuaſione aut fraudulẽtia non poteſt. Phil.

Thirdly, He might ſpeak thus, becauſe they appearing as witneſſes againſt him before the tribunal of God, might ſeem to deal like thoſe witneſſes who give a wrong teſtimony to miſlead the judge, that he may give ſentence againſt the innocent: thus an earthly Judge may be mocked or deceived. But (ſaith Job) do ye think to mock or deceive God thus? Do ye think becauſe you have given ſuch a hard teſtimony of me, and ſay I am wicked, that he will take your word, and condemn me upon it? Do ye hope, either to corrupt and darken his underſtanding that he cannot ſee the right, or to over-perſwade his will to act againſt what he ſees, and to overthrow the right? pleaſe not your ſelves with theſe miſ-repreſentations of me and of my cauſe to God: for he will quickly look through all the falſe colours you have laid upon it, and the fallacies that are in it; and you will find at laſt, that you have deceived your ſelves, not God, by all your inſinuations of my deceit and hypocriſie towards God. As one man mocketh another, do ye ſo mock him?

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Man may be mocked and deceived by man.

Vulgus plerumq; credit omnia quæ à magnis hominibus audit.

That's ſuppoſed by Job. As the ſtrength of man prevails over humane ſtrength; ſo alſo doth the wit and underſtanding of man prevail over humane wit and underſtanding. And as ſome men are in reference to ſtrength, ſo others are in reference to underſtanding, children. You may mock and coſen them, impoſe upon and delude them, even as if they were a company of little children.

As many wiſe men are led by the multitude, ſo the fooliſh multitude are eaſily led by any one, who is great in power, or eminent in reputation for wiſdom. Two hundred men went after Abſalom in their ſimplicity, and they knew not any thing, (1 Sam. 15. 11.) They were not of his councel, nor privy to his conſpiracy, he deluded them into treaſon. Simon Magus bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himſelf was ſome great one, to whom they all gave heed from the leaſt unto the greateſt, ſaying, This man is the great power of God, (Act. 8. 9, 10.) But he did but mock them. Such impoſtors and mountebanks have in all ages put cheats upon ſimple people, not only in matters of State, but of Religion. Popiſh Prieſts and Jeſuites have been greateſt deſigners and actors in Soul-mockeries: by theſe, God hath ſent ſtrong deluſions among them who have not received the love of the truth, and they have believed lies.

Secondly Obſerve, God cannot be mocked by man.

Gal. 6. 7. Be not deceived, God is not mocked. Man never deceives himſelf ſo much, as when he thinks or attempts to deceive God. He often takes the wiſe in their own craftineſs, but the craft of the wiſeſt never took him. In vain (ſaith Solomon) is the net ſpread in the eye or ſight of the ſilly bird: If a weak man ſee the ſnare, he will not come into it: There is no ſnare can be ſpread out of the eye and ſight of God, and therefore he will never come into any ſnare. And as it is an impoſſible thing, ſo alſo a thing extreamly perillous, to go about to mock God: ſo much the Apoſtle infers from this principle: For he had no ſooner laid down my concluſion, God is not mocked, but preſently he ſubjoyns, Whatſoever a man ſoweth, that alſo ſhall he reap. Our actions, good or bad, are like the ſeed ſown, the reward of them is the harveſt reaped; ſuch as the ſeed ſown is, ſuch ſhall the corn reaped be: God will not give them a harveſt of wheat and barly, who have ſown tares and cockle. Many evil works are rewarded by men with good, and moſt good works are rewarded by men with evil: but God is not unrighteous, either to give us good for evil, or evil for good. For though God beſtows ſome common temporary benefits upon mankind in common, making his ſun to riſe on the evil and on the good, and ſending rain on the juſt and unjuſt, Mat. 5. 45. yet he beſtows no ſpecial nor eternal favours upon them; and a time will ſhortly come, when they ſhall not enjoy thoſe which are common, and temporary.

Thirdly Obſerve, We may be found mockers and diſhonourers of God, while we think we are ſerving and honouring him.

A good end will not excuſe us while our way is unwarrantable.

Laſtly Obſerve, We may be judged to do that which our actions ſpeak, though we be far from ſuch intentions.

Jobs friends had no ſuch wicked purpoſe in their hearts as to mock God, yet Job had reaſon to charge them with it.

They, who having been enlightned fall away, are ſaid to crucifie to themſelves the Son of God afreſh, and put him to open ſhame, (Heb. 6. 4, 5, 6.) And they who ſin wilfully after they have received the knowledge of the truth, are ſaid to tread under foot the Son of God, and to count the blood of the covenant as an unholy thing, (Heb. 10. 26, 29.) Yet, poſſibly, neither of theſe do it formally and profeſſedly. It is rare to hear of a Julian openly blaſpheming the name, and ſpurning againſt the honour of Jeſus Chriſt. Yet in effect, and by way of interpretation, all they do it, who depart from the known truth, and give themſelves up (after conviction) to the wayes and luſts of their own hearts.

Job having diſſwaded his friends from accepting the perſon of God, and from ſpeaking wickedly for him, proceeds on to ſhew them the danger of it in caſe they ſhould dare to do ſo.

Verſ. 10. He will ſurely reprove you, if ye do ſecretly accept perſons.

Arguendo arguet.

He will ſurely reprove you.] As if he had ſaid, You muſt not expect favour at the hands of God, if ye accept perſons by ſhewing them unlawful favour: Will not the Judge of all the earth do right?

He will ſurely reprove you.] The Hebrew is, In reproving he will reprove you. Which noteth two things. Firſt, The certainty of the action; and Secondly, The ſeverity of it. Firſt, Certainty, God will do it. We tranſlate, He will ſurely, or without doubt he will, there is no queſtion to be made of it, you ſhall be reproved. Secondly, Severity. In reproving he will reprove, that is, he will throughly reprove you, he will not do it to halves, no, he will rather do it double, as the words are doubled, in reproving he will reprove you; you ſhall have it both ſurely and ſeverely.

Reprove them! for what? He will reprove you for your unjuſt dealing, for your iniquity: the latter words of the verſe clear that ſenſe, He will reprove you, if ye do ſecretly accept perſons, that is, he will reprove you for accepting perſons. As (John 16.) the Spirit is promiſed to come into the world, to reprove or convince the world (that Greek word anſwers this in the Hebrew) he ſhall come to reprove the world of ſin, convincing them that they have ſinned, and ſhewing them what the deſert of ſin is.

Further, This reproving may be taken two wayes. There is a verbal reproof, and a penal reproof; a reproof by ſpeaking, and a reproof by acting or inflicting puniſhment: both theſe wayes we are to underſtand the text, He will ſurely reprove you, you ſhall have it both by words and blows.

Job in this ſeems to propheſie: for the event made good what he ſpeaks, as we read in chap. 42. of this book verſ. 7. where the Lord, upon the concluſion of this debate, thus beſpeaks the friends of Job, My wrath (he means Eliphaz) is kindled againſt thee, and againſt thy two friends, for ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, as my ſervant Job hath. Here is a reproof. Job I ſay, did, as it were, propheſie what would come upon them, that ſurely ſooner or later, God would take them into his hand, and give them a ſound chiding, for their unſound arguing.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Sinners ſhall not eſcape the reproof of God.

This reproof (for the clear underſtanding of the point) may be taken two wayes.

Firſt, For a ſtop to what they would act: Thus he doth very frequently reprove ſinners, ſtaying them from a progreſs in their ſins. (Gen. 31. 24, 42.) When Jacob departed from his Uncle Laban, Laban purſues him, but the Lord (ver. 24.) overtakes Laban, and tells him in a dream by night, Take heed that thou ſpeak not to Jacob either good or bad. Jacob tells him in plain terms, God rebuked, or reproved thee yeſternight (ver. 42.) It is the word in the Text: As if he had ſaid, Thou cameſt forth with a purpoſe to make me ſerve thee ſtill, but the Lord hath reproved thee, he hath ſtopt thee in this deſign, and forbidden thee to ſpeak either good or bad; that is, that thou ſpeak not any thing to me, either by way of threatning, or of promiſe, to draw me back, and bring me to thine houſe again. We read of this reproof (Pſal. 105. 13, 14, 15.) When the people of the Lord were few, and ſtrangers in the Land, and did wander up and down from one Kingdom to another people, he ſuffered no man to do them wrong; yea, he reproved Kings for their ſakes. He reproved Kings, this reproof was a ſtopping of their intendments, he would not ſuffer them to wrong his people. When Iſrael was mad in following Idols, the Lord ſaith, I will hedge up thy way with thorns, and make a wall that ſhe ſhall not find her paths, (Hoſ. 2. 6.) It is an alluſion to beaſts, who are ready to break out of their paſtures: the hedge ſtops or gives a turn. God in purſuance of his Covenant, and with a gracious meaning to a revolting people, hedges them up by affliction to ſtop them from undoing. It is a mercy to be kept out of the pound, though it be by a thorn hedge, ſharpeſt troubles. This ſtop the Lord doth often give, though he doth not alwayes give it unto ſinners: He ſometimes lets them run on to fill up their meaſure of ſin, and to receive their full meaſure of puniſhment. Reproof for ſin is a great favour; though the Lord be angry with us for what we have done, yet it is a favour that he will not let us do more, and ſo make our ſelves more vile and miſerable.

There is a ſecond way of reproof which all ſinners ſhall certainly meet with. All ſinners are not ſtopt in their way; but all ſinners ſhall be blamed for going out of the way. Though the fact proceed, yet they ſhall be convinced that there is a fault in the fact; and that it is an evil and a bitter thing to ſin againſt the Lord (Pſal. 50. 21.) the hypocrite is deſcribed going on in ſin, and flattering himſelf that God was like himſelf. But what ſaith the Lord, I will reprove thee, and ſet thy ſins in order before thine eyes. Some men are afraid to reprove; many are unable to reprove: or if they be neither afraid, nor unable, yet they may be unwilling to be at the pains and trouble of reproving: But the Lord will not forbear his reproof: God is not afraid of any mans great looks; nor doth he want ability to reprove and convince the ſtouteſt ſinners. He will convince the whole world, and ſtop every mouth; he will make every one know what he hath done, and acknowledge that he hath done amiſs. Ordinary men, yea Miniſters, may flatter a people in their ſins; and the Lord may leave them to ſuch a judgment, that when they hate thoſe that reprove in the gate, at laſt they ſhall have none to reprove in the gate: they ſhall have none but flatterers, even ſuch as dawb with untempered morter, and ſow pillows under their elbows, crying peace, peace, where there is no peace: Thus they ſhall fatten them up with flatteries againſt the ſlaughter of the great day; a mans own heart and conſcience is not alwayes in a caſe to reprove him. It is ſaid of David, as ſoon as he had cut off the lap of Saul's garment, His heart ſmote him; that is, his Conſcience reproved and checked him: It is a happineſs, that when others reprove not, conſcience doth: But though conſcience fail too, yet God will not; God is greater then our conſciences; and when conſcience is aſleep, God neither ſlumbereth nor ſleepeth, and at laſt he will awaken conſcience too.

So that which way ſoever we are flattered, whether by men, or Satan, or by our own conſciences, yet God will ſurely reprove. Many are upheld by falſe teſtimonies in an opinion of their good eſtate, whenas their eſtate is ſtark naught: For as there is a threefold teſtimony for the ſoul, to aſſure it of a true peace, The water, the blood, and the ſpirit; ſo in alluſion we may ſay, that to flatter a man into an unſound peace, there is a threefold teſtimony, 1. from the world, 2. from Satan, 3. from a mans own heart; theſe three joyn together to deceive the ſoul into a moſt dangerous ſecurity; but when they have done their beſt (which is indeed worſt for us) to hide us from our ſelves, the Lord diſcovers all; no ſinner ſhall eſcape his reproof; or if he eſcape it a while here, it is in judgment, and he ſhall not eſcape it when the Lord comes as Judge.

Secondly, Take it for reproving by puniſhment, and then Note,

That no impenitent ſinner ſhall eſcape the vengeance of God.

The wrath of God is revealed from Heaven againſt all ungodlineſs, and unrighteouſneſs of men (Rom. 1. 18.) Tribulation and anguiſh upon every ſoul of man that doth evil, of the Jew firſt, and alſo of the Gentile (Rom. 2. 9.) There is a certain Decree gone forth, and the word is ratified in Heaven, that every ſin ſhall be puniſhed; puniſhed either in the perſon that doth commit it, or in his Surety. The wages of ſin is death, and that either the ſinner muſt receive, or Chriſt, upon whom our ſins are laid. He will ſurely reprove thee, if &c.

Thirdly, Obſerve, God will reprove and puniſh ſinners ſeverely; he will do it to purpoſe when he doth it.

If we come under his hand, we ſhall feel his hand; if he rebuke us, we ſhall know he rebukes us; Thou haſt chaſtiſed me (ſaith Ephraim, Jer. 31.) and I was chaſtiſed. (Gen. 2. 17.) In the day thou eateſt thereof, dying thou ſhalt dye (which we tranſlate) thou ſhalt ſurely dye: There is a certainty and a ſeverity in it; thou ſhalt have a through death, death in thy body, and death in thy ſoul; a temporal death, and an eternal death. There is a ſeverity to thoſe that continue in their impenitency. Some reprove as if they did not reprove; their reproofs are ſoothings rather then reprovings. Eli did not ſurely reprove; he in reproving did not reprove; he did rather ſmooth then rebuke his ſons; his words did rather incourage then humble them: If we compare, 1 Sam. 2. 23. with chap. 3. 13. we ſhall find what account God gave of his reproofs. Eli (1 Sam. 2. 23.) comes to his ſons, and ſaith, Why do ye ſuch things? for I hear of your evil doings by all this people. Nay my ſons, for it is no good report that I hear, ye make the Lords people to tranſgreſs: And then telleth them, If one man ſin againſt another, the Judge ſhall judge him; but if a man ſin againſt the Lord, who ſhall intreat for him? Here is a reproof; and, indeed, there is a great deal in it; but it did not come up to the nature of the ſin of thoſe men; he ſhould have ſtormed and thundred upon them; he ſhould have made his ſons ears to tingle, and their hearts to tremble: and becauſe he did not, therefore (Chap. 3. 13.) the Lord ſent a meſſage to him by Samuel, Behold I will do a thing in Iſrael, at which both the ears of every one that heareth it ſhall tingle, &c. Becauſe his ſons made themſelves vile, and he reſtrained them not; or (according to the Hebrew) frowned not upon them. He either ſmiled, or looked too pleaſingly upon his ſons, when he reproved them: this cauſed God to frown upon Eli, and brought ſore diſpleaſure upon his family. It is good for us to reprove as God reproves. Great ſinners muſt have great reproofs: Some muſt be ſaved with fear, pulling them out of the fire; we muſt caſt them into the fire, that they may eſcape the fire: Pitiful cruelty is better then cruel pity. Some in dealing both with the ſinful practiſes and erroneous opinions of men, handle them as men handle thorns, as if they durſt not touch them; this fatteneth ſin, and confirmeth error: For as a cold and heartleſs petitioner invites a denial, ſo a cold and heartleſs reprover heartens the ſinner. The way to cure ſome ſouls is, to beat them black and blew with reproofs, as the word uſed ſomewhere in the Epiſtles of Paul ſignifies. Paul exhorts Titus to rebuke the Cretians ſharply (or cuttingly) that they may be ſound in the faith (Tit. 1. 13.) Soars muſt be cut and lanced, before they can be healed. God reproves ſeverely, as well as certainly. He will ſurely reprove you.

If ye do ſecretly accept perſons.

Etiamſi clam perſonam accipiatis. Jun. Si occultè & per hypocriſin, &c. Merc.

As if he had ſaid, You may cover the matter, and put pretences or colours upon it, but God will find you out. Some tranſlate the Original by although, which makes the ſence clearer, Although ye do accept perſons ſecretly, though ye carry it cunningly, or hypocritically: Yet, &c. Many ſin, as it were, by art, and are ſkilful to do evil: They can draw a fair ſkin over a putrified ſoar, and make the blackeſt and moſt deformed actions appear beautiful: The Phariſees were indeed corrupt and rotten carkaſſes, yet they looked like painted tombs; they were but rotten poſts, yet they were gilded over. Herein lyes the cunning of ſinning, to do it ſecretly.

Certiſſimè vos arguet ſi occultè in gratiam cujuſque diſcedatis à recto. Tyg.

Others render this clauſe cauſally, He will reprove you, becauſe you do ſecretly accept perſons: The cloſe carriage and contrivance of your ſin, will cauſe you greater ſhame. Job ſpeaks not thus, as if they ſhould eſcape the reproofs of God, who accept perſons openly: But Firſt, Becauſe men ſometimes do it openly, and are not reproved. As if he had ſaid, You may perhaps do this ſo groſly, that every man ſees it, and yet no man reprove or puniſh you for it, but though you do it ſecretly, God will reprove and puniſh you for it.

Secondly, It may have this meaning, If you do it ſecretly, men cannot puniſh you: for they judge and puniſh only thoſe things that appear: Juſtice muſt proceed (ſecundum allegata & probam) according to what is alledged and proved. So that if you ſecretly accept perſons, men cannot deal with you; but God can: He will find you out, and make you ſmart for it.

Hence Obſerve (I have opened before, what it is to accept perſons, therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon it.)

Firſt, That to accept perſons is a provoking ſin.

He will ſurely reprove you, if you do ſecretly accept perſons. The accepting of, or the ſhewing favour to a perſon, may be as great a ſin as the oppreſſing of a perſon. And the reaſon of it is,

Firſt, Becauſe the oppreſſion of one perſon is alwayes joyned with the accepting of another: And therefore though the very act of accepting a mans perſon, or the ſhewing more favour to a man then is due, may ſeem to have no fault, or but a ſmall one in it; yet becauſe the favour you ſhew to one, doth redound to the wrong, or preſſion of another, the ſin muſt needs be exceeding great.

Secondly, It is a provoking ſin to accept perſons, becauſe it is a ſin that cannot be committed, but with a great deal of reſolvedneſs and premeditation. A man muſt know both perſons and cauſes before he can properly be ſaid to accept perſons. So that this is not a ſin which a man falls into through inadvertency, or infirmity: Now, that which puts a great aggravation upon any ſin, is, to do it knowingly, and premeditately. The more of our underſtanding or of our will is mixed with any ſin, the more ſinful it is; I know no ſin which hath more of either, then the accepting of perſons hath. Therefore God will ſurely reprove thoſe who accept perſons; what ſin ſoever eſcapeth, that ſhall not; you cannot plead an excuſe for it; nor is there any cloak for this ſin. It cannot be committed out of ignorance or infirmity, but upon will and election.

Thirdly, As the accepting of one perſon is a wrong to another; ſo it is ſuch a wrong as a man can have no repair for. He that hath the wrong, knows not where to go to be righted. The accepting of perſons is a ſin againſt all Laws, and yet we can hardly find any Law againſt it.

Fourthly, They who ſit in judgment, perſonate and repreſent God himſelf; and therefore while they accept perſons, they make God a partaker, yea an actor in that which he moſt hateth.

And as this is a great ſin in civil judgment, ſo in ſpiritual. This St. James ſhews (Jam. 2. 2, 3, 4.) If there come one into your aſſembly, with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, you have reſpect to him, and ſay unto him, ſit thou here in a good place; and there come in alſo a poor man in vile rayment, and you ſay to the poor, ſtand thou there, &c. Are ye not then partial in your ſelves, and are become judges of evil thoughts? We muſt not have the faith of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Lord of glory, with reſpect of perſons. The Apoſtles reſolve for himſelf and his fellow Apoſtles, is (2 Cor. 5.16.) Henceforth know we no man after the fleſh; that is, we accept no mans perſon, in regard of any outward intereſt, as to the ſwaying of our judgment, to think well or ill, highly or meanly of them. External relations and differences muſt bear no weight at the Goſpel beam. It is as dangerous (if not more) to accept perſons in ſpiritual, as in civil judgment; and the Lord is a ſevere revenger of both.

But ſome may ſay, If it were between man and man, ſo to accept perſons, the Lord might be angry indeed; but will not God favour an accepter of perſons, when it is in favour to his own cauſe? No, he will not. That's the caſe here, Will you (ſaith Job) accept the perſon of God?

Hence obſerve, God will not bear it, that we ſhould wrong the meaneſt man for his ſake.

Neither indeed can we do him right by doing injury to others. This doth infinitely advance the holineſs and purity of God; and convince the falſeneſs and wickedneſs of man. The Judges and Magiſtrates of the earth will do right between man and man, in an ordinary caſe, between ſubject and ſubject of equal rank; but if it be the Kings caſe, or if ſome great perſon be intereſſed in it, how apt are Judges to lean towards greatneſs, and to give ſentence with the Prince, though they lay it heavy upon the people. Now if God himſelf will not endure that any creature ſhould be wronged, under a pretence of doing him right: How ſhall any men be born out, who favour the great ones of the world, to the prejudice and undoing of inferiours? The Lord proteſts (Iſai. 61. 8.) I the Lord love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt-offering: See how he reproves thoſe who were very zealous to promote his cauſe. But is it blame-worthy to be zealous for God? No, Their zeal was good; but the means they uſed to expreſs it, was evil. They robbed men, the better to enable them to bring offerings to God. They oppreſt their brethren, that they might be liberal at the Temple. God teſtifies againſt this, I hate robbery for burnt-offering. Woe to thoſe who rob men to inrich God. Some now promote preaching, and perhaps will ſet up a Lecture out of the overplus of their unjuſt gains. Though it be an excellent work to maintain the preaching of the Goſpel, yet their work is bad enough, who gripe and graſp unjuſtly, and think to ſalve it by this, they are very liberal toward the promoting of the Goſpel, this is to bring robbery for burnt-offering. Others extort and grate in their dealings, who pleaſe themſelves with a purpoſe to be charitable to the poor; they will build Almſhouſes, and give much in their laſt wills to good uſes: The Lord hates robbery for charity, as well as for burnt-offerings: He rejects what we give, either to him, or to his poor, if we give what we have unduly gotten.

Thirdly, Job ſaith, He will ſurely reprove you, if ye ſecretly accept perſons.

Then Obſerve, Secret ſins, even heart-ſins, are known unto God.

The Lord by Nathan tells David, Thou didſt it ſecretly, but I will do this thing before all Iſrael, and before the Sun. Secret ſins ſhall have open puniſhment; that which is done (whether good or evil) in a corner, God will proclaim upon the houſe top: Remember this, you that can ſin ſmoothly and fairly; that can (when you have eat up your brethren) like the Whore in the Proverbs, Wipe your mouthes, and ſay, we have done no wickedneſs.

I grant, that in ſome ſence ſecret ſins are not ſo bad as open ſins are: Yet there are conſiderations which render them worſe then open ſins. Secret ſins are not ſo bad as open ſins in two reſpects. Firſt, becauſe they give no ſcandal to thoſe that are good. Secondly, Becauſe they do not infect by example, nor incourage thoſe that are evil. Open ſins are both ſcandalous and infectious; ſecret ſins are neither. But if a man ſin ſecretly, upon deſign to hide his ſin, or hoping to carry it ſo, that God ſhall not find him out, this ſecreſie increaſes ſin, and ſhall have the greater condemnation. He that ſins openly, appears to men what he is; but he that thus ſins ſecretly, thinks that it cannot appear to God what he is, or he hopes that God will never make it appear what he is. This is a great aggravation upon his ſin, and therefore Job puts a mark upon it, He will ſurely reprove you, although you, or, if you do ſecretly accept perſons: Do it as privately as you will, that ſhall be no excuſe to you; though ſome ſecrecy may mitigate ſin, yet no ſecrecy can acquit us of ſin.

Job goes on yet to humble his Friends, and to ſhew them their error: He adds two Arguments further in the eleventh and twelfth verſes. The firſt is taken from the Majeſty of God, Shall not his excellency make you afraid? And the ſecond is taken from the weakneſs and frailty of man in general, and of themſelves in particular. Your remembrances are like unto aſhes, your bodies to bodies of clay: Will you then contend with God? will you ſin againſt him?

Verſe 11. Shall not his excellency make you afraid, and his dread fall upon you?

Aliqui ex Hebræis שאתו flammam exponunt. Annon ejus ignis vos terret?

Statim ut ſe commoverit, turbabit vos. Vulg. Commotio ejus verſabit vos. Sept. Elevatio ejus. Reg. Complut. Elevare ſe idem eſt quod ſurgere & ſe ad puniendum accingere, cum punit Deus dicitur ſurgere, egredi, moveri loco ſuo. Adventus vel commotio domini pœnas inſtigentis hoſtium ſtrepite comparatur in Scriptura, Merc.

It is queried what is here meant by the excellency of God. The Hebrew word is derived from a root which ſignifieth to lift up. And ſome of the Jewiſh Doctors tell us, that there is a word of this form, which ſignifies a fire, or a flame; and ſo the Verb Naſha, ſignifies ſometimes to burn or to conſume, as well as to aſcend, becauſe the natural tendency of fire is upward, aſcending as it burneth. And ſo they give the ſence thus, Shall not the fire of the Lord make you afraid? ſhall not the flame of God terrifie you? What flame? what fire? The flame of his anger here, and the fire of his wrath for ever. There is a fire in hell (whether material, or metaphorical, is not a queſtion for this place.) Shall not that fire of God make ſinners afraid? Are you able to dwell with thoſe everlaſting burnings, with that conſuming fire? The Saints, who are acquitted from their ſins, ſhall dwell with God, who is an everlaſting burning: but wicked men, whoſe ſins reſt upon them, ſhall be as the ſtubble, ſuddenly burnt, though never conſumed.

But I paſs that. Another reads it thus, Shall not he, as ſoon as he moveth himſelf, make you afraid? When God begins to riſe, man muſt fall: So the words bear an alluſion to Magiſtrates, who ſitting upon the ſeat of Judicature, when they come to give ſentence upon a guilty perſon, begin to ſtir themſelves, to riſe majeſtically, and to compoſe their countenances into an aſpect of terror and ſeverity. Thus when the Lord begins to ſtir and move himſelf, will not you quake? The ſplendor of Majeſty, which ſits in his face, dazles the eyes, and overcomes the ſtrength both of men and Angels.

Alludit ad terrorem quem Deus apparens incutere ſolebat. Bold.

Others conceive Job referring to that cuſtom of God in thoſe ancient times, when he appeared in a Cloud, or by ſome viſible ſign to his ſervants the Prophets, and other holy men: When the Lord did ſo declare his preſence, we find (as it hath been obſerved in former paſſages of this book) that the holieſt men were ſurprized with fear, and trembling took hold of them. Hence that humble deprecation of Job (Chap. 9. 34.) Let not his fear terrifie me.

Iſta commotio eſt levatio vel extollentia, quare alii legunt excellentia ejus turbabit vos, i.e. ſtatim ut ſuam majeſtatem & excellentiam conſpicuam fecerit turbabimini. Pined.. נשא Attollere elevare uude נשיא Significat ducem aut principem eo quod ſit elevatus ſuper alios.

Further, This ſtirring up may very well ſtand with our tranſlation: For the Hebrew, Naſha, from whence this word cometh, ſignifies to lift up, to advance and extol: as it ſignifies the ſtirring and moving of a perſon when he riſeth or lifteth himſelf up; ſo alſo his dignity or excellency, a civil riſing or highneſs, as well as a local. Dying Jacob calls Reuben his firſt-born, The excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power. The priviledge of primogeniture was very great. The firſt-born were as Princes among their brethren: And from this word, a Duke or a Prince is called Naſhe, becauſe he is lifted up, or exalted above other men. Hence alſo, in an ill ſence, the pride and ſinful loftineſs of man is often expreſſed by this word: for pride is the lifting up of our ſelves above our place and degree: when we in our thoughts riſe beyond what we are, or are over-conceited of what we are, this is pride. Thus Moſes and Aaron are falſely taxed (Numb. 16. 4.) Ye take too much upon you; wherefore lift you up your ſelves above the congregation of the Lord? (It is this word) why do you make your ſelves better then others, or greater then you are? Is it not the pride of your ſpirits? So (Iſa. 14. 13.) the pride of the Aſſyrian is deſcribed, Thou haſt ſaid in thine heart, I will aſcend into Heaven, I will exalt my throne above the Stars of God. He was not ſo mad as to think that he could literally get up into Heaven, or that he could ſet his Throne above the Stars; but the phraſe noteth out the exceſſiveneſs of his pride. He was the higheſt Monarch on earth, and it was no pride for him to think himſelf ſo; (it is not pride for a King to think himſelf the greateſt man in his Kingdom, for he is ſo) but when he would be higher then man, and do that which exceedeth the ſtate of a creature, here was pride. The excellency of God is that height, dignity, glory, and majeſty which he hath in himſelf, above and beyond all creatures, Shall not his excellency Make you afraid?] The word ſignifies extream fear, ſuch fear as doth ſwallow up and amaze. Pſal. 18. 4. The flouds of ungodly men; or (nearer the letter) The flouds of the ſons of belial; that is, the abundant ungodlineſs of thoſe who are moſt ungodly, vomiting out reproaches and threatnings upon me, made me afraid. (Heſt. 7. 6.) Haman was afraid before the King and the Queen: when Eſther told Ahaſuerus that he was the man that had conſpired againſt the Jews, he was ſo afraid, that he ſunk under his fear. (Iſa. 21. 4.) My heart panted, fearfulneſs affrighted me ('tis this word) the night of my pleaſure hath he turned into fear unto me; ſuch a fear ſeized upon me, as turned all my pleaſure into dread and terror.

Put all theſe together, and there are four or five wayes in which the ſence of this queſtion [Shall not his excellency make you afraid] may be made out.

First thus, As if Job did ſuggeſt to his Friends how ſuddenly they would diſcover their own weakneſs and fearfulneſs, though they now inſulted over him, if the Lord did but appear in his excellency and greatneſs to them, as he had to him. As if he had ſaid, You think you ſhall never be in ſuch a plight as I am, whatſoever God doth with you: But you ſhall find it otherwiſe; you will tell me another tale if God do but once ſhew himſelf againſt you, and do with you as he hath done with me: You can now trample upon me, and think I am a man of a very fearful ſpirit; but if the Lord do but appear in his excellency, your ſtrength will be no more then mine. Shall not his excellency make you afraid, and his dread fall upon you, as it hath done upon me? That's one ſence.

Objicit illis rerum adverſarum impatientiã, ſemel enim correpta Deo, conſtantiam quam nunc ſani & felices habere videntur, amittent. Aquin.

Secondly, Some conceive that Job doth only threaten his Friends with the terror of the Lord, and with the breakings forth of wrath, which they were to expect for what they had done againſt him. Shall not his excellency make you afraid? Certainly it ſhall; that is, the Lords power and greatneſs will at laſt make you know, that you have handled his cauſe ill, and done me wrong in handling it.

Graviſſimũ ſuis amicis comminatur ſupplicium. Pin.

Thirdly, Shall not his excellency make you afraid? may refer to what he had ſaid before, You have accepted the perſon of God, but ſhould not his excellency make you afraid to do it? Mens greatneſs may make you willing to flatter them (few flatter their equals, and none will flatter their inferiours) becauſe haply your dependance is upon them, and your expectations from them: but ſhould not the excellency of God make you afraid to flatter him? The excellency of men may provoke you to favour them, and wrong inferiours to ſerve their turns; but ſuch excellency as is in God ſhould make you forbear to do ſo. There are two reaſons why it ſhould. Firſt, God is above all your flattery and favour, he needs none of your help: Great men may have need of lyes and flatteries: but God hath none. Secondly, As the Lord is above the flatteries of men, and hath no need of them; ſo he doth abhor and abominate them. Many men love to be flatter'd, you can do nothing ſo pleaſing to them as that; yea, though you flatter them with the obſcuring and dimming of the true luſtre of others: but the Lord likes it not. Should not ſuch excellency make you afraid?

Fourthly, Others interpret the Interrogation affirmatively, Doth not his greatneſs make you afraid? Yes, his greatneſs doth make you afraid: You fear the greatneſs of God ſo much, that you thereupon condemn me: you are ſo afraid that you ſhould in any thing tax the juſtice of God, that you muſt needs tax me for unjuſt: As if he had ſaid, Is not this the reaſon that you deal thus with me? Is it not becauſe the excellency of God doth over-awe you; therefore you would rather offend on my part then on his; you would be ſure (as you hope) not to diſpleaſe God, whatever becomes of me: you think (poſſibly) thus with your ſelves, If we ſhould ſpeak leſs for God then is his due, he is ſo great that he can puniſh it; but if we ſpeak leſs for Job then his due, he is but our equal, what can he do? we need not fear him. Thus many underſtand the words, not as if Job did threaten his Friends with, but as if he only told them, that they were over-much afraid of the dignity and excellency of God, and thereupon were weighed down in their judgments to ſpeak they cared not how hardly of him.

Tenendum quod Job hoc verſu non terreat amicos ſed præpoſtere territos, metu eminentiæ vel magnitudinis Dei accuſat. Coc. Judicatis ſecundum perſonam potiorem non ex perſpectione cauſæ. Id.

Fifthly, Shall not his excellency make you afraid? That is, his excellency ought to make you afraid. (Mal. 1. 6.) A ſon honoureth his father; that is, a ſon ought to honour his father; it is the duty of a ſon to honour his father. So here, Shall not his excellency make you afraid? that is, his excellency ought to make you afraid. It is a due and an equal thing that you ſhould be ſo kept in awe by the Majeſty of God, that you ſhould not ſpeak or do any thing to the prejudice of man. Should not his excellency make you afraid?

Obſerve from it, Firſt, That the Lord hath an excellency in him,

Excellency is an exceſs in any quality, or a gradual heightning of any thing or perſon above another. We are to conſider this, that we may give God glory, and praiſe him (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh) according to his excellent greatneſs. God hath an exceſs of goodneſs in him; not an exceſs, as exceſs notes ſuperfluity, or more then needeth; but an exceſs, as it notes more then is in any other beſides himſelf. The excellency of God may be conſidered two wayes, Firſt, Abſolutely, as it is an excellency in himſelf; Secondly, comparatively to all other excellencies. God is excellent beyond compare; they who have an excellency, have none like unto Gods, or none at all compared with God. The Prophet tells us, that The Nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the ſmall duſt of the ballance; yea, all Nations are before him as nothing, and they are counted to him leſs then nothing, and vanity, Iſa. 4. 15, 17. Beſides the greateſt excellency of man is a fading excellency (Job 4. 21.) Doth not their excellency which is in them go away? Men go away not only as they are poor and mean, but as clothed with excellency, whether outward excellency, or inward excellency: the beauty of the body, learning, wiſdom, eloquence, the endowments and riches of the mind, all theſe excellencies which are in them, go away? Journeyeth it not with them (when they make their journey out of the world?) as Mr. Broughton reads that place. And as the excellency of all men (I mean their worldly excellency) ſhall go away, ſo eſpecially ſhall the excellency of the hypocrite (Job 20. 6.) Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, and his head reach unto the clouds, yet he ſhall periſh for ever. Hypocrites make a great ſhew, they have not only the profeſſion of Religion, but often the beauty of Religion ſhining upon them; there is a verdure and flouriſhing greenneſs upon their wayes to the view of man: but though their excellency mount up to the Heavens, yet down they ſhall, they ſhall lye down, and everlaſting contempt ſhall cover them.

Further, We may open the excellency of God under a threefold notion.

Firſt, There is an excellency of his Being.

Secondly, Of his Attributes.

Thirdly, Of his Works.

In all theſe we ſhould acquaint our ſelves with his excellency.

Firſt, There is an excellency in the Being of God; creatures have a being, but not ſuch a being as God hath. For Firſt, The Being of God is of himſelf. All creatures have their being of him, and from him. Creatures have a derivative being; God is Original Being, the firſt Being. Here is the excellency of his Being. It is ſaid (Habak. 1. 7.) of the Chaldeans, That their judgment and their dignity, or (it is the word of the Text) their excellency ſhall proceed of themſelves. But is any man the fountain of his own happineſs, excellency or greatneſs? Can it be ſaid of any in the world, that his excellency ſhall proceed of himſelf? In one reſpect the excellency of ſome doth: In another reſpect it doth not, it cannot. It cannot be ſaid of any excellency in creatures, ſtrictly, that it proceedeth from themſelves, all comes from God. But take a creature in its reference to any, or all other creatures, and ſo the excellency of ſome proceedeth from themſelves, and not from other creatures. Such is the meaning of that place, Their judgment and their excellency ſhall proceed of themſelves; that is, they ſhall not depend upon other perſons, or Nations, they ſhall not imp out their wings with other mens feathers, nor ſhall they ſhine with a borrowed glory. Some Kingdoms do glorious things, but their glory proceeds from neigbouring aſſiſtances: But the Chaldean needed not to confederate with any. Thus a creatures excellency may proceed from himſelf, not from other creatures; but all proceeds from God: and the excellency only of God in his Being is from himſelf alone, independent upon the creature.

Secondly, Gods Being is to himſelf as well as from himſelf: And thus alſo he excelleth man, whoſe being is not to himſelf, but to another; for all things are and were created unto God. No creature was made to it ſelf. The dignity of God is to himſelf alone: He indeed doth give out himſelf voluntarily, and ſo his Being is for the good of others; but he hath this prerogative, to keep all his Being to himſelf: As it is the holineſs of man to put forth his being for God; ſo it is the holineſs of God, that his Being is for himſelf; he doth and may do all things for his own glory, as man ought to do all for the glory of God.

Thirdly, Gods Being is an unchangeable Being: Man is in motion every day, either in his increaſe, or in his decreaſe; he is either growing, or he is decaying, both in his natural and civil ſtate. Man hath no conſiſtency, while he is, he continueth not what he was. Man is a ſhadow, he is alwayes turning; but with God there is no variableneſs, nor ſhadow of turning. The Pſalmiſt ſets out this oppoſition between God and creatures (Pſal. 106. 26, 27.) They ſhall periſh, but thou ſhalt endure; yea, all of them ſhall wax old like a garment, as a veſture ſhalt thou change them, and they ſhall be changed; but thou Lord art the ſame, and thy years ſhall have no end.

Fourthly, Mans being in this life, it is not only changeable, but determinable. Gods is an eternal Being, he is from everlaſting to everlaſting. We are ſhort-breathed, ſhort-lived creatures; if we number three or fourſcore years, we are counted wondrous old; and when we have numbred all our years, they are no number at all to the years of God.

Fifthly, Mans being is but a particular being: The Being of God is an univerſal Being; he is a Being in all things, and yet not included in any; a Being without all things, and yet not excluded from any.

Sixthly, Mans being is ſuch as man may comprehend; one man can meaſure another. No man hath any ſuch excellency in him, but another may be found to take the length, and breadth, and depth of it, even all its dimenſions. But Gods Being is an incomprehenſible Being, there is no meaſuring, either of his Nature, of his Counſels, or of his Wayes.

Seventhly, The Being of God is an abſolute perfect Being. Mans being is reſpective and imperfect; though it be perfect in its kind, as ſuch a creature, yet it is not perfect in all kinds: Somewhat may be taken from man, and added to him, and he a man ſtill; but God is ſo perfect, that nothing can be added to, or taken from him; all things are laid up in him: He is the ſum and comprehenſion of all thoſe excellencies which are ſcattered in the creature, and he infinitely excels them all.

The reſult of all theſe, is excellency. God hath not only a Being as we have, but an excellency, a glory in his Being above all other beings: The being of the creature is no being, we are but Non-entities compared with God. I am that I am, is his ſtile. God is the higheſt Entity, the Entity of all Entities.

Secondly, The excellency of God appears through all his Attributes.

Man is wiſe. There are many wiſe men in the world: But is man wiſe as God? The wiſdom of man is fooliſhneſs to God; and the fooliſhneſs of God is wiſer then men.

Man hath knowledge, but doth man know as God? Man knoweth not as God knoweth, if we conſider either the matter or manner of knowledge. Man knoweth but ſome parts and pieces of things; God knoweth all things: Man knoweth but in part; God knoweth fully: Man knoweth one thing by another, he muſt beat out his way by argument, and know by demonſtration, deſcending ſometimes from the cauſe to the effect; aſcending at other times from the effect to the cauſe: But God knoweth all things in themſelves; He knows by immediate intuition: He ſeeth cauſes in themſelves, not by their effects; and he ſeeth the effects in themſelves, and not from their cauſes.

Man is juſt. There are juſt men: But is any man juſt as God? O the exactneſs of the juſtice of God! There is no errour in his judgement, he will give to every man according to his work. Where's the man that gives to any man according to his works?

Man is merciful: but is he merciful as God? Hath man ſuch a ſtock of mercy as he? Hath man mercy for ever? Hath man multitudes of mercies? Mans mercies are cruelties compared with the mercies of God.

Man is patient; but is he patient as God? If God had no more patience then man, or then all men and Angels too, his patience would be ſpent out in a day, it would not laſt one hour, amongſt ſo many ſinnings and provocations, among ſinnings after ſo many warnings.

Man hath love, but doth he love as God loveth? ſo freely? ſo fully? ſo conſtantly? ſo without ends and deſigns upon thoſe he loves? Our love is hatred compared to the love of God.

What ſhould I ſay of the power, of the holineſs, of the faithfulneſs, of the bounty of God? What of every thing that is attributed unto God? He is ſo excellent in every one, that he is all excellency.

Thirdly, There is an excellency in the Works of God: what God is in Being, the ſame he is in working. He is (Iſa. 28. 29.) Wonderful in counſel, and excellent in working. Excellent in working, becauſe excellent in being. Exod. 15. 7. In the greatneſs of thine excellency, thou haſt overthrown them that roſe up againſt thee. (Deut. 33. 26.) There is none like the God of Jeſurun (that is, the God of Iſrael) who rideth upon the heaven to thy help, and in his excellency on the skie? God is ſaid to ride to the help of his people, becauſe he helps them ſpeedily; and he rideth in his excellency, that he may ſhew his ſtate and magnificence when he comes to help them. When God works in his excellency, we ſhall ſee the excellencies of God imprinted upon his works. Haſt thou an arm like God? ſaith Elihu to Job, or canſt thou thunder with a voice like him? Canſt thou teach like God? (ſaith he alſo). We may ſay to the worker, Canſt thou work like God? to the Teacher, Canſt thou teach like God? to the Souldier, Canſt thou fight like God? Now, as there is an excellency in the Being, Attributes and Works of God, ſo this his excellency ſhould ſtrongly affect and overawe our hearts: Should not his excellency make you afraid?

> Hence Obſerve, The excellency of God ſhould keep men in a holy compoſure of ſpirit, in a holy care to pleaſe him, in a holy fear of offending him.

What? before the excellency of God, before a God ſo excellent in Being, ſo excellent in the manner of his Being, ſo excellent in working, and we walk looſely and careleſly? Let this excellency of his make us afraid. The Lord moſt high is terrible, (Pſal. 47. 2.) he is terrible becauſe ſo high. The Preacher in his deſcription of old men, ſaith, They ſhall be afraid of that which is high, (Eccleſ. 12. 5.) Old age loves to keep upon even ground, for fear of falling: But the youngeſt and ſtouteſt of men, they who are moſt ambitious of clambring unto high places, have cauſe to be afraid of the moſt high God, and when he diſcovers his highneſs they will be afraid. Men never fear that which is but equal to them; and until they conceive an excellency in God, they never fear him. David prayeth that God would be pleaſed to ſhew his excellency, his greatneſs and his highneſs to his enemies, (Pſal. 7. 6.) Ariſe, O Lord, in thine anger, lift up thy ſelf becauſe of the rage of mine enemies, for their ſakes return thou on high. Why would he have God to lift up himſelf and to return on high? The Lord is ever on high: The meaning is, Do thou declare thy ſelf to be on high, let thy excellency appear above all. Why? What will be the effect of this? So (ſaith he) ſhall the congregation of the people compaſs thee about; that is, they ſhall crouch and fall down before thee when thou appeareſt in thy highneſs. When Chriſt appeared in his highneſs, though but as a Lamb, upon his throne, all the congregation did compaſs him about, terrour and aſtoniſhment ſurprized them all: The kings of the earth and the chief captains, called to the mountains and rocks to fall on them, to hide them from the face of him that ſate on the throne, Rev. 6. 16.

Nonne quū erigetur ipſe ſuper ſolium judicii,&c. Tar.

The Chaldee Paraphraſt gloſſeth this text of Job, Shall ye not be afraid when the Lord is lifted up, or ſet upon his throne of judgement? They who now ſlight the Lord, ſhall then tremble at the Lord, and before the preſence of his Majeſty, when he ariſeth to ſhake terribly the earth.

Laſtly, Foraſmuch as Job having charged his friends with accepting the perſon of God, and with ſpeaking falſly in favour of him, ſubjoyns in this verſe, Shall not his excellency make you afraid?

> Obſerve, That all our undue-ſpeakings and actings for, or in the cauſe of God, ariſe from our undue apprehenſions of God.

We conceive of God after the rate and proportion of a man, and meaſure him by our own ſpan. Hence it is that many in ſtead of adoring and fearing God, do indeed but play with him, and take the liberty of an ungovern'd boldneſs, both concerning his counſels and his judgements. What becomes of the excellency of God, when he is drawn down to the reaſon, and narrow'd, or rather nothing'd into the capacities of a creature? We never abaſe our ſelves as we ought, nor keep our diſtance, till we are rapt into the meditation of his divine excellencies and perfections. When David puts thoſe humbling, emptying queſtions, (Pſal. 8. 4.) What is man that thou art mindful of him? and the ſon of man that thou viſiteſt him? When he (I ſay) puts theſe queſtions, ſee where his heart was (verſ. 9.) O Lord our God, how excellent is thy name in all the earth! When he thought of the excellency of Gods name, he did not think himſelf worth the naming, What is man? while he thought who God was, he did not think himſelf worthy of one of Gods thoughts, What is man that thou art mindful of him? The Angels cover their faces before God; they adore, but they cannot bear his glory. They that know God, fear him, and they who know him moſt (ſo do Angels) fear him moſt. The more excellent any creature is, the more he fears the excellency of the Creatour. Shall not his excellency make you afraid?

And his dread fall upon you?

His dread.] The words bear the ſame ſenſe with the former, therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon them. His dread: The Original imports a fear riſing from ſome outward cauſe. Divine fear is cauſed three wayes; Firſt, by the rule or precept of the law. Secondly, By the penalty or threatnings of the law. Thirdly, By thoſe judgements which are inflicted for the tranſgreſſion of the law. We may underſtand the text of fear, by all theſe. Shall not his dread, the dread of the precept, which is ſo holy: the dread of the threatning, which is ſo terrible: the dread of the judgements of God, which are ſo exemplary, fall upon you?

פחד Pavor, timor, ad metū ab externa vi aut authoritate incuſſum ſolet referri. Riv.

Fall upon you?] The dread of God is from above, as lodged on high, and ſo comes down (as it were) with an advantage upon tranſgreſſours, (Rev. 11. 11.) It is ſaid that when ten parts of the city fell, fear fell upon the reſt. Fear fell upon them, as a ſtone from an high tower, and cruſht their ſpirits. The Apoſtle ſpeaks this notion, Rom. 1. 18. The wrath of God is revealed from heaven. As if heaven did open to let his wrath down, or to diſcharge it like a thunderbolt upon unrighteous men. The Spaniards have a proverb (which an interpreter remembreth upon this place) God hath the hill and the ſtones, which is as much as to ſay, God hath the upper ground of all creatures, and his wrath falls upon them as ſtones from an high place. We may contend with angry men upon even ground, creature with creature, but God hath the upper ground of all creatures, his wrath falls upon us. He hath the hill, yea he hath the wind and the ſun of us, he hath all advantages on his ſide, there is no ſtanding out againſt him.

Semper ex ſublimi loco pugnare adverſus mortales Deus dicitur; quod in Hiſpanorū proverbio eſt: Ipſius mons & lapides ſunt. Pined.

Hence Note, Firſt, God is to be dreaded.

To be dreaded in the juſtice of his law, in the ſeverity of his threatnings, in the greatneſs of his judgements; from each of theſe, dread falls like a mighty milſtone upon the heads of unbelievers and obdurate ſinners. Juſtice appears with open face in the law, threatnings lie virtually in the law: judgements are ſeminally in the threatnings, and threatnings are viſibly in judgements. God is to be dreaded, when we hear the rule of the law; he is to be feared more, when we hear the threatnings of the law; he is to be feared moſt, when we hear or ſee thoſe threatnings executed in judgements. The man (ſaith Moſes, Deut. 17. 12, 13.) that doth preſumptuouſly (by ſinning againſt the rule of the law) ſhall die (by ſuffering the penalty of the law) and all the people ſhall hear and fear, and do no more preſumptuouſly.

Secondly Obſerve, The dread of God ſhall certainly fall upon ſinners.

As it noteth a duty, that we ſhould dread God, ſo an event that ſuch as continue in ſin. the dread of God will fall upon them. The dread of God will ſurely take hold of ſinners, unleſs they get Chriſt to be their Saviour: No fence againſt the dread of God but Chriſt: For as one Scripture ſaith, The wrath of God is revealed from heaven againſt all unrighteouſneſs: So, another ſaith, He is Jeſus that delivereth us from the wrath to come. There is no wrath eſcaping, but by a Mediator.

Verſ. 12. Your remembrances are like unto aſhes, and your bodies to bodies of clay.

This verſe is an Antitheſis to the words before. Job having perſwaded his friends to ſilence, and to deſiſt their unfriendly carriage towards him, by an argument taken from the excellency of God; now moveth them by an argument from their own weakneſs and infirmity; Shall not his excellency make you afraid? and his dread fall upon you? verſ. 11. There he tells them who God is, and that they ought to ſtand in awe of him. Here in this 12th, he tells them what they are, and how they ought to be abaſed in the ſenſe of their own frailty; Your remembrances are like unto aſhes, your bodies to bodies of clay. Hold your peace, &c. Will you, who are clay and aſhes ſtand it out againſt his excellency?

Your remembrances are like unto aſhes.] The letter of the Hebrew is, Your remembrances are parables of aſhes, or have the ſimilitude and likeneſs of aſhes in them.

There is much variety of opinion about the meaning of thoſe words. Some expound them as a threatning againſt his friends: Your remembrances are like unto aſhes, that is, your remembrances ſhall be brought to aſhes, or, you ſhall be made like unto aſhes. To bring one to aſhes, is an effect of wrath; the fire of Gods wrath quickly conſumes man to aſhes. Aſhes are a ſign and a monument of extreameſt anger. So the Apoſtle Peter ſpeaks of Sodom and Gomorrah, in his ſecond Epiſtle, chap. 2.6. Where, propoſing Gods judgement upon thoſe cities, he ſaith, And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into aſhes, condemned them with an overthrow, making them an enſample unto thoſe that after ſhould live ungodly. And the Apoſtle Jude, deſcribing the deſtruction of the ſame cities, ſaith, They ſuffered the vengeance of eternal fire, they were turned into aſhes for ever: For, as if that fire burned or were not quenched unto this day; he calls it an eternal fire: or the reaſon may be, becauſe they went from one fire to another, from the fire which God rained down from heaven, to the fire which he hath prepared for the ungodly in hell: Hiſtorians ſpeak of the marks of this vengeance of God upon Sodom and Gomorrah, as ſtill remaining. Some call that place, The Region of aſhes. And Joſephus reports it, as the tradition of thoſe times, that the apples of Sodom were fair and pleaſant to the eye, as if fit to be eaten, but as ſoon as they were touched, they turned to aſhes. Some Interpreters (I ſay) conceive Job hinting that judgement of God upon Sodom and Gomorrah, thereby admoniſhing his friends, that as God turned thoſe cities into aſhes, ſo if they ſhould provoke his excellency, he could quickly deal with them, and make them an everlaſting argument of his diſpleaſure. Though I ſtay not upon this Expoſition;

Invenitur regio cineris. Paul. Oroſius, l. 1. c. 5.
Qui colore quidẽ ſunt edulibus ſimiles carpẽtium vero manibus in fumũ diſſolvuntur & cinerem Joſeph. de bello Judaic. l. 3. c. 5.

Yet becauſe it contains a general truth, take one Note from it:

That, If God be provoked he can ſoon turn all into aſhes, weaken the ſtrength, and blaſt the beauty of man.

As the Lord ſpeaks to Abimelech, Gen. 20. 3. Thou art but a dead man, becauſe of the woman which thou haſt taken; for ſhe is a mans wife: As if he ſhould ſay, I can quickly deſtroy thee, turn thee into the grave, tumble thee into the earth, though thou art a king and a great one. The Roman Hiſtory ſpeaks of Cæſar, that when Metellus the Tribune controlled his orders, about the publick Treaſure, Be quiet (ſaith he) leſt I lay thee dead in the place; yet correcting himſelf, he added, Young man, it is harder for me to ſpeak it, then to do it; which he ſpake to mollifie the ſharpneſs of his ſpeech, as not proceeding from his nature, but his paſſion, and as being grieved at the harſhneſs of his own language. If the Kings and Potentates of the earth ſpeak at ſuch a rate, that they can eaſier deſtroy men, then ſay they will deſtroy; how much more may God? This is really true of him who is the only Potentate, the Lord of heaven and earth, that it is as eaſie for him to deſtroy perſons and nations, and to make their remembrance to be as aſhes, as it is for him to ſay he will.

Some others ſpeak higher (a), and interpret this text, as they ſay probably, of eternal fire: as if Job had threatned his friends with damnation. Shall not his excellency make you afraid? Your remembrances are like unto aſhes, you ſhall be turned into hell, and ſent to everlaſting deſtruction. But I approve this leſs then the former. Job was diſpleaſed with his friends for their opinions concerning him: yet doubtleſs he had a better opinion of them, then to judge them under ſuch a diſpleaſure of God.

(b) Sẽtentiã hanc, & ex cinere ductã ſimilitudinẽ ad ipſas reſponſiones & argumenta amicorũ refert, q.d. reſponſiones veſtræ pereunt & collabuntur. Vat

Thirdly, Your remembrances is expounded actively thus, the things which you remember (b), the reaſonings, objections and records which you have brought out of the ſtore-houſe of your memories againſt me, and would have remembred, are like unto aſhes, utterly extinct and eaſily blown away. The word Remembrance, is uſed in that ſence, (Exod. 17.14.) Where Moſes is commanded to write a memorial againſt Amalek, that is to record ſomewhat as a remembrance againſt them: Records, and the officer that keeps records, are both expreſſed by this word, becauſe they preſerve the remembrances of what is paſt.

Unde מזכירים Mazchirim dicebantur illi qui erant à commentariis, quiq; negotia ſcriptis mãdabãt. Liber Lichrinoth, i.e. memoriarum. Eſt. 6. 1

Though this hath a fair ſenſe, yet it ſeemeth not to be ſo clear to the connection of theſe words, therefore I rather inſiſt upon a fourth interpretation, (c) taking this remembrance more generally for any thing which is memorable in man; as riches, dignity, power, credit, learning, wiſdom. As if Job had ſaid, Theſe things by which you hope to be remembred and become famous in the world, are but aſhes; that is, mean, and of no conſiſtence. (Prov. 10.7.) The memory of the juſt is bleſſed, but the name of the wicked ſhall rot. The memory, that is, when perſons living in after-ages ſhall remember the juſt, they will bleſs them and highly eſteem them; but the name and credit of wicked men ſhall conſume as a rotten thing to nothing.

Memoria veſtra i.e. quicquid in vobis memorabile eſt, ut opes, dignitas, fama, ſplendor & vita, nihil aliud eſt quã cinis omnia in cinerẽ & nihilũ redigẽda ut vana &c. Merc.

Taking their remembrance for that which was moſt memorable in them, We may Obſerve,

That the beſt things, thoſe things which are moſt remarkable and memorable in man, are but vain, and ſubject to a ſudden decay.

What men lay by, and eſteem as a monument to poſterity, or as a memorial to preſerve their names to all generations, how often is it ſcattered like aſhes in the air, or ſpilt like water upon the ground, which cannot be gathered up? Men for their remembrance, uſe to ſet up the moſt laſting materials, pillars of marble, or Pyramides of ſtone. It is ſaid of Abſolom, that he in his life time had taken and reared up for himſelf a pillar, and he called it after his own name, becauſe he had no ſon to keep his name in remembrance: Yet that remembrance of his, proved like aſhes, and ſo will all that whatſoever it is, which vain men frame or fancy to themſelves to make them memorable and renowned among poſterity or ſucceeding ages. Your remembrances are like unto aſhes; which will receive a clearer evidence when I have a little opened the latter clauſe of this verſe.

And your bodies to bodies of clay.

That is, As aſhes are a fit parable or ſimilitude to ſhadow out all the permanency or excellency of your remembrances, ſo a body or a heap of clay, is a ſufficient parable or ſimilitude of all the value and dignity of your bodies.

Your bodies.] The word (Gab) which we tranſlate body, ſignifies any thing, which is high, lifted up and eminent, or the upper and ſuperiour part of any thing. It is ſaid (John 19. 13.) that Pilate ſate down in the judgement-ſeat, in a place that is called in the Hebrew, Gabbatha, Seats of judgement are erected and ſet up in eminent places, ces, that ſo the Judge may be in the peoples view. According to which acceptation of the word, the meaning riſes thus, That which is higheſt in you, your greateſt elevations, are like to a lump of clay. And ſo the oppoſition ſtands fair between this and the former verſe; there Job tells his friends, that the excellency of God may juſtly make them afraid. But what is your excellency? As your remembrances, or whatſoever is moſt memorable in you are like unto aſhes, ſo all your excellencies, compared with the excellency of God, are but like a clod of clay.

Hence Obſerve, That which is moſt high and excellent in man, compared with the excellency of God, is but like to dirt or clay.

Quicquid in vobis eſt maxime memorabile & altum, ſi cum Deo cōparabitur nihil eſt. Jun. Eminentiæ veſtræ dignæ ſunt, quæ ad quiſquiliarū & luti cumulos projiciantur. Bold.

All the dignities and eminencies of man are but fit to be ſwept to the dunghill when God is named. When Abraham a Prince, and a great one too, ſtood before the Lord, he hath no valuation for himſelf but by duſt and aſhes, Gen. 18.27. We cannot but have low thoughts of our ſelves (what worldly and carnal heights ſoever we are in) when we truly remember the high God. There are three things upon which many men raiſe themſelves very high, even to think themſelves like the moſt High, as it is ſaid of Lucifer. Firſt, Their riches. Riches are not only a ſtrong but a high Tower; this eminency is moſt like to clay, yea it is an eminency in clay or thick clay, as the Prophet ſpeaketh (Hab. 2.) Secondly, Men think themſelves very high if they get upon the pinacle of honour, from this height they look down upon, and deſpiſe all as underlings; yet this is but like clay too, how often have the greateſt earthly honours been laid in the duſt? Thirdly, Others are lifted up with their natural wiſdom, their learning, parts and gifts. They who contemn riches and honour, are yet puffed up with a conceit of their inward endowments: yet as God will deſtroy all the wiſdom of this world, ſo the wiſdom of the beſt men in the world is fooliſhneſs compared to God. If ſome one creature hath ſuch an excelling excellency, that other excellent creatures (as the Stars to the Sun) have no excellency in the preſence of it, how much more are all created excellencies ſwallowed up at the thought of that excellency which is in God? muſt not all go for clay and aſhes, when we have once mentioned him?

Gab eſt extātia clypei. Umbones veſtri i.e. argumenta veſtra ſunt fragilia. Iſta quæ vos ut diligēter obſervata commemoratis, & in me tanquam certa quædā axiomata decenatis, nō ſunt ſolidiora quā cinis, et lutea propugnacula. Bez.

Further, The word ſignifies alſo the boſſes of a buckler (Job 15.27.) becauſe boſſes are the moſt eminent part of a buckler, being ſet out for the ornament of it. Thus ſome tranſlate it here, The boſſes of your bucklers, or your bucklers are like bucklers of clay. But what was the buckler of Jobs friends? their buckler was their arguments and their reaſons, which they urged againſt Job. Arguments are amongſt Diſputants, their weapons, their ſword and buckler. The third interpretation of the former clauſe, and this, comply fairly, Your remembrances, that is, the things you have remembred to or againſt me are like unto aſhes, and Your bucklers, that is, your arguments and objections are like unto clay, weak and poor, however you think they are ſtrong, impregnable and unanſwerable. The Apoſtle uſeth a ſimilitude which may give ſome light to this (1 Cor. 3.12.) where he compares ſound doctrine to gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones, but corrupt doctrine, to wood, hay, ſtubble.

Et corpora veſtra corporibus luteis, i.e. acervis luteis. Redigentur in lu ū cervices veſtri. Vulg.

Thirdly, We tranſlate, Your bodies, ſo the word ſignifies by a Trope, becauſe the body of man ſtands upright, and is lifted up: Man doth not go groveling upon or toward the ground as a beaſt goeth, but he hath an erect figure and form, therefore his body is called Gab, that is, lifted, or raiſed up. Others render it by a part of the body, the back or the neck: So the Vulgar, Your necks which are lifted up ſhall be brought down to the clay. But I rather keep to our rendring of the word, by the whole body, then by a part or member of it; As if Job had ſaid, Your bodies, which in regard of the figure and frame of them are lifted up, as if they did ſcorn the earth, are yet but pieces of earth and clods of clay; you trample upon earth and clay as things below you, yet you are no better then the things you trample upon, even earth and clay: and to them theſe bodies of yours muſt ſhortly be reduced and reſolved into as their firſt principles, though now you look big upon me and carry it high.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, The body of man, how ſtrong, how beautiful ſoever, is but a piece of earth and clay.

Firſt, It is clay in regard of the baſeneſs and meanneſs of it: earth is the meaneſt of the elements, the loweſt and worſt of all, ſo is the body the meaneſt part of man.

Secondly, It is clay in regard of the brickleneſs of it, it breaks quickly like a Potters veſſel.

But it may be ſaid, Why doth Job ſpeak thus to his friends? Why doth he tell them that their bodies are bodies of clay? Did not they know that before? Need any man be told that his body is formed out of the earth, and that it turneth to the earth again? Eſpecially needed theſe friends of Job, who were men of ſuch knowledge and wiſdom, yea of holineſs too, needed they to be taught that their bodies were bodies of clay?

I anſwer, We may know many things which we are not affected with. There is a twofold knowledge of things: There is a knowing of things in the notion, or a ſpeculative knowledge; and there is a knowing of things in the application, or a practical knowledge of them. Doubtleſs they knew this ſpeculatively, but Job thought they did not know it practically. They would never (as he ſuppoſed) have been ſo ſtiff towards him, if they had remembred that themſelves were clay. A man hath ſome knowledge wherein he differeth little from a beaſt, which hath no knowledge. The Prophet teacheth this for truth, (Jer. 10.14.) Every man is brutiſh in his knowledge. A ſtrange ſpeech; it might rather be ſaid, that every man is brutiſh in his ignorance; though a beaſt cannot properly be called ignorant, yet a beaſt hath no knowledge: How is it then that he ſaith, every man is brutiſh in his knowledge? It is becauſe though every man knows that which a beaſt cannot, yet he doth not make that improvement of it which a man (eſpecially which a Saint) ſhould and might. This is a kind of brutiſhneſs in knowledge: And when he ſaith, Every man is brutiſh in his knowledge, it is a very large word, for are godly men brutiſh in their knowledge? ſurely no; then every man here, is every wicked man, and all ſuch are brutiſh in their knowledge. Though a wicked man knoweth that his body is a body of clay, though he knoweth there is a God, and a Chriſt, and if you ſpeak to him of theſe things, he will ſay, he knows them as well as you, yet he is brutiſh in the knowledge he hath of them all. Every wicked man is ſo; yea in every thing he knoweth and doth, he is brutiſh. I conceive alſo that place of the Prophet may take in godly men, in a mitigated ſenſe, even they are brutiſh in their knowledge; Why? becauſe they do not improve their knowledge to that height which they might, they do not that good, nor raiſe that glory to God by their knowledge, which the talents they are entruſted with, call for. The Apoſtle Jude concludes of wicked men, That which they know naturally, in that like brute beaſts they corrupt themſelves: and I may ſay, what the Saints know ſpiritually, if they corrupt themſelves, or are corrupted in any of that knowledge, ſo far they know but like brute beaſts: Therefore though this is a common leſſon, yet it is but need to preſs it upon all, as Job here doth: It is not without cauſe that men are told that their bodies are bodies of clay. It is no eaſie matter to know our ſelves in thoſe things which are eaſily known. It is a good determination which one hath made concerning knowledge: Firſt, He that knoweth not what he ſhould, is a beaſt among men. Secondly, He that knoweth no more then needs muſt, is a man among beaſts. Thirdly, He that knoweth all that he may know, is as a God among men: This third muſt be taken thus: He that knoweth all objects knowable within the compaſs of man, and he that beateth out the knowledge of thoſe objects to the full, making the higheſt improvement of them, this man is as a God among men: and he may well be called ſo, ſeeing there are very few who ever arrived to this height about any one object of knowledge, and (I believe) never any one attained it in reference unto all.

Now while we find Job teaching this plain piece of knowledge, that our bodies are bodies of clay, it teacheth us three Leſſons.

Firſt, That man is a proud piece of fleſh, and therefore hath need to be told that he is but clay.

Secondly, That pride ariſeth either from ignorance, or forgetfulneſs of what we are.

David deſired the Lord to teach him how frail he was, Pſal. 39. Though David was a very holy and a knowing man, yet he knew not that plain point. Some think it ſo common a truth that no man needs be taught that man is mortal. One great reaſon why immortality is ſo little looked after, is becauſe our mortality is ſo little looked into. We know little either of the power of God, or of the weakneſs of man; and many who have ſome knowledge of theſe cannot be ſaid to make any uſe of them: their knowledge lies mouldring by the walls, they do not act the things they know; ſuch knowledge leaveth a man in a worſe condition then ignorance doth. Beſides, a man that forgets what he is, will be as proud as he that knows not what he is: Forgetfulneſs is a temporary ignorance: how much ſoever any man knows, yet he can uſe no more then he remembers, and 'tis ſeldom that he uſeth all that.

Thirdly, The meaneſt things in the world, are parables or ſimilitudes, fit to ſet forth what the outward ſtate of man is.

What the work of God is upon the ſoul, is not before us now. That's precious indeed both for matter and form, there are engravings and ſtamps upon the ſoul of a glorious excellency: But (I ſay) take man in his outſide, and then the meaneſt and pooreſt things in the world are parables of man, our bodies are like bodies of clay. The Apoſtle Peter calleth his body an earthly tabernacle, (2 Pet. 1. 13.) I know I muſt ſhortly lay down my earthly tabernacle: The body is a tabernacle, and that is an uncertain dwelling, it is not built as an houſe that hath foundations. And if you call it an houſe, yet it is not a houſe of marble, but of clay, Job 4. 19. Other Scriptures call it, an earthen veſſel, (2 Cor. 4. 7.) We have this treaſure (ſaith the Apoſtle, but it is) in earthen veſſels. They had the treaſure of all Goſpel truths, of Goſpel graces and of Goſpel gifts; theſe precious treaſures they carried about with them, but all in earthen veſſels: Yea, the body of man is not only called earthen, but whole man is called earth, and as if he could never be called earth enough, he is called earth three times over in one verſe, (Jer. 22. 29.) O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord: Which words, though they may well, and (poſſibly) moſt properly in that place be taken as an appeal (uſual in Scripture) to the whole body of the earth, yet they have a clear truth, as applyed to the bodies of men made of earth; all men on earth have earthen bodies, and moſt men have earthen mindes too, and ſo very earth, or earth, earth, earth, nothing but earth. It is reported in the French Hiſtory, that when an old Counſellor would needs depart the Court, and retire himſelf to a private life, the King deſired him to leave him his advice in ſome general rules, what to do in the government of the kingdom; at which motion he took a fair Paper, and wrote upon the top of the leaf, moderation, and in the middle of the leaf, moderation, and at the bottom of the leaf, moderation: His meaning was, as if he had ſaid to that King, Sir, if you would keep your kingdom quiet, carry the reins of your government moderately quite through. So here, if the queſtion ſhould be, what is man? and a blank paper were preſented me to ſet down Jobs opinion of him, I muſt write on the top of the leaf, earth, in the middle, earth, at the bottom earth: His remembrances are like unto aſhes, and his body to a body of clay.

Job having taken his friends down by theſe arguments, and cooled their ſpirits, thinks now they may be dealt withal, and therefore concludes,

Verſ. 13. Hold your peace, let me alone that I may ſpeak, and let come on me what will.

From the connection of theſe words, We may Obſerve,

That a man when he is humbled, is in a good temper to hear counſel.

Your bodies are bodies of clay, now, Let me alone, hold your peace that I may ſpeak; If you attend your own condition, you will the better attend my counſel. Pride of heart ſtoppeth the ear. They who have high thoughts of themſelves, think meanly of what is ſaid unto them by others. Were men low in their own eyes, they would embrace every advice that hath truth and holineſs in it.

At the fifth verſe Job ſaid, O that you would altogether hold your peace; here he turns his wiſh into a charge.

Hold your peace, let me alone that I may ſpeak.

But doth Job, as many, who becauſe they love to hear themſelves ſpeak, deſire others to hold their peace? Doth Job ſpeak thus becauſe he would have all the talk? Or becauſe he was reſolved to have the laſt word?

Job's modeſty and humbleneſs of mind may acquit him from ſuch imputations. This his forwardneſs to ſpeak, and importunity for audience, did both ariſe, not from his own deſire to ſpeak, but from a willingneſs to rectifie what his friends had ſpoken amiſs, and to ſet himſelf right in their opinions: or he adviſes them to hold their peace, leſt by ſpeaking as they had done, they ſhould loſe their peace. Many break not only the outward peace of others, but the inward peace of their own ſouls, becauſe they cannot (in this ſenſe) hold their peace. There might be much more peace then there is, in our hearts, in our houſes, in the Commonwealth, in the Church, if we could teach our tongues to hold their peace, when it is unſeaſonable to ſpeak. There is a time to be ſilent and a time to ſpeak; could we time our tongues well, how well might we time our actions; becauſe our words are ſo unruly, therefore our wayes are ſo uneven. Job ſaw it was time for his friends to hold their peace, and time for him to ſpeak: Therefore he ſaith, Hold your peace, let me alone that I may ſpeak.

But why doth Job add, Let come on me what will. A ſtrange kind of ſpeech. Doth it become a man to be ſo reſolute, or rather (as the words at firſt view import) ſo deſperate? Is not here the voice of deſperation? Would any wiſe man ſpeak ſo?

Let come on me what will.

The Vulgar tranſlateth this part of the verſe thus, Hold your peace that I may ſpeak whatſoever my mind ſuggeſteth to me, or Hold your peace, let me ſpeak whatſoever comes into my mind; as if Job would ſpeak any thing that came next, or floated uppermoſt in his phancy, ſo ſome gloſs the interpretation of the Vulgar, which is indeed diſhonourable to ſuppoſe of him. Shall we think that he cared not how he ſpake, who had ſo often reproved his friends for ſpeaking careleſly? Would he run headlong into that errour, which he had ſo ſeverely reprehended?

Let come upon me what will.] The word [Let come] ſignifies to paſs over, or paſs upon; ſo then, I will ſpeak, let what will paſs upon me, is no more but this, let what cenſure ſoever paſs upon me, cenſure me how you will, I will ſpeak, or I will ſpeak how ever you take it.

Or, It may refer to the determination of God, I will ſpeak and ſtand to his ſentence, let him paſs what judgement he pleaſeth concerning me, I am reſolved to maintain my cauſe: as we ſay in our language, when we are reſolved to do a thing, Fall back or fall edge I will do it.

Loquar & tranſeat ſuper me quid vis. Vatab. Quocunq; res ſit caſura pro me loquar. Bez. Loquar meo periculo quicquid tandē mihi ſit eventurū.

Job in theſe words removeth a ſecond pretence which his friends made for what they had ſpoken.

Firſt, They ſaid, they did all for the glory of God, and to maintain his juſtice. As to that, he told them roundly before, that God needed none of their patronage, Will you ſpeak wickedly for God? will you talk deceitfully for him? He deſires not your lies to defend and uphold his cauſe.

There was a ſecond thing which his friends held forth as a ground of their counſels, and that was the tender care and compaſſion which they had of Job himſelf, leſt going on thus complaining, yea as they thought, thus blaſpheming, the Lord ſhould bring ſomewhat worſe, then ever yet he had brought upon him. As Job therefore takes off the former pretence before, ſo he takes off this here: As if he had ſaid, You ſeem to be very tender of me, leſt God ſhould lay ſome further judgement upon me for maintaining my integrity, but I will ſpeak, come of it what will, at my peril be it, I will bear all the blame my ſelf, take you no care, have you but patience to hear me ſpeak, let all the trouble that may enſue be on my ſcore, I will be accountable to God for it. 'Tis true, Job being provoked ſpeaks this with ſome heat, and was deſirous rather to caſt himſelf wholly upon God then to hear his friends any longer.

Ego de meipſo rationē reddā Deo & quicquid peccavero luā: Interim non ſine ſtomacho hoc dicit, ſed irritatus à ſociis & domino ſe malens committere quā tales nugas audire. Merc.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, An upright heart is very reſolute; I will ſpeak, and let come to me what will.

There is nothing that can make a man afraid, who is not afraid of himſelf. The righteous is bold as a Lyon. As one of the ancient Martyrs ſpake when his perſecutors terrified him with threatnings, There is nothing (ſaith he) of things viſible, nothing of things inviſible, that I fear; I will ſtand to my profeſſion of the Name of Chriſt, and contend earneſtly for the Faith once delivered to the Saints, let come on't what will. It is ſaid of Luther, when he was to go to the Meeting at Worms, that being informed by his friends that he had many enemies lying in wait to ruine him, Tell me not of it (ſaith he) for I will go, though there be as many Devils to aſſault me as there be tiles upon the houſes. Thus the Apoſtle Paul (Acts 21. 10.) when ſome did weep and mourn over him, becauſe it was propheſied that he ſhould be bound at Jeruſalem; Agabus had bound himſelf with Paul's girdle, and ſaid, So ſhall the Jews at Jeruſalem bind the man that owneth this girdle; and thereupon they intreated him to forbear going up: Forbear? (ſaith he) No, I will go to Jeruſalem, I am ready, not to be bound only at Jeruſalem, but to dye there for the Name of the Lord Jeſus: I'le put it to a venture. When once Heſters heart was ſet upon it to engage for the deliverance of the Jews, ſhe would on, I will go in to the King, which is not according to the Law (I know I run an hazard) and if I periſh, I periſh: I am upon a good ground, and in a good cauſe, though I fail in ſome outward formalities, yet I will venture. Thus will an upright heart ſpeak, thus will an upright heart do: An upright heart will both ſpeak and do, let come on it what will; let the world be pleaſed or diſpleaſed; let the world frown or ſmile; let the world be angry or imbrace. And it is the ſame phraſe in the Hebrew which we have (2 Sam. 18. 23.) when Ahimaaz would go and carry the tidings of Abſalom's death unto David (Joab had ſent Cuſhi with the meſſage before, yet Ahimaaz would needs run after him) Let me, I pray thee, (ſaith he to Joab) run after Cuſhi: And Joab ſaid, wherefore wilt thou run my ſon, ſeeing thou haſt no tidings ready? But howſoever (ſaid he) let me run; I have a mind to carry this meſſage howſoever; that is, Let come on me what will. Even ſo ſaith the ſoul in its uprightneſs and reſolvedneſs upon the wayes of God, though checkt with why would you do ſo? Howſoever let me go, though you think it is to no purpoſe, yet let me go on: Let come of it what will, I reſign the iſſue wholly to God.

ויהי־מה
Et ſic quicquid.

Secondly, When Job ſpeaks thus, Let come on it what will, you muſt know he had very good ground for what he ſpake, he knew whom he truſted; and truſt him he would, though he ſlew him, as we ſhall hear him profeſſing with his next breath.

Hence Note, An upright heart never feareth any hurt from God.

You think I am running upon the ſpears point, even upon the diſpleaſure of God; well, I'le try that; Let come on it what will, I have not one jealous thought of God: As one in ſickneſs and pain, ready to dye, ſeeing his friends about him mourn, ſaid, Do not trouble your ſelves, I know God will do me no hurt. Job was willing to bear any thing at Gods hand, even a ſlaying, and yet he believed he ſhould not bear the weight of his little finger (as we ſay) upon the account of reproof. Job was not deſperate, nor did he defie or dare God, as wicked men uſe to do: tell them of hell, they care not for hell; tell them God will be angry, they regard not his anger. A gracious heart cannot ſlight, and would not for a world willingly incur the leaſt diſpleaſure, or ſo much as a frown from God; a frown from God would go to his very heart. But he can ſpeak out of the height of his confidence, that in any juſt thing he will on, and bear all the blame which God will lay upon him, being well aſſured, that God will lay no blame upon him at all from his anger or juſtice, though in his wiſe providence, he ſhould lay a multitude of the ſoreſt afflictions upon him.

Non deſperati verba ſunt, ſed bene potius ſperantis de Dei ope quia mox ſuæ ſpei rationem reddit. Merc.

But what is it which makes the Saints ſo reſolute with God, that they fear not any hurt from God?

How can they fear any hurt from God, when they have ſo many promiſes of good from God? God hath not ſpoken one hard word againſt them all the Bible over; nor will he bear it that any ſhould ſpeak any thing but good concerning them. Say to the righteous, it ſhall be well with him. The Apoſtle aſſures us, That the Law (namely in the threatnings of it) is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawleſs and diſobedient, for the ungodly, and for ſinners, &c. The Law was not ſet to bring any of the puniſhments which are threatned there upon the righteous and holy: The godly man needs not fear any hurt from the Law, becauſe the Law is not made to puniſh or to condemn a righteous man, though it be ſet to guide and order the converſation of a righteous man: But the Law is made for the wicked, they have cauſe to fear all the terrors of it, and God will at laſt open the treaſury of his wrath, and bring out all the weapons of his indignation that lye there, and ſtrike them through. Now if the Saints fear not the threatnings of the Law, what need they fear any thing? Other parts of the word are full of their conſolations: Yea whatſoever was written heretofore, was written for their learning, that they through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope, and ſo reſt their ſouls ſweetly in the arms of God, as in the arms of a tender Father. Why ſhould they be afraid of any evil from God, who hath promiſed them ſo much good? Yea, that all ſhall work together for good to them: May not this make any good man ſay confidently, I will do my duty, come on it what will: What can come of it but good? becauſe the Lord hath ſaid, all ſhall work together for good; though happily I ſhall have a croſs, it will be a good; though the Lord leave me to the cruel dealings of men, it will be good. But eſpecially while we look up and conſider what Jeſus Chriſt hath done, what Chriſt hath ſuffered, what Chriſt hath undertaken, and ſtands engaged in on their behalf, they may well put themſelves upon God, and appeal not only to his mercy, but ſtand to the utmoſt of his juſtice. They may expect hard meaſure from men (and the beſt is, they can do well enough, let men do their worſt) but as for all the hard meaſure they ſhall receive from God, I dare (as we ſay in our common ſpeech) excuſe them for a penny; I may ſay to any upright and faithful ſoul, ſuch an one as Job was, Go on, let come on it what will, I will bear all the chidings, yea all the ſmart thou ſhalt ever hear or feel from God.

Job having by theſe Arguments, taken from the excellency of God, and his Friends baſeneſs, prepared their minds to attention, and taken upon him a reſolution to ſpeak, ſpeaks home in the next words, Wherefore do I take my fleſh in my teeth, &c.

VERS. 14, 15, 16.

Wherefore do I take my fleſh in my teeth, and put my life in mine hand?

Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him; but I will maintain mine own wayes before him.

He alſo ſhall be my ſalvation, for an hypocrite ſhall not come before him.

JOB reſolved to ſpeak in the former verſe, and here he ſpeaks indeed. But doth he not bite his own tongue? Or rather, Doth not his tongue bite him? while he ſaith, Wherefore do I take my fleſh in my teeth? It is the Apoſtles great Axiome, founded in the Laws of Nature (Eph. 5. 29.) No man ever hated his own fleſh, but loveth and cheriſheth it, &c. Job ſpeaks as if he hated, or were cruel to his own fleſh; Wherefore do I take my fleſh in my teeth, &c? But if we inquire into this ſpeech, we ſhall find it an Argument, not of any hatred againſt himſelf, but of abundant love to, and faith in God.

The words in general ſet forth the temper and ſtate of Job's ſpirit, or in what frame of heart he ſtood ready to ſpeak unto God, having before reſolved to ſpeak: As if he had ſaid, I am far enough from rage, or from deſpair; I am neither out of my wits, nor out of my hopes; I come to plead my cauſe with God, having my heart fill'd with ſtrong confidence in God, reſting and repoſing my ſelf upon him, and giving all that I have or am unto him: Let me ſpeak (ſaith he in the former verſe) and let come on me what will; at my peril be it; I will truſt in God. And he ſeems to explain himſelf here; Do not think that I mean to tear my fleſh, and to run violently upon my own ruine, when I ſaid, let come on me what will; no, this was not the language either of fury or of deſpair, but of faith and confidence; (for as it follows) though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him.

Wherefore do I take my fleſh in my teeth?

Firſt, There are ſome who conceive, that Job being in a commotion of ſpirit, upon ſome ſuggeſtion of the Devil to deſpair, and to give up all for loſt, did therefore indeed tear his own fleſh, and ſeek to caſt away his life; to which Job, recalling himſelf, anſwereth here, Wherefore do I take my fleſh in my teeth, and put my life in mine hand? As if he ſhould have ſaid, O thou enemy, Satan, why doſt thou tempt me thus? Why doſt thou put me upon deſpairing thoughts? Why wouldſt thou have me let go my hold of God? Why doſt thou provoke me to carry my ſelf as a mad man, tearing my fleſh with my teeth, and even throwing my life out of my hand? This carrieth a fair ſence, ſuppoſing ſuch a temptation was upon him; and indeed there is no temptation ſo black and devil like, but we may ſuppoſe the Devil preſenting it to this afflicted ſoul.

Aliqui ſuſpicantur Jobum reſpondentem & repugnantem hoſti interius aliquid, inſtillanti & ad ſe lacerandum ſtimulanti. Pined.

Secondly, The words may be expounded as an inquiry after the reaſon, or cauſe, why he indured ſuch grievous afflictions: Wherefore do I take my fleſh in my teeth, and put my life in mine hand? What's the matter that I am caſt into ſuch extremities, and put upon ſuch grievous tryals as I am at this time? Wherefore am I not only counſell'd, but almoſt conſtrained by my bodily pains, and the troubles of my ſpirit, to ſeek eaſe in tearing mine own fleſh, and in laying violent hands upon my body? If my geſtures or ſpeeches are unuſual, ſo are my ſorrows; the ſence of what I ſuffer even makes me do I know not what, or what I know I ſhould not do. Wherefore do I take my fleſh, &c? That's a ſecond interpretation, taken from the impatient poſtures of thoſe who are in great afflictions. Such ſometimes rend and tear their garments, ſo did Job in the beginning of this book, when he heard the firſt news of his ſad calamities, yea ſuch will ſometimes tear or bite their own fleſh, and gnaw their tongues. 'Tis ſaid, that when the fifth Angel poured out his vial upon the ſeat of the beaſt, that his kingdom was full of darkneſs (that is, of trouble) and they gnawed their tongues for pain (Rev. 16. 10.) They gnaw their tongues when they are puniſhed, who never ſmite upon their thighs, nor are pricked at the heart, becauſe they have ſinned.

Moris eſt afflictis & indignabundis veſtes & membra lacerare. Merc.

Thirdly, Others interpret the words as a denial of impatience, which his Friends had often objected againſt him: As if he had ſaid, You think that I carry my ſelf as a man that is deſperate, tearing my fleſh, &c. but you are much deceived in me; wherefore ſhould I do a thing ſo unbecoming one that truſts in God, as I do? I truſt in God; yea, though he ſhould ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him; I complain indeed of my own afflictions, ſenſe of pain cauſeth me to doe ſo, but I do not complain againſt God, my faith and truſt in him will not let me do ſo. Some conceive, that here Job anſwers the words of Eliphaz at the beginning of the fifth Chapter (ver. 2.) Wrath killeth the fooliſh man, and envy ſlayeth the ſilly one; wicked fooliſh men are ſo envious and unquiet in their ſpirits, that they even kill themſelves with vexation; but why ſhould I, what reaſon have I, who am aſſured of the good will of God to me, and am reſolved to ſubmit to his good pleaſure? what reaſon have I to tear my fleſh, or throw my life out of my hand?

Exiſtimatis me deſperantis inſtar mihi velle mortem conſciſcere, at quorſum ego me lacerem, & mihi ipſi vitam eripiam? Sanct.

There is a fourth interpretation, that Job in this query hath reference to his own weakneſs and leanneſs, to the decay of his ſtrength and fleſh; Wherefore do I take my fleſh in my teeth? As if he ſhould have ſaid, I am ſo waſted and conſumed, ſo far ſpent, that all the fleſh I have will ſcarce make a morſel, a man may take it up in his teeth at once. Thus it is expounded by that (chap. 19. 20.) I am eſcaped with the skin of my teeth; I am nothing but skin and bones. So, Wherefore do I take my fleſh in my teeth? Why am I brought thus low, thus lean? all my fleſh will ſcarce make one mouth-full.

נשא Eſt tollere, levare. Quare levo dentibus meis carnes meas? q. d. Ita confectus ſum, ut quantus ego ſum levare dentibus poſſim, & quaſi uno bolo devorari. Pined.

Laſtly, Some render, not, Wherefore do I, but, Wherefore ſhould I take my fleſh in my teeth? That is, wherefore ſhould I be cruel to my ſelf? You think I utterly neglect my ſelf, and have given up all my hopes; but I have not, I am not come to that paſs yet; and I firmly believe I never ſhall. It is bad enough when we eat and devour one another; but it notes the worſt of conditions, when we devour and eat up our ſelves. It is ſaid of the fool (Eccleſ. 4. 5.) He foldeth his hands together, and eateth his own fleſh. Who is this fool? and, how doth the fool eat his own fleſh? By the fool (in this place) we are to underſtand the ſluggard, or the ſlothful man; Folded hands are the emblem of idleneſs: The idle man, or the ſluggard, foldeth his hands together; that is, he will not work, he will take no pains: Now he that will not labour, ſaith the Apoſtle, 2 Theſ. 3. Neither let him eat. The ſluggard will not labour, and therefore he eateth his own fleſh, having nothing elſe to eat. But doth the ſluggard indeed feed upon his own fleſh? Is he a ſelf-Canibal? will he indure the pain of eating his own fleſh, who will not take the pains to get himſelf bread to eat? No, but he is ſaid to eat his own fleſh, becauſe while he favours himſelf too much, he is cruel to himſelf, he ſtarves himſelf; hunger eats his fleſh, becauſe he hath nothing to ſatisfie his hunger; or he is ſaid to eat his own fleſh, becauſe through ſloth, and the neglect of his calling, he is brought into want, and into ſuch want, that if he will eat, he muſt eat his own fleſh, for he hath got neither boyld nor roaſt, neither wet nor dry to ſuſtain his life. Or laſtly, he may be ſaid to eat his fleſh, while he foldeth his hands, becauſe he grows vext and paſſionate againſt himſelf, when he ſees into what ſtraits and bonds his lazy folded hands have brought him. He is a fool indeed, that thinks folded hands will either fill his belly with meat, or his mind with content. So (Iſa. 9. 20.) when the Prophet deſcribeth the trouble of a people under the wrath of God, he ſhews, that at laſt they ſhall grow cruel to themſelves, They ſhall eat every man the fleſh of his own arm; that is, they ſhall be ſo forgetful of the Laws of nature and friendſhip, that they ſhall either vex their neareſt friends, as he ſpeaks in the former verſe, No man ſhall ſpare his brother; or they ſhall vex themſelves, who are nearer then any friend; no man ſhall ſpare his own fleſh. Thus the Lord threatned the oppreſſors of his people, that he would at laſt make them feed upon their own fleſh, and drunken with their own blood (Iſa. 49. 26.) They who have been cruel againſt his ſervants, ſhall be unnatural to themſelves; they ſhall either deſtroy and vex one another, or every man ſhall deſtroy and vex himſelf, till they are all utterly conſumed. Job ſees no reaſon, why he ſhould do what ſuch as theſe do for want of faith. Wherefore ſhould I take my fleſh in my teeth? I know my duty is to love and take care of my ſelf; and I know God loves and takes care of me too. Some ſelf-love is a vertue in all, a grace in ſome, it being the meaſure of that love we ow unto others, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf. And as a man is bound to take a ſpecial care of all thoſe (within his compaſs) whom God loves, ſo he ought to be much more careful of himſelf, who hath received any evidence that God loves him: And hence it is (according to this expoſition) that Job ſaith, Wherefore do I, or, ſhould I take my fleſh in my teeth? Shall I who have received ſo much kindneſs from God, and (notwithſtanding theſe wounds) ſhall receive more, ſhall I, ſhall ſuch a one as I be unkind to my ſelf?

En anima mea ſtat ſuper labia mea ſtatim egreſſura videorque ſolis meis dentibus reliquam totius corporis carnem ſuſtentare. Bold. Lacerare carnes, &c. eſt ſeipſum affligere.

Laſtly, Theſe words (I conceive) carry in them a ſelf-reproof: As if Job perceiving his ſpirit growing ſomewhat unquiet and unſetled, and himſelf ready to break out into paſſionate geſtures, under the preſſure of his continual troubles, did thus chide and rebuke down theſe commotions, Wherefore do I take my fleſh in my teeth? Why am I thus impatient? O my ſoul, doth this become thee? or doſt thou now walk by that rule of obedience which thou art to learn by the things which thou ſuffereſt? Is this the acting of a patient man? Is this to ſubmit to the hand and rod of a father? In this ſence David (upon the apprehenſion of ſome undue ſtrivings and ſtrugglings in his ſpirit) takes himſelf to task, ſchools and catechiſes his ſoul with ſerious queſtions (Pſal. 42. 11.) Why art thou caſt down, O my ſoul? why art thou diſquieted within me? hope thou in God. David after theſe chidings bids his ſoul hope in God; and Job after theſe chidings makes higheſt profeſſions of his hope in God, Wherefore do I take my fleſh in my teeth, &c.? Though he ſlay me, yet I will truſt in him.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, That in great afflictions a man is apt to afflict himſelf, and to add to his own afflictions.

When we have more upon us then we are well able to bear, we uſually put more weight upon our ſelves. We ſcarce feel leſſer burdens at all, and great ones we feel too much. When God ſmites us, we are ready to tear our ſelves.

Secondly, Conſider the ground of this, why is it that men (as this phraſe importeth) afflict themſelves when they are afflicted? It is becauſe they hope to find ſome eaſe in it.

Ut qui in cruciantibus carnes ſuas mordent allevari ſe ſentiunt, ſic ego dum hæc loquor. Chryſoſt.

Hence Note, That a pain of our own adding, ſeems to leſſen our received pains.

And indeed it doth ſomewhat draw the mind from thinking of what it feeleth: Every trouble is the leſs to us, by how much we mind it the leſs; and if we could not mind it at all, it would be no trouble to us at all. For this reaſon, in extremity of pain, as in the Stone, Gout, Tooth-ach, men uſually divert and turn off their thoughts, as much as they can, from what they feel, by diſcourſe, and the company of friends; yea, we ſhall ſee them ſometimes bite their lips, or their finger; ſuch pain added to pain, gives ſome mitigation of pain.

Thirdly Note, It is ſinful to be active in our own miſeries, or to afflict our ſelves.

Wherefore ſhould I take my fleſh in my teeth? It is unnatural to do ſo. It is unnatural to take the fleſh of others in our teeth, more to take our own; every man is nearer to himſelf then to any other: therefore a ſin committed againſt our ſelves, is greater; becauſe we ſin againſt a nearer engagement. We ought to ſuffer chearfully from the hand of God or man, but we muſt not ſuffer from our own. No man muſt be his own carver, either in his comforts, or in his ſorrows. We muſt let God alone to cut out, and meaſure our portion of both. Wherefore do I take my fleſh in my teeth?

Fourthly Obſerve, A godly man will not take his own part, nor bear with himſelf, when he doth evil, or goes beſide the rule, whether in active or paſſive obedience.

He is willing to receive counſel or reproof from others; and he is upon all diſcoveries of the naughtineſs of his heart, his own reprover: he uſually caſts the firſt ſtone at his ſin with his own hand, and blames himſelf more then any other man can, for his own ſecret diſtempers, or outward miſcarriages. A carnal heart doth what it can to excuſe its ſin, or to flatter himſelf in it: but a holy heart doth both aggravate and rebuke its own ſin: Wherefore am I ſo vain, ſo earthly? Why am I ſo proud, and ſo impatient? David needed no man to accuſe him of his ſinful envy at the proſperity of the wicked, he layes on load upon himſelf (Pſal. 73. 22.) So fooliſh was I and ignorant, even as a beaſt before thee. He once indeed (being under a deſertion) wanted a Nathan to bring his ſin home to his conſcience; but when he was come to himſelf, he could be his own Nathan: As for me (ſaith he, ver. 2.) my feet were almoſt gone: Why was I thus fooliſh? So Job here, Why am I thus unquiet? Wherefore do I take my fleſh in my teeth, &c?

And put my life in mine hand?

These words have the ſame meaning in general with the former. I ſhall only open the importance of the phraſe.

Firſt, Putting the life in the hand, is interpreted for a ſolicitous care of life: As if he had ſaid, Wherefore do I keep life ſo cloſe, as if I were loath to part with it? If God ſlay me I will truſt in him. What need I take ſo much care of this life, to hold it in my hand? Let it go, I know it ſhall be well enough with me; if I loſe this life, I ſhall find a better; for I believe in God. When a man would preſerve and keep a thing ſafe, he carries it in his hand; he will not lay it out of his hand. And that is one reaſon why the Saints are ſaid to be in the hand of God, and to reſign themſelves into his hand; Into thine hand do I commit my ſpirit: It is their deſire to be in the hand of God; and Chriſt aſſureth us (John 10.) that we being in his Fathers hand, none can take us out. Holy Job knew his life, his ſpiritual life was in the hand of God, and that his going out of this natural life was but a paſſage to eternal life: Wherefore then (according to this expoſition) ſhould he ſo ſolicitouſly put his life into his own hand? We need not fear to part with that which the grace of God hath found.

Animam meam ſolicitus cuſtodio, non ſecus ac rem pretioſiſſimā, quam nuſquam tutò deponere, nec ulli credere audemus. Pined.

Secondly, Others underſtand by life, the whole man; and ſo the putting of his life in his hand, notes bodily infirmity; as if being weak with ſickneſs, he was forced to lean upon his hand. Wherefore do I put my life in my hand? That is, Wherefore am I brought thus low, that I do even go upon my hands? Little children before they can go upon their feet, go upon all four, as we ſay, they go upon their hands. The feet and legs are the pillars and ſupporters of the body. Job's pillars (ſaith this interpretation) ſhrunk under him, he muſt walk and live upon his hands. The learned Author quoted in the margin contends much for this ſence: but I ſhall not ſtay upon it.

Nomen animæ pro tota perſona ſumi poteſt, ut ponere animam in manibus ſit ita debilitari ut homo ſtare pedibus non poſſit; ſed manibus ſuſtentetur, ad modum infantium. Bold.

Thirdly, Wherefore do I put my life in my hand? Is (as another fancieth) a metaphorical ſpeech, implying, that a man is dying, or near to death: The life of ſuch a man ſits upon his lips, or is come out into his hand, ready to ſhake hands with him, and return to God that gave it. As if he had ſaid, my life is gone out of my body, I am in the ſtate of death; or (as his words are alſo gloſſed) my life is ſo waſted and diminiſhed, that it is ſcarce a handful. Why is it thus? Is it becauſe Satan hopes that yet in the extremity of my affliction, he ſhall obtain his wiſh, and hear me with my laſt breath blaſpheme God and dye? If that be his end, he ſhall miſs his end; For if the Lord ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him.

Volis extremiſque innitens digitis vitam ago. id.

Anima in manibus eſt, anima è corpore exceſſa, quæ enim in manibus habemus, extra nos ſunt Sanct.

Laſtly, We may expound the words yet more clearly and ſatisfactorily by divers other concurrent Scriptures, all which carry this plain ſence, That putting of the life into the hand, notes only the expoſing of our life unto peril or dangers. So Jephthah beſpeaks the quarrelling Ephramites (Judg. 12. 3.) When I ſaw that ye delivered me not, I put my life in my hands, and paſſed over againſt the children of Ammon: That is, when I ſaw you deſerted me, and would give me no aſſiſtance, I reſolved to put it to an adventure; I put my life in my hands, and paſſed over againſt the children of Ammon: I went upon great diſadvantages; my Army was not a match for the enemy, nor fit to meet them in the field; yet I ran that hazard: I put my life in mine hands. So (1 Sam. 19. 5.) when Jonathan pleaded for David before his father Saul, and told him what good ſervice he had done for him, and what he had deſerved of the Kingdom, he inſtanceth in that unparallel'd act af valour, when he undertook proud Goliah. He did put (ſaith he) his life in his hand, and ſlew the Philiſtine; that is, he put himſelf into a great danger: The Philiſtine was ſuch a monſter of men, that the whole Army of Iſrael trembled at his challenge; therefore ſurely a ſingle man was in great danger to deal with him hand to hand: David doing ſo, put his life in his hand. The Witch of Endor is at this language with Saul (1 Sam. 28. 21.) I have put my life in my hand; that is, I have ventured my life in raiſing up of Samuel; this ſhe ſaid, becauſe there was a Law lately made againſt Witches by Saul himſelf. Once more David uſeth the ſame expreſſion (Pſal. 119. 109.) My ſoul is continually in mine hand, yet do I not forget thy Law. The ſouls of the Saints are alwayes in the hands of God, and it is both their ſafety and their honour that they are ſo. Why doth David ſay, my ſoul is in mine hand? had he call'd it out of the hand of God, and taken the care of it upon himſelf? Nothing leſs. His meaning is only this, I walk in the midſt of dangers, and among a thouſand deaths continually; I am in deaths often, my life is expoſed to perils every day, yet do I not forget thy Law: I keep cloſe to thee, and will keep cloſe to thee whatſoever comes of it. Auguſtine upon that place doth ingeniouſly confeſs, that he underſtood not what David meant, by having his ſoul in his hands: But Jerome, another of the Ancients, teacheth us, that it is an Hebraiſm, ſignifying a ſtate of extreameſt peril. The Greeks alſo have drawn it into a proverb, ſpeaking the ſame thing.

Eſt Hebraiſmus quo ſignificatur vitam habere periculo expoſitam. Hier, Ep. ad Suniam.

But why doth the holding, or putting the life in the hand, ſignifie the expoſing of the life to peril? There is a twofold reaſon of it.

Firſt, Becauſe thoſe things which are carried openly in the hand, are apt to fall out of the hand, and being carried in ſight, they are apt to be ſnatcht or wreſted out of the hand. And therefore though to be in the hand of God, ſignifies ſafety, becauſe his hand is armed with irreſiſtible power to protect us: Yet for a man to carry a thing in his own hand, is to carry it in danger, becauſe his hand is weak, and there are ſafer wayes of carrying, or conveying a thing, then openly in the hand. If a man be to ride a long journey with any treaſure about him, he doth not carry it in his hand, but puts it in ſome ſecret and cloſe place, where it may be hid, and ſo more ſecure. The Caldee Paraphraſt, to expreſs the elegancy of that place fore-cited out of the Pſalm, gives it thus, My life is in as much danger as if it ſtood upon the very ſuperficies or outſide of my hand; as if he had no hold of it, but it ſtood barely upon his hand; for that Quod manu portatur, facile excidit; facile etiam diripi poteſt & ſi ſervatur ſola Dei protectione ſervari videtur. Mer.

Anima mea periclitatur, acſi in ſuperficie manus meæ eſſet. Cald. Paraph.

that which is ſet upon the plain or palm of the hand, and not graſped, is in greater danger. Things ſafe kept, are hidden or held faſt. There was a treaſure hid in the field, which when the man had found, he went and hid it, (Mat. 13.44.) he did not carry it in his hand, but hid it, laid it up ſafely. So our life is ſaid to be hid with Chriſt in God, (Col. 3. 3.) which notes not only the ſecreſie of this ſpiritual life, but the ſafety of it alſo. As ſome things are hid that they may not be ſeen, ſo other things are hid, that they may not be loſt. Hence to carry the life in the hand, imports the danger of looſing it.

Quæ aliquis amittere timet diligenter abſcondit. Aquin. in loc.

Secondly, There is another reaſon of that ſpeech, becauſe when a man is about to deliver a thing or to give it up, he takes it in his hand. They that put themſelves upon great perils and dangers for God and his people, deliver up their lives and their all to God: Hence that counſel of the Apoſtle, (1 Pet. 4. 19.) Let them that ſuffer according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their ſouls to him in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creator. So here, the life of men in danger is ſaid to be put in the hand, becauſe ſuch are as it were ready to deliver and commit their lives unto God, that he would take care of their lives to preſerve them from the danger, or to take them to himſelf, if they loſe them in his ſervice, either doing or ſuffering according to his will. That of the Apoſtle comes near this notion, (1 John 3.16.) We ought to lay down our lives for the brethren: now if we lay them down, we muſt put them into our hands, as a man that is ready to lay down money upon a bargain, or for a commodity, takes his purſe into his hand. Job had his life in his hand, ready to deliver it up to God, yea, though God ſhould ſeem to take it violently from him, yet he would willingly reſign it to him and truſt him with it. This ſenſe carries a clear reaſon of ſuch kind of ſpeaking, yet I do not conceive it to be the particular reaſon of it in this place: For, as to ſuch a ſenſe, Job ſhould rather confidently affirm, I will or I do put my life in my hand, then either queſtion or expoſtulate with himſelf, Wherefore do I put my life in mine hand?

Now, ſeeing Job ſpeaking thus refutes a charge that was brought againſt him, that he was careleſs of his life, or through diſtemper and impatience cared not what became of it; We may Obſerve,

> That though we are to venture or put our lives unto any hazard when God calleth us, yet no man may expoſe his life without a call.

Job would have his friends know, that he did not carry his life open in his hand as a thing he made no reckoning of. Our lives are given us of God, and till he bid us bring them forth and carry them in our hands, we muſt keep them as ſafe as we can. I only hint this here, becauſe the ſtrength of Jobs intendment in theſe words lyeth in their connection with the following verſe, to which I paſs.

Verſ. 15. Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him; but I will maintain mine own integrity.

Why ſhould you think that I am impatient? Why ſhould you cenſure me as deſperate and careleſs? This is the temper and frame of my ſoul; judge you of it, whether it look like your conceptions of me. Let God do what he will with me, ſlay me, tear me, take away my life, I am reſolved what to do, to truſt in him. Is this impatience or deſpair?

Further, If we conſider the former expoſtulations in the laſt expoſition, as a reproof or a check to the motions of his own heart toward impatience; Then theſe words are the leſſon of inſtruction which he gives his ſoul. What? Thou my ſoul in rage? doeſt thou bid me take my fleſh in my teeth? I tell thee what my former reſolves have been, and what my preſent duty is, even to truſt God in all eſtates. And now I am upon that reſolve again, Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him.

Though he ſlay me.] Slaying ſpeaks death, and that a violent death, yet all ſlaying is not death. (Rom. 8. 36.) For thy ſake are we killed, or ſlain all the day long. All the perſecutions and troubles which the Saints endure, are their ſlaying; though they be not all unto death, yet they all go upon the account of death. For thy ſake are we ſlain all the day long. Paul was alive, and yet in the number of theſe ſlain. By being ſlain all the day long, he means a being alwayes within the view, or under the ſufferance of bloody perſecutors.

Afflictiones graviores, mortis & occiſionis nomine ſignificantur. Druſ.

Though he ſlay me. Slaying is the utmoſt of outward evils.

Hence Obſerve (before I come to the main), That there is no outward evil ſo bad, but God may lay it upon his beſt ſervants.

Job puts this ſuppoſition as his own caſe. Though he ſlay me,

Yet will I truſt in him.] There is a double reading of theſe words. Some read them negatively, others (as we) affirmatively.

The reaſon why the negation is added by ſome Interpreters, is, becauſe the ſame Hebrew word in ſound, which we tranſlate, him, ſignifies alſo the adverb of denial, not or no: therefore the Maſorites obſerve that this text is to be corrected in the reading. There is a like variety of reading upon the occaſion of this Monoſyllable, Lo (2 King. 8. 10.) Where when Hazael was ſent by Benhadad to enquire of Eliſha whether he ſhould recover of his diſeaſe whereof he was ſick, Eliſha ſaid unto him, Go ſay unto him, thou mayeſt certainly recover, howbeit the Lord hath ſhewed me that he ſhall ſurely die. As if he had ſaid, though the diſeaſe in it ſelf be not mortal, yet thou ſhalt die of it. Whereas others tranſlate it, Eliſha ſaid unto him, ſay, thou ſhalt not certainly recover, for the Lord hath ſhewed me that he ſhall ſurely die.

Lo, in Hebræo mutatis literis mobilibus, aut non aut ei vel ipſi, ſonat. Maſoritæ hunc locum enumerant inter ea quæ cũ ſcribãtur לא legãtur לו Merc. Vade dic ei ſanaberis, quãquã aliqui exiſtimant amphibologicã fuiſſe reſponſionem, nam vox eadem ſola diverſa Scriptura ſignificat, aut ei, aut non.

Now, the negative in Job hath a double reading. Firſt, By way of interrogation, and then the ſenſe is the ſame with our tranſlation, Though, or if he ſlay me, ſhall I not truſt in him? that is, yes, I will, or I ought to truſt in him; ſhould I diſtruſt God becauſe he afflicts me, when as he afflicts to ſhew his faithfulneſs, I will not do it. Others read it negatively, without an interrogation, thus, Though he ſlay me, I will not expect, or behold he will ſlay me, I will not hope. So the interlineal.

But would Job ſay ſo, can this ſtand with the ſtate of grace and holineſs? Were not this indeed to give up the cauſe, and to blaſpheme God?

I anſwer, There is a ſenſe wherein we may acquit Job of this charge, though we ſhould read it negatively, which yet is not the ſenſe I ſhall ſtay upon: For the clearing of it, I muſt premiſe two things concerning the Original Text.

First, That the Hebrew word which we tranſlate to truſt (of which more a little after) ſignifies alſo to expect or look for a thing at the hands of another.

Dic nõ omnino revaleſces. Jun. Si enecaret me nõ ſperarem? Jun. Ecce occidet me nõ ſperabo. Mont.

Secondly, The word ſtands alone in the Hebrew without thoſe words which we ſupply, in him, and muſt be rendred thus, according to the ſenſe under hand, Though he ſlay me, I will not expect, and then the meaning may be given thus; Although God ſhould pronounce that heavy ſentence of death upon me, yea ſign the Writ for my Execution, yet I would not expect a more gentle ſentence or look for a reprieve, becauſe I know that what God doth to any man, or to me, he is juſt in doing it; I know that if he load me with the heavieſt afflictions, he may do it, and (without any further pleading or expectations) I am ready to ſubmit unto it; and yet in this I do not caſt my ſelf as a wicked man, for I will ſtill maintain my wayes (as he adds in the next words) neither in this do I caſt off all my hopes or expectations in God, for he ſhall be my ſalvation, as he ſpeaks in the next verſe. Thus much he had ſaid in effect before, (chap. 9. 15.) Whom though I were righteous, yet would I not anſwer, that is, I would not ſtand upon my terms with God, or expect any other terms from him: though God ſhould wound me deeper, yet I would not hope to have him alter what he had done, as if I thought he had done me wrong. You, my friends, conceive that I complain of God, as if he had been cruel and too ſevere towards me; no, I do not think ſo, for if he ſhould ſlay me, I would not ſue to him to take off that ſentence as unjuſt, but I would willingly lay my life down at his feet, knowing that he will give me a more deſirable life then this. Thus we may fairly bring Job off in the negative reading; he was ready to undergo the hardeſt meaſure, and yet not to think hardly of God, or ſtand expecting any reverſal of his judgement as too hard.

Quævis ab eo mortis ſententiã recipere, tamẽ meliorẽ ab ea ſententiã nõ expectarem, quippe qui noverim nonniſi juſtiſſimè eũ hoc feciſſe. Bol.

Ecce occidet me nō ſpero me hinc liberandū, vel fore ut convaleſcā, actū eſt de me, deploratus eſt hic morbus. Merc. è Rab. Lev.

Again thus, Behold he will ſlay me, I will not hope, that is, I ſee my bodily eſtate and outward comforts brought ſo low, that it were folly to hope; Why, ſhould I hope for life and proſperity here, when providence ſpeaks to me of nothing but death? and me-thinks I ſee the Lord ready to ſlay me; my diſeaſe is not for cure, nor my wounds for healing, why then ſhould I ſtand hoping about theſe poor tranſitory things? yet I would not have you think I am without all hope, I have better things to hope for then theſe; and about them I have a lively hope, though I die, as he adds in the next verſe: He alſo ſhall be my ſalvation, and an hypocrite ſhall not come before him.

Verba ſunt magnæ ſpei & fidei cujuſvis maximè in cruce & morte oſtenditur, ideo utrūq; conjunxit, mortem & ſpem. Merc.

But I ſhall paſs that negative tranſlation, and give the ſenſe as it lies affirmatively before us in ours. The ſtrength of faith is never fully tried but under and upon a croſs: Death and hope ſeem to be at the greateſt diſtance; here we have death and hope brought together: Death could not kill Job's hope, his hope did almoſt enliven his death. Job had more life in death, then moſt have in their lives. God could eaſily ſlay Job's body, but his faith could not be ſlain. God will not ſlay faith, and no other power can. Behold Job dying and believing, Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him; and ſo this text is the triumph of Job's faith over ſorrow and death: The uprightneſs of his heart, the greatneſs of his ſpirit, the undauntedneſs of his courage, his contempt of the world, and his longing deſires after God, are all wrapt up and ſpoken out together in theſe words. As if he had ſaid, I ſee the Lord is determined to take my life, but what if he do? do you think that I have nothing to truſt him for beyond that? If he deſtroy my body, I know he will ſave my ſoul; I have matters of greater moment to truſt God with, then thoſe which concern this frail piece of fleſh: Death it ſelf ſhall not caſt me down from the footings of my faith, or beat me off from the hold-faſt of my hope in God.

Again, As theſe words have in them aſſertion of Job's faith, ſo alſo a vindication of his perſon from the ſuſpitions or accuſations of his friends. For how can he be charged as wicked, who profeſſeth truſt in God, and promiſeth that he will truſt in him, even unto death, and in it?

יחל Eſt expectare cum long animi perſeverantia, cū certitudine futuri boni & lætitia. Coc.

The word which we tranſlate truſt, ſignifies alſo to expect or hope; and it ſignifies expectation, firſt, with patience and waiting: Secondly, with aſſurance of receiving that which we wait for: thirdly, with preſent joy, or joy concomitant with ſorrow. So then, I will truſt him, is not only, I will ſtay more time, but I will ſtay with patience, with aſſurance, yea and with joyfulneſs.

But how can a man truſt God when he is ſlain? He that is dead, is paſt hope, he hath for ever done truſting and believing. For when a man is ſlain and dead, he either goes to heaven or to hell: If to hell, there's no hope: if to heaven, there's no need of hope, what, ſhould a man hope for that which he enjoyes, or truſt when he is in poſſeſſion?

I anſwer, firſt, All ſlaying in Scripture ſenſe is not to bodily death; it notes ſometimes only a civil death, or the putting of a perſon totally out of all his former power or preſent comforts: So the ſlaying of the witneſſes is interpreted, Revel. 11. Take ſlaying ſo, and then, to truſt when we are ſlain, is no more then to depend upon God for deliverance in extreameſt dangers.

Secondly, Though a man who is actually ſlain, cannot be ſaid to hope; yet a man may ſay, I will hope or truſt though I am ſlain: For ſo this truſt is the act of a living man concerning ſomewhat which he ſhall enjoy or be after death: So any believer dying, whether it be by a natural or a violent death, may ſay, Though I die yet I will truſt in God: Firſt, For the ſalvation of my ſoul: Secondly, For the reſurrection of my body: Thirdly, For the eternal reſt both of ſoul and body together in glory.

But what was it that Job was thus reſolved to truſt God for?

Take ſlaying in the firſt ſenſe, for greater afflictions then any he had yet felt, and then, I will truſt in him, is firſt, a ſerious profeſſion of his faithfulneſs and adhering to God and his wayes what ever God ſhould do with him, or how great diſcouragements ſoever God ſhould put upon him. So we may well expound Job by that admirable proteſtation of the Church, Pſal. 44. 17, 18, 19. All this is come upon us, yet have we not forgotten thee, neither have we dealt falſly in thy covenant; our heart is not turned back, neither have our ſteps declined from thy way; though thou haſt ſore broken us in the place of dragons, and covered us with of death. Truſting in God, in a large ſenſe, is put for the whole compaſs of our duty to him, eſpecially in evil times. Or ſecondly, I will truſt him, is a high profeſſion of his faith, that God would give remedy to the worſt of his preſent, or poſſible outward evils, and raiſe him up or reſtore him again, how low ſoever he ſhould be brought.

Take ſlaying in the ſecond ſenſe, for death, and then his meaning is, that though God ſhould take away this life, yet he had a hope laid up beyond this life: and this I conceive moſt proper here, or certainly intended here, becauſe he had ſo often given up his hopes of a temporal reſtoring, and adds expreſly in the next verſe; He alſo ſhall be my ſalvation.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, The character of a godly man; he is one that truſteth in God.

This is proper to godlineſs. It is the breath of the new creature, and only by the breath of the new creature can theſe words be ſpoken indeed, I will truſt in God. (1 Pet. 3. 5.) The Apoſtle deſcribing the holy women of the former time, exhorteth that they may be a pattern to the women of the age to which he wrote, For (ſaith he) after this manner the holy women alſo in old time, who truſted in God, adorned themſelves. He deſcribes holy women by this, they truſted in God. A carnal man is a man without hope, (1 Theſ. 4. 13.) I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are aſleep, that you ſorrow not even as others which have no hope. Who are theſe? The Apoſtle tells us, Epheſ. 2. 12. Aliens from the Commonwealth of Iſrael, ſtrangers from the Covenant of Promiſes, having no hope. A heathen (every carnal man is no better) hath no hope, or if he have, it is like himſelf, a carnal hope, in the nature of it, becauſe it is ſo in the object of it: His hope is in man, (Jer. 17. 5.) Curſed be the man that truſteth in man, and maketh fleſh his arm: He that is in the fleſh, truſts only in the fleſh, and fleſhly things. (Pſal. 52. 7.) He truſts in the abundance of his riches: he can truſt in earthly riches, but he cannot put forth an act of truſt upon the unſearchable riches of God: It is an eaſie matter to ſay the words, but it is the hardeſt matter under heaven to ſay, and ſay it truly, to ſay and do it, Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him.

Secondly Obſerve, True truſt can triumph over a worſe condition then what is preſent, how bad ſoever it is.

Job doth not ſay, I will truſt in God, though now my caſe is very ſad, but he puts a harder caſe then ever he was yet in, Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him. David (Pſal. 3. 6.) puts hard caſes to his ſoul, If ten thouſands of people ſet themſelves againſt me round about, yet will I not be afraid: David was not in ſuch ſtraits at that time (though in ſtraits) he was not beleaguered with ten thouſand enemies, but he could put thoſe ſtraits to himſelf, and yet be enlarged in dependance upon God. We have David again breathing out the very ſame ſpirit of faith in like expreſſions, Pſal. 27. 2. & Pſal. 46. 2. Though the mountains be removed, and though the earth be carried into the midſt of the ſea, yet will not we fear. He puts not only ſuch caſes as he was not in, but ſuch as there was no probability that ever he ſhould be in; that the hils ſhould be carried into the ſea, that earth and ſea ſhould mingle. David's faith conquered not only real evils, but all imaginable evils. As the Lord puts the remoteſt ſuppoſitions to ſhew his own faithfulneſs, ſo do the Saints to ſhew their faith, (Iſa. 54. 10.) Though the mountains ſhall depart, and the hills be removed, yet my kindneſs ſhall not depart from thee, neither ſhall the Covenant of my peace be removed, ſaith the Lord. Though the whole courſe of nature fail, yet the Lord will not let one jot of the Covenant of grace fail; And that's indeed the reaſon why the Saints rejoyce over all difficulties, even becauſe they know God is able to help them in greateſt difficulties: He hath not ſpent the treaſures nor the ſtores of his wiſdom and power upon former ſalvations, they know if they need ſtronger and ſtranger ſalvations, he hath ſtrength and wiſdom enough to work them, and will, becauſe he is as faithful and true, as he is ſtrong or wiſe.

Thirdly Obſerve, Truſt is due to God, it is due to God in all eſtates.

Some truſt in God in fair weather; when they are full they can truſt in God for bread; and when they are ſafe, they can truſt him for protection: but for a man to truſt God for bread in wants, and for ſafety when he ſlayeth him, to truſt God in all turns, this is not only a benefit to our ſelves, but a duty unto God. There is nothing more due to God, as God, then truſt is: even a man in high place looks to be truſted, and the higher any man is, the more he looks to be truſted. And ſhall not the moſt high God? We read (Judg. 9. 15.) that when the trees had choſen the bramble to be their King, the bramble puts theſe terms upon them, (Judg. 9. 15.) If indeed you annoint me king over you, then come and put your truſt in my ſhadow; and if not, let fire come out of the bramble, and devour the Cedars of Lebanon. Even a bramble looks to be truſted in, if you ſet him up for your king. Now if creatures love to be truſted, though they be but exalted brambles, how much more doth the Lord, the great and glorious Lord exalted over all? Surely if he be not truſted by us, we ſhall be conſumed by him, a fire will proceed from him to devour the talleſt Cedars that either diſtruſt or do not truſt in him.

Fourthly Obſerve, To truſt God is an high honour done to God.

Truſt is a great part of divine worſhip. It is natural worſhip; the very diſcoveries of God unto us, though he ſhould never manifeſt his will concerning this act, call for this. When it is diſcovered to us (which the word every where doth) that God is above all, that he is all-ſufficient, that he is unchangeable, theſe very diſcoveries, though there were never a rule for it in all the word of God, would teach us to truſt upon God. There are ſome parts of Gods worſhip which we ſhould never have known if he had not given us a direct and expreſs rule for them. Such is all his inſtituted worſhip; The ſpecial forms of worſhip depend upon the revealed will of God, but the general worſhip of God (ſuch as to love him, to fear him, to truſt upon him) flow from the manifeſtation of his nature, or from his very being.

But you will ſay, What is truſt?

Take it in brief thus, Pure ſpiritual truſt is the higheſt exerciſe of faith, whereby looking upon God in himſelf and in his Son through the promiſes, the ſoul is raiſed above all fears or diſcouragements, above all doubts and diſquietments, either for the removing of that which is evil, or for the obtaining of that which is good. This is the nature of that truſt which is the honour of God, and his natural worſhip, as natural is oppoſed to ſpecial and inſtituted worſhip.

Fifthly Obſerve, A believer ſeeth God good to him, or a friend to him, when he receiveth nothing but evil from his hand, and ſees nothing but frowns upon his face.

Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him. There is no man will truſt a profeſſed enemy at all, nor a reconciled enemy much: therefore Job did not think God an enemy, though he ſlew him; foraſmuch as he reſolved to truſt him, though he ſlew him. No man will truſt him that he ſuſpects to hate him; A godly man hath good thoughts of God, let him be doing what he will with him. When God put Abraham upon that hard task to ſlay his ſon, he yet knew that God loved him, and therefore he was willing to do it, and he would truſt God for that ſon, of which the promiſe of God ſaid he ſhould live, though the command of God ſaid he ſhall die. Now, as Abraham (the Father of believers) was perſwaded, that God loved him when he bid him ſlay his ſon; So though God himſelf ſlay a believer, yet he believes that he lives in the love of God. While a believer is all over as it were in gore-blood, whilſt he is all wounds, and wounded (he ſees) by the hand of God, yet he cannot be beaten out of this hold, God is good to him, yea, that truly God is good to all his Iſrael. Chriſt had ſaid to his Diſciples, (John 21. 11.) Our friend Lazarus ſleepeth: but when Martha heard him give order to take away the ſtone from the Sepluchre, (verſ. 39.) Lord (ſaith ſhe) by this time he ſtinketh, for he hath been dead four dayes. Chriſt anſwers her, ſaid I not unto thee, that if thou wouldeſt believe, thou ſhouldeſt ſee the glory of God? Though I was not ſo friendly to my friend as to come and keep him alive when he was only ſick, or to raiſe him up as ſoon as he was dead, yet do not think but I am a friend to him ſtill, Did not I ſay, that if thou wouldeſt believe, thou ſhouldeſt ſee the glory of God? I have not neglected my friend: Though I have let him lie four dayes in the grave, yet he hath lain in my heart all this while. We may ſay in all our extremities, though God lets us die and lie in the grave either of death or affliction till we ſtink, that yet we are his dead friends, and he is our living friend, in whoſe boſome and embraces we have lain all the while. See how Paul exulteth in the love of God in the midſt of all troubles and perſecutions: Suppoſe ſword and famine ſhould compaſs him about, Rom. 8. 38, 39. I am perſwaded that neither life nor death, &c. nor any other creature ſhould be able to ſeparate us from the love of God which is in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord. Holy David of old rejoyced in this aſſurance. (2 Sam. 23. 5.) Although my houſe be not ſo with God, yet (I know God is my friend, for) he hath made with me an everlaſting covenant, ordered in all things, and ſure; for this is all my ſalvation, and all my deſire, although he make it not to grow; that is, though my houſe ſhould not flouriſh in worldly dignity and outward pomp, yet he is my ſalvation, and I can deſire no more.

Sixthly Obſerve, Job had ſaid before, Wherefore do I take my fleſh in my teeth, and put my life in mine hand? Why ſhould I take ſuch courſes as theſe to eaſe my preſent trouble? though he ſlay me, I will truſt in him; as if he had ſaid, my remedy is in God, not in tearing my fleſh, or in impatient geſtures: theſe would prove as miſerable comforts as my friends are comforters: the neareſt way to ſound conſolation, is to truſt in God.

Hence Obſerve, That truſt in God is the beſt eaſe to the ſoul, and a remedy of evils before the remedy comes.

God often defers the remedy as to our ſenſe, when he gives it to our faith. He that believes not, is condemned already, he hath his judgement before the judgement: and he that believes, is ſaved and eaſed already, he hath his deliverance before deliverance. Whilſt our wounds have no cure, truſt in God cures them. Faith is a remedy before a remedy in all kind of evils. (Iſa. 50. ult.) Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his ſervants, that walketh in darkneſs and hath no light? Let him truſt in the Name of the Lord, and ſtay upon his God. Truſt in God, though you are in darkneſs, though you ſee no light; this is light before light, pardon before pardon. Truſt God in temptations, and you are above temptations, while you groan under the burden of them. Truſt God in weakneſs, and you are ſtrong: Paul in ſuch a caſe beſought the Lord thrice and was anſwered with this, 2 Cor. 12. 9. My grace (not thy grace) is ſufficient for thee, for my ſtrength is made perfect in weakneſs (he doth not ſay thy weakneſs is perfected into ſtrength) This ſatisfied Paul to the full, as he concludes in the next words, Moſt gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Chriſt may reſt upon me. When we reſt with our weakneſſes upon Chriſt, the power of Chriſt reſts upon us. And then as it was with Paul (verſ. 10.) when we are weak, then are we ſtrong; when we are ſorrowful, then have we joy; when we are in bondage, then are we free. Thus by truſting we have either a remedy from, or a remedy in all our troubles and afflictions.

Further, Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him; his faith was pitcht upon God, and he paſſeth by friends and creatures. As if he had ſaid, Truly though you endeavour to comfort me, and would give me your utmoſt help, yet I cannot truſt upon you; but if God ſhould ſlay me, I would truſt him: though all the world ſhould engage and promiſe to do their beſt for me, I could not truſt them; but if God ſhould do the worſt againſt me, yet I would truſt in him.

Hence Obſerve, That we can never truſt God too much, nor creatures too little.

We can never truſt God too much, becauſe as he is God, all our truſt is but due to him. And we cannot truſt creatures too little, becauſe they are but creatures, and ſo no truſt is due to them. There is a truſt of charity or civility due to man; it is not good to be alwayes jealous one of another; but though there may be a truſt of charity, yet there muſt not be a truſt of confidence upon any creature. Some jealouſies of man are againſt the rule of love to man, but all truſt in man is againſt the law of duty to God. Now, as it is a duty to truſt God, ſo if we look upon God, we have the greateſt encouragements, if upon our ſelves, the greateſt cauſe, to truſt him.

Firſt, Conſider the Being and Eſſence of God, and there's enough to draw out truſt. His Being is in and from himſelf. It is beſt to depend upon him who is abſolutely independant.

Secondly, Conſider the excellency of his Being. Job ſaid to his friends a little before, Doth not his excellency make you afraid? I may ſay here as truly, Doth not his excellency make you confide, or truſt? The power, the wiſdom, the goodneſs, the mercy, the faithfulneſs, the truth, the unchangeableneſs of God, theſe, all theſe excellencies of his Being, call upon us to truſt in him. Who would not truſt in him that hath all, and is All? Who would not truſt in him that can do whatſoever he pleaſeth, and will do whatſoever he hath promiſed?

Thirdly, Conſider him in his relations to us: He is our Creator, that's the ground of truſt given by the Apoſtle, Let us commit our ſelves unto him in well-doing as unto a faithful Creator. He that made us, will ſurely take care of us: We may well give up our ſelves and our all unto him, who gave us our ſelves, and our all. And if creation aſſure us of preſervation, then redemption aſſures us of it much more. God was at ſo much coſt in making of us, that he will certainly take care of us; but he hath been at much more coſt in redeeming us, and therefore he will much more take care of us, upon the account of that relation. He hath been at too much charge with us, to lay us aſide and throw us by. Again, He is a Father: earthly fathers lay up and provide for their children, and ſhall not our heavenly Father? All the relations wherein we ſtand to God, are grounds of our truſt upon him, and engagements of his aſſiſtance to, and providence over us.

Fourthly, The operations and workings of God, call for this truſt: What hath God wrought? and what cannot God work? He works without, and he works within, he ſtops or moves all the wheels of all creatures as ſeemeth beſt to him. The tongues, the hands, the hearts, the wills, the affections, the love, the hatred, the anger, the deſires of all the ſons of men, are under his power, and at his diſpoſe. Who would not truſt in God?

Fifthly, If we look upon our ſelves as creatures, and all creatures with our ſelves, we ſhall quickly find a neceſſity of truſting God. As creatures are not of themſelves, ſo not in themſelves. We receive life from God, and in him we live. If we depart from him in whom we live, we ſhall ſurely die. Our natural, as well as our ſpiritual life, is preſerved by the power of God. The life of man conſiſteth not in the abundance of that which he poſſeſſeth, but in dependance upon him in whom he believeth. Man is not ſufficient of himſelf (in ſpirituals) to think a good thought, that ſufficiency is of God: and all temporal good things are not ſufficient for man their ſufficiency is of God. A horſe is a vain thing to ſave a man, bread is a vain thing to ſtrengthen a man, wine is a vain thing to chear a man, yea, wiſdom is a vain thing to counſel a man, without God. As there is nothing which the devil doth more oppoſe, or God more require, ſo there is nothing which we more need, or by which we gain more then by truſting God: God gives himſelf moſt out to us, when we truſt moſt in him: As an act of truſt gives moſt glory to God, ſo it fetcheth moſt good from God. Our truſting in creatures make them vain to us; and our not truſting in God, makes him (in a ſenſe) vain to us; that is, God will not give out his ſtrength and help, if we do not truſt him: he is as one weak when we truſt him weakly, he is as one empty-handed when our hearts are empty of truſt.

For the advancement of this grace of truſt, take theſe three rules from what we find in Job, whoſe truſt was riſen to ſuch a height, that it did not only live, but was lively in the very approaches of death.

Firſt, Labour to know God. Job was a man acquainted with God, and therefore he truſted in God, (Pſal. 9.10.) They that know thy Name will truſt in thee. The reaſon why God is truſted ſo little, is becauſe he is ſo little known. We ſay of ſome men, They are better known then truſted; and if we knew ſome men more, we ſhould truſt them leſs: But the truth is, God is alwayes truſted as much as he is known; and if we knew him more, we would truſt him more; every diſcovery of God ſhews ſomewhat which renders him more worthy of our truſt.

Secondly, Recollect and meditate former experiences. The conſideration of what God hath done for us, keeps the heart up in truſt that he will do more.

Thirdly, Be upright. That which made Job confident to truſt upon God, though he ſhould ſlay him, was the uprightneſs of his heart with God. He may truſt God, who is faithful to God. Job had Gods own hand to his certificate, that his heart was upright. Beloved (ſaith that beloved Diſciple, 1 John 3.21.) If our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence towards God. An hypocrite may preſume, but he cannot be truly confident. Beſides, 'tis a diſhonour to God, when they ſay they truſt him, whoſe lives are diſhonourable to him: They make God (as much as lies in them) a partaker in their wickedneſs, who pretend he will take their parts, while they are wicked and do wickedly. Railing Rabſhakeh tells Hezekiah (2 King. 18.20, 21, 22.) Thou ſayeſt (but they are but vain words) I have counſel and ſtrength for war; and when he had beaten him off from humane helps, he labours to drive him from divine help alſo; thou perhaps wilt ſay, I truſt in God; If thou ſayeſt ſo, remember, Is not that he whoſe Altars and whoſe high places Hezekiah hath taken away, and hath ſaid to Judah and Jeruſalem, ye ſhall worſhip before this Altar in Jeruſalem: As if he had ſaid, Thou truſt in God! thou who haſt diſhonoured God, pulled down his altars! &c. Rabſhakeh thought that Hezekiah had done God great diſſervice in deſtroying the Altars; and if it had been ſo, this charge had cut off the confidence of Hezekiah: But how juſtly may we upbraid many that profeſs they truſt in God, and ſay, Is not he the God whoſe name you blaſpheme? the God whom you provoke? the God whoſe truths and wayes you neglect and kick againſt? the God whoſe ſervants you oppoſe? and will you ſay you truſt in God? For ſhame either diſclaim your confidences, or be reclaimed from your courſes. That man who walks uprightly before God, may truſt perfectly in God. He that contemns the command, hath no part in the promiſe. We do not oblige God to do us good by our doing good; but God hath not obliged himſelf to do us good, while we are doing evil. There are promiſes of grace, but there are no promiſes of reward to wicked men.

Laſtly, Take two characters of holy truſt.

Firſt, It takes us off from all other dependances. As a man cannot ſerve, ſo neither can he truſt God and Mammon: As in ſpirituals, ſo in temporals; while, with the Apoſtle (Phil. 3.3.) We rejoyce (which is an effect of truſt) in God, we have no confidence in the fleſh. If God be not truſted alone, he is not truſted at all. Every thing we joyn with him disjoyns us from him. He that takes hold of God, lets go his hold of all other things: We may uſe the help of creatures, but we muſt truſt none but God. He that (in this ſenſe) will needs be ſo wiſe and provident as to get two ſtrings to his bow, ſhall find, when he comes to ſhoot, that he hath not one. If we truſt in God and man together, God will not help us, and man cannot.

Secondly, Holy truſt acts in all eſtates and turns: As true obedience reſpects all the commandments, ſo true truſt reſpects all the diſpenſations of God. Truſt repoſeth upon God, not only for ſome, but for and in every thing. Some ſay they truſt God for pardon, for heaven, and for eternal life, who do not, or think they need not truſt him for the needs of this preſent life: For theſe, ſome ſuppoſe they can help themſelves, and others ſuſpect God will not ſtoop ſo low as to help them. A true Believer depends upon God as much (in proportion to the thing) for a piece of bread, as for heaven; and the Lord (in proportion to the thing) is as careful to provide Believers with the bread of this life, as he is to give them the bread and means of eternal life. This is truſt indeed, when we truſt God for all, for temporals as well as for ſpirituals, in the leaſt as well as in the greateſt matters: Yea, the leſs the thing is for which we truſt God, the greater is the grace of truſt. As it argues the greateſt degree of holineſs, when we will not offend God by committing the leaſt ſin, and when we are thankful to him for the leaſt mercy; ſo it argues a great degree of faith, when we depend upon God (being convinced we have need to do ſo) for his good will in receiving the leaſt comfort, and for his ſtrength in performing the leaſt duty. Some, when they have a great buſineſs to undergo, ſtir up themſelves to truſt God, and ſo they ought; but the ſpiritualneſs of truſt is ſeen, when in the leaſt buſineſſes we undergo, and in the leaſt duty we go about, we go out of our ſelves, and go forth in the ſtrength of God: For as it is the very ſame love of God that ſaveth us eternally, and preſerveth us temporally; ſo it is the ſame power of God which doth great or ſmall things for us: And therefore we ſhould in all depend upon God, knowing, that without him we cannot do the one, and that we ſhall be able to do all things through him ſtrengthening us. Yea, laſtly, we muſt truſt God in our injoyments, as well as in our wants. It is an hard thing to ſay, Though he ſlay me, yet I will truſt in him; but it is harder to ſay, Though he make me alive, yet I will truſt in him. It is a glorious tryal of truſt, to ſay, Should God make me not worth a groat, yet I will truſt him; but it is a greater glory of this truſt, to ſay, Though God make me worth thouſands, yet I will truſt in him: It is hard to truſt God in a low and troubleſome eſtate; but it is harder to truſt God in a full and proſperous eſtate. When we (to ſenſe) have the leaſt need of Gods help, then to truſt in him, and depend upon him, ſhews we are moſt ſenſible that we need his help: For by this we in one act give teſtimony to the All-ſufficiency of God, and to the emptineſs of the creature; by this we make God all, and the creature nothing at all. Faith gives a more ſpiritual diſcovery of it ſelf, when it convinces us that we are poor in the midſt of our abundance without God, then when it convinceth us, that we have abundance in God, though we are poor. 'Tis noble when we can ſay, though God afflict me, and empty me, I will truſt in him; but 'tis heroically Chriſtian to ſay, Though God comfort me, and fill me, I will truſt in him. The ſtronger we are in grace, the leſs we go, either alone, or upon the crutches of the creature.

While I affirm this, I would not at all derogate from the excellency of Job's truſt in God, I only ſhew you a more excellent way of truſting him.

But it may be queſtioned, Doth not Job derogate from, yea, contradict his own profeſſed truſt, when with the ſame breath, with which he concludes, Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him, he concludeth alſo,

But I will maintain mine own wayes before him.

In the former part of the verſe, Job diſcovered the higheſt confidence in God. In this latter part, he ſeems to diſcover too much confidence in himſelf, But I will maintain mine own wayes before him, The Apoſtle argues the inconſiſtency of theſe two (Rom. 11. 6.) If by grace, then is it no more of works; otherwiſe grace is no more grace: but if it be of works, then is it no more grace; otherwiſe work is no more work. The wayes of a man are his works: If he truſt in God, he depends on grace; if he maintain his wayes, he may be ſaid to depend on works. How then ſhall we reconcile Job's truſting in God, with his maintaining of his wayes?

I anſwer, There is a maintaining of our wayes before God, which is but a fruit of ſelf-confidence, and an Argument of our departure from the grace of God. But this act of Job ſprang from no ſuch root; nor will it yield any ſuch fruit, as will appear in opening of the words.

But (or neverthelesſ) I will maintain.] The Original word ſignifies three things. Firſt, (As we tranſlate) to plead, diſpute, and maintain a cauſe, or a poſition, as juſt and right. Secondly, To reprove. Thirdly, To correct or amend that which is amiſs, faulty, and erroneous: And according unto theſe three ſignifications, the ſence of this Scripture may be given three wayes. But I will maintain יוכיח Eſt diſputare, hinc ars diſputandi quam dialecticam vocant ab Hebræis dicitur הוכוח Significat etiã cauſam agere apud judicem, verbũ forẽſe. Druſ.

Mine own wayes.] His wayes were his works, or the manner and courſe of his life; which is therefore called our way, becauſe we paſs and repaſs up and down in it, as a man doth in a way to or from his own home.

Before him.] Or, Before his face, ſo the letter of the Hebrew. Which he adds, firſt, in oppoſition to men; and ſecondly, that he might more emphatically ſet forth the ſtrength of his confidence towards God. I will maintain my wayes before him: I will not only make good what I affirm to thoſe that are like my ſelf; I have not only hope to render my ſelf and my wayes fair to the eye of the world; but I am aſſured that I can render both fair to the eye of God himſelf. Some can maintain their wayes well enough before men, who cannot maintain them before God; his eyes look through all their coverings and vizards: He can diſtinguiſh between appearances and realities; he can ſee a rotten heart within a painted-skin. Holy upright Job was not afraid to come into the preſence of God, there to open himſelf, and to have all his wayes ſcanned and examined. Thoſe wayes had need be fair and well mended which abide the ſurvey of God himſelf.

I will maintain, &c.] That is (according to the firſt ſignification of the word) Though the Lord ſlay me, yet I will ſtand to, and abide my tryal, I will not be brought to an ill opinion of my ſelf, nor will I think the worſe of my ſpiritual, internal eſtate, how much evil ſoever the Lord ſhall be pleaſed to deal to me in my outward eſtate: No, I will be as high in purſuance of what I have heretofore aſſerted, namely, that mine heart is upright with him, and my wayes right (in the main) before him, when he is ſlaying me, as ever I was, when he was proſpering me, or ſhall be again if he ſhould proſper me again.

Priũſquam hinc ab ea vias meæ i. e. rationes & cauſam meã arguã. Ego ſane ut perii perii, verum non continebo meipſũ quin jus meũ corã illo aſſeram. Merc. Sunt confidentiæ verba quod ſperet ſe cauſã ſuam probãdum coram Deo fretus ſua innocentia. Merc.

Whence Obſerve, Firſt, An upright heart keeps its ground in all turns and times.

Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him; and not only ſo, But I will maintain mine own wayes alſo. For as an upright heart maintains the ſame practice of holineſs at all times: Though there be ſlaying and killing for the Name and Truth of Chriſt, yet he will not change his way, nor go into a wrong way, wherein perhaps he ſhall have more ſafety, by complying, and chiming in with the opinions or practiſes of other men. As he (I ſay) maintains his wayes in regard of his preſent practice, ſo alſo in regard of his former integrity in that practice: which is the thing Job intends chiefly in this Aſſertion.

Secondly, Job ſpeaks this as an Argument of his uprightneſs, I will maintain mine own wayes before him.

Hence Note, That it is a ſign of a heart ſound in holineſs, when we can with confidence ſet our ſelves before God, and maintain what we are in his preſence.

It ſhews that a man is right when he dares come to tryal. I will diſpute it out with God himſelf, ſaith Job: Not that he (as I have often ſhewed before) had an opinion that there was no ſin in him; or that God could find no faults in him: Job acted upon the principles of the Covenant of grace, and knew upon what ground he went, but (taking that in) he is reſolute to maintain his wayes, and this was a proof of his uprightneſs. It is an Argument that a piece of gold is weight, when a man is willing to have it brought to the ballance; and that it is right metal, not counterfeit and baſe, when a man is ready to offer it to the touchſtone: Try me, prove me, do what you will with me, bring me to the ballance, or to the touchſtone; I will maintain my wayes, I doubt not but I ſhall be found weight and right, ſaith the upright ſoul (John 3. 21.) He that doth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifeſt. He that doth the truth is not afraid of the light; That will but make his deeds manifeſt that they are wrought in God, as Chriſt ſpeaks in that place. How are the deeds of a man wrought in God? Firſt thus, The deeds of the Saints are wrought in God; that is, in the ſtrength and power of God. Secondly, They are wrought in God; that is, at the command, and by the authority of God. They that work in the power of God, and by the rule of God, their deeds are wrought in God. Now, He that doth the truth, comes to the light; he loves the light, that his deeds may be made manifeſt, that they are wrought in God, both according to the mind of God, and by the power of God. Our deeds have no value in them, but as they are done in God: Nor can we maintain any of our wayes before God, but when we walk in God. We may make a flouriſh before men, of what is wrought in man: But what we maintain before God, muſt be of God. See how you can put your wayes before the light of Gods countenance, and debate them in his preſence. It is an eaſie matter to carry it out with creatures: Conſider what you can do with God. I (ſaith Job) will maintain mine own wayes before him.

Non tam ad anteactæ vitæ pœnitentiā quam ad ſequentis puritatem pertinere exiſtimat. Vatab. Arguere vias in conſpectu ejus, eſt dare operam ut innocenter vivat coram illo.

Thirdly, I will maintain my wayes, may ſignifie his reſolution to continue in the wayes of holineſs and obedience for the time to come: Though he ſlay me, yet will I maintain my wayes; that is, I will not be brought out of love with holineſs, though the Lord ſhould lay me under the greateſt diſcouragements: Here is another Argument of ſincerity. A ſound heart ſaith, What evil ſoever I find in the wayes of God, I will never think ill of the wayes of God: No, I will yet walk in them, I will now run in them; how hardly ſoever I am uſed in thoſe wayes, I will never out of them; though I meet with Lyons in them, though I meet with blows and troubles in them, yea, though God meet me as a Lyon in them, though I receive blows and troubles from the hand of God himſelf, in whoſe wayes I walk, though he ſeem to ſtand there with a drawn ſword to ſlay me, Yet I will maintain my way. This is a truth, and true of Job; yet I conceive the word in the Hebrew, which we render maintain, doth not lead us to it; and therefore (though it hath learned Aſſertors) I will not ſtay upon it.

Again, Take the word in the ſecond ſence, as it ſignifies to reprove, and then the meaning riſeth ſomewhat different from the former, though it comes to the ſame iſſue: I will reprove my own wayes; that is, Though I ſtill aſſert my ſincerity, yet I do not preſume my ſelf free from ſin: I will judge my ſelf to have failed in many things; and that the Lord might juſtly correct me, ſlay me, yea (in regard of the deſert of ſin) caſt me to Hell, thus, I will reprove mine own wayes before him; while God is ſmiting me, I will be accuſing my ſelf; I will ſay that I have ſinned, and that he doth me no wrong: I will not only acquieſce and reſt ſatisfied in the ſentence of God upon me, though it be to death, but I will alſo blame my ſelf for whatſoever is blame worthy in my heart or life. So then, he intended not any accuſation of God, but an examination of himſelf, or a ſerious diſcuſſion of his courſe and conſcience as in the ſight of God.

Hence Obſerve, That when God is ſmiting or ſlaying us, we ſhould be judging our ſelves, and confeſſing our ſinfulneſs.

I will reprove mine own wayes before him. Job did not ſay, I will reprove his wayes, but mine own. He ſaid not, God doth ill in ſlaying me, but I have often done ill in diſobeying him. This is an Argument of a holy heart, when in the midſt of all ſufferings we can acquit God, and lay load upon our ſelves. The Apoſtle aſſureth us (1 Cor. 11. 31.) If we would judge our ſelves, we ſhould not be judged of the Lord. There's one truth: And yet this is as great a truth, When we are judged of the Lord, we ſhould judge our ſelves. When we are corrected of the Lord, we ſhould correct our ſelves; when he reproveth us, we ſhould reprove our ſelves, and acknowledge that we are ſuch, as in whom God might find enough, not only to lay rods of correction upon us, but even ſcorpions of deſtruction. I alſo will reprove my wayes before him.

Laſtly, Taking the word (as ſome do) for correcting, I will correct my own wayes before him; ſo there is this ſence in it, When God is ſlaying me, I will be thinking how to be more holy, how I may amend my own wayes before him. As if he had ſaid, I will not do like ſtubborn and rebellious ones, who when God chaſtens and afflicts them, they more pollute and corrupt themſelves, or do worſe and worſe: No, I would be, and do, better and better; I would correct my wayes yet before him: I will not only maintain my wayes in holineſs, as I have done; but I would put out a more pure and correct edition of my works, I would take care to have all the errata's (which I have obſerved in any page of my life) amended: and now that the Lord hath caſt me into the fire of affliction, I would come out gold: (I would have all my droſs purged out, and my whole lump refined. Theſe reſolves, which the ſence of the word now preſented holds out unto us, diſcover alſo much holineſs of heart. What greater diſcovery of holineſs is there, then to make the beſt improvement of the worſt eſtate; and to be mending our ſouls, while our bodies are a ſlaying? Yet I conceive (according to the coherence and drift of the place) that our tranſlation renders it moſt fair, that Job, notwithſtanding the Lord ſhould ſlay him, would yet ſtand up with holy confidence to plead his own integrity, even in the ſight of God: I will maintain my own wayes before him.

But this was not all, Job might poſſibly be checkt: What? Maintain your wayes? And that before God? Yes do, ſee what you can get by it; Will you plead with God? What will it advantage you? What? ſaith Job, I fear not any loſs by this courſe, and I hope to be a gainer? I am ſo far from being ſtartled with theſe fears, that I am ſettled in this aſſurance; what that was he gives in the next verſe, Verſe 16. He alſo ſhall be my ſalvation, for an hypocrite ſhall not come before him.

As if he had ſaid, Never put me this doubt, that God will diſclaim me, becauſe I maintain mine own wayes before him; nor do I believe that God will damn me, becauſe he ſlayeth me: No, Though he ſlay me, yet I will truſt in him; and though I maintain mine own wayes before him, yet he ſhall be my ſalvation.

Hoc evadet mihi in ſalutem. Simile, ero eis in Deum. Druſ.

Some render, This ſhall turn to my ſalvation; He will not rebuke me, much leſs condemn me, as he will thoſe who juſtifie themſelves proudly, for this ſhall turn to my ſalvation; that is, he will be pleaſed with, and accept of me; he will not ſay it is raſhneſs or folly, pride or ſelf-conceit, which hath ſtirred me up to maintain my wayes; he will rather ſay, it is the integrity and uprightneſs of my heart; and that I have done no more then I might, yea, no more then I ought for his glory, being thus charged as I am by you my Friends: I do not diſtruſt my cauſe, though you do; yea, I am ſetled in this perſwaſion, that when God hath heard my plea, he will give ſentence on my ſide, though you are my accuſers.

He alſo ſhall be my ſalvation.

Salvation is a large word. God is all ſalvations to his people, and the Author of all ſalvation, of temporal, as well as of eternal. Upon whatſoever we can write ſalvation, we may entitle God to it. He that is our God, is the God of ſalvation (Pſal. 68. 20.) But what is the ſalvation to which Job here entitles God?

Sunt qui de futuro accipiunt, erit poſt mortem, ſed ego de præſenti tēpore accipio. Merc.

Some refer it to temporal ſalvation, He alſo ſhall be my ſalvation; that is, he ſhall deliver and reſtore me from my preſent troubles; though he now ſlay and quite undo me, yet I believe that he will revive and repair me again.

In ſalutem eſſe dicitur non ratione præſentis opis ſed ratione liberationis ab omnibus malis & tranſlationis ad beatitudinem. Coc.

Others interpret it ſtrictly of eternal ſalvation; He alſo ſhall be my ſalvation; that is, though he ſlay me here, yet I am ſure he will ſave me hereafter, and be my portion for ever. Three Reaſons riſe from the Text, why Job ſhould here rather be underſtood of eternal, then of temporal ſalvation.

Firſt, Becauſe he ſpeaks in the next clauſe about the preſence of God, An hypocrite ſhall not come before him: coming before God (in the ſence there intended) and ſalvation, are the ſame; eternal ſalvation conſiſts in the viſion of God, Pſal. 16. 11. In thy preſence is fulneſs of joy.

Secondly, Becauſe we find Job expreſſing little confidence, but rather much diffidence about any temporal reſtauration; he gave himſelf for a loſt man, as to the riches, honour and greatneſs of this world. He had better aſſurance of the glory he never had, then of the greatneſs he once had.

Thirdly, Becauſe he ſpeaks here upon ſuppoſition of his being ſlain; take ſlaying ſtrictly, for the ſeparating of ſoul and body; and he that is ſo ſlain is beyond temporal ſalvation. For theſe three reaſons we may conceive Job here aiming at, and reaching after eternal ſalvation.

He alſo ſhall be my ſalvation.] Some connecting this clauſe with that ſence of the former, I will reprove my own wayes, give the Obſervation thus.

While we reprove our ſelves, and confeſs our ſins, our hearts may be raiſed up in confidence of the favour of God in the pardon of our ſins.

Quamvis adverſum me coram Deo vias meas tanquam malas arguo, ſcio tamen quod ſententiam in mei favorem pronunciaturus ſit. Bold.

He doth not ſay, If I reprove mine own wayes, God will reprove me too. There are ſome reprovings of our hearts, from which we may infer, that God will reprove us much more: So 1 John 3. 20. If our heart con- demn us, God is greater then our hearts, that knoweth all things. 'Tis ſo, when the heart is ingaged to any luſt: When ſuch a mans heart condemns him, God will condemn him a thouſand times more: A man continuing in ſin, cannot ſay upon good ground, I reprove my wayes, yet God ſhall be my ſalvation; yea, while ſuch reprove themſelves, they may be ſure God will reprove them alſo. Only, when we humbly acknowledge the ſinfulneſs of our wayes, and forſake them, we are aſſured of mercy. Theſe, and none but theſe, have warrant from the word, to ſay, ſalvation belongs to them. Prov. 28. 13. He that covereth his ſins ſhall not proſper; but whoſo confeſſeth, and forſaketh them, ſhall have mercy. (1 John 1. 9.) If we confeſs our ſins, he is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins: To confeſs ſin is ſelf-condemnation. God is ſo gracious, that he will not condemn; ſo faithful and juſt, that he will forgive thoſe that confeſs. While we implead our ſelves, God will not be our Judge, but Chriſt will be our Advocate: Hence that Goſpel-prophet incourageth drooping ſouls (Iſa. 43. 16.) Declare that thou mayſt be juſtified: Declare, what ſhould he declare? Declare thine iniquity, and thou ſhalt be juſtified from all thine iniquities. The Lord alſo will be thy ſalvation.

Secondly, Take the former clauſe according to our reading, I will maintain my own wayes before him: He alſo ſhall be my ſalvation.

From this Connexion Obſerve, There is a ſelf-juſtification conſiſtent with ſalvation.

Chriſt chargeth the Phariſees (Luke 16. 15.) Ye are they which juſtifie your ſelves before men, but God knoweth your hearts: That is, you bear up, and pride your ſelves with this, that men know no ill by you, that no man can ſay, black is your eye; but God can ſee, black is your heart. They who reſt in a juſtification before men, while their hearts are naught, are condemned before God. And all who juſtifie themſelves before God, upon the goodneſs of their works, ſhall be condemned. But though we may not juſtifie our ſelves upon the goodneſs of our works, yet they (whoſe works are ſo) may juſtifie themſelves that their works are good. 'Tis not pride, but duty (when we are called to it) to ſay we are what we are, and to maintain that our wayes are right, when they are right. God takes it well at our hands, if we ſpeak the moſt (with truth) of our ſelves, when others ſpeak leſs then truth, or that which is not true of us. Self-condemnation is alwayes not only uncomely, but ſinful, except it come under the notion of ſelf-vindication, or of ſuch a ſelf-juſtification as this point leads unto. Thus we may maintain our wayes before men: Yea, thus (while we put our mouths in the duſt, and are deeply humbled before God for the imperfection of our wayes) we may maintain the uprightneſs of our wayes before God, and be aſſured that he alſo will be our ſalvation.

Further, Take the words in their own compaſs, and we may Obſerve,

First, God is the ſalvation of his people.

How often do the Saints breath out this faith, He is our ſalvation; upon this faith they live, and in this faith they dye, That God is their ſalvation.

Secondly, Obſerve, A thought that God is ſalvation to us, is conſolation enough to us.

Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him: he alſo ſhall be my ſalvation. When Jacob lay upon his death-bed panting and gaſping for life, O God (ſaith he) I have waited for thy ſalvation. He could not go on bleſſing his ſons, but he muſt make a parentheſis, to take a view, or get a taſte of this ſalvation. To reflect upon our intereſt in the ſalvation of God, is light to us in darkneſs, and life to us in the approaches of death. To be ſaved by any hand carries comfort in it, much more to be ſaved by the hand of God: But the comfort of the Saints is yet higher, God is their ſalvation. We are happy enough that God ſaves us; but we have a further happineſs, in that God is our ſalvation: If God be our ſalvation, we are not only as ſafe, but (according to our meaſure and receptibility) as happy as God himſelf is.

Thirdly, Job ſpeaks emphatically, He alſo; he cryes up the Name of God. And in this open affirmation, that God is his ſalvation, there is a ſecret negation, or a denyal implied, that ſalvation is in any elſe: As if he had ſaid, He, and he only; he, and none but he.

The point from it is, That none but God is able to give ſalvation to his people.

Salvation belongeth unto the Lord (Pſal. 3. 8.) The Hebrew is, Salvation unto the Lord. Salvation is ſo much his, that the holy Ghoſt puts nothing between it and him. We ſupply the ſence well, Salvation belongeth unto the Lord. And it doth not belong unto him in common with others, 'tis his propriety; He gives it, and none elſe can; (Iſa. 43. 11.) I, even I, am the Lord, and beſide me there is no Saviour. No? We find in the Book of Judges, that God raiſed up Saviours to his people (Neh. 9. 27.) True; but, firſt, He never raiſed up any Saviour for eternal ſalvation, but only Jeſus Chriſt, who is alſo God. Secondly, They who were temporal Saviours did not ſave in their own ſtrength, and by their own power; God is ſaid to raiſe them up Saviours, becauſe he raiſed up ſuch Inſtruments as himſelf intended to ſave them by; it was God that ſaved them, though men were imployed to ſave them. Whoſoever brings us ſalvation, God is the Author of it. The Prophet concludes (Jer. 3. 23.) Truly in vain is ſalvation hoped for from the hills, and from the multitude of mountains. He ſpeaks but of a temporal ſalvation; and by hills and mountains he means the greateſt means, the higheſt helps, the ſtrongeſt hands, the wiſeſt heads on earth; and yet he ſaith, In vain is ſalvation hoped for from thoſe hills and mountains; truly God is the help of his people. It is much more vain to expect eternal ſalvation from any other; in vain is ſoul-ſalvation hoped for from hills, or from the multitude of mountains; from this good work or that good work; from hills and mountains of good works; though you pile up mountains of prayers, hills of alms, and deeds of charity; yea, though you dig the loweſt valleys of humiliation, and make rivers and ſeas of tears with weeping, yet in vain is eternal ſalvation hoped for from theſe hills and mountains, from theſe valleys and ſeas, Salvation is of the Lord: He alſo ſhall be my ſalvation.

When Job had ſaid, I will maintain mine own wayes before him; Doth he ſay, And they ſhall be my ſalvation? Doth he ſay, my righteouſneſs, my integrity, ſhall be my ſalvation? His wayes were indeed the way to ſalvation; but his wayes were not, nor did he intend them to be, his ſalvation. The uprightneſs of our hearts, the righteouſneſs of our wayes cannot ſave us; Chriſt only is our ſalvation. How much ſoever we may maintain, or may be compelled (as Job was) to boaſt of our wayes, yet we cannot make ſalvation of them; we muſt give that wholly to God. It is an admirable frame of heart, when we are higheſt in ſpeaking for our ſelves, or in maintaining our wayes before God and man, yet then to go quite out of our wayes, and out of our ſelves. To expect all from free-grace, when we have been moſt free at works, moſt active in doing, or patient in ſuffering for God, is the right Goſpel temper.

Fourthly, Obſerve this from it, That an upright heart in the worſt of times, looks at, and hath an eye upon the beſt things.

Though he ſlay me, he ſhall be my ſalvation: With the ſame breath he tells us of God ſlaying him, and of God his ſalvation; he ſaw life in death, light in darkneſs, deliverances in deſtruction, repairs in ruine, ſalvation in ſlaying: ſuch are the workings of a gracious heart, ſuch the proſpects of faith in the gloomeſt day, in the darkeſt night. Faith only ſees ſuch ſights as theſe, reflected from the glaſs of precious promiſes.

Laſtly, Job expreſſeth his ſpecial intereſt in, or relation to God, He alſo ſhall be my ſalvation.

Hence obſerve, That a Believer looks upon God himſelf as his ſalvation.

My God, my ſalvation. God hath (as it were) made himſelf over to Believers: Job doth not ſay, God will give, or beſtow ſalvation upon me; but he ſaith, He ſhall be my ſalvation. It is God himſelf who is the ſalvation and the portion of his people. They would not much care for ſalvation, if God were not their ſalvation. It more pleaſeth the Saints that they enjoy God, then that they enjoy ſalvation, tion. Falſe and carnal ſpirits, will expreſs a great deal of deſire after ſalvation: O they like ſalvation, heaven, and glory well, but they never expreſs any longing deſire after God and Jeſus Chriſt. They love ſalvation, but they care not for a Saviour. Now that which faith pitcheth moſt upon, is God himſelf; he ſhall be my ſalvation, let me have him, and there's ſalvation enough; He is my life, he is my comfort, he is my riches, he is my honour, and he is my all. Thus David's heart acted immediately upon God, Pſal. 18. 1, 2. I love thee, O Lord, my ſtrength. The Lord is my rock, and my fortreſs, and my deliverer, my buckler, and the horn of my ſalvation, and my high tower. It pleaſed holy David more, that God was his ſtrength, then that God gave him ſtrength; that God was his deliverer, then that he was delivered; that God was his fortreſs, his buckler, his horn, his high tower, then that he gave him the effect of all theſe: It pleaſed David, and it pleaſes all the Saints more, that God is their ſalvation (whether temporal, or eternal) then that he ſaves them. The Saints look more at God, then at all that is Gods. They ſay (Non tua, ſed te) We deſire not thine, but thee, or nothing of thine like thee. Whom have I in Heaven but thee? ſaith David again (Pſal. 73. 25.) What are Saints, what are Angels, to a ſoul without God? 'Tis true of things, as well as of perſons. What have we in Heaven but God? What's joy without God? What's glory without God? What's all the furniture and riches, all the delicates, yea, and all the diadems of Heaven, without the God of Heaven? If God ſhould ſay to the Saints, here is Heaven, take it amongſt you, but I will withdraw my ſelf, how would they weep over Heaven it ſelf, and make it a Baca, a valley of tears indeed. Heaven is not Heaven, unleſs we injoy God. 'Tis the preſence of God which makes Heaven: Glory is but our neareſt being unto God. A Mephiboſheth replyed, when David told him, I have ſaid, thou and Ziba divide the land: Let him take all if he will, ſaith Mephiboſheth; I do not ſo much regard the land, as I regard thy preſence; Let him take all, for as much as my Lord the King is come again in peace to his own houſe, where I may injoy him. So, if God ſhould ſay to the Saints, take Heaven among you, and withdraw himſelf, they would even ſay, Nay, let the world take Heaven if they will, let them take glory if they will; if we may not have thee in Heaven, Heaven would be but an earth, or rather but a hell to us. That which Saints rejoyce in, is, that they may be in the preſence of God, that they may ſit at his table, and eat bread with him; that is, that they may be near him continually, which was Mephiboſheth his priviledge with David. That's the thing, they ſay, which they deſire, and which their ſouls thirſt after; that's the wine they would drink. My ſoul (ſaith David, Pſal. 42. 2.) thirſteth for God, for the living God, when (me thinks the time is very long, when) ſhall I come and appear before God? He ſpake this in the greatneſs and heat of his zeal to injoy God in the Ordinances of his publick worſhip: How much more was his ſoul on fire to injoy God, where he ſhould be above Ordinances? The uſual ſaying of Chriſtians is, Come let us go to prayer, or, let us go to Church; we ſhould rather ſay, Come let us go to God. We ſhould prize duties no further, then as we obey and injoy God in doing them: Nor ſhould we prize Heaven it ſelf further, then as we ſhall have there a more full and perfect injoyment of God. Salvation it ſelf were no ſalvation, without the God of ſalvation. He alſo ſhall be my ſalvation.

But an hypocrite ſhall not come before him.

In this latter clauſe, Job ſecretly refuteth the cenſure of his Friends, who had aſperſed him as an hypocrite. Bildad did it in the eighth Chapter, though not directly, by way of aſſertion, yet obliquely, by way of inference, while he ſaid (verſ. 13.) The hypocrites hope ſhall periſh, and be cut off, and his truſt ſhall be as a ſpiders web. Here Job ſpeaks that out, which no hypocrite can, I (ſaith he) will maintain my wayes before God, and he ſhall be my ſalvation: 'Tis not ſo with hypocrites, they dare not maintain their wayes before God; or if they do, they ſhall yet fall under the condemnation of God: Thus by way of argument, he denieth, as they by way of argument had affirmed him to be an hypocrite. Job could come where no hypocrite can.

Audeo corā Deo apparare, quod non facerem ſi impius & hypocrita eſſem ut vos me eſſe dicitis. Merc.

An hypocrite ſhall not come before him.] The Hebrew is, All hypocrites ſhall not come before him; that is, No hypocrite ſhall come before him. Not all, is often in Scripture put for none; or, none at all. David (Pſal. 47. 17.) ſaith of the worldly rich man, When he dyeth, he ſhall carry nothing away with him: The Hebrew is, When he dyeth, he ſhall not carry all away with him. The meaning is, (as we tranſlate) he ſhall carry nothing at all away, he ſhall not carry ſo much as a rag away with him. So the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Rom. 3. 20.) By the deeds of the Law there ſhall no fleſh be juſtified in thy ſight: The Greek is, All fleſh ſhall not be juſtified in thy ſight, by the deeds of the Law: The meaning is, none ſhall. So here, All hypocrites; that is, No hypocrite. I have opened ſomething about him at the eighth Chapter, and ſhewed there what an hypocrite is; he is one that acts another mans part; he acts a perſon which he is not. An hypocrite is a wicked man in a godly mans clothes.

Non veniet in conſpectu ejus omnis hypocrita. Heb. Non omnis, in ſacro ſermone ſæpe valet nullus. Hypocrita, Græcis eſt quod Latinis hiſtrio, Larvatus nimirum homo, qui aliud ipſe eſt, & aliud ſe eſſe ſimulat. Sanct.

Some tranſlate by a general word, A wicked man ſhall not come before him: Others render, An accepter of perſons ſhall not come before him; He taxed his Friends as ſuch before. Two or three of the Rabbins (though they are ſomewhat hard put to it, to make out that ſence of the word) are much for the latter, An accepter of perſons ſhall not come before him. We render it ſtrictly according to the proper ſignification of the word; yet to ſay a wicked men, or an accepter of perſons, ſhall not come before him, is as much as to ſay, an hypocrite ſhall not come before him: For though all wicked men, all accepters of perſons are not hypocrites (ſome ſin, and care not who ſees; they ſin in the very face of the Sun, and the ſhew of their faces (as the Prophet ſpeaks) doth teſtifie againſt them.) But (I ſay) though poſſibly ſome wicked men (at leaſt in ſome things) are no hypocrites; yet there is no hypocrite, but he is a wicked man; therefore we ſhall not call either of them out of his name, though we give both, or either of the names to each of them: And as their titles, ſo their eſtates are alike, we may as well ſay, A wicked man, as An hypocrite.

Shall not come before him.] Not come before him? Whither can they go? or where can they be behind him, whoſe face is every where? I anſwer, To come before God, may be underſtood either of this life, or of the life to come. We come before God in this life, while we attend the duties and ordinances of his worſhip. But it may be ſaid, Do not hypocrites come thus before God? None come more before God in that ſence then hypocrites; and herein lyes their hypocriſie chiefly, that they come before God in outward holy duties; and yet are ſo unholy in their lives, or at thoſe duties. The Lord ſpeaks complaining of ſuch an hypocritical people preſſing upon him (Iſa. 58. 2.) This people ſeek me daily; they take delight in approaching to God: Yet all this was only as a Nation that did righteouſneſs; they were not really a righteous Nation. In another Prophet (Jer. 7. 10.) the Lord reproveth hypocrites openly, and in terms, for coming before him, Will ye ſteal, murder, and commit adultery, and ſwear falſely, &c. and come and ſtand before me in this Houſe? They came ſo much before God, that he was put to chide them out of his preſence; he could ſcarce ſtave them off. How then is it that Job ſaith, An hypocrite ſhall not come before him, if we underſtand it of this preſent life?

Phraſis Hebraica idem eſt ac illum condemni, & rejici. Bold.

I anſwer, He comes not ſo before God, firſt in regard of right; ſecondly in regard of acceptance. An hypocrite hath no right to come before God in any duty, he cannot call God Father; he cannot lay claim to any promiſe of the Covenant; or if he do, he ſhall not be accepted, much leſs ſuffered to ſee God as his ſalvation. Thus an hypocrite ſhall not come before God in this preſent life, though he appear often perſonally before him.

Secondly, He ſhall not come before God in the life to come, to injoy, or joy in his preſence; he ſhall not ſee God to his comfort, but to his torment; he ſhall only ſee God as a Judge, to be condemned by him, and thus he would not ſee him: He ſhall be driven to the Tribunal, or Judgment-ſeat of God, but he ſhall not ſtand in judgment.

Non veniet in conſpectu ejus ut videat ipſum Deum in quo ultima ſalus hominū conſiſtit, veniet tamen in conſpectu ejus judicandus. Aquin.

There are four expreſſions in Scripture, which gradually ſet forth the rejection of wicked men from the preſence of God.

Firſt, They ſhall not be admitted entrance, Rev. 21. 27. Chap. 22. 14. There ſhall in no wiſe enter into it any thing that defileth, nor whatſoever worketh or maketh a lye; that is, unholy ones ſhall not ſo much as ſet one foot over the threſhold of that holy City. He ſpeaks thus (Iſa. 59. 14.) in another caſe, Equity cannot enter. It was a time, wherein equity was ſo far from having due reſpect and entertainment, that juſtice could not ſo much as get in adoors: Equity cannot enter. The wicked ſhall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; they ſhall not have the leaſt admittance.

Secondly, The Scripture ſaith, wicked men ſhall not ſtand in the preſence of God (Pſal. 5. 5.) The fooliſh ſhall not ſtand in thy ſight. David treateth there much upon the ſame Argument that Job doth; for after he had ſpoken of his own acceptance with God, he adds in a way of oppoſition, the fooliſh ſhall not ſtand in thy ſight; though, poſſibly, he may enter, yet he ſhall not ſtand there.

Thirdly, The Scripture ſaith, they ſhall not dwell with God (Pſal. 5. 4.) Evil ſhall not dwell with thee; that is, evil men ſhall not, though they ſhould be admitted entrance, though they ſhould be ſuffered to ſtand a while before God, yet they ſhall not dwell with God, they ſhall preſently paſs away.

The fourth expreſſion is that in the Text, which comes between the firſt and ſecond, between entring and ſtanding, that is, coming before God; An hypocrite ſhall not come before him; that is, God will not have any thing to do with him in a way of favour. Thus he is excluded totally; he ſhall not enter, ſaith one Scripture; if he doth, he ſhall not come before God, ſaith another; if he come before God, yet he ſhall not ſtand in his ſight, ſaith a third; if he ſtand, yet he ſhall not dwell with God, ſaith a fourth. I might add a fifth, which ſaith, He ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God (1 Cor. 6. 9.) Now in oppoſition to all theſe, the upright and holy are admitted, they have entrance into the Houſe of God, they come before God, they ſtand in his ſight, they dwell with him for ever; yea, they ſhall not only dwell as ſervants, or as friends, but as ſons, as his firſtborn, as heirs; all they ſhall inherit the Kingdom of God. One of the higheſt priviledges promiſed unto Sion is, that a time ſhall come when the wicked ſhall not come unto her (Iſa. 52. 1.) Awake, awake, put on thy ſtrength, O Zion, put on thy beautiful garments, O Jeruſalem, the holy City. Wherefore muſt Jeruſalem the holy City awake thus, and be ready in her dreſs, in her beautiful garments? Why, there is good news for her, For henceforth there ſhall no more come into thee the uncircumciſed and the unclean: As if he had ſaid, In times of Sions defection, or oppreſſion, when there was no due reformation of worſhip, nor order among worſhippers, then the uncircumciſed and the unclean came and ſtood, yea, even dwelt with thee, as thy own children; but, O Jeruſalem, a time ſhall come when the uncircumciſed and the unclean ſhall not ſo much as come into thee, they ſhall be rejected and caſt out for ever. Prophane ones ſhall find no place at laſt in Sion here below; and hypocrites ſhall never come into the Sion which is above. Some hypocrites will come into the Church when ſhe is moſt refined; there is no keeping of them out, till they diſcover themſelves, and ſo are caſt out; or apoſtatize, and ſo go out of themſelves. Poſſibly the Church militant may be ſo purged and reformed at laſt, that as there ſhall be no prophane in her, ſo but a few hypocrites. But into the Church triumphant, we are ſure, the cloſeſt hypocrite ſhall not enter: God will waſh off all the varniſh and paint, which they have put upon the face of their profeſſion, with rivers of brimſtone, and will give them the cup of his fierce wrath to drink unto eternity.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Hypocrites are the worſt of wicked men.

Every wicked man is not bad enough to be called an hypocrite. Hypocrites are the chief of ſinners; not only the children, but the firſt-born of the Devil. We may wrong a wicked man, by calling him an hypocrite; but we cannot wrong any hypocrite, by thinking him all that's wicked. The Moraliſt ſaith, When you have ſaid a man is ungrateful, you have ſaid all that is ill of him. I am ſure, when we have ſaid a man is an hypocrite, we have ſaid all that's ill of him; and have called him not only (as we ſay) all to nought, but all that's nought. To do wickedly, or to be wicked, is bad enough; but to do wickedneſs under pretence of goodneſs; or for a man, whoſe heart tells him he is wicked, to pretend to goodneſs, this is abominable. An hypocrite is not worſe then other wicked men, becauſe he alwayes hath more ſin then they, but becauſe he hides his ſin: Nor doth the greatneſs of his ſin lye ſimply in this, becauſe he hides how ſinful he is; but becauſe he appears holy, which he is not; that he ſeems to be good, is worſe then his being really bad. That Satan is the Prince of darkneſs, ſpeaks not ſo much ill of him, as this, that he transforms himſelf into an Angel of light. An hypocrite never doth good out of love to God, but out of deſign for himſelf. He thinks he can impoſe upon God, and mock him, as one man mocks another; he makes God an Idol, as if he had eyes and could not ſee; or had no eyes to ſee his wayes, nor underſtanding to ſearch into his heart. And to ſhew that hypocrites are the worſt of ſinners, they are ſentenced to the worſt of puniſhments. An hypocrite ſhall not come before him, ſaith Job here; how great a puniſhment that is, will appear in the next Obſervation. When Chriſt would expreſs the soreſt judgment upon any ſort of ſinners, he tells them, They ſhall have their portion with hypocrites and unbelievers, (Mat. 24. 51.) implying, that the judgment paſſed upon hypocrites is the moſt dreadful judgment. Now if the judgment of an hypocrite be the greateſt judgment, then the ſin of an hypocrite is the greateſt ſin; for the juſtice of God takes the meaſure of puniſhment by the meaſure of ſin. As every ſin deſerves puniſhment; ſo ever, where the puniſhment is greater, the ſin is greater, either in the matter, or in the circumſtances of it. Hypocrites are (as one gloſſeth this Text in Matthew) the freeholders of Hell; other ſinners are but as inmates with them, and have but a portion of their miſery. Now as that by which other things are proportioned and meaſured is a perfect meaſure, and that by which other things are weighed is a perfect weight in its kind: ſo that by which the greateſt miſery is weighed and meaſured, is the moſt perfect miſery in its degree: Seeing then the weight and meaſure of that miſery which reſts upon an hypocrite, is uſed by God himſelf, to weigh and meaſure out the miſery of thoſe who ſhall have the greateſt miſery; therefore the miſery of an hypocrite is the greateſt; which clearly argues what is here aſſerted, that his ſin is alſo greateſt.

Secondly, Conſider in what the puniſhment of the hypocrite doth conſiſt: Job doth not ſay, An hypocrite ſhall be caſt to hell, and tormented in that Lake with fire and brimſtone (which yet other Scriptures ſay) but here Job ſaith only, An hypocrite ſhall not come before him, he ſhall be baniſhed out of the preſence of God. This is his puniſhment.

Hence Obſerve, That, The puniſhment of loſs is a very great puniſhment, one of the greateſt, if not the greateſt puniſhment.

Sinful man falls under a twofold puniſhment, Firſt, of loſs. Secondly, of ſenſe. Many diſpute which of theſe is the greateſt; and moſt determine, that the puniſhment of loſs is greater then that of ſenſe. This is the puniſhment of an hypocrite, He ſhall not come before God. This loſs is a great puniſhment in this life: Not to injoy God by Faith in Ordinances, Promiſes, and Diſpenſations, is the great miſery of man; hypocrites are denyed this injoyment. For though they come before God (as I ſaid before) and preſs into his preſence, to worſhip him; though they challenge the Promiſes, and are apt to flatter themſelves, that God is with them in providential Diſpenſations, yet they have no acceptance with him. God denyeth them his preſence: They come to God, but God doth not come to them; though they talk of the Covenant, and lay hold of it, yet it is with a falſe finger, and God reproves them for their boldneſs and uſurpations (Pſal. 50. 16.) Unto the wicked God ſaith, what haſt thou to do to declare my Statutes, or that thou ſhouldeſt take my Covenant into thy mouth, ſeeing thou hateſt inſtruction, and caſteſt my words behind thee? I grant an hypocrite may have ſome fluſhes of the preſence of God in Ordinances and duties, and that's his Heaven. This the Apoſtle calls, his taſte of the good word of God, and of the powers of the world to come (Heb. 6. 5.) he may have ſome raiſings, yea, ſuppoſed raviſhings of Spirit at the report and ſight of heavenly things: but his taſte of theſe is not ſpiritual, but ſenſitive only, ſuch as the underſtanding gives in to the affections upon any rational diſcourſe or demonſtration of objects pleaſing to the nature of man: any higher injoyment of God then this the hypocrite taſteth not. And uſually he prayeth, and heareth, without any ſenſe of theſe. He doth nothing with God, while he hath to do with him: And here is his puniſhment, though he be not ſenſible of it now, but he ſhall be ſenſible of it in the life to come. As he ſhall not come before God for ever; ſo he ſhall know the meaning of it, what it is not to come before him. Carnal men lightly eſteem the preſence and injoyment of God; yea, they are glad when they are out of his preſence. Few know when God is near them, or when he is far off; what his departures mean, or what his returnings. They who know theſe things, count his preſence their greateſt gain, and his abſence their greateſt loſs. When God ſentenced Cain for the murder of his Brother, he complains chiefly of this, (Gen. 4. 14.) Thou haſt driven me out this day from thy face, or, from thy preſence. And what was that? It was but the common preſence of God in Ordinances. Cain had been offering ſacrifice, and God did not accept him; he could not go from the univerſal preſence of God; and he was not at all admitted to his comfortable preſence; yet he looked upon it as his greateſt miſery, that he was deprived of his common preſence in publick worſhip, from which he was as a perſon excommunicated. I am driven out from thy face. When Saul could not get an anſwer from God, neither by Dreams, nor by Urim, nor by Prophets, this he repreſents as the worſt of his affliction (1 Sam. 28.) To be ſhut out from the ſight or ſociety of a man whom we much eſteem, is exceeding afflictive. Though Abſalom was reconciled to David his Father, ſo far as to be admitted to come to the City; yet becauſe David gave order that Abſalom ſhould not ſee his face, nor come to Court, he could not bear it, but reſents this reſtraint ſo paſſionately, that he ſends to Joab, and beſpeaks him thus? Wherefore am I come from Geſhur? It had been good for me to have been there ſtill; now therefore let me ſee the Kings face, and if there be any iniquity in me, let him kill me (2 Sam. 14. 24, 34.) As if he had ſaid, I cannot ſatisfie my ſelf with my liberty in Jeruſalem, if I ſtand excluded from the Kings preſence: I had rather dye, then indure this piece of baniſhment. How then will hypocrites be tormented with an eternal baniſhment from the face of God! It is the greateſt tryal the Saints have in this life, when they looſe the ſight of God by faith; when they come before God, and cannot find God; when God covers himſelf with a Cloud (as the Church complains) that they cannot come at him; this is the hardeſt exerciſe of the Saints in this life. And O how they are refreſhed, when God returns and comes into their ſpirits; when he ſheds his love abroad into their hearts by the Holy Ghoſt. This is Heaven upon earth; and of this they ſay as the Diſciples at the transfiguration of Chriſt upon the Mount (Mat. 17.) It is good to be here. When the Lord Jeſus perceived a vail drawn between him and his Father, and that (while he was ſuffering for the ſin, and by the malice and wrath of man) he ſuffered alſo an eclipſe (though he knew it was not a total one, and would be but a ſhort one) of the light of his Fathers face, how did he cry out (who never ſhrunk, nor opened his mouth at the ſcourges and crown of thorns, at the ſpittings and buffettings, at the nails and ſpear which tortured his bleſſed body, how did he cry out I ſay) at this ſhort deſertion, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? (Matth. 27. 46.) Hence take a ſcantling of thoſe torments which ſhall vex hypocrites in Hell, who ſhall be made to know fully (which they have here ſlighted) what the comfortable preſence of God means, and yet ſhall ſee themſelves ſhut out from it, without the leaſt hope of any injoyment. And that which will make the ſuffering of this loſs moſt torturing and inſufferable, is, that they ſhall ever be thinking of it. If a man could forget his loſſes, how great ſoever they are, they would be only a privative evil to him, not an afflictive evil; but to be ever thinking of our loſſes, is to us worſe then the loſs it ſelf. Now, wicked men ſhall ever be poring upon the loſs of Heaven in Hell, and caſting up the ſum of it, though they cannot exactly make out the ſum. This will be the ſting of all their ſorrows, and the very head of that poyſon'd arrow which ſhall drink up their ſpirits. And this ariſes two wayes: Firſt, From the very conduct of Nature, which alwayes leads our thoughts to, and faſtens them upon our loſſes. As where the pain is, there we point with the finger; ſo where the loſs is, there we dwell with our thoughts. Secondly, This ariſes inevitably from the juſtice of God; who having prepared this as the hypocrites puniſhment, will irreſiſtably hold his thoughts and this loſs together; ſo that it ſhall not be in his power to lay them aſide, or ſuſpend them for one moment. From all theſe conſiderations, let the hypocrite underſtand the terror of this ſentence, that he ſhall not come before God.

If any ſhall object, How can hypocrites be ſaid to loſe this preſence of God, ſeeing they never injoyed it?

I anſwer, We may be ſaid to loſe a thing three wayes. Firſt, As having had and poſſeſſed it before; thus hypocrites do not loſe the preſence of God. Secondly, We may be ſaid to loſe that, which hath been offered and tendered to our injoyment: And Thirdly, That which we have hoped to injoy. In theſe two latter ſences, hypocrites loſe the preſence of God, together with all the bleſſed concomitants of it. For ſalvation hath been offered to them, and they have profeſſed, yea, poſſibly, they have had ſtrong hopes that they ſhould be ſaved. Whence elſe is that challenge of admittance (Matth. 7. 22.) Many will ſay unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not propheſied in thy Name? &c. To whom Chriſt will profeſs, I never knew you, depart from me ye workers of iniquity.

Again, An hypocrite ſhall not come before him. Then, who ſhall come before him? Take the anſwer to this queſtion, from the mouth of Chriſt himſelf (Matth. 5. 8.) Bleſſed are the pure in heart, for they ſhall ſee God. And the Apoſtles negative, Without holineſs no man ſhall ſee the Lord, may be reſolved into this affirmative, Holy ones ſhall ſee the Lord, the holy One; they ſee God here in a glaſs darkly, and they ſhall ſee him face to face clearly in Heaven. The reaſon why we ſee ſo little of God in the glaſs of Ordinances and Promiſes, is, becauſe there is ſo much unholineſs in our hearts: The hypocrite cannot ſee him at all; and the ſincere cannot ſee much of him, becauſe remaining corruption ſtands between God and them, hindering their ſight. When we ſhall ſee God as he is, we ſhall be like him; and as we grow now to a clearer ſight of him, we ſhall alſo grow into a fuller likeneſs with him.

Laſtly, For as much as an hypocrite ſhall not come before him, we learn,

That there is no coming before God without Chriſt.

The reaſon why an hypocrite ſhall not come before God, is, becauſe he cannot bring Chriſt with him; he comes in his own name, and therefore receives nothing from God but frowns, or a command to depart and be gone. Through Chriſt we have acceſs with boldneſs to the throne of grace; and we may ſpeak to God as to a friend: But they who come boldly before God without Chriſt, come preſumptuouſly, not believingly; and ſhall find, that fool-hardneſs, not faith, hath acted them up to ſuch a confidence. For as no man can come unto Chriſt except the Father draw him; ſo none can come unto the Father unleſs Chriſt bring him. Chriſt takes his people (as it were) by the hand, and leads them up to his Fathers Throne. As when a poor ſuitor comes to preſent ſome requeſt to a great King, he (poſſibly) dares not come near, till the Favourite, or ſome eminent Officer of the Court brings him up. 'Tis ſo here: But as for the hypocrite, he may ſtay long enough at the door, before Chriſt vouchſafe to bring him to his Father; and if he ſhall be ſo impudent, as to come alone, Chriſt will quickly turn him back. Man cannot come immediately before God: The hypocrite is out of the Mediator, and therefore An hypocrite ſhall not come before him.

VERS. 17, 18, 19.

Hear diligently my ſpeech, and my declaration, with your ears.

Behold now, I have ordered my cauſe, I know that I ſhall be juſtified.

Who is he that will plead with me? for now if I hold my tongue, I ſhall give up the ghoſt.

JOB had made his Preface, and called for attention at the ſixth verſe of this Chapter, Hear now my reaſoning, and hearken to the pleadings of my lips. Having ſpoken a little, he makes a new preface, and again calls up their attention, Hear diligently my ſpeech, and my declaration, with your ears.

There are two parts of this ſecond preface.

In the firſt, he requireth a fair hearing from his friends, which, with ſome interpoſitions of his growing confidence, is contained in theſe three verſes.

In the ſecond, he deſireth a fair hearing from God, verſ. 20, 21, 22.

In this part of the preface directed to his friends, he calls for attention in general at the ſeventeenth verſe, Hear diligently my ſpeech. And ſhews a twofold ground of it, verſ. 18, 19.

Firſt, From the goodneſs of his cauſe, and the clearneſs of his conſcience, at the eighteenth verſe, Behold now, I have ordered my cauſe, I know that I ſhall be juſtified. A man that is ſure he hath a good cauſe, cares not who hears it, only he would have it well heard.

Secondly, He giveth another ground, from his own neceſſity, he muſt be heard, he ſhall die elſe; in the latter part of the nineteenth verſe, Who is he that will plead with me? for if now I hold my tongue, I ſhall give up the ghoſt.

Hear diligently my ſpeech.

Job had found his friends unequal hearers, and therefore he begs a better hearing; and to prepare their attention for it, he layes about him (as we uſe to ſay) thick and threefold, Hear diligently my ſpeech, and my declaration, with your ears.

Audiendo audite Attentionẽ ab iis nõ qualemcunq; ſed maximam efflagitat.

Hear diligently.] The Hebrew is, Hearing hear, that is, Be ſure you hear when you hear. As if he had ſaid, It is not any kind of attention which will ſerve my cauſe, you muſt give attentive diligence and diligent attention to my words. The doubling of the word imports two things; either firſt, that his friends were unwilling to hear; or ſecondly, that what he had to ſpeak was of very great importance, ſuch as might juſtly command a double hearing. Hear diligently my ſpeech.

Ænigmata. Vulg.

And my declaration.] The Vulgar reads it, My dark ſpeeches: But there is no light at all in the Original, leading them to tranſlate dark ſpeeches. They ſay it is becauſe Job ſpeaks about a difficult point, or the riddles of providence, ſhewing how the Lord had afflicted the innocent, and yet is himſelf juſt. Theſe indeed are hard ſayings, dark ſpeeches; and we may grant, that there is a darkneſs in the matter, a depth and a myſteriouſneſs in what he was about to ſpeak. But Jobs deſign was to ſpeak plain, not in parables, to ſpeak in the ſun, not in the clouds. And the Hebrew word in its native importance, is to open or explain, to ſet a thing forth in lively colours: Which ſignification is altogether inconſiſtent with that of the Vulgar, which reades, Hear my riddle, or my dark ſpeech. Beſides, the word [declaration] ſignifies a grave and a weighty ſpeech, a ſpeech which is not froth'd out with light words, nor wrapt up in obſcure meanings, but is bottomed upon reaſon, and ordered with a clearneſs of diſcretion. Further, the word (declaration) is conceived to be a law term, for he ſpeaks afterwards of pleading, who will plead with me? I will make my declaration. In law-ſuits the Plantiff puts in a declaration of his grievance: ſo ſaith Job, Hear now my ſpeech, and my declaration, with your ears. I am at the bar, let my declaration be read for the opening of my cauſe.

אחותי à חוה Patefecit, oſtendit, quæ ſignificatio eſt omnino contraria ænigmati, indicationẽ planam & minimè ambiguam denotans. Vox iſta grave quoddã dictũ & ſententiam notatu dignã importat, atq; in hoc loco ad forũ pertinere putaverim. Bold.

With your ears.] The ear is the Organ of hearing, and that only, we have nothing to hear with but the ear, why then doth he ſay, hear my declaration with your ears? when if they heard it at all, they muſt hear it with their ears. I anſwer, This is but an enforcement of what he ſaid before, hear diligently, that is, hear with your ears, be ſure you hear, ſet your ear to work upon it, take heed how you hear, or in hearing be ſure you hearken. So in the new Teſtament often, he that hath an ear to hear, let him hear, which is as much as this, let him hear with his ears, that is, let the ear do its work, and not be idle. Every man that hath ears, hath not an ear to hear. Moſt are like the Idols of the heathen, who have ears but hear not. All ears are ſhut till Chriſt bores them to a ſaving hearing of the word. Till the heart be opened, the ear is deaf, and cannot hear to purpoſe. Further, take this rule. It is a heightning of the ſenſe of what we ſay, when we put the Organ and the act together, and joyn them which cannot be ſevered: So, when we hear one ſay, I ſaw it with my mine eyes; we know he could not ſee but with his eyes; yet thus he ſpeaks to note the certainty and clearneſs of the ſight he had of ſuch a thing. And thus, I heard it with mine ears, is, I heard it certainly, fully, and attentively. Such is the meaning of Job in this admonition to his friends, hear diligently my ſpeech, and my declaration with your ears.

Hence (conſidering the ſtate of Job when he called for this hearing) Obſerve,

> That a man in affliction deſires to be heard with much attention.

He that can hardly ſpeak for attending upon his own pains, would fain have others attend to his ſpeech; he would not have his words loſt when they come drencht and bedewed with his own tears and blood. The affliction of others ſhould move us to hear them; and they that are in affliction will be ſure to put it as a motive why they ſhould be heard. And that's one reaſon why times of affliction are ſuch ſpecial ſeaſons of prayer to God. Is any among you afflicted? let him pray, Jam. 5.13. As he hath reaſon to pray then, becauſe of his own need, ſo he hath an encouragement to pray then, becauſe he may have ſtronger hopes to ſpeed. God hears at all times with his ears when we pray with our hearts, but his ear is quickeſt when our wants are ſharpeſt. Afflictions do ſometimes hinder us from hearing counſel, yea afflictions hinder ſome from hearing comforts, (Exod. 6.9.) And Moſes ſpake ſo unto the children of Iſrael (what ſpake he? Not the law which called them to obedience, but a promiſe which called them out of bondage), but they hearkned not unto Moſes for anguiſh (or ſtraightneſs) of ſpirit, and for cruel bondage. Their bondage ſuffered them not to hear of their deliverance out of bondage. But though affliction hinders many from hearing both counſel and comfort, yet they who are in affliction think all bound to hear their complaints.

Secondly, In that Job calls ſo often for attention (for I told you this was his ſecond preface: at the ſixth verſe he bids them hear and hearken, now he bids them hear again)

> Hence Obſerve, They who are at eaſe themſelves, are ſeldom ſo ſenſible as they ought of thoſe that are in miſery.

Their pains, their prayers, their tears, are not laid to heart as they ought. The ground upon which the Apoſtle aſſures the Saints that they ſhall be heard when they cry to Chriſt, when they make declarations of their miſeries and ſorrows before his throne, is, his ſenſibleneſs of their ſorrows, (Heb. 4.13.) We have not an high Prieſt which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without ſin: Chriſt was under temptations; he feeleth ours, becauſe he had many of his own to feel. But they who never had experience of ſorrows, know not how to hear, eſpecially not how to hear diligently the cryes of thoſe that are in ſorrow. See more of this at the fifth verſe of the twelfth chapter. Here I ſhall only add, that there are two ſorts of men who are ill-hearers. Firſt, Such as enjoy worldly pleaſures and contentments to the full. Secondly, They who are over-full or intangled with worldly cares and buſineſſes: both theſe are very ill-hearers. And hence I conceive that Proverb (among us) hath its original, when a ſervant, or any other we have to do with, regards not or forgets what we ſay; we ſay to ſuch, ſurely you hear with your harveſt ears. Harveſt time is a time of great pleaſure, and a time of great buſineſs: and ſo the meaning of the Proverb is, you hear as if you were taken up with ſome other delights or affairs. Moſt hear the word of God with harveſt ears, and that's the reaſon we have ſo ill a ſeed-time for the word. While we are ſowing the word, moſt men are in the harveſts of their worldly contents and cares, and therefore their harveſt in holineſs is very ſmall, if any: Moſt who bring forth fruit, bring forth but very little, and very many bring forth none at all, and all upon this account.

Thirdly Obſerve, Job, though but a man, yet (you ſee) he expects to be heard: Now

If a man ſpeaking to men takes it ill if he be not heard, how ill may God take it if men will not hear when he ſpeaks?

We put God to many of theſe prefaces: the Prophets of old, ſeldom, if ever, came with a meſſage from God, but they begin with, Thus ſaith the Lord, or, Hear what the Lord ſaith, &c. Chriſt in the Goſpel and in his Epiſtles to the Churches (Rev. 2. 3.) repeats this often. He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear. So (Pſal. 81. 13.) O that my people had hearkened unto me: and verſ. 8. Hear O my people, and I will teſtifie unto thee. Thus God calls for, yea even begs for hearing. It's a ſtrange condeſcention, that he ſhould ſtand wiſhing for our attention, who (upon the higheſt terms of Soveraignty) may command our attention. Beſides, God hath no need that we ſhould hear him, he doth not ſpeak to us for our help, or to ſupply his wants, If he were hungry he would not tell us, for the world is his and the fulneſs of it, (Pſal. 50. 12.) Now if take it ill, that men will not hear us, when we are hungry to feed us, or when we are weak to help us, how much more may God take it ill at our hands when we will not hear him, who only commands us to our duty, or counſels us for our good? We are apt to think much, if God do not ſpeedily hear our prayers, and grant our requeſts: what cauſe do we give God to be angry, when we will not hear his precepts nor hearken to his laws? And yet the Lord inſtead of anger expreſſes ſometimes nothing but compaſſion, when he is not heard. O that my people had hearkened unto me! God is much diſhonoured when he is not heard, and yet he pities thoſe who do not hear him.

Fourthly, Hear diligently my ſpeech, and my declaration, with your ears. Hence Obſerve, Weighty and extraordinary matters muſt be heard with more then ordinary ſpirits.

Luke 8. Take heed how you hear. There is as much danger in hearing ill, as there is benefit and comfort in hearing well. And according to the concernment of the word we hear, ought to be our heed in hearing. He that hears the word of life, had need to hear for life.

Fifthly Obſerve, It is not unuſeful often to ſtir up our auditors to attention.

Job makes more prefaces then one to be heard, and he doth more then ſpeak; when he ſpeaks to be heard, he ſpeaks paſſionately. The Preacher tells us, that, if the iron be blunt, and a man do not whet the edge, he muſt put to more ſtrength, (Eccl. 10. 10.) So we may ſay in this caſe, if our hearers are dull, and we do not whet their edge, we muſt put more ſtrength to it, or rather we loſe all our ſtrength, how much ſoever we put to it. When ſpirits are low and dead, we muſt ſpeak to raiſe and quicken them, or elſe we ſpeak in vain to inſtruct or reprove them. We ſay in our Proverb, A whet is no let. He that is whetting his ſithe mows no graſs, and yet he ſhall mow little unleſs he whet. There is as much work done in preparing the inſtruments with which we work, or the objects upon which we work, as there is in doing the work it ſelf.

Laſtly Obſerve, That good duties muſt not only be done, but be done diligently.

Hear diligently my words. We muſt not only pray, but pray diligently: not only love God, but love him with all our ſtrength and with all our heart. The manner in which we perform a duty is as much to our acceptance, as the matter of the duty, Eccl. 9. 10. Whatſoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might. It is very commendable in our worldly or ſpecial callings, to do what we do with our might: but eſpecially when we are about the things of God, which concern our heavenly or general calling, then whatſoever we do, let us do it with our might; when you hear, hear with all your might, when you pray, pray with all your might. (Jer. 48. 10.) Curſed be he that doth the work of the Lord deceitfully: we put in the margin, negligently, according to the letter of the Hebrew: and thoſe two words may very well interpret one another, for he that doth a thing deceitfully, doth it negligently, and he that doth it negligently doth it deceitfully: he doth it as if he would deceive God or men, or both, but at laſt he deceiveth his own ſoul. Therefore ſaith Job, Hear diligently my ſpeech, and my declaration, with your ears.

Job having thus renewed his preface for an attentive hearing, proceeds to give them reaſons, why he would be heard thus attentively. We have the firſt in the eighteenth verſe.

Verſ. 18. Behold now I have ordered my cauſe, I know that I ſhall be juſtified.

My buſineſs is ready, I have ordered all things, therefore I would be heard. When we have made great preparations, we do not love diſappointments. As when the King (in the Parable) ſent out, ſaying, my ſupper is ready, I have kil'd my oxen and my fatlings, and all is prepared, come to the marriage, and they began all to make excuſe, he was wroth. When a feaſt is provided and ſet upon the table, and the invited gueſts come not, who can take it well? 'Tis ſo in all other preparations, and this is Jobs argument: Hear diligently my ſpeech, I do not call for attention, having nothing to ſay, or nothing worth the hearing, I have ordered my cauſe.

Primũ argumentũ à bona fide & conſcientia ſua. Jun.

I have ordered.] The word ſignifieth to order with reaſon, to methodize things, it is applyed to the marſhalling of Armies, and ſo to words or things wherein skill and art are ſhewed.

ערך ſignificat quicquid certa ratione & ordine diſponitur, ut acies, &c.

My cauſe.] The Hebrew [Mizpat] hath a threefold uſe. It ſignifies Firſt, a diſpute between parties. Secondly, the ſentence of the Judge. Thirdly, the execution of the ſentence. In this place the word is taken in the firſt ſenſe, for the ſetting and ſtating of a controverſie about which parties are to plead or diſpute. Behold I have ordered my cauſe; as if he had ſaid, I am not come unprepared to this bar; though you through ignorance or prejudice miſtake my condition, yet I have examined it and purely conſidered mine own cauſe, and upon good grounds I have concluded with my ſelf, that notwithſtanding all mine afflictions God hath not puniſhed me for my ſin, but ſtill accounts me innocent and righteous. So the words carry that rejoycing which Job had in the integrity of his heart, and goodneſs of his cauſe, he having throughly weighed and digeſted what he had to ſpeak. All things being thus ready he made no queſtion but to go away with victory, and get the day after a full hearing. I know I ſhall be juſtified.

I know.] We may diſtinguiſh of a threefold knowledge.

Firſt, Notional or ſpeculative, which is the work barely of the underſtanding. Of that I conceive the Apoſtle ſpeaks, (1 Cor. 8. 7.) Knowledge puffeth up. There is a knowledge ſwimming in the brain, which hath ſome light, but no heat, much wind, but no nouriſhment in it.

Secondly, There is an experimental knowledge ſeated in the heart, and viſible in the life: The Samaritans profeſs this (John 4. 42.) Now we believe, not becauſe of thy ſaying, for we have heard him our ſelves, and know that this is indeed the Chriſt, that is, we are experimentally convinced by what we have heard and ſeen, that this is He. (Eccleſ. 8. 5.) Whoſo keepeth the commandment, ſhall know no evil (ſo the Hebrew); we tranſlate it, he ſhall feel no evil, that is, he ſhall not have an experimental knowledge of evil. A man that keepeth the commandment, knoweth what is evil, or elſe he could not do that which is good; but he that keepeth the commandment ſhall know no evil, that is, he ſhall not feel any evil. So we are to underſtand that of the Apoſtle, (2 Cor. 5. 21.) where he ſaith, that Chriſt knew no ſin, ſhall we think that Chriſt died for he knew not what? He died to take away ſin, and did not he know what ſin was? Yes, Chriſt knew fully what ſin was, he knew what the nature, and what the effects of it were: but he knew no ſin experimentally, he felt no ſin in his own heart, he acted no ſin in his life. We ſay to a man that liveth in proſperity, You never knew poverty; and to an healthy man, You never knew ſickneſs. This is experimental knowledge.

There is a third kind of knowledge, which we call fiducial, when the heart cleaveth to, or is aſſertain'd of what we know. Of this we are to underſtand the Apoſtle John (1 Ep. 2. 3.) And hereby do we know that we know him. To know that we know, is to be aſſured that we know. And again, in the fifth Chapter of the ſame Epiſtle, ver. 13. Theſe things have I written to you that believe on the Name of the Son of God, that ye may know, that ye have eternal life. We may believe, and yet not know that we ſhall live, much leſs that we have eternal life. Many have a vital act, who have not a fiducial act of faith: And therefore, while the Apoſtle in this verſe, ſaith, I have written unto you that believe on the Name of the Son of God, he ſaith alſo, I have written, that ye may believe on the Name of the Son of God. If they did believe before, why doth he write unto them that they might believe? They had the faith of adherence and recumbence; but he deſires to raiſe and heighten them to the faith of evidence and aſſurance. Such a faith the Apoſtle expreſſeth (2 Cor. 4. 14.) Knowing, that he which raiſed up the Lord Jeſus, ſhall raiſe us up alſo by Jeſus, and ſhall preſent us with you. (Knowing this) How did the Apoſtle know this? Not barely by ſpeculation, not at all by experience, for he was not yet raiſed up: But he was aſſured of it, as if it had been already done, That he which raiſed up the Lord Jeſus, ſhall raiſe us up alſo by Jeſus.

When Job ſaith, I know I ſhall be juſtified, his was not a ſpeculative knowledge, but partly an experimental knowledge, for he found that he was already juſtified; and partly a fiducial knowledge; I know; that is, I am ſure, that the Lord will juſtifie me, and that I ſhall depart from his bar acquitted in this controverſie. He doth not ſay, I know that I have not ſinned; but I know that I ſhall be juſtified from my ſin; and not only carry this preſent cauſe, but continue in the love and gracious acceptance of God for ever.

I ſhall be juſtified.] Juſtification is the declaring of a man to be juſt: He is juſt, not only who hath no ſin, but he who is acquitted from his ſin; or to whom his ſin is not imputed. He is righteous, whom God pronounceth righteous, though in himſelf ungodly; for God juſtifieth the ungodly, Rom. 4. 5. Job knew he was thus juſtified; yet, I conceive the juſtification ſtrictly intended here, is the determination of the queſtion between him and his Friends on his ſide; which yet reached his total ſtanding in a ſtate of juſtification. This he oppoſeth to what he had aſſirmed of the hypocrite in the former words, An hypocrite ſhall not come before him; that is, he ſhall not be juſtified; but I know that I ſhall be juſtified.

Juſtus inveniri pronunciarique Juſtum eſſe nihil aliud importat quā in cauſa obtinere & a judice ſententiam in favorem accipere. Juſtus invenitur in judicio, non qui culpa caret, ſed qui juſtus declaratur. Sanct.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, That a godly man, even in this life, may arrive at aſſurance that he is, and ſhall continue in a good, in a juſtified condition.

It is good to be juſtified; but it is better to know that we ſhall be juſtified. There are three Graces ſpoken of by the Apoſtle (1 Cor. 13. 13.) Faith, Hope, and Love: And the Scripture holds out an aſſurance in reference to every one of theſe. Firſt, The aſſurance of Faith (Heb. 10. 22.) Let us draw near with a true heart, in full aſſurance of Faith. This aſſurance of Faith hath a double reſpect: Firſt, to our perſons; Secondly, to our ſervices; that in both we are pleaſing unto God. Secondly, There is an aſſurance of Hope, (Heb. 6. 11.) We deſire that every one of you do ſhew the ſame diligence, to the full aſſurance of Hope unto the end. Faith hath an eye to the truth of the Promiſe; Hope to the good of the Promiſe; and the aſſurance of Hope is, that we ſhall certainly receive that good. Thirdly, There is alſo an aſſurance of Love (1 John 4. 18.) Perfect love caſteth out fear. How is Love made perfect? and how doth it caſt out fear? Herein (ſaith the ſeventeenth verſe) is love made perfect, that we may have boldneſs in the day of judgment, becauſe as he is, ſo are we in this world; that is, as his love is ſincere to us, ſo is ours to him (according to our meaſure) even in this life, and this gives us boldneſs or aſſurance, that all ſhall go well with us in the day of judgment, or in the next life; and ſo this love caſteth out all fear of condemnation in that day; which fear, where it remains (as the Apoſtle concludes) hath torment, then which, nothing is more contrary to aſſurance. In perfect love there is no torment, becauſe there is no fear; and there is no fear, becauſe there is an aſſurance of the Love of God. In this love the ſoul doth repoſe, reſt, and delight it ſelf. There is a fourth thing ſpoken of, to which alſo aſſurance is annexed, (Col. 2. 2.) The full aſſurance of underſtanding: This is the clearneſs of our apprehenſions about the things which we believe, and upon which we faſten by Faith and Love. The light of the underſtanding ſhining upon the myſteries of the Goſpel, and mixing with our other graces, bottoms the ſoul upon the ſtrongeſt foundation, and raiſeth it up to the higeſt pinnacle of aſſurance. We may ſay of aſſurance, in reference unto theſe four Graces, as Philoſophers do of the Heavens, in reference to the four Elements; they tell us the Heavens are neither earth nor air, neither fire nor water; but they are a quinteſſence, or a fifth eſſence. So we may ſay, aſſurance is neither faith, nor hope, nor love, nor knowledge, but it is a fifth thing, ſublimated and raiſed, either out of, or above all theſe: It is ſomewhat of each of theſe; but more then all theſe. I know that I ſhall be juſtified, is more then knowledge, or love, or hope, or faith, even the reſult of them all in their beſt perfections. Knowledge above knowledge, is the aſſurance of underſtanding: Faith above faith, is the aſſurance of faith: Hope and love above hope and love, are the full aſſurance of hope and love made perfect. This is called by the Apoſtle (Rom. 4.) A full perſwaſion. Abraham (ſaith the Text, ver. 21.) being fully perſwaded. It is a Metaphor taken from Ships that come into an harbour with full ſail; ſo doth the Soul ſometimes: It comes into the port of a heavenly peace, with full ſail, with top and top gallant (as we uſe to ſay) with all the ſails ſpread, and colours flying. So it was with Abraham, there was not any ſail of his ſoul but was filled with the wind of aſſurance. This is called (John 14. 21.) the manifeſtation of Chriſt to the ſoul: He that hath my Commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me ſhall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and manifeſt my ſelf to him. Chriſt is manifeſted to many by the reading and preaching of his Word; but he manifeſts himſelf only unto ſome by the light and influences of his Spirit. The former is common to all who live within the ſound of the Goſpel; the latter is the ſole priviledge of thoſe who obey the Goſpel; nor do all theſe receive this priviledge now; very few injoy it at all times. Chriſt loves many a ſoul, to whom he doth not preſently manifeſt his love. God hath love laid up in his heart for all his; but he doth not ſhed his love abroad into all their hearts, by the holy Ghoſt (Rom. 5. 8.) The firſt fruits of the Spirit (Rom. 8. 23.) The witneſs of the Spirit (ver. 16. of that Chapter) The ſealing of the Spirit (Eph. 1. 14.) The earneſt of the Spirit (2 Cor. 5. 5.) are not beſtowed upon every Believer at all times, and not ſenſibly upon ſome at all in this life: And all theſe are but ſeveral expreſſions of this one thing, our knowing that we ſhall be juſtified: Yet in this many of the Saints have gloried before they came to glory. Habakkuk had it in the height; (ſo had many) of the old Worthies, Heb. 11. 13, 35. Though their Goſpel-light was not ſo clear as the Goſpel-light after Chriſt came, yet they ſaw the Promiſes afar off, they imbraced them, and were perſwaded of them; by theſe three ſteps, of ſeeing, imbracing, and perſwaſion, they aſcended to an aſſurance, or knowledge, that they ſhould be juſtified.

But ſome may ſay, Theſe were extraordinary men; can ordinary Believers attain to, or know this?

All do not know it, but all may. There are but ſome Believers who reach this perfection, yet all ſhould be aiming at, and reaching after it. And though they were extraordinary men in whom the Scripture gives inſtance, ſuch as Abraham, Habbakkuk, Paul, &c. yet as the Apoſtle ſaith of ſome under eminent temptations, (1 Cor. 10. 13.) There hath no temptatitn taken you, but ſuch as is common to man; ſo we may ſay of thoſe who attained thoſe eminent conſolations, there is no conſolation hath been given unto thoſe, but what is common to Believers. For as few men fall into all thoſe temptations which are common to man, ſo few Believers attain all thoſe conſolations which are common to Believers. Some are ſlothful, and will not give diligence to make their calling and election ſure; others cannot find it ſure to them (though it be in it ſelf) notwithſtanding all their diligence.

If any object further, that of the Apoſtle (Rom. 11. 20.) Be not high minded, but fear.

I anſwer, That fear is a duty, which is oppoſed to high-mindedneſs; but, that fear is, at leaſt, an affliction, which is oppoſed to ſtedfaſtneſs. Again, this is not ſpoken to nouriſh doubting, whether we are juſtified, or no; but to preſerve us from preſumption when we are juſtified. So we may anſwer theſe places (Prov. 28. 14.) Bleſſed is the man that that feareth alwayes. (Phil. 2. 12.) Work out your ſalvation with fear and trembling. Theſe ſeem to call Chriſtians to live in a doubtful condition, or in a ſtate of trepidation, alwayes fearing : but their intendment is, not to keep the ſoul from being ſetled by faith in Chriſt, but from being high flown in any opinion of our ſelves : or the Spirit ſpeaks thus, not to put us upon doubts of our ſtanding, but to preſerve us from falling. For theſe cautions are ſo far from oppoſing aſſurance, that they ſtrengthen it. The way not to be afraid is thus to fear : Nor are any ſo ſure as they, who thus tremble. They that are working out their ſalvations with fear and trembling, may know without fear and trembling that they ſhall be ſaved : And they that thus fear alwayes, may be aſſured that they ſhall be above fear for ever. But ſay ſome, the Preacher ſpeaks out againſt this knowledge, Eccleſ. 9. 1. No man knoweth love or hatred. It is true, not by all that is before him : We cannot know love and hatred from the works of God without us ; but we may know love and hatred by the work of God upon us, or by the workings of God within us. We cannot fetch an evidence that God loves us out of our cheſts and money-bags ; nor can we read an aſſurance, or a conveyance for Heaven, in the aſſurances and conveyances of our lands ; but we may fetch this evidence, and read this conveyance from, and in the Covenant of grace, received by faith, witneſſed and ſealed to our hearts by the holy Spirit.

Secondly, When was it that Job manifeſted this height of aſſurance? I know that I ſhall be juſtified. It was after he had ſaid, I have ordered my cauſe.

Hence Obſerve, That true aſſurance, or a knowledge that we ſhall be juſtified, ariſeth from a due conſideration of the ſtate of our hearts and lives.

I have ordered my cauſe, and now I know. Job's aſſurance did not grow whileſt he ſlept, or was ſecure ; his was not an aſſurance ariſing from negligence, but from diligence. Some conclude what they have no premiſes for : They will conclude for Heaven and glory, they make no doubt but they ſhall be ſaved ; but they have no foundation to build this tower of aſſurance upon, they can ſay nothing to warrant, or bear up their confidence. It is an eaſie thing to ſay, I I know I ſhall be juſtified ; but it is an hard thing for a man to ſay, I have ordered my cauſe. They who ſay they know they ſhall be juſtified, before they have ordered their cauſe, do but build caſtles in the air ; whereas this Caſtle ſhould be built upon Chriſt, he is the foundation. Some are as confident as confidence it ſelf, who yet are as ignorant as ignorance it ſelf : Some are as confident as confidence it ſelf, who yet are as prophane as prophaneneſs it ſelf ; as proud as pride it ſelf ; as worldly as the world it ſelf : Is this the ordering of our cauſe? Or can they order their cauſe, whoſe hearts and lives are thus out of order? A true Believer is able to ſhew ſomewhat for it, why he is ſo ſure : He can ſhew Chriſt (as I may ſo ſpeak) his bracelets and his love-tokens ; he can tell Chriſt of the ſecret ſmiles and kiſſes which he hath given his ſoul ſome time or other : He can ſay, Chriſt is come to me both by water and blood ; he can produce the graces and the actings of his Spirit, and can ſay, by theſe I am aſſured, by theſe I am grown up to this perſwaſion, that nothing ſhall ever ſeparate me from the love of God. If any man ſay he is ſure, he ſhall be juſtified ; let him conſider how he came by his aſſurance : Have you ordered your cauſe, and viewed your ſtate in the glaſs of the Word? Hath that preſented to you juſtification, pardon and peace flowing to you in the blood of Chriſt? If it be ſo, you may ſay as Job here, I know I ſhall be juſtified. But diſordered cauſes can never leave aſſurance of any thing but of wrath and death.

Job having thus made out his firſt ground, why he would be heard and come to a tryal, proceeds to another, in the nineteenth verſe.

Verſe 19. Who is he that will plead with me? for now if I hold my tongue, I ſhall give up the ghoſt.

Who is he that will plead with me?] Where is the man? The words, as the former, ſpeak the greatneſs of his ſpirit? Job durſt bid battel, and ſend a challenge to all oppoſites in the world. He throws down his Gauntlet to all comers, Let me ſee the man that dares undertake me in this diſpute? Who is he that will plead with me?

Job ſpeaks not proudly, or vainly, confiding in his own ſtrength, or wit, in his nimble tongue, or quick invention ; he ſpeaks thus, truſting in the power of Chriſt, and as being aſſured of ſuch an intereſt and eſtate in him, as all the oppoſition in the world ſhould never be able to overthrow.

Serenæ admodum conſcientiæ, intrepidæ mentis, & ad certamen ſpirituale quemq; provocantis verba ſunt. Nemo eſt qui me in mea cauſa convincere poteſt. Mer.

Job ſpeaks like another Goliah, who (1 Sam. 18. 8, 9.) ſtood and cried to the Armies of Iſrael, and ſaid unto them, why are you come out to ſet your battel in array? Chuſe you a man for you, and let him come down to me, if he be able to fight with me, and to kill me, then will we be your ſervants ; but if I prevail againſt him, and kill him, then ſhall ye be our ſervants, and ſerve us. In ſuch a manner (but with no ſuch ſpirit) Job ſpeaks here, where's the man? Chuſe out who you will to plead and to diſpute with me. Thus Job challenged like Goliah, but he fought like David (ver. 45.) In the Name of the Lord of hoſts.

Hence Obſerve, He that is ſincere, fears not to come to tryal.

The righteous is bold as a Lyon. He is ſo far from declining tryal, that he invites it ; where is the man that will plead me? But I will not ſtay upon this, having been led to it by a former paſſage.

Secondly Obſerve, A ſoul that is ſincere and well bottomed upon the grace of God in Chriſt, is unconquerable.

Job knowing he ſhould be juſtified, calls out, Who is he that will plead with me? As the Apoſtle ſends a challenge in the behalf of Believers (Rom. 8. 33.) Who ſhall condemn? Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of Gods elect? Let me ſee the man, or devil, who dares. So Believers are able to ſend challenges themſelves. Who is it that will plead with us? But are there none will do it? Will none accept their challenge? Yea, many may be found to plead with them, but none can overcome them. This Text in Job, and the point grounded upon it, is of the ſame interpretation with that (Rom. 8. 31.) If God be with us, who can be againſt us? Who can be againſt us? Many are againſt thoſe with whom God is ; yea, many will be againſt them, becauſe God is with them. They are moſt oppoſed by men, whom God owneth moſt. But who can be againſt us, to overthrow and conquer us? We ſhall ſtand againſt all oppoſition, if God be with us. So here, who will plead with me? Job had thoſe that would plead with him, he wanted not undertakers ; there was Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar ; theſe pleaded with him, but theſe did not overcome him. God gives ſentence for Job, Chap. 42. 7. Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, as my ſervant Job hath. The Prophet brings in Jeſus Chriſt in ſuch a triumph of ſpirit over all poſſible enemies or oppoſers (Iſa. 50. 7, 8.) Whereas he had ſhewed Chriſt profeſſing, that all his power to fulfil the active part of his Mediatorſhip, was derived to him from his Father (ver. 4.) The Lord hath given to me the tongue of the Learned, &c. So there he ſhews that all the ſtrength and courage with which he was armed to ſuffer or contend in the paſſive part of his Mediatorſhip, was alſo derived to him from his Father, and maintained in him by a continual ſupply of his aſſiſtance. The Lord God will help me, therefore ſhall I not be confounded ; therefore have I ſet my face as a flint, and I know that I ſhall not be aſhamed : He is near that juſtifieth me, who will contend with me? Let us ſtand together (as Plaintiff and Defendant uſe to do in a Law ſuit before the Judge) who is mine adverſary? (or maſter of my cauſe, or owner of my judgment, that entreth his action againſt me) let him come near to me. Behold the Lord God will help me : who is he that ſhall condemn me? Lo, they all ſhall wax old as a garment, the moth ſhall eat them. Theſe words are a comment upon Job, and fully explain his meaning : Both give us the ſtrength of this Obſervation,

That the Lord being near to a ſoul, and ſtanding on his ſide, he can never be prevailed againſt.

The Apoſtle Paul applyes that of the Prophet (which originally belongs to Chriſt) to the comfort of every Believer (Rom. 8. 33, 34.) Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of Gods elect? It is God that juſtifieth : Who is he that condemneth? It is Chriſt that dyed, yea, rather that is riſen again, who is even at the right hand of God. Here are the holy challenges of faith; faith is ready for all comers. If the Law come to plead with us, faith tells it, that Chriſt hath fulfilled the Law for us. If ſin come to oppoſe us, faith tells it, Chriſt in the ſimilitude of ſinful fleſh hath condemned ſin in the fleſh. If death come and look the ſoul in the face, faith anſwers, Chriſt hath aboliſhed death, and brought life and immortality to light through the Goſpel: Yea, faith can, not only anſwer, but ſcorn death, O death, where is thy ſting? If the Devil come, faith tells him, he is but a conquered enemy, and that Chriſt hath (long ſince) ſpoiled principalities and powers, and made a ſhew of them openly; that Chriſt came to deſtroy (and hath deſtroyed in us) the works of the devil. Thus faith repels the charge of the law, of ſin, of hell, and of the devil; yea, if God himſelf frown upon the ſoul, and his wrath ſeem to burn as hot as fire againſt us, faith can tell God himſelf, that Chriſt hath paid our debt, and given a ranſom to God for us, and therefore knows that he will not require it of us again, becauſe he is juſt, and the juſtifier of him that believeth in Jeſus. If none of theſe, if neither law, nor ſin, nor death, nor devil, no nor God himſelf (conſidering how he hath been pleaſed to condeſcend to poor ſinners, and ingage himſelf to Chriſt on our behalf) can plead down the believing ſoul, then nothing can. Nor did Job boaſt beyond his line, when he ſaid, Who will plead with me?

Laſtly, Theſe words, Who will plead with me? hold forth, not only Job's courage that he durſt, in this caſe, ſpeak with any living but alſo the neceſſity which preſſed him to ſpeak, which was ſuch, that if he did not ſpeak, he could not live, as is clear in the laſt clauſe of this verſe,

For now if I hold my tongue, I ſhall give up the ghoſt.

Mr. Broughton renders, If now I ſpeak not, I ſhould ſtarve.

Nunc enim ſileo & expirabo.

The Original may be literally rendred thus, For now I ſhall be ſilent, and give up the ghoſt. And ſo the meaning is, as if Job were haſtning his undertakers to this quarrel, wiſhing them to make ſpeed and come to plead with him, that he might try out this buſineſs by dint of argument, becauſe he ſaw death ready to put him to ſilence: I ſhall dye, and then it will be too late to argue or ſpeak with me, therefore while I live, and I perceive I ſhall not live long, let us try it out, and ſee what you have to ſay againſt me.

Secondly, Theſe words, If I hold my tongue, I ſhall give up the ghoſt, may note two things. Firſt, That Job was filled with abundance of matter, which was exceeding burthenſome to keep within his breaſt, therefore he muſt needs vent, and let it out. As if he had ſaid, I have ſo much to ſpeak, that it will even kill me if I ſhould conceal it. Elihu was in the ſame caſe (Job 32. 17.) I alſo (ſaith he) will ſhew mine opinion; for I am full of matter, the ſpirit within me conſtraineth me: Behold my belly is as wine which hath no vent, it is ready to burſt like new bottles; I will ſpeak that I may be refreſhed, I will open my lips and anſwer. Elihu was conſtrained to open his mind, it would be an eaſe to him to ſpeak. So ſaith Job, Now if I hold my tongue I ſhall give up the ghoſt. Or ſecondly, It may note, that Job was much afflicted, and exceedingly troubled in his ſpirit at what his Friends had ſpoken to him, and charged upon him. And ſo it is, as if he had ſaid, you have ſo tormented me with your reaſonings, that if I have not liberty to juſtifie mine own innocency, my heart will break: It were better for me to dye, then to live ſtained with ſuch imputations; and I know not how to live, unleſs I may wipe them off.

Satius mihi fuerat mori quam ſilentio cauſam meam prodere. Bez.
Non poſſum me continere quin loquar; Alioquin moriendum mihi eſt. Merc.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, It is a pain not to ſpeak when we are much ingaged to ſpeak.

Thus the Prophet complains (Jer. 20. 9.) I was weary with forbearing, and I could not ſtay. As ſome are wearied with ſpeaking; ſo ſome are wearied becauſe they do not ſpeak: They are tired with holding their tongues, as much as ſome are with uſing them. Words kept in are as great a burthen to ſome, as words ſpoken out are to others. When a man is under ſuch a preſſure, he finds no reſt till he hath delivered himſelf. When Joſeph's Brethren came to him, he hid his affections a great while; but as ſoon as he ſaw his Brother Benjamin, he could not refrain; he muſt go into a private place to weep, and ſpend his paſſion, elſe it would have broak out before them all. 'Tis ſo with us when we have much to ſay to God in prayer; the heart hath a load upon it, and cannot be quiet, it is ready to break and give up the ghoſt, until we have broken or opened our minds to God.

From the ſecond ſence Obſerve, That a man can eaſier dye, then ſuffer blots to lye upon his integrity.

Our reputation ſhould be dearer to us then our lives; therefore ſaith Job, If I keep ſilence, I ſhall give up the ghoſt; I cannot bear this. He was not ſo ſenſible of any of his ſufferings as of this. And as it is an caſe, ſo it is a duty to repair our own credit, and to take off what we find unjuſtly charged upon us: eſpecially when it reflects upon Religion, as it did in Job's caſe. His Friends ſuſpected him of hypocriſie, Is this thy fear, thy confidence, and the uprightneſs of thy wayes? Theſe jealouſies ſtirred up the ſpirit of Job to call for his Adverſaries, and provoke them to appear and plead it out with him. I have from other paſſages toucht this point before, and ſhall therefore add no more here.

VERS. 20, 21, 22, 23.

Only do not two things unto me, then will I not hide my ſelf from thee.
Withdraw thine hand far from me, and let not thy dread make me afraid.
Then call thou, and I will anſwer; or let me ſpeak, and anſwer thou me.
How many are mine iniquities and ſins? make me to know my tranſgreſſion and my ſin.

IN the three former verſes, Job prefac'd to his Friends, and beſpake their attention; being ſo well aſſured of his cauſe, that he ſate down under the comfort of this concluſion, I know that I ſhall be juſtified. Here, in the three firſt verſes of this Context, Job beſpeaks God himſelf, and ſeems to indent with him upon ſome conditions before he would ſpeak further, or proceed in this diſpute.

Verſe 20. Only do not two things unto me, then will I not hide my ſelf from thee.

As if he had ſaid, I am willing to argue, but it muſt be upon theſe precautions.

Some underſtand thoſe words, Only do not two things unto me: As if Job had deſired God not to do two things unto him at once; that is, not to afflict him, and confer with him, not to ſmite him and diſpute with him together; it is too much to be at two ſuch works, or rather to be doing and ſuffering at one time: Therefore do not two things to me, any one of theſe is exerciſe enough for one man at once.

Cautiorem videtur à Deo petere ante diſputationis congreſſum. Pined.
Duo, ut ſcilicet mecum litiges & ſimul me affligas & terres.

What the two things he would not have done unto him were, are ſet down in the next verſe. Firſt, Withdraw thine hand far from me, &c. Secondly, Let not thy dread, &c. Then call thou, &c.

In that Job deſires God would not do theſe two things unto him,

Obſerve, Firſt, That all ſufferings are not equal, there is a gradual difference among ſufferings as well a ſpecifical.

As all ſins, ſo all ſufferings are not equal. Some ſins are more grievous and burthenſome to God then others are, (Jer. 44. 4.) I did ſend unto you all my ſervants the Prophets, ſaying, O do not this abominable thing which I hate. This abominable thing. There were many other abominable things which the Lord hated, and which he would not have that people do; but their idolatrous worſhip, their burning incenſe to ſtrange Gods, was a ſpecial abomination, O do not this abominable thing which I hate. Now, as ſome ſins are more grievous unto God then others, and therefore he deſires earneſtly, that we would not burthen him with them: So the Lord layes ſome afflictions upon his people, which are more grievous to them then any other could be, and therefore they cry out, O do not this unto us: This is ſad.

Hence Note again, That, We are apt to think we can bear any affliction better then that which we fear or feel.

O do not theſe two things unto me! Were it any thing elſe, I might undergo it, but I am not able to endure theſe. Some ſpeak thus of any affliction; and he that hath pain in any part of his body, is apt to judge; were this pain ſomewhere elſe, I could bear it better: We are very prone to diſpute the diſpenſations of God, and to think that he might place his chaſtenings (if he muſt chaſtiſe us) ſome where elſe, as much to his own glory, and not ſo much to our ſorrow. Only do not two things unto me. What then?

Then will I not hide my ſelf from thee.

The Hebrew is, Then will I not hide my ſelf from thy face. But ſuppoſe the Lord would not do thoſe two things for Job, could he hide himſelf from his face? David ſaith (Pſal. 139.4.) Whither ſhall I go from thy preſence? It ſhould ſeem Job had ſome whither to go out of the preſence of God: Elihu in the 34th of this book, verſ. 22. tells us, There is no darkneſs nor ſhadow of death where the workers of iniquity can hide themſelves. How is it then that Job ſaith he would not hide himſelf, when as indeed he could not, upon what terms ſoever God ſhould deal with him?

I anſwer; when Job ſaith, I will not hide my ſelf, he intends not this, that he could hide himſelf; but that (if God would not do thoſe two things to him) he ſhould have no cauſe to hide himſelf. Hiding proceedeth from a double cauſe. Firſt, from fear, (Iſa. 2. 19.) They ſhall go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his Majeſty, when he ariſeth to ſhake terribly the earth. Here is hiding for fear. So (1 Kin. 22.25.) the Prophet Micaiah having received ſuch courſe uſage from King Ahab, tells him to his face, Behold thou ſhalt ſee in that day when thou ſhalt go into an inner chamber to hide thy ſelf. Secondly, Hiding proceeds from ſhame; a man that is aſhamed dares not ſhew his head. That hiding of our firſt parents was the effect of both theſe (Gen. 3.10.) In their innocency they were naked and were not aſhamed: but after they had ſinned they ran amongſt the thickets to hide themſelves, being both aſhamed and afraid: (verſ. 10.) I heard thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid, becauſe I was naked, and I hid my ſelf. Fear and ſhame made him hide himſelf, when once he had ſinned. When Job reſolves, then I will not hide my ſelf from thee, his meaning is, I will not be afraid to appear before thee, nor aſhamed to ſpeak unto thee; ſo he explains himſelf at the 22th verſe, Then call thou and I will anſwer, or let me ſpeak, and anſwer thou me, that is, I would come forth boldly, and ſtand with confidence at thy Tribunal. I ſhall give you a note from this, when I have ſhewed the matter of Jobs deprecation, Do not two things unto me: What two things?

Etſi nihil mihi cōſcius ſum, me tamē abſcōderē & latebras quærerem niſi benevolētia tua oſtenſione roborarer.

Verſ. 21. Withdraw thine hand far from me, and let not thy dread terrifie me; or, let not thy dread make me afraid.

Theſe are the two things which he ſo earneſtly deprecates. And for the removal of both theſe, he prayed as earneſtly once before, almoſt in the ſame words, (chap. 9. verſ. 34, 35.) Let him take his rod away from me, and let not his fear terrifie me; then would I ſpeak and not fear him, but it is not ſo with me. Having opened theſe two verſes there at large, I ſhall refer the Reader thither: yet becauſe (though the matter be the ſame) the expreſſions vary, I ſhall a little inſiſt upon them.

Withdraw thine hand far from me.] That's his firſt condition. By the hand of God, he means either the afflictions which were upon him, and ſo it is as much as this, mitigate my ſufferings, abate my pains, releaſe me from my ſorrows. The word which he uſeth, Chap. 9. 34. for the rod of God, is the ſame in effect which he uſeth here for the hand of God; only with this difference, this properly ſignifies the palms of the hand; Withdraw thy palms from me: To ſtrike with the palm of the hand, is to ſtrike like a father; a blow with the palm of the hand, may have more ſmart with it, but it hath not ſo much force and wrath with it as a blow with the fiſt or hand cloſed. Yet I conceive Jobs intent is the ſame in both, and though he received ſtroaks of all ſorts, ſome with the palm, others with the fiſt, ſome greater, ſome leſs, yet all were with the hand of a father: nevertheleſs, Job deſires God would withdraw his hand, though he knew it was a fathers hand, becauſe while the ſmart and pain of that was ſo vehement upon him, he could not ſpeak nor manage his cauſe before him freely; Withdraw thine hand away from me.

הרחיק longe fac à me, כפ habetur hic nō יד quod cap. 9. 34. virgam, hic palmā i. e. plagā ſignificat. Merc.

Further, There was another thing, which this requeſt of Job may bear an alluſion to, Remove thine hand away from me. It was a cuſtome among the Ancients, to lay the hand upon the head of an offender, as a token of his condemnation. And that's the reaſon why the hand was laid upon the head of the ſacrifice, when all the ſins of the people were confeſt over it; ſhewing, that the ſacrifice was (as it were) condemned to die, typifying the death of Chriſt, who was condemned for us, God having laid upon him the iniquities of us all. Now ſaith Job, Remove thine hand away from me: thou ſeemeſt to act towards me as if thou wert angry, or didſt intend to pronounce a ſentence of condemnation againſt me; O do not deal thus with me! How ſhall I treat with thee, whilſt thou ſeemeſt to have ſuch hard thoughts of me? Therefore, Withdraw thine hand away from me.

But, what was it that lay upon Job as the hand of God? I ſhewed before, that it was his affliction, which though in it ſelf, it be no argument that God condemns, yet in the opinion of ſome men it is; and Jobs friends did therefore think God condemned him, becauſe they ſaw he afflicted him. So then, the removing of thoſe afflictions, in reference to which his friends pronounced him condemned by God, would be as the withdrawing of the hand from the head of an offender, a ſign of his acquitting and abſolution.

Hence Note, Firſt, Afflictions are grievous to the ſenſitive part of the beſt and holieſt men.

Even a Job prayeth, Withdraw thine hand away from me. There is no affliction for the preſent that is joyous but grievous; and as it is grievous to natural men, ſo it is grievous to the natural part of ſpiritual men. It is nothing elſe but grievous unto carnal men, they find no comfort, no ſweet at all in it, the Saints do: their inward man hath joy and refreſhing in their ſorrows, but their outward man feels ſmart; therefore, Remove thine hand away from me.

Secondly Obſerve, While afflictions are ſharp upon us, it is hard to compoſe the ſpirit to think of, or ſpeak aright to God.

This diſcovers their folly, who put off the great buſineſſes about which they are to treat with God, to a ſick bed. Job ſaith to God, take away thy hand, and then I will ſpeak: theſe ſay we will ſpeak to God when his hand is upon us; we will look to the health of our ſouls when our bodies are ſick: But how rare is it to find a ſick body and a quiet mind together. Job could not argue with God about his innocency while he was greatly afflicted, how then ſhall others about the ſetling of their eternal peace and the pardon of their? We are more prone to impatience then to repentance in the day of our diſtreſs.

Thirdly Obſerve, It is lawful to pray for the removing of afflictions.

Withdraw thine hand away from me, was a good petition; we may make ſuch petitions unlawful if we put our wills as a law to God, and do not leave all to the will of God. We may pray for the thing, but we muſt ſubmit the circumſtances of it, the time of it, the manner of it, to the wiſdom of God. While we deſire him to withdraw his hand, we ſhould get our hearts willing to bear his hand; that's a gracious frame of heart indeed. As it is the worſt frame of heart to pray for the pardon and removing of our ſins, while we find a willingneſs, much more a reſolvedneſs in our hearts to continue in them; ſo it is the beſt frame of heart to pray for the removing of afflictions, whileſt we find a willingneſs to continue under them, if God ſhall ſo diſpenſe and pleaſe. See more of this, Chap. 9. 34. Withdraw thine hand away from me,

And let not thy dread make me afraid.

Thy dread.] Giants are called Emims, from this word (becauſe they are terrible to beholders.) And ſo are Idols, becauſe becauſe though they are indeed but meer ſcarcrows and bugbears, yet they are terrible to the ignorant and unbelieving, as was further ſhewed, Chap. 9. 34.

What was this dread? It may either be, that terrour which accompanied his afflictions, there being as it were ſome ſparklings of Gods anger mixed with them. When God gives us the bittereſt cup of affliction to drink, if he do but drop in a little of his love we take it down as a pleaſant draught; but if he drop the leaſt of his anger into the cup of affliction, this is dreadful. Hence David prayeth, (Pſal. 6. 1.) O Lord rebuke me not in thine anger, neither chaſten me in thy hot diſpleaſure. He doth not pray abſolutely, let me not be rebuked, but rebuke me not in thine anger, let me ſee thy love in my rebukes. He knew God did love him, but he could not ſee it: God rebuked him, and he perceived nothing but anger; God chaſtened him, and he ſaw nothing but diſpleaſure, yea, and hot diſpleaſure; this made him cry out, O Lord rebuke me not, &c.

Secondly, This dread may be taken for the majeſtical preſence of God; though there be no lettings out of his anger or diſpleaſure, yet the very appearance of God to poor duſt and aſhes hath a dread in it, ſuch a dread, as not only ſtrikes the moſt eloquent man dumb, but the ſtouteſt dead: The majeſty of God is infinitely above the creature; therefore he ſaith to Moſes, No man can ſee my face and live: there is ſo much dread in the face of God, that man cannot behold it. We may conceive the Lord at this time letting out much of himſelf to Job, his terrour was upon him. God ſhews himſelf to man two wayes.

Firſt, In ſome external viſible form, ſo he often appeared to the Fathers in the Old Teſtament. 'Tis the opinion of ſome that the Lord ſhewed his dreadfulneſs to Job by an outward apparition.

Secondly, God ſhews himſelf to the mind of man: and as the appearances of God to ſenſe are very dreadful, ſo are thoſe which he makes to faith. They who have no outward viſions of God, are yet often terrified at the mental apprehenſions of his Glory and Majeſty. Faith makes things preſent, and doth evidence them to the ſoul as fully as ſenſe can. God cannot be ſeen, yet faith can give us a ſight of God, a ſight of his power, and of his wrath, as well as of his goodneſs and mercy: and until the Lord withdraw that, and put other evidences before the eye of the ſoul, there's no peace. That's the reaſon why many wicked men have been brought to utter deſpair, and die in horrour of conſcience: they apprehend the wrath of God revealed againſt them, and their conſcienees are affected with it; there is a kind of faith upon their conſciences, ſuch as the devils have, who believe and tremble: and ſo do wicked men, they are full of trembling and aſtoniſhment at thoſe repreſentations of the greatneſs, Power and Majeſty of God which their faith makes to them. Now as it is with them, ſo it may be with true Believers much more: they have deep and terrible apprehenſions of God; and according to the degree of this faith, is the degree of terrour which falls upon them, (Pſal. 90. 11.) Who knoweth the power of thine anger? even according to thy fear ſo is thy wrath. Though the diſpleaſure of God be as himſelf, alwayes alike, yet to thoſe whoſe hearts are tender, the diſpleaſure of God is more grievous. Hard hearts have no fear in them, and to them the diſpleaſure of God is nothing, they dread it not, they will venture upon the Pikes, and ruſh upon the Swords point. Job was a tender hearted man, he feared God, therefore theſe appearances of God to his faith did exceedingly affect and trouble him: So he ſpeaks, Chap. 31. 23. For deſtruction from God was a terrour to me, and by reaſon of his highneſs I could not endure.

> Hence Obſerve, Firſt, The holy God is in himſelf very dreadful to the moſt holy and upright among the children of men.

Job had ſaid, Chap. 10. 7. Lord, thou kneweſt that I am not wicked: and at the eighteenth verſe of this chapter, I know I ſhall be juſtified. What a faith was here! Yet now he confeſſeth, Thy terrour makes me afraid. Where was there a holier man then Habakkuk? yet read the third chapter of that propheſie, and you ſhall find how he ſhook and trembled, how his lips did quiver, and rottenneſs entred into his bones, and all at the apprehenſions he had of the Majeſty and greatneſs of God. That holy Prophet Iſaiah, how was he affected when God appeared to him! he crieth out, Wo is me, for I am undone, for mine eyes have ſeen the King, the Lord of hoaſts. When the Lord appeared to publiſh that holy Law, how did the people tremble! O (ſay they) let Moſes ſpeak to us, but do not thou ſpeak leſt we die, Exod. 19.

> Secondly Note, That God doth ſometimes appear to his people in Majeſty only, and not in mercy.

He letteth out his glory and his greatneſs, but conceals his goodneſs, his loving kindneſs and compaſſion. They can ſee a holy God, a juſt God, a high God, a glorious God, but they do not ſee a merciful God. God acts not as a natural, but as a voluntary agent, and therefore he can ſuſpend or diſpenſe himſelf as he pleaſeth. The Sun hath light; but the Sun (being a natural agent) cannot ſuſpend its light; it alwayes ſhews its brightneſs and beauty, except ſome cloud interpoſe, or the moon eclipſe it: but the Lord who is light and all light, doth not alwayes manifeſt himſelf in light; he puts clouds and darkneſs round about him, he hideth his face and will not be ſeen. Sometimes he appears all mercy, and at other times all juſtice; ſometimes all goodneſs, and at other times all wrath; ſometimes he lets out nothing but love, and at other times nothing but diſpleaſure: Now as he varies his diſpenſations to us, ſo we are apt to vary in our apprehenſions of him: and as we cannot ſee God at all until he manifeſt himſelf, ſo we ſee him no otherwiſe then he pleaſeth to manifeſt himſelf: Hence the ſame ſoul ſees him to day all mercy, and the next day, poſſibly, the next hour, all juſtice: Now his goodneſs refreſheth, and anon his dread terrifies.

> Thirdly Obſerve, That as ſome afflictions are more grievous then others, ſo thoſe are moſt grievous to a godly man, which carry any appearance of the diſpleaſure of God.

O let not thy dread terrifie me. All ſufferings cannot terrifie, where God ſhews his love; and any will, where he ſhews his dread. If a man were in hell aſſured of the love of God, he could rejoyce; and if he were in heaven under thoughts of his wrath, he could not but tremble. His love is better then heaven, and his wrath is worſe then hell.

> Laſtly Note, As a deduction from the whole, That if a godly man may be thus terrified with the Majeſty of God, how terrible will the wrath of God be to the wicked!

Job was not afraid of the wrath of God againſt his perſon, for he had ſaid immediately before, I know I ſhall be juſtified. If the Majeſtical dread of God ſwallow up the beſt, the holieſt men, how will the dreadful Majeſty of God ſwallow up wicked men! how will he conſume them, who is to his own as a conſuming fire! We may argue here as the Apoſtle Peter doth in language near to this (1 Pet. 4. 18.) If the righteous ſcarcely be ſaved, where ſhall the ungodly and the ſinner appear?

Job having thus deprecated the terrour of the Lord, Withdraw thine hand far from me, and let not thy dread make me afraid: reſolves (upon the ſuppoſition of this grant) what to do;

Verſ. 22. Then call thou, and I will anſwer, or let me ſpeak, and anſwer thou me.

This is as much and in effect no more then he ſaid before, Chap. 9. 3. Then would I ſpeak and not fear him: yet here he a little amplifies what he ſaid there; for though Job doth often ſpeak the ſame thing for ſubſtance, yet his expreſſions are full of uſeful variety, new flowers of Rhetorick, and new actings of his affections ſhew themſelves. There it was, Then I will ſpeak and not fear him: here, Let him call and I will anſwer, or let me ſpeak, and anſwer thou me.

Job in theſe words, gives God his choice to take which part he pleaſed. As in law ſutes, one ſuſtains the part of the Plaintiff, and another ſuſtains the part of the defendant:

Actor vocat reũ, reus reſpondet: Ita conſlatur judiciũ cũ vocatione intelligitur actio, & cũ reſponſione defenſio. Coc.

dant: Or as in diſputes, one ſuſtains the perſon of an Opponent, and the other the perſon of a Reſpondent. Unto theſe Job alludes, as if he had ſaid, I am entring upon a diſpute, and commencing my ſuit in Heaven, before the Tribunal of Jehovah*: As for me, I know mine own integrity ſo well, that I care not which part I take, I will be Opponent, or I will be Reſpondent; I will be Plaintiff, or I will be Defendant; and therefore, Lord, I refer it wholly unto thee; take which part thou pleaſeſt; I'le take up what thou leaveſt, and do what thou appointeſt. Then call thou and I will anſwer.*

Verba ſunt arrogantia & ſcandaloſa. Caj.

Deo dat optionem interim ſui oblitus & immodicus. Merc.

Audacius agit peteret potius patientiam. Merc.

This offer argues only abundance of courage and holy confidence; yet ſome have adjudged it ſcandalous and full of arrogancy: As if Job had taken too much upon him, and had ſpoken more boldly to God then became him: As if he thought himſelf match enough for God at any weapon, or were ready to deal with him upon any terms. Eliphaz is ſuppoſed to aim at this paſſage (chap. 15. 4. Yea thou caſteth off fear) yet moſt excuſe him, conceiving that all this did flow from an holy familiarity which Job had with God: and that, becauſe he had a gracious friendlineſs in his heart towards God, he would therefore ſpeak to God as to a friend. Or it imports only that Job was very ſure of his cauſe; and therefore as when a man would ſhew the confidence he hath to foil his Adverſary in combat, he ſaith, chuſe what place you will, take what weapon you will, bring out two ſwords, take you one, and I will take the other, I deſire not to ſurpriſe you, or deal with you upon diſadvantages. So Job being aſſured of a good end, was content to ſtand to the determination of God himſelf, in what way he ſhould proceed to tryal.

Then call thou, and I will anſwer.

Then.] This particle Then, implyes that he could not do it till then, and that then he could: As if he had ſaid, I ſhall be in no caſe, either to anſwer, or to oppoſe, unleſs theſe two conditions be granted; but then I ſhall.

Call thou.] The Lord calleth us to do our duty, and he calleth us to anſwer, and give account how we have done our duty, or what we have done. He calleth daily to the firſt, in the preaching of the Word. And he will call us all to the latter, in that great day, by the ſounding of the Archangels Trumpet. (Pſal. 50. 4.) He ſhall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people: And ver. 1. He hath called the earth; that is, the people of the earth; he will call them all before his Throne; Job offered himſelf to a perſonal day of judgment before that general day of judgment. Call thou, is (verbum forenſe) a Law-term, call me to the Bar, or call me before thy Judgment-ſeat.

And I will anſwer.] The word which we tranſlate, I will anſwer, ſignifies often in Scripture, to teſtifie, or give witneſs; (Exod. 20. 16.) Thou ſhalt not bear falſe witneſs: The Hebrew is, Thou ſhalt not anſwer falſe witneſs; that is, when thou art required by a Judge to ſpeak in any caſe, thou ſhalt not anſwer beſides the truth. When Jacob had put his part of the cattel on the one ſide, and Laban's on the other, he ſaith, So ſhall my righteouſneſs anſwer for me in time to come (Gen. 30. 33.) it ſhall teſtifie or bear witneſs for me. The word is uſed in that ſence (Iſa. 59. 12.) Our ſins teſtifie againſt us: The Hebrew is, Our ſins anſwer againſt us; which imports that our actions, whether good or bad, ſhall be called out to ſpeak what we have been and are. And then, good actions will give a good teſtimony; and evil actions will give an ill teſtimony; (Hoſ. 5. 5.) The pride of Iſrael doth teſtifie to his face; or, doth anſwer to his face. Thus here, Let him call, and I will anſwer: I will give in evidence and teſtimony according to the truth of my heart and life. I will not bear falſe witneſs, though it be in my own cauſe.

Or let me ſpeak, and anſwer thou me.

שרך Verbum reſpondendi in hac ſecunda parte eſt àb alia radice & lenius accipi debet. Pin.

There's the other part. Let me ſpeak; I will be Plaintiff, or Opponent, and let the Lord anſwer or return; for the word which we render to anſwer, in this latter clauſe, is of a different root in the Hebrew from that in the former, and carries in it more reſpect. It intends not any ſummons or citation of God to anſwer, but it is an humble ſupplication, beſeeching him to return what his Wiſdom ſhould think fit in anſwer.

Hence Obſerve, That, Acquaintance with free grace, gives us mighty confidence towards God.

Take away thy dread, and then I am ready for a hearing. I acknowledge my weakneſs is ſuch, that I cannot bear thy Majeſty; and I know my own uprightneſs is ſuch, that I am aſſured of thy Mercy. When the Lord had called his people to repentance (Iſa. 1. 16.) Waſh you, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings; then he invites them to a free conference; Come, let us reaſon together. He ſpeaks familiarly to them, I will argue it out with you, againſt all your unbelief: Come, let us reaſon together. Now, as God ſpeaks familiarly to man, when he hath put his ſins away: ſo, when the Lord hath put his dread away, man ſpeaks familiarly to God; Come Lord, let us reaſon together; now let me ſpeak, and anſwer thou me: The place where God communed with his ancient people the Jews, was the Propitiatory, or Mercy-ſeat, Exod. 25. 22, and the place where God communeth now with his people is called, the Throne of grace (Heb. 4. 16.) Let us therefore come boldly unto the Throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need. We can have no boldneſs but at a Throne of grace: When grace in our own hearts oppoſing ſin, meets with that grace which is in the heart of God for the pardon of ſin, we are carried as upon Eagles wings beyond the regions of fear. Job lived long before Chriſt came in the fleſh, yet Chriſt was come into his heart; and when he deſired God to remove his dread, he moved to be looked upon and heard in a Mediator.

Job having thus prepared his way begins to plead.

Verſe 23. How many are mine iniquities and my ſins? make me to know my tranſgreſſion, and my ſin.

His way of arguing is much like that of the ſeventh and tenth Chapters, and his general ſcope is the ſame, at once to maintain his own former integrity, and to aggravate his preſent miſery. That's the ſum of his diſcourſes, queries and expoſtulations, to the end of the fourteenth Chapter.

How many are mine iniquities?

He ſeems to take the hint of this firſt enquiry from Zophar's wiſh, Chap. 11. ver. 5. O that God would ſpeak, and open his lips againſt thee: and that he would ſhew thee the ſecrets of wiſdom, that they are double to that which is: Know therefore, that God exacteth of thee leſs then thine iniquity deſerveth. Job anſwers, you deſired that God would ſpeak; you doubted not but if he did, he would make it appear my ſins were double to mine afflictions: With all mine heart (ſaith he) this is it I long for; I deſire that God would ſpeak, and that he would ſpeak out what my ſins are. How many are mine iniquities and my ſins? make me to know my tranſgreſſion and my ſin. As if he had ſaid, I am willing to hear, and know the worſt of my ſelf.

Some conceive, that Job having made that motion, Let him ſpeak, and I will anſwer, &c. ſtood waiting a while to ſee what God would do: But receiving no anſwer, he thus breaks out; How many are mine iniquities?

Adeone flagitioſus ego, ut ne dignus habear cui improbitatē exprobres? Saltem igitur ſcelera mea oſtende mihi.

And theſe put a very harſh conſtruction upon this Interrogation,; as if Job had ſaid, What? am I ſo wicked and ſinful, that I am not worthy unto whom thou ſhouldeſt ſhew my wickedneſs, and my ſin? if I am ſo vile, let it appear how vile I am, and ſhew me thoſe ſins which have rendred me (it ſeems) not only unworthy of acceptation, but of an anſwer. I like not this gloſs, neither doth it bear the image of a gracious ſpirit, ſuch as Job's alwayes was, though it was ſometimes a little muddy and tumultuous.

Rather thus, Job having a purpoſe to defend his cauſe, asks at once from the grief of his heart, and from the clearneſs of his conſcience, How many are mine iniquities? As if he had ſaid, I am ſuſpected of great crimes, and I am in the eye of my friends as a perſon condemned already; but I would thoſe crimes were brought forth, and ſurely they ought, before I am either cenſured, or condemned: Therefore Lord, How many are mine iniquities and my ſins? make me to know my my tranſgreſſion and my ſin.

So the words carry a ſtrong deſire, which this afflicted ſoul had diſcovered more then once before, to ſee the bottom of his codition, and to find out the reaſon why God did thus afflict him: And if it were for ſin (about which he had no fear upon his conſcience) O that God would but ſhew him his ſin: His ſin (under that notion) was a ſecret to him, but he was willing to know it. There are two queſtions which would be reſolved before I proceed further to the opening of this. How many are mine iniquities?

Firſt, Seeing Job at Chap 9. ver. 22. laid down this concluſion, He ſlayeth the wicked and the righteous; and upon that bottom grounded all his anſwers, that the diſpenſations of God are alike in outward things to good and bad: Hence the queſtion riſeth, why he labours ſo much to clear himſelf of ſin, as if his afflictions muſt needs argue him wicked, whereas he before had argued, that the Lord doth as much afflict the righteous as the wicked.

I anſwer, Job ſpeaks thus, as vindicating his perſon, not as doubting his ſtate. He did not queſtion whether God was his friend, becauſe he was afflicted, but he deſired to remove the ſuſpitions of his Friends. Zophar (chap. 11. ver. 14.) gave Job occaſion to call for this diſcovery, while he counſelled him, If iniquity be in thine hand, put it far away, and let not wickedneſs dwell in thy Tabernacles. His Friends put theſe jealous ſuppoſitions, theſe if's and an's often upon him, If iniquity be in thine hand, &c. The counſel was good; but their jealouſie was not. Job ſaw what hung upon their ſpirits, and therefore begs of God to unſecret his ſins, and lay open his tranſgreſſions. As if he had ſaid, Lord, my friends are unſatisfied with all the profeſſions and proteſtations which I have made of my innocency: They ſuppoſe that I keep my ſin cloſe, & roll it like a ſweet morſel under my tongue; they would rake into my life, and ſee the bottom of my heart. Lord, let them ſee all, ſhew them what I am, and let me know what I have done. If it be as theſe men ſay, let it appear to thy glory, and to my ſhame. How many are mine iniquities and ſins? make me to know my tranſgreſſion and my ſin.

Secondly, It is queſtioned why Job makes requeſt, that God would ſhew him what and how many his ſins were, was he curious to know their Arithmetical number? Did he think God had over-reckoned him, or that himſelf could know their reckoning? Or did he think his ſins were ſo few, or ſo ſmall, that they could not hurt him? One ſin is enough to juſtifie God in our condemnation, we need not ask for a great many. The beſt of Saints, even they who have lived in no ſin, and comparatively have committed but few ſins, have yet deſired the Lord to cover their ſins, and pronounced him bleſſed, Whoſe tranſgreſſion is forgiven, whoſe ſin is covered (Pſal. 32. 1.) As the Saints are not forward to proclaim their good works; ſo neither is it pleaſant to them to have their ſins proclaimed: Why then is Job ſo buſie about this point of knowledge?

I anſwer, Job did not ask this queſtion, either out of curioſity to know the number of his ſins, or as if God had put more to his account then he had committed. He did not deſire this, as if he thought his ſins were either ſo few, or ſo ſmall, that they could do him no hurt; nor doth he ſpeak by way of extenuation, as if they were not many. He knew his ſins were many and great, yea, that if he had but one, and that a little one, he could not boaſt before God.

Nihil aliud eſt quam ſe ſibi bene conſcium.

But Firſt, He ſpeaks thus, becauſe he knew his ſins were neither ſo many as his Friends had reckoned them; nor ſo great as they had aggravated them; nor ſo black as they had painted them.

Secondly, When he deſires to be ſhewed his ſin, it is a proof that he was not guilty of any beloved ſin. He ſpeaks as Paul, 1 Cor. 4. 4. I know nothing by ſelf. Lord, if any filth lye unſeen, make me know it; His heart did not condemn him, and therefore he had confidence towards God, 1 John 3. 21. As if he had ſaid, Lord, My accuſers have no proof, they do but gueſs that I am wicked, my own heart is not ſo much as my accuſer at all; Lord, thou knoweſt exactly what I am, ſhew me, ſhew all, how many are my ſins?

Thirdly, He deſired to know his ſins; Firſt, That he might mourn and repent for his unknown ſins. Secondly, That he might turn from them, and return to God more fully. Thirdly, That he might be more watchful againſt them.

Laſtly, He was bold to ask this queſtion, becauſe he knew God would deal with him, as a Father, by a Covenant of grace through Chriſt; not, as a Judge, by a Covenant of works in himſelf: and therefore he was not afraid to know his ſins, and to have them all ſet in order before him: He was aſſured God would not condemn him, and he did not contend to juſtifie himſelf before God, he only waited till God would juſtifie him againſt the contendings and uncharitable ſurmiſings of men. Theſe, or ſuch as theſe, were the grounds upon which Job makes this addreſs to God, and puts both this queſtion and requeſt: How many are mine iniquities and my ſins? make me to know my tranſgreſſion and my ſin.

How many.] The word refers both to quantity and quality; the Vulgar reads it, How great ſins have I? or, How great are the ſins which I have? We read it quantitively, for the number, How many are my ſins? How great, or how many? Make me to know both their number and their nature.

במה ad utrumq; pertinet, ad multitudinē ſcilicet & magnitudinem. Quantas habeo iniquitates? Vulg.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, God only can give us the number and nature of our ſins.

No man can tell how many his ſins are; they are more then the hairs upon our head, they are as the ſands upon the ſea-ſhore innumerable. The kinds or ſorts of ſin, yea, the greater acts of ſin may be numbred by man; but he only that numbers the Stars, can number all our ſins. We commit many ſins of ignorance; and we are ignorant of ſome of our ſins of knowledge: we commit known ſins, which we do not know that we have committed.

And as God only knows the number, ſo the greatneſs and the aggravations of our ſins. Who can underſtand his errors? (Pſal. 19. 12.) He means practical, not doctrinal errors. As theſe errors of wandrings are beyond our numbring, ſo alſo beyond our underſtanding. As there is a height and a depth in the love of God, which paſſeth our knowledge. So there is an height and a depth of wickedneſs in our hearts, which paſſeth our knowledge. The Lord only can ſhew us how ſinful we are; as he only can ſhew us how gracious himſelf is.

Further, The multiplication of terms in this paſſage is conſiderable, How many are mine iniquities and my ſins? make me to know my tranſgreſſion and my ſin. Here are three Original words, by which Job doth expreſs the ſame thing. Firſt, Iniquity. Secondly, Tranſgreſſion. Thirdly, Sin. The Latines give us four, and they labour much to find out a material diſtinction in this verbal diſtinction: or to ſhew how iniquity, tranſgreſſion, and ſin, as alſo, how ſin in the firſt clauſe, and ſin in the ſecond, differ.

חטאות Per errorem admiſſa עונות ſunt propriè perverſitates פשע gravius eſt defectionem & rebellionem ſignificans. Merc.

The firſt word, which we tranſlate iniquity, ſignifies a perverſeneſs and crookedneſs of ſpirit, or thoſe ſins which have a peculiar crookedneſs and perverſeneſs in them. The ſecond ſignifies any, the leaſt aberration from the way or rule of holineſs in our actings, though our hearts ſtand right: every ſtep beſide the line is ſin. The word in the ſecond clauſe, which we tranſlate tranſgreſſion, ſignifies rebellion and obſtinacy of ſpirit, the riſings of our thoughts againſt God.

The Latines make out the diſtinction thus. By iniquities, they underſtand thoſe evils which are committed againſt our neighbour. By ſins, thoſe which a man commits againſt himſelf. By tranſgreſſions, thoſe which are immediate againſt God: And by ſin in the fourth place, Omiſſions: As if he had ſaid, Lord, ſhew me mine iniquities, any evil I have committed againſt others: Shew me my ſins, thoſe which I have committed againſt my ſelf; ſhew me my tranſgreſſions, the rebellions of my life againſt thy Majeſty. And ſhew me my ſins, all my neglects to perform, or negligent performances of holy duties: ſpread all before my face. This hath a truth in it: yet the holy Ghoſt doth not obſerve ſuch a diſtinctneſs in theſe words, but uſeth much variety and liberty in their application.

Latini utuntur quatuor diſtinctis verbis & curioſius inter hæc diſcrimen conſtituere nituntur, 1. iniquitas in proximū. 2. peccata in ſe. 3. ſcelera in Deū 4. delicta omiſſionis: Lyran. Aquin. paulo aliter.

Sometimes ſin, which goes loweſt in ordinary ſignification, is an aggravation: (Hoſ. 12. 8.) In all my labours they ſhall find none iniquity in me, that were ſin; as if ſin here were more then iniquity, or great iniquity. Sometimes iniquity is put as an aggravation upon ſin (Pſal. 32. 5.) Thou forgaveſt the iniquity of my ſin: That is, the ſinfulneſs of my ſin; or thoſe conſiderations which have rendred my ſin out of meaſure ſinful. Now ſeeing there is ſuch a promiſcuous uſe of theſe words in Scripture, we cannot clearly eſtabliſh, or build upon ſuch a difference.

Therefore paſſing by thoſe critical niceties, I ſhall take the Eſt coacervatio quadam artificio plena; Nam ſicut ejuſdem vocis repetitio ita etiam plurimarum eandem rem ſignificantium acervatio vim ſolet addere orationi. San.

the words as Synonimaes, ſignifying one and the ſame thing, yet being thus joyned, they ſignifie more then any one ſingly can. For as the repeating of the ſame words heightens the ſence, ſo alſo doth the heaping up of divers words which have the ſame ſence. So that this Rhetorical acervation intimates *Job*s earneſt deſire, that all his ſins, by what name or title ſoever diſtinguiſhed, might be produced, and made known unto him. Let my iniquities, my tranſgreſſions, my ſins, call them what you will, let them all be preſented to my face. When God proclaims his pardoning mercy, he heaps up theſe words in his own title, calling himſelf, The Lord, the Lord gracious, &c. pardoning iniquity, tranſgreſſion, and ſin. Leſt any breach of the Law might be thought unpardonable, all the words which imply a breach, are uſed in the proclamation of pardon. And while Job would here ſhew both his repentance and his innocency, that he was far from hiding any darling ſin in his boſom, he begs the diſcovery of whatſoever bare the name, or had the nature of ſin, in his heart or life.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, That the better any man is, the more willing he is to know the worſt of himſelf.

He who is light in the Lord, is willing to ſee his dark part as well as his light. Some are very deſirous others ſhould know the good they have done; but they cannot abide to be ſhewed the evil which themſelves have done. The Phariſee (Luke 18) publiſheth to all, how he paid tithes and gave almes, how he faſted and pray'd, &c. but he ſpake not a word, either confeſſing his known ſins, or begging a ſight of what he did not know. Solomon perceiv'd that this ſpirit of ſelf-flattery poſſeſſed many in his time (Prov. 20. 6.) Moſt men will proclaim every one his own goodneſs, but a faithful man who can find? Hypocrites labour much to ſhew others their goodneſs: The ſincere labour more to ſee their own vileneſs. A godly man finds delight only in the knowledge of his graces; but he finds profit in the knowledge of his corruptions. We are pleaſed only with the ſight of friends, or of wife and children in our houſes; but if a thief be got in, we thank him that ſhews us who, and where he is. There are two things which argue a gracious frame of ſpirit: Firſt, When we deſire to know how frail we are: Secondly, When we deſire to know how ſinful we are. A natural man loves not to take notice either of the infirmities of his body, or of the preſumptions of his ſoul: And though ſome wicked men will ſay from a ſpirit of impudence, they care not who knows their iniquities, tranſgreſſions and ſins; yet no wicked man ever did or can ſay from a ſpirit of repentance, Lord make me to know mine iniquities, my tranſgreſſions, and my ſins. A carnal heart is more willing that others ſhould know his ſins, then he is (under this notion of knowledge) to know them himſelf; he knows them in the hiſtory or matter of fact, with a kind of delight; it ſometime pleaſes him to remember the evil which he hath done: but he cannot abide to know them in their nature; it never pleaſes him to repent of the evil which he hath done.

Secondly Obſerve, Whilſt Chriſt is known to us, we need not be afraid to have our ſins known to us.

To know ſin, and not to know Chriſt, is ſad. One ſin ſeen, without a ſight of Chriſt, ſwallows up the ſoul: but a ſight of Chriſt ſwallows up all our ſins. None can be truly willing that God ſhould ſhew them their ſins, but they to whom God hath ſhewed a Saviour. Job had ſaid, He ſhall be my ſalvation, before he ſaid, Shew me my tranſgreſſion. When we have ſeen heaps upon heaps of mercy in God, we cannot deſpair (though we ought to grieve) when we ſee heaps upon heaps of ſin in our ſelves. Heaps of mercy caſt down or cover heaps of ſin. All our mountains of ſin become mole-hills, yea plains, before this Zerubbabel.

Again, It is remarkable, that Job having asked the queſtion, How many are mine iniquities? follows it preſently with this petition, Make me to know my tranſgreſſion and my ſin: As if he had ſaid, I may ſee my ſins how many they are; or that they are very many, and yet not know what any one of them is, without thy ſpecial teaching.

Hence Obſerve, Our ſins may be told us, or we may have the tale of our ſins, and yet not know our ſins.

It is harder to know the nature, then the number; what, then how many our ſins are. Every man (who knows any thing of the ſtate of man) knows he is a ſinner; but few know their ſins. Chriſt is preached to all; yet Chriſt is not known to all: There is much in this, Make me to know. To know ſin, is to be ſenſible of the evil of ſin; as to know Chriſt, is to have a feeling of Chriſt, and to taſte how ſweet the Lord Chriſt is. We may hear of our ſins all our dayes, and yet not know our ſins: It is poſſible for a man to write down catalogues of his ſins, and to keep a record of them every day, and yet not to know them, not only not ſo far as to mourn for them after a godly ſort; but not ſo far as to be affected with them after a moral ſort, or ſo far as an ingenious man might be. It is one thing to know our tranſgreſſions; another thing to write our tranſgreſſions, or to ſpeak of them. For as ſome have whole books written full of Sermon-notes by them, who have not one line of a Sermon written in their hearts, or upon their wayes; ſo a man may have whole books written full of ſin-notes, and yet not one ſin making impreſſion upon his heart. There are but few who know what they know.

There is a threefold knowledge of ſin.

Firſt, In the kind of it, that this or that is ſinful; this knowledge of ſin comes not from our ſelves. There are many actings which we do not know to be ſinnings, till God makes us know them. Some things wherein we thought we did God good ſervice, we may find our ſelves tranſgreſſors in them.

Secondly, There is a knowledge of ſin in the nature of it, that it is a tranſgreſſion of the Law, and a departure from God; that it is a filthy and a polluted thing, a baſe and diſhonourable thing; that it is nothing that is good, and all that's evil; that it is ſo evil that we cannot make it worſe then it is, nor call it by any name ſo bad as its own, Sinful ſin.

Thirdly, There is a knowledge of ſin in the effects and iſſues of it: That as it is filthy, ſo it defiles; that as it is a pollution, ſo it pollutes every thing that toucheth it; that, as it is baſe and diſhonourable in it ſelf, ſo it doth embaſe and diſhonour every ſoul that commits it, much more thoſe that love it: That it is big with, and brings forth death; that it is fruited with damnation, that it is armed with all the curſes written in the Book of God againſt ſinners; that the wrath of God is revealed from Heaven againſt it, and ſhall be poured out upon it for ever, unleſs we have part in the blood of Chriſt, which was poured out to waſh and ſave us from it, We never know ſin thus, till God makes us know it. Sin is as a fire to conſume, as a ſerpent to ſting and poyſon us; yet ſinful man eſteems it but as a fire, or as a ſerpent painted upon a wall, or ſet upon a ſign-poſt, which though they have the colour, yet have they not the heat of fire, nor the poyſon of a ſerpent. Grace only gives us the true ſenſe of our own ſin: And he who hath received the largeſt meaſures of the grace of God, had need to be inſtant in prayer with the God of grace, To make him know his tranſgreſſion and his ſin.

VERS. 24, 25.

Wherefore hideſt thou thy face, and holdeſt me for thine enemy?

Wilt thou break a leaf driven to and fro? and wilt thou purſue the dry ſtubble?

WE need not labour much for the connection of theſe words, which are indeed a continued deſcription of the ſorrows of a troubled ſpirit. Some joyn them with the requeſt made in the former verſe thus, How many are mine iniquities and my ſins? make me to know my tranſgreſſion and my ſin. Wherefore hideſt thou thy face? As if he had ſaid, Foraſmuch as I propoſing that to thy Majeſty, to diſcover the worſt and darkeſt part of me, and yet thou doſt not bring forth any accuſation, or lay any crime to my charge, ſeeing by thy ſilence thou ſeemeſt to acquit me of being guilty of any ſuch tranſgreſſion as my Friends have ſuſpected me of; Wherefore is it that thou hideſt thy face, and holdeſt me for thine enemy? If indeed thou couldeſt produce againſt me any ſtudied wickedneſs, or arraign me at thy bar for an hypocrite, then I ſhould ſee reaſon enough, why thou, who art of purer eyes then to behold any unclean thing, ſhouldſt hide thy face from me in ſuch uncleanneſs; and were I ſuch an one, I might ſee reaſon enough why thou ſhouldeſt count me as an enemy, or never own me as a friend. But foraſmuch as that not only appeareth not, but indeed is not, I now further deſire to underſtand what is the cauſe why thou hideſt thy face from me, and why thou holdeſt me as thine enemy.

Cum à me rogatus (O ſupreme judex) ut ſi quæ ſunt apud te recondita mea ſcelera proferre velis, taces omnino, ſane videris tuo iſto ſilentio teſtari, nihil tale in me reperiſſe; cur igitur abſcondis faciem & mecum tanquã cum inimico agis? Aqui.

Verſ. 24. Wherefore hideſt thou thy face, and holdeſt me for thine enemy?

The words are not ſo much a queſtion, as an expoſtulation, which is a very vehement opening of the heart to let out the grief that lyeth there: Yet Job keeps within the bounds of duty and holy modeſty: He did not invade the prerogative of God, whileſt he thus asked an account of him. We muſt here take in a double ſuppoſition that we may clear Job. Firſt, That, he knew God had a reaſon why he hid his face from him. Secondly, We muſt ſuppoſe, that in caſe the Lord ſhould ſtill hide the cauſe from him why he did hide his face from him, yet Job was reſolved to ſit down and honour God even in that darkneſs about his own condition: for without theſe ſuppoſitions, to put queſtions, much more to put expoſtulations upon God, is unbecoming the ſtate of the creature, much more of a Believer. We muſt ſay God hath juſt cauſe for whatſoever he doth; and he doth not wrong us, if he refuſe to ſhew us the cauſe, though we requeſt him to ſhew it us.

Wherefore hideſt thou thy face?

Here are two things to be opened.
Firſt, What is meant by the face of God.
Secondly, What hiding his face doth mean.

This phraſe [The face of God] muſt be underſtood by that common figure, an Anthropopathy. God is often ſpoken of in Scripture after the manner of men; ſometimes inward paſſions, ſometimes (as here) outward parts are aſcribed to him.

The face of God is put Firſt, For the eſſential glory of God. (Exod. 33.13.) When Moſes deſired to ſee the glory of God, the Lord telleth him, ver. 20. Thou canſt not ſee my face; for there is no man can ſee my face and live. Thou canſt not ſee my face; that is, my eſſential glory; thou mayeſt ſee my declarative, or my manifeſtative glory, the glory of my Attributes, as they are expreſſed in that proclamation of his great Name. The face of God, as taken for his eſſential glory, is alwayes hid; it is an object too pure and ſpiritual for the eye, and too high for the unſtanding of a creature.

Quare Divinitatem tuam ſubducis. Targ.

Secondly, The face of God ſignifies the general preſence of God: And ſo when God hides his face, he denyes us the comfortable enjoyment of his preſence.

Thirdly, and more particularly, The face of God ſignifies the anger and wrath of God, (Lev. 20.6.) The ſoul that turneth after ſuch as have familiar ſpirits, and after wizards, to go a whoring after them, I will even ſet my face againſt that ſoul, and will cut him off from among his people. And in the Pſalms often the Lord is ſaid to ſet his face, that is, to manifeſt his diſpleaſure againſt wicked men. The face of God, ſignifies alſo the favour of God, the good will of God. So in this place, and Pſal. 18.19. 1 Sam. 13.12. Numb. 6.25. Dan. 9.17. both theſe, the anger and the favour of God, are called the face of God, becauſe the anger and the favour of men appear in their faces. Man can form his face into the ſignification of either of theſe, into an angry look, or into a pleaſing look: We may ſee wrath, or we may ſee love printed upon the countenance. Hence the favour and the anger of God are expreſſed by the face of God. Job complaineth, that the favour of God, the light of his countenance was hidden from him.

Hideſt.] The hiding of the face of God may be conſidered either as it is, or as we apprehend it to be. His face is never hid, but to our apprehenſions. In his diſpenſations, there are the hidings, and there are the diſcoverings of his face; there are the ſhuttings, and there are the openings of his love. Further, the hiding of the face implyes two things.

Iratorum more qui eos quibus ſuccenſent aſpicere dedignantur. Merc.

Firſt, Diſpleaſure. A man turneth away his face from thoſe with whom he is diſpleaſed.

Secondly, Diſdain. We turn from thoſe we ſlight: and to turn the back upon a man is real ſlighting. Where we will not look, we do not love. As the Prophet ſaid to a great King, (2 Kings 3.14.) Were it not that I regard the preſence of Jehoſhaphat the King of Judah, I would not look toward thee nor ſee thee. So here, Wherefore hideſt thou thy face? is, Why art thou ſo angry with me? Why doſt thou ſlight me, as if I were not worth a look, or a caſt of thine eye: A man in miſery uſually ſaith, Pray look upon me.

Faciem avertere indignantis eſt & ſupplicium inferentis, ſicut faciem convertere benevolentis & benefacientis eſt. Pin.

Again, This alſo (as ſome Interpreters conceive) hath reference to a judiciary proceeding: Speak thou, and I will anſwer; or, I will ſpeak, and anſwer thou me: Wherefore hideſt thou thy face? When a Magiſtrate finds a buſineſs ſoul againſt a man, he turns away from him. Some of the Ancients refer it to a known cuſtom of the Judges in thoſe times, who when they pronounced ſentence of condemnation, cauſed a curtain to be drawn before them, or, hid their faces from the condemned party; for as the covering of a mans face was a token that he was condemned; ſo they who condemned them covered their own faces: Of which cuſtom ſee more upon thoſe words, chap. 9. ver. 24. He covereth the faces of the Judges thereof, &c. And whether the uſages of former times in judiciary proceedings, give any light to this Text or no, yet the general ſcope and intendment of it is plainly thus. Wherefore, O Lord, doſt thou put thy ſelf into an angry poſture againſt me? Why are all the appearances from Heaven to my ſoul black and lowring? Why is it that I ſee not thoſe former ſmiles in thy face? Why am I not received into the embraces of thy armes? Why doſt thou act the wrathful Judge, who art indeed a loving Father? As my ſoul hath delighted in thy forepaſſed kindneſſes, ſo it deſires to know, with all humble ſubmiſſion to thy will, why thou grieveſt me now with this unkindneſs, the hiding of thy face? Tell me Lord, tell me, wherefore hideſt thou thy face from me?

Antiqua erat conſuetudo, quod cum judices capitis ſententiā laturi erant interjecto velo ſe continebant abſconditi. Hujus meminit, Baſil. Ep. 79

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, That holy men even in this life have a ſight of the face of God.

Wherefore hideſt thou thy face? It was not uſual with God to hide his face, Job had ſeen it, elſe he would not have complained becauſe he could not ſee it. We are not much troubled at the want of that, whereof we never had any experience nor enjoyment. We are not at all troubled at the non-enjoyment of that, of whoſe being, or whether there be ſuch a thing or no, we are altogether ignorant. Job ſaw God did not deal with him as he was wont, nor do to him after the manner of a friend. God had been familiar with him, and given him frequent viſits, this made him ſo ſenſible of his preſent ſhyneſs and eſtrangements. Chap. 10. v. 12. Thy viſitation hath preſerved my ſpirit. When friends viſit they ſee one anothers faces. It is ſaid of the two Kings (2 Kings 14.8.) that the one ſent to the other, ſaying, Come, let us look one another in the face; that is, Let us have an interview. The ſoul of a believer hath interviews with God, God and he doth often look one another in the face. Whereſoever the Saints are (except in caſes of deſertion) the place may be called, as Jacob called that where he wreſtled with God, (Gen. 32.30.) Peniel, that is, the face of God: yet not in that ſence fully in which Jacob calls it ſo: He called it the face of God, becauſe he had ſeen God face to face. We can call it ſo only (ordinarily) becauſe we ſee his face. It is one thing to ſee the face of God, and another thing to ſee God face to face. The former is the common priviledge of Saints in this life; the latter is very rarely given the Saints here; or it is the priviledge of but ſome Saints, and thoſe rare ones, to have it here.

There is a twofold ſight or viſion of God.

Firſt, A viſion of grace. Secondly, A viſion of glory. Glory is nothing elſe, but the viſion of God; (1 Joh. 3.1.) We ſhall ſee him as he is. Both theſe ſights of God are expreſſed by one phraſe of ſpeech, in the Hebrew of the Old Teſtament, and in the Greek of the new, and we tranſlate both by ſeeing God face to face. So Jacob profeſſed in the place now cited, that he had ſeen God; and the Apoſtle promiſeth that we ſhall ſee him, ſo (1 Cor. 13.12.) where he alſo compares the ſight of God here to ſeeing in a glaſs darkly, and calls the ſight of him in heaven, a ſeeing of God face to face. Now the reaſon why ſome of the Saints (as Jacob and Moſes) are ſaid to ſee God face to face in this life, which the Apoſtle appropriates to the next, is this as I conceive, becauſe thoſe ſights of God which Jacob and Moſes had were immediate, God in an extraordinary manner coming down to wreſtle with Jacob, and calling up Moſes in an extraordinary manner to ſpeak with him in the mount; Theſe diſpenſations being (præludia gloriæ) the foreactings of a glorified eſtate, are ſet forth by that act which is peculiar and proper unto the ſtate of glory, The ſeeing of God face to face. But as for the uſual manifeſtations of God to believers in this life, they are only the ſeeings of his face.

So then we muſt diſtinguiſh of the viſions of God in this life. Some are extraordinary, ſuch was that of Jacob and Moſes, ſuch was that of the Prophet (Iſa. 6. 5.) and of Job (chap. 42. 5.) By all theſe God was ſeen (in this ſence) face to face. There are alſo ordinary manifeſtations of God, in which only the face of God is ſeen, and thoſe may be referred to three heads.

Firſt, We ſee his face in the glaſs of the word, there we have a viſion of God: hence the preaching of the word is called viſion, (Prov. 29. 18.) Where there is no viſion the people periſh.

Secondly, We ſee the face of God in the glaſs of his works. What God is, appears in what God doth. God needs not ſubſcribe his name to his works (as men do) to ſhew that he is the Author of them, for his works are his name, and in what work ſoever his hand hath been, his face is ſeen. Eſpecially in thoſe three great works, firſt, in the work of creation, (Rom. 1. 20.) The inviſible things of him from the creation of the world, are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made. Secondly, In the works of Providence. And this even in the common works of providence, our daily ſupport and protection, the conſtant recourſe of ſeaſons and times, of nights and dayes, Pſal. 19. 1. The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament ſheweth his handywork; day unto day uttereth ſpeech, and night unto night ſheweth knowledg; that is, the providences and turnings of every day, declare the glory of God, and ſhew his handywork: but chiefly in wonderful providences, in his great deliverances and miraculous operations for his people is God ſeen. Thirdly, In the work of Redemption, in which the face of God is more ſeen then in both the former, even his manifold wiſdom, Epheſ. 3. 10.

Thirdly, We ſee the face of God in the Ordinances of his worſhip, in them we have moſt viſible viſions of God in this life. For this ſight holy David was athirſt, Pſal. 63. 2. O God, thou art my God, &c. My ſoul thirſteth for thee in a dry and thirſty land, where no water is; to ſee thy power and thy glory ſo as I have ſeen thee in the Sanctuary. The ſight of God in the Sanctuary, is through the Ordinances and worſhip of the Sanctuary. God is ſeen in his works, but he is ſeen more in his word; in that as in a glaſs with open face we behold the glory of the Lord, till we are changed into the ſame image, (2 Cor. 3. 18.) The ſight of God is a transforming ſight; we cannot ſee what he is, and be what we are. The beauty of God ſhines in his Ordinances, and that beauty beheld doth not only reflect upon, but aſſimulate the beholder. Hence David again (Pſal. 27. 4.) makes it the chiefeſt and the choiceſt, the one and the only thing of all his deſires, One thing have I deſired of the Lord, that will I ſeek after, that I may dwell in the houſe of the Lord all the dayes of my life; what to do? To behold the beauty of the Lord. Where doth beauty ſit? Beauty ſits in the face, and therefore to behold the beauty of the Lord, is to behold the face of the Lord. Theſe are the ordinary viſions of God in this life, or the ſeeing of his face: and when the Lord is pleaſed to give any of his ſpecial favorites extraordinary and immediate manifeſtations of himſelf (which as he did to ſome Saints before the coming of Chriſt, ſo he can renew it (when he pleaſeth and ſees it fitting) to believers now) when I ſay God gives immediate manifeſtations of himſelf, they may be ſaid to ſee God face to face, becauſe ſuch manifeſtations are the firſt-fruits of glory, or glympſes of heaven before we come to heaven, where we ſhall as fully and as clearly as a finite nature can take in an infinite, ſee God face to face.

Now as unbelievers ſhall never ſee God face to face in glory: ſo they know not what it means to ſee his face in wayes of grace. And therefore they entertain it with a kind of ſcorn, when it is reported that any man hath ſeen the face of God; This is a ſtrange language to the men of the world, who live without God in the world. They who live without God in the world, live without God in the Church: and we are as Barbarians to them, they underſtand not what we ſay, when we ſay we have ſeen God in prayer, or at the word, in private duties, or in publick aſſemblies. In theſe, believers ſee the face of God; they who do not, do nothing in any of theſe. Our buſineſs in ſuch duties is to ſee God: we come not to ſee one another, or to ſee the walls and ornaments of the place we meet in, we come not (as the Diſciples ſpake wondring at the fabrick of the Temple) to ſee what manner of ſtones and buildings are there, but to ſee what a holy and gracious God is there; and when the worſhippers in ſpirit miſs this ſight, though they know their labour is not loſt, yet the comfort they expected is not gained, and therefore they mourn, yea humbly complain, Wherefore hideſt thou thy face?

It is the ſole priviledge of the Saints to ſee the face of God, but they live not alwayes in the enjoyment of that priviledge: (Iſa. 8. 17.) I will wait upon the Lord that hideth his face from the houſe of Jacob, and I will look for him. The Saints are now the houſe of Jacob; the eye, yea the heart of God is ever upon this houſe, yet he ſometimes hideth his face from it. Then the Lord hideth his face, when he doth not enlighten as formerly, when he doth not enliven as formerly, when he doth not aſſiſt in doing as formerly, when he doth not ſupport in ſuffering as formerly; when there is a withdrawing of theſe or in any of theſe, then God is ſaid to hide his face from the houſe of Jacob; David often bemoans himſelf under theſe hidings. And the Prophet puts the caſe in general, that ſuch as fear the Lord and obey the voice of his ſervants, may yet walk in darkneſs and ſee no light (Iſa. 50. 10.) We never want light in our ſpirits, till the face of God is hid from us, as we never want light in our eyes till the Sun is hidden from us: but why doth God hide his face from his choiceſt ſervants? Job a choice ſervant of his asks the reaſon, wherefore hideſt thou thy face far from me? I ſhall (upon that occaſion, and the clearing of this Scripture) anſwer it in ſome particulars.

Firſt, The Lord hides his face ſometimes, becauſe he will hide his face. What if God ſhould have anſwered Job when he enquired, Wherefore hideſt thou thy face? It is my pleaſure? God may do it by prerogative, and neither ask us leave, nor give us the reaſon why. As he hath mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardneth (Rom. 9. 18.) ſo he may ſay, I ſhew my face to whom I will, and from whom I will, I hide it.

But, Secondly, He hideth his face at one time, becauſe he intendeth to ſhew it more clearly at another. When he means ſhortly to give the ſoul a full ſight of himſelf, he gives it at preſent no ſight of himſelf: when he is about to pour out abundance of love into a boſome, he quite withdraws the ſenſe of his love.

Thirdly, Undervaluings of former manifeſtations are often chaſtned with after hidings.

Fourthly, God denies his preſence, that we may prize his preſence, and pray more earneſtly for it.

Fiftly, When we value the face of the world too much, God hides his face. When we are deſirous to make a fair ſhew in the fleſh, God will not ſhew himſelf to our ſpirits. Our dalliance with the creature, cauſeth God to look off from us, or to look ſtrangely upon us. The heart of a godly man may get a haunt to ſome vanity here below, and then God reſtrains viſion from above. He ſhews us the wandrings and out-lyings of our affections, by the withdrawings and vailings of his own. We cannot love God till he ſhews us his face; and after we have ſeen it, we cannot but love him: yet they who have ſeen him, and love him, may for a time be overtaken with the love of the world, and then God will not be ſeen. Every opening of our ſelves to the world is a hiding of our ſelves from God. When we hide our faces from God, no wonder if God hide his face from us.

Sixthly, When we hide our faces from the wayes or from the people of God, God will hide his face from us. Some who have had Communion with God, and have ſeen his face, may (under a temptation or upon a guſt of carnal fear) if not withdraw from, yet ſcarce own the people or the wayes of God; yea, poſſibly they may ſet their faces againſt ſome of the wayes of God. When it is ſo with them, God will ſurely hide his face from them. Apoſtates draw back totally from profeſſion, when they perceive they cannot bring forward their own profit or other private intereſts by their profeſſion; and of ſuch the Lord hath ſaid, My ſoul ſhall have no pleaſure in them, (Heb. 10.38.) True Believers may draw back partially or in part, and when they do ſo, God will make them know that while they are in ſuch a baſe temper, his ſoul hath no pleaſure in them, and therefore hides his face from them.

As theſe or the like are cauſes in us, why God hides his face, ſo he hath gracious deſignes upon us, which he effects by hiding his face. Chiefly theſe two,

Firſt, To try us. There is no greater trial of grace then the withdrawing of comfort; and in that ſtate where we ſhall have a conjunction of all comfort, we ſhall never be put to the trial of any grace; yea, the graces which act in trials ſhall have no exiſtence there. Faith and hope and patience have no place in heaven, becauſe they have no work in heaven: And they have no work there, becauſe God will never hide his face, and Satan ſhall never ſhew his face there. For between the appearing of Satans face, and the hiding of Gods face lieth the work of theſe graces, (Iſa. 8.17.) I will wait upon God who hideth his face: there's the trial of patience, to keep cloſe to God, when God ſeemeth to depart from us.

Secondly, God hides his face that we might be in love with that ſtate where his face ſhall never be hid. 'Tis beſt of all to be diſſolved and to be with Chriſt, becauſe then we and our joyes ſhall never be divided. That joy which depends upon changeable things, muſt needs be changeable. The joy of heaven is a dependent joy, yet becauſe God on whom it depends, will never change a look towards us, therefore our joy ſhall be unchangeable. If the Sun did alwayes continue the ſame aſpect upon the moon, which it doth at the full, the Moon (though hers be a dependent and a borrowed light) would ever continue at the full, and know no change. God will not vary his aſpect toward the Saints in heaven, for one moment, to all eternity, and therefore the joy of Saints in heaven will be for ever at the full. There is a double difference between the manifeſtation of God here upon earth, and in heaven. Firſt, A difference in the degree, the manifeſtations in heaven are clearer; here in a glaſs, there face to face, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks. Secondly, The manifeſtations of God to the Saints in heaven are without intermiſſion, there ſhall not come one cloud between the face of God and our ſouls for ever. Hence as the holineſs, ſo the joy of the Saints in heaven ſhall be the ſame for ever. Now God hides his face, and puts us to this queſtion, Wherefore hideſt thou thy face? that we may long for that eſtate where this queſtion ſhall never be put, Wherefore hideſt thou thy face?

Thirdly Obſerve, That it a great affliction to the ſoul, when the face of God is hid.

Wherefore hideſt thou thy face? As if he had ſaid, Lord, I could ſuffer any affliction, yea all afflictions better then this one. Job was not a type of Chriſt (as I have toucht before) but as in many things, ſo in this, his ſpirit and his condition were very parallel or like to Chriſt. When Chriſt was upon the croſs, he cryed out, and put this queſtion, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? Such was Jobs cry, Why hideſt thou thy face from me? As Chriſt upon the croſs, ſo Job upon the dunghil, had a body full of pains; but he paſſeth by theſe, and only complains of the ſufferings of his ſoul in the hidings of his fathers face. Here was the pinch; Why hideſt thou face from me? The Lord threatens, Deut. 32.20. I will hide my face from them, I will ſee what their end ſhall be: Certainly no good end if God hide his face. He ſpeaks in reference to temporal or outward things, I will hide my face from them, that is, I will withdraw my protecting preſence, my wonted influence and aſſiſtance; or as he tells them (Jer. 18.17.) I will ſhew them the back and not the face in the day of their calamity; when I have done this, then I will ſee what their end ſhall be. Though God be not ſeen, yet he can ſee; having hid himſelf, and left a ſinful people to ſhift for themſelves, he then (as it were) watches, like Moſes ſiſter, when he was put into his boat of bulruſhes (Exod. 2.4.) to ſee what will become of them. God knows the end from the beginning, and looks quite through all cauſes into their iſſues; yet thus he ſpeaks after the manner of men, who cannot ſee an hour before them; I will ſee what their end ſhall be. God ſees they muſt needs come to a miſerable end, whoſe wayes he will not vouchſafe to ſee. Much more is this true in regard of our inward and ſpiritual eſtate, if God hide his face, he ſeeth what the end will be, even anguiſh and ſorrow, trouble and vexation of ſpirit. What can that ſoul ſee but viſions of darkneſs, which hath no viſion of God, who alone is light? After the people had ſaid (Hoſ. 6.2.) Let us return unto the Lord, for he hath torn and he will heal us; he adds, After two dayes will he revive us, in the third day he will raiſe us up, and we ſhall live in his ſight: In his ſight, which ſome interpret, when God brings us into his ſight, or into a ſight of him, we ſhall live, that is, our lives will be ſweet unto us, we ſhall recover when God appears to us, and gives us evidence that we are accepted with him. A ſight of the face of God is the happineſs and life of man. As no man can ſee the eſſential face of God and live, ſo no man can live comfortably, unleſs he ſee the providential face of God. It is obſerved, that the heathens exceedingly deſired a ſight of their gods, and that they might ſee them, they invented images, and ſet up ſtatues to repreſent the gods; that ſo they might ſee whom they worſhipped, and at once behold and adore their dunghil-dieties. They knew no way of ſeeing their gods, but by their ſence; and therefore they made ſenſible Gods. They would rather have Gods with eyes that could not ſee, then not ſee their gods with their eyes. Yea, I find a learned Chriſtian among the Ancients, giving this as one reaſon why Chriſt took our nature upon him, and ſo became God manifeſted in the fleſh, that, God who in himſelf is altogether inviſible, might be viſible in his Son; God is more viſible in Chriſt, then he is in all creatures; The Apoſtle calleth him the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon, (Heb. 1.3.) Jeſus Chriſt is the brightneſs, the ſent-forth-light, the beams or ſplendor of his Fathers glory, and the imprinted image of his eſſence or perſon (for the words are a metaphor drawn from a lightſom body, which ſends forth beams of light, and from a ſeal, which leaves its own impreſſion or image where it is ſtampt, I ſay) Chriſt Jeſus is all this, not only in regard of his Divine Nature, and eternal generation, but alſo in reſpect of his incarnation, and ſending in the ſimilitude of ſinful fleſh. For in Chriſt manifeſted in the fleſh, the glory and excellency of God the Father ſhined forth; who as he is in himſelf altogether inviſible, ſo he is in nothing ſo viſible as in his Son our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and therefore all the former wayes of manifeſting God under the Law, have been laid by and diſuſed, ſince God manifeſted himſelf to us by his Son: the excellency of this being ſo great beyond the former, that to look for them, would be but like calling for Star-light after the Sun is riſen, as the Apoſtles way of argumentation doth clearly evidence in the firſt of the Hebrews, verſ. 1, 2, 3. But to return to the point (from which, I have upon the overture of this notion, a little digreſſed). It appears by all this, that the manifeſtation of God to the ſoul, is our higheſt both priviledge and comfort, and that the hidings of his face are our greateſt both loſs and ſorrow.

Gentiles ab hoc ſimulacra finxerũt: ut oculis cernerent quod colebant. Chryſologus hinc argumẽtatur incarnationis cauſam, ut ſe inviſibilis deus faceret viſibilẽ ſatisfaceretq; amori, qui quod amat videre cupit.

There are four particulars from which I ſhall briefly evidence this yet further.

Firſt, The need or rather the abſolute neceſſity we ſtand in of the preſence and favour of God. It is needful for us to have the creature, but there is a neceſſity that we ſhould enjoy God. God is enough for us without any creature, but all creatures are nothing to us without God; God and all that he hath made, is not more then God without any thing that he hath made.

Secondly, All our profits come in at the door of divine favour and munificence. And having God, we have all: He that hath the fountain, hath the ſtream; he that hath the Mine, hath the gold and ſilver. He that hath the Sun, hath the light: Whilſt we enjoy Communion with God, we enjoy the fountain the mine, the Sun of all enjoyments. We ſay there is no fiſhing to the ſea, becauſe the ſea hath the vaſteſt capacity; there's fiſh enough in the ſea to fill all our nets, and to lade all our veſſels: we may ſay infinitely more truly, there is no enjoyment to the enjoyment of God,

God: God hath enough not only to ſupply all our needs, but to ſatisfie all our deſires. The beſt of meer creatures is but a particular good. All creatures are not an univerſal good. The One the One-moſt God is all good. God will be hereafter, and he can be now, All in all unto us.

Thirdly, Nothing is ſo honourable to man as the enjoyment of God. It is an honour to a common man when he is admitted to the preſence of a great man. If a Prince (who is but man in a great letter) ſpeak kindly to us, and ſhew us any countenance, we think our ſelves honoured not a little: what is it then for the great God of heaven to ſhew us his face, and give us countenance?

Fourthly, It is joy and delight unſpeakable to enjoy the face of God. One of the Roman Emperours was of ſo amiable a temper and compoſure, that he was called The Delight of mankind: God is indeed the delight of Saints. The joy of glory is this, We ſhall ever be with the Lord; the joy of grace is, when the Lord is with us. We may have grace, but we can have no joy, when God hides his face from us; and he that hath once ſeen the face of God, can never give over asking, knocking, praying, begging, till the Lord reſtore unto him the light of his countenance, and the joy of his ſalvation. Wherefore hideſt thou thy face?

And holdeſt me for thine enemy.

We may expound this latter clauſe by the former: Surely thou holdeſt me for an enemy, elſe why doſt thou hide thy face from me?

חשב exiſtimare, reputare, etiā in pretio habere.

Non pluris facit nos quā ſi extera & peregrina eſſemus.

Holdeſt.] The word ſignifies the eſteem or account which we have either of perſons or of things. (Gen. 31. 15.) Are we not counted of him ſtrangers? ſay the wives of Jacob, in reference to their Father Laban, he deals with us as if we had not been born in his family, or as if he had no relation to us. So here, Thou counteſt me, or, thou holdeſt me for thine enemy, that is, thou carrieſt it as if thou hadſt nothing at all to do with me upon terms of friendſhip, as if thou hadſt no acquaintance with me, or hadſt never ſeen me before, yea thou dealeſt with me, not only as with a ſtranger, but as with an enemy; not only as if thou didſt not know me, but as if thou didſt hate me.

By nature we are all enemies to God, (Rom. 5. 10.) Whilſt we were yet enemies Chriſt died for us. Yea, we are his hearty enemies, or enemies with our hearts: we hate God naturally, as we ſhould love him ſpiritually, with all our might and all our mind. We were enemies in our minds, or, by our minds, by reaſon of wicked works, (Col. 1. 21.) Job was once ſuch an enemy, but he knew he had been reconciled unto God by the death of his Son in the promiſe, and ſo was become his friend. Job knew he was juſtified and pardoned, that God was his God in covenant, and therefore it was ſtrange to him to receive the uſage of an enemy. Is this thy kindneſs to thy friend, to number him among thine enemies?

ἥγησαι δέ μὲ ὑπεναντίον σοὶ. Putas me tibi contrarium. Sept. Ita me percutis ut ſoles quos inimicos judicaſti. Sic caro judicat in cruce. Merc.

For thine enemy.] An Enemy is firſt one whom we hate. Secondly, He is one who hath done or attempts to do us wrong: Thirdly, An Enemy is one whom we oppoſe, and ſeek to deſtroy. Job ſeems to have this thought, that God had all theſe thoughts of him. Thou holdeſt me for thine enemy, that is, as one whom thou hateſt, as one that had done thee wrong, as one whom thou oppoſeſt and wouldſt deſtroy. Thus the fleſh judges even in thoſe who are more then fleſh. The rule of love given by Chriſt is, Love your enemies: if thine enemy hunger, feed him, if he thirſt, give him drink: Job ſpeaks of himſelf as of an enemy in vulgar notion, or as of an enemy dealt with according to the laws of nature or of nations, not according to the law of Chriſt or of Goſpel-grace; yet God did indeed feed and comfort Job, though he outwardly dealt with him as an enemy, pulling the bread from his mouth, and ſtripping him of all his comforts.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, God acts towards ſome of his neareſt friends as if they were his greateſt enemies.

He may not only hide his face from them, but ſhew his wrath againſt them. God wounds his with love, and he wounds thoſe whom he loves. Whom I love I correct: there is wounding in correcting. So he acted toward Jacob, (Gen. 32.) he wreſtled with him. Is it the part of a friend when he meets his friend to wreſtle with him? When friends meet, they imbrace and ſalute one another, they rejoyce and confer one with another: God wreſtled with Jacob, and wreſtled with him, not in ſport, but very roughly, he put his thigh out of joynt, and made him halt for it. And as God dealt with perſonal Jacob, ſo he dealt with national Jacob, or the people of the Jews, who were his friends above all the nations of the earth, Jer. 30. 10. Therefore fear not thou O my ſervant Jacob, ſaith the Lord, neither be diſmayed O Iſrael, for I will ſave thee from afar, and thy ſeed from the land of thy captivity. This was a gracious promiſe that the Jews ſhould return from Babylon. But who ſent them into Babylon? or was it the part of a friend to ſend them into Babylon? It was God who ſent them into Babylon, and himſelf interprets his own action, (verſ. 14.) I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy, with the chaſtiſement of a cruel one, for the multitude of thine iniquity, becauſe thy ſins were increaſed. God who wreſtled with Jacob till he lamed him, ſmites the ſeed of Jacob till he wounded them, and that not with ſome ſlight wound, but with the wound of an enemy, that is, with ſuch wounds as an enemy is wounded with: God wounds a beloved people with the wounds of any enemy, even with ſuch a wound as an enemy gives, and with ſuch a wound as an enemy receives. God was not an enemy to Job, but God wounded him as if he were an enemy. The wounds of God are the wounds of a father, whoſe end is to correct, not to kill; he ſmites us as children, and counteth us children whileſt he is ſmiting us; yet he ſmites ſo hard and wounds ſo deep as if wrathful anger moved his arm to ſmite and wound. Great wounds are the wounds of an enemy; for, as a man is ſaid to hate father and mother, yea and his own life, when he regards not what they ſay to withhold him from the duty which he oweth to Chriſt, in this caſe (though he truly reverence father and mother) he is ſaid to hate them, becauſe we commonly hate thoſe whoſe counſels and deſires we reject, or they at leaſt think we do ſo; ſo, a great wound is called by the Prophet the wound of an enemy, becauſe none but enemies uſe to give ſuch wounds. There is no outward condition ſo ſad, but God ſometimes puts his own into it. As a wicked man can do any thing to God but love him, he prayes to God, he hears the Word of God, he gives an outward conformity to the Law of God, but he cannot love God: So God can do any thing againſt his own people, but hate them: He can impoveriſh them, weaken them, and wound them, he can correct and chaſten them, he can ſpeak curſtly to them, and deal courſely with them, but he cannot hate them.

Ab inimico illata dicitur illa plaga quia gravis eſt qualē inferre ſolet inimicos. Sanct.

Secondly Obſerve, A Godly man may doubt whether God love him or no.

Where God loves he loves to the end. All his friends are his ſons. A ſon is not taken for years, as a ſervant is: once a ſon and ever a ſon, and becauſe every friend of God is a ſon of God, therefore once a friend and ever a friend: yet, they who are for ever the friends of God, are not alwayes perſwaded of the love of God. The relation cannot be loſt, but the ſweetneſs of it may. As many wicked men are high flowen in confidences that they are the friends of God, and that God uſeth them as friends, they are rich, and they are full, they have favour and honour in the world, above thouſands of their brethren, upon theſe grounds they boaſt, ſee how God loveth us, and yet at that time God hates them and counts them as his enemies. The Jews had an high eſteem of Moſes, they truſted in Moſes, yet Chriſt ſaith unto them, (Joh. 5. 45.) I will not accuſe you to the Father, there is one will accuſe you, even Moſes in whom you truſt. So will ſome glory that God is their friend, and they his favourites: But while they think they truſt God, and God helps them, we may ſay, God whom they truſt will accuſe, and not only accuſe but deſtroy them as profeſſed enemies. Now, as ſome have falſe perſwaſions that God is their friend, ſo others are under falſe ſuſpicions that God is their enemy. An upright heart is not alwayes ſetled in this great truth, that God loves him, yea he may come almoſt to a ſettlement in this great errour, that God hates him. Nothing can ſeparate us from the benefits of the love of God (Rom. 8. 39.) but many things may ſeparate us from the feelings of it.

Thirdly Obſerve, To be an enemy to God is the worſt of all conditions.

God is the beſt friend and the worſt enemy; no love like his, no wrath like his: Thoſe mine enemies that would not have me reign over them, bring them forth and ſlay them here before me. His foes ſhall be his footſtool. And as to be a real enemy to God, is to be in the worſt condition, ſo to apprehend our ſelves enemies to God, or not in the favour of God, is a very ſad condition. I have opened this point further at the ſeventh Chapter, verſ. 11. Where Job complains in language near this, Why haſt thou ſet me as a mark againſt thee, ſo that I am a burden unto my ſelf? An enemy is the mark againſt whom we direct all our ſhot, and brandiſh all our weapons. We are all by nature enemies to God, bleſſed are they who through grace are his reconciled friends. Job having asked the queſtion, why God, hid his face and held him as an enemy, beſeeches him not to contend with him, becauſe he was (if he was) ſo weak and inconſiderable an enemy.

Verſ. 25. Wilt thou break a leaf driven to and fro? and wilt thou purſue the dry ſtubble?

There is a twofold conſideration of this verſe, Firſt, as it ſtands in its own bounds. Secondly, As it relates to the words following. I ſhall here open it in its own compaſs, and only explain the meaning of this manner of ſpeaking.

Foliū propulſum concutit, ſecundū vulgare dictum, qui afflicto afflictionem addit. Druſ.

Both parts of the verſe are proverbial, and are nearly allied in ſenſe to that proverbial ſpeech uſed by the Prophet (Iſa. 42. 3.) repeated by Chriſt (Mat. 13.20.) He will not break the bruiſed reed, nor quench the ſmoaking flax. To break the bruiſed reed, and to quench the ſmoaking flax, is as much as to break a leaf driven to and fro, and to purſue the dry ſtubble. So that both theſe ſimilitudes expreſs ſuch as are weak and unable to reſiſt, or the adding of affliction to thoſe who are already over-burdened with affliction. That for the general.

ערצים Potentes dicti qui potentia ſua aliis ſunt formidabiles. Merc.

Wilt thou break.] The word which we tranſlate, to break, ſignifies to break terribly, or to beat a thing to powder: to break with power, or to ſhew much power in breaking. Sanctifie the Lord in your hearts, and let him be your dread. He is to be dreaded who can break all power, and whoſe power none can break (Luk. 12.4.) Fear him which after he hath killed, hath power to caſt into hell; yea, I ſay unto you, fear him. The mighty man is expreſſed by this word, becauſe men of might are able to break oppoſers. But wilt thou mightily break that which hath no might? What's that?

A leaf driven to and fro?] Wilt thou put out thy power againſt him that is but weakneſs? A leaf upon the tree is a weak thing, but a leaf ſhaken off the tree, driven to and fro upon the ground, is contemptible: Wilt thou break a leaf? and,

Ferè eadē ſententia, niſi fortè ſtipula aliquid ignobilius & inutilius ſignifica'.

Wilt thou purſue the dry ſtubble?] To break a leaf, and to purſue the dry ſtubble, are one thing. And as there he ſpeaks not barely of a leaf, but of a leaf driven to and fro; ſo here he compares himſelf, not only to ſtubble, but to dry ſtubble. Stubble will conſume quickly, but dry ſtubble is at once flame and aſhes. Such a poor thing, ſuch a nothing am I; and wilt thou ſtrive with me? While he ſaith, wilt thou do this? he intimates that 'tis not Gods manner to do this.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, God uſeth not to afflict thoſe that are afflicted, or to act his ſtrength upon thoſe who have no ſtrength.

The day of the Lord (ſaith the Prophet, Iſa. 2.12.) ſhall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up, and he ſhall be brought low, upon the Cedars of Lebanon, and upon the Oaks of Baſhan, and upon all the mountains, and upon the hills that are lifted up. God doth not uſe to deal with the leaves of the Oak and Cedar, but with the body and roots of the Oak and Cedar: his quarrel is not with the ſtubble which grows upon the hills and mountains, but with the hills and mountains themſelves. He loves not to humble the humbled, but the proud; nor to bring down thoſe that are low, but the lofty. 'Tis true the meaneſt ſinner ſhall not eſcape his judgement, but he chiefly deſires to be doing with the mighty. Uſually the Lord gives ſtrength to the weak, he rarely oppoſeth the weak with his ſtrength. That's the report which the ſame Prophet makes (Iſa. 25.4.) Thou Lord haſt been a ſtrength to the poor, a ſtrength to the needy in their diſtreſs (thou doſt not put out thy ſtrength againſt the poor and needy in their diſtreſs) Thou art a refuge from the ſtorm, a ſhadow from the heat (therefore ſurely thou uſeſt not to ſtorm thoſe that are in the ſtorm, or kindle a fire upon thoſe that are in the heat). 'Tis the Lords manner to bind up the broken, not to break the broken; to heal the wounded, to comfort the mourners, to raiſe up them that are caſt down; he uſeth not to ſmite the wounded, to grieve the mourners, or to caſt them lower, who are already caſt down. 'Tis the way of God to weaken the ſtrong, and to ſtrengthen thoſe that are weak. Will he break a leaf? he will not.

Non eſt conveniens ut aliquis fortiſſimus oſtenderet ſuā potētiā in re debiliſſima. Aquin.

Secondly, Job ſpeaks it as a thing unbecoming, and below the great, the mighty God, to contend with the weak.

Hence Obſerve, It is no honour to the ſtrong to overcome the weak.

Is it an honour to the eagle to catch a fly, or for a lion to kill a mouſe? Thus David beſpeaks Saul (1 Sam.24.14.) After whom is the King of Iſrael come out? after a dead dog or after a flea? Am I match for thee? Go rather and lead thy army againſt the Philiſtims, engage with thy equals, if thou wouldeſt get honour. To ſee a ſtrong man fight with a child, or conquer a woman, is it any honour to the man? The Poet of old ſaid, Is it a glory to God to lay ſnares for man? God is ſo much above man, that he cannot honour himſelf in oppoſing man. The ſtrongeſt men, compared with God, are ſo weak, that when he would get himſelf honour in oppoſing them, he uſually gives them more ſtrength, that ſo his ſtrength may be ſomewhat glorified in overcoming them. God ſets the creature on high, that his highneſs may appear in pulling them down. Strength ſubduing the ſtrong, and wiſdom beſooling the wiſe, get a name in the world. Thus he ſaith of Pharaoh, Even for this ſame cauſe have I raiſed thee up, that I might ſhew my power in thee, and that my Name may be declared in all the world, (Rom. 9. 17.) Job gave us a particular of Gods powerful acts, (chap. 12.) and he ſhews all along that God acted his power upon men of greateſt power, He looſeth the bond of Kings, and girdeth their loins with a girdle; He leadeth Princes away ſpoiled, and overthroweth the mighty: he had not to do with underlings; Kings, Princes and Councellours, the combined ſtrength of whole kingdoms and nations, are no match for God, but theſe carry the faireſt appearance of a match, and therefore he delights to deal with them. He ſuffers Babylon to arrive at a great height, to be founded upon ſeven hills, to be counſelled by ſeven heads, to be defended by ten horns: Now when Babylon ſits upon ſeven hils, and becomes a beaſt having ſeven heads and ten horns, that is, abundance of wiſdom and policy, ſtore of power and outward force, even the civil power of ten kingdoms to back her, here is wiſdom and ſtrength for the wiſe and ſtrong God to glorifie himſelf upon; and therefore when Babylon falls, the Name of God is cried up, (Rev. 19.1.) After theſe things (that is, after the tragical downful of Babylon) I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, ſaying, Alleluia, ſalvation, and honour, and glory, and power unto the Lord our God. God needs not break a leaf or purſue the ſtubble to ſhew his power, for the talleſt and beſt rooted tree is before him, but as a leaf, and the hardeſt metals but as the dry ſtubble. The viſion in Daniel tells us (chap. 2. 35.) that, not only the clay, but the iron, the braſs, the ſilver and the gold (that is, the mightieſt Monarchs and Monarchies of the earth) were broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the ſummer threſhing-floors, and the wind carried them away. And when at any time God breaks thoſe who are (comparatively to other men) but as a leaf driven to and fro, or purſues thoſe who are but as dry ſtubble, he doth it not to get himſelf honour in the acting of his breaking and purſuing power, but of his preſerving and ſaving power; for he preſerves his whom he thus breaks, and ſaves his whom he thus purſues. Yea, the very reaſon why he breaks them is, that he may preſerve them, and he purſues them upon deſign to ſave them.

I may add further, that God breaks the leaf, not to ſhew his power, as to ſhew what power the leaf hath received from him: The ſtrength of a believer is never more ſeen then when he endures breaking. God puniſhes the wicked to ſhew his power, but he afflicts the godly to ſhew their power; That power I mean, which he hath given them, not only to do, but to ſuffer, whether for him or from him. It were indeed no honour for God to try his ſtrength upon us; but it is a great honour for us when God at once gives and tries our ſtrength. To ſee a leaf whole in the very breaking, and flouriſh in the withering, to ſee dry ſtubble endure the flame (and like the buſh in the book of Exodus) to burn and not to conſume, this gives witneſs to all the world how ſtrong weak man is by the power of God, Being ſtrengthened with all might according to his glorious power, unto all patience and long-ſuffering with joyfulneſs, Col. 1. 11. As God never indeed breaks the bruſed reed, nor quencheth the ſmoaking flax, ſo he would never aſſay to break the bruſed-reed, but to ſhew that it will not break; nor would he aſſay to quench the ſmoaking flax, but to ſhew that it will not quench or go out, till he ſend forth judgement unto victory: as if he had ſaid, the bruſed-reed ſhall not break till it be made ſtrong, and the ſmoaking flax ſhall not be quenched till it be a perfect flame, that is, it ſhall never be broken, it ſhall never be quenched. Judgement brought to victory, is holineſs, or the principle of grace within us, triumphing over all temptations without us, and all corruptions within us, by the power of Jeſus Chriſt.

Again, A leaf or dry ſtubble are the emblems, not only of that ſort of men who are accidentally weak, but of all men in regard of their natural weakneſs. Thus the ſtrongeſt men are but ſtubble: And ſome conceive Job ſpeaking here of himſelf, not only as he was a man in affliction, whom the tempeſt of Gods wrath had ſhaken as a leaf, and the heat of troubles had parched into dry ſtubble, but he ſpeaks of himſelf as a man; and what he ſpeaks of himſelf is applycable to mankind. Man at his beſt eſtate is altogether vanity, Pſal. 39. He is compared indeed ſometimes to a flower in the field, which hath ſap and moiſture, greenneſs and verdure in it, yet he is of ſo ſhort continuance, that even this green flower is but dry ſtubble: He hath a ſpring wherein he buddeth, and a ſummer wherein he is green; but his Autumn and his winter, wherein he fadeth, and his fruit falleth off, come ſo faſt upon him, that we may call his whole life a winter, and all his dayes the fall of the leaf. A godly man in reference to his ſpiritual eſtate, is like unto a tree, whoſe leaf ſhall not wither, (Pſal. 1. 3.) but in reference to his temporal eſtate, he is like a withering leaf: So the Prophet complains, Iſa. 64. 6. We all do fade as a leaf, and our iniquities like the wind have taken us away.

Aptiſſima ſimilitudine utitur Jobus ad hominis imbecilitatē notandā. Pin.

. Laſtly Note this, The Lord is moved to pity, when we mind him of our frailty.

The intendment of Job was not to charge God with ſeverity, but to move him to mercy. Our ſtrongeſt argument to prevail with God, is to ſhew him our weakneſs: To confeſs our natural weakneſs, moves him much; to confeſs our ſpiritual weakneſs, moves him much more. If a Phariſee come and tell him a long ſtory of his righteouſneſs, the Lord abhors it; but if a poor publican look upon himſelf as unworthy to look up to heaven, this ſtirs, not only compaſſion, but acceptation; He went home juſtified rather then the other. If you would prevail with God, hold forth your ſoars, your ſickneſſes, your diſeaſes, your diſtempers, your nothingneſs; ſay, you are but ſmoaking flax, and bruſed reeds, that you are but leaves driven to and fro, and as the dried ſtubble. There is yet a further ſenſe to be given of theſe words as they ſtand in connection with the following verſe, to which I paſs.

Dū ſe Jobus foliū & ſtipulā appellat, ſibi acceſſum præparat ad divinā miſericordiā quæ eo ſe facilius īnflectit, ubi majorē eſſe videt miſeriā. VERS. 26, 27, 28.

For thou writeſt bitter things againſt me, and makeſt me to poſſeſs the iniquities of my youth.

Thou putteſt my feet alſo in the ſtocks, and lookeſt narrowly unto all my paths; thou ſetteſt a print upon the heels of my feet.

And he, as a rotten thing conſumeth, as a garment that is moth-eaten.

At the four and twentieth verſe, Job was ſadly inquiſitive, Wherefore hideſt thou thy face? &c. here he makes as ſad a narrative. David (Pſal. 66. 16.) invites all that fear God, Come and I will declare what he hath done for my ſoul. Job ſeems to invite attention from all, while he declares what God had done againſt his ſoul, Thou writeſt bitter things againſt me, &c. The whole relation is carried on in a continued metaphor, alluding to a judiciary proceeding, as if himſelf were a guilty malefactor, and God the Supream Judge, Firſt, Aggravating his faults and pronouncing ſentence upon him, verſ. 26. Thou writeſt bitter things, &c. Secondly, Executing the ſentence, verſ. 27. Thou putteſt my feet alſo in the ſtocks. In the cloſe of all, Job declares the effect which that ſentence pronounced and executed, wrought upon him, (verſ. 28.) He, as a rotten thing conſumeth, as a garment that is moth-eaten.

Thou writeſt bitter things againſt me.

God hath a double book, and both in a figure. He hath a book of his reſolved decrees, and a book of his acted providences. This latter (the book of his providences) is but a tranſcript or a copy of the former. Thoſe huge Original volumes of love and bleſſings which God hath laid up in his heart for his own people, thoſe alſo of wrath and judgement which he hath laid up there againſt his enemies from all eternity, theſe volumes (I ſay) of love or wrath, are in writing out every day, by the hand and pen of providence, in the ordering of all thoſe affairs which concern both perſons and nations. Job is to be underſtood of this latter book, the book of providence, in which God writ bitter things againſt him, though thoſe bitter things compared and laid together, with the comfortable iſſues in the book of Gods decrees, were indeed, if not ſweet and pleaſant, yet very wholeſome and profitable.

Further, This writing of bitter things, is alſo conceived to be an alluſion to Judges, who command the ſentence againſt offenders to be written. That which is written, is not only recorded but eſtabliſhed. What I have written, I have written, ſaith Pilate; as if he had ſaid, I may ſometime recal a tranſient word, but what I have written, and is under my hand, ſhall ſtand. Any writing hath a firmneſs in it, eſpecially laws, which tell men what they muſt doe, and judgments which tell them what they muſt receive or ſuffer: So the people of God are ſaid to execute the judgment that is written upon the Kings and Princes who oppoſe the kingdom of Chriſt (Pſal. 149. 8, 9.) To bind their Kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron, to execute upon them the judgment written. That is, written in the decrees of God, and written by the decrees of men. Thus they ſpake in the book of Daniel. Now, O King, eſtabliſh the decree, and ſign the writing that it may not be changed, Dan. 6. 8. And when the Lord would ſhew Belſhazzar the certainty of his approaching ruine (Dan. 5. 24.) he preſented to him upon the plaiſter of the wall of his palace, the fingers of a mans hand, which wrote over againſt the candleſtick, and this writing was written, Mene, Mene, Tekel &c. A bitter thing was written againſt that Prince in the midſt of his delicious banquetings. Thou art weighed and found too light, Thy kingdom is divided, &c. And as in all civil nations, the ſentence of judgment is written; ſo among the Grecians, to write was as much as to accuſe and impeach: why not alſo among the Jews? Jobs wiſh ſeems to imply it (chap. 31. 35.) O that my adverſary had written a book againſt me, that is, a book of accuſation, which in the civil law is called a Libell, and the act of bringing in an accuſation, Libelling. It is the way of our law to bring in writings of inditement, or of charge againſt offenders, as well as to write the ſentence or judgment given upon it. Thus (Jer. 32. 30.) Write this man childleſs (ſaith the Lord) a man that ſhall not proſper in his days. As if he had ſaid, the decree is gone out againſt him, he ſhall not eſcape.

Thou writeſt bitter things.] The Laws of Draco are ſaid to be written in blood: and this Decree of God againſt Job was (as he conceived) written with gall and wormwood. Thou writeſt bitter things againſt me.

I find ſome variety of opinion about theſe bitter things.

And there are divers ingredients to make up theſe pills.

Firſt, Some expound theſe bitter things of ſin; Thou writeſt or ſetteſt down my ſins. Thou keepeſt an account of all my weakneſſes and tranſgreſſions. There are two who write our ſins. Firſt, God books our ſins; that is, he knows the ſins we commit as exactly, as if they were written down before him in a book. The formality of writing is infinitely below God, but the effect of writing, which is the evidencing of what is done or ſpoken, is alwayes before him. Secondly, Conſcience books our ſins; Job intends the writing of God, Thou writeſt bitter things, which ſome aggravate; as if Job did ſecretly tax God with ſeverity; and had ſaid thus: I know thou keepeſt a book, thou writeſt diaries and annals, the whole hiſtory of my life: but thou ſetteſt down little of my good works, or of what is praiſe-worthy; thou takeſt little notice of any thing that might render me acceptable to thy ſelf, or commend me to the acceptation of others: only my ſins and failings, which are a bitterneſs to me, thoſe thou ſetteſt down, and keepeſt a perfect account of. But Job was far from ſuch reflexions upon God, yet we may give a ſafe ſence of the whole, though we interpret theſe bitter things by ſin: There be two reaſons why ſins are called bitter things.

Notas, obſervas, evolvis ea quæ te amaricent & adverſum me exacerbant. Benè facta omittis, ſi quid unquā male egi, diligenter annotas. Mer.

Firſt, Becauſe they provoke God to anger, even to bitter anger, they imbitter the Spirit of God againſt us (Hoſ. 12. 14.) Ephraim provoked him to anger moſt bitterly.

Secondly, Becauſe ſin procures us evil and bitter things. Sin is bitter in the effects of it, as well as baſe in the nature of it.

Hence Obſerve, How ſweet ſoever ſin is in the acting, it will be bitterneſs in the end.

There is a bitterneſs in the beſt of ſin. One of theſe two things do alwayes follow ſin, Repentance or puniſhment. Repentance is the beſt we can expect when we have ſinned; and they who do not repent, ſhall find puniſhment whether they expect it or no. Now, there is a bitterneſs in Repentance; Repentance is no pleaſant portion. Though the Saints have a holy delight in repentance, yet (take it in it ſelf) repentance is no delightful work, and therefore it is often expreſt by breaking the heart, and afflicting the ſoul: The repentance of the Jews is ſo deſcribed, (Zech. 12.10.) They ſhall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they ſhall mourn for me as one that mourneth for his only ſon, and ſhall be in bitterneſs for him: In bitterneſs and in repentance at the ſame time. So that let the beſt come of ſin which can come, that we repent and are humbled for it, and repent ſavingly, yet bitter ſorrows, bitter tears, and bitter mournings are the iſſues of it. I believe Peter did not ſin very ſweetly, when he denied his Maſter, but I am ſure after he had done it, he wept bitterly, (Matth. 26. 75.) But if the ſin be not repented of, then comes the bitterneſs of puniſhment. Poſſibly a ſin we repent of, may receive bitter chaſtenings: God may correct us medicinally, for the ſins over which we have mourned penitently; but if the ſin be not repented of, then he puniſheth for the ſatisfaction of his own righteous juſtice, as well as for the correction of our unrighteouſneſs; and that's a bitter thing indeed. Thus ſin is a bitter thing, as the effects of it are bitter: It is a bitter thing alſo, as the root of it is bitter: So much that caution of Moſes to Iſrael imports (Deut. 29. 18) Leſt there ſhould be among you a root that beareth gall and wormwood. In the ſoil of mans heart there is ſuch a root: Our natures bear nothing but gall and wormood; ſinful actions ſprout and ſhoot forth from our ſinful corruptions. Yet this place of Moſes is to be underſtood, not ſo much of that general corruption which is in our hearts; for if ſo, then he needed not to ſay, Leſt there ſhould be among you a root which beareth gall and wormwood. For every man in the world, regenerate or unregenerate, hath ſuch a root in him: But he means it (as the Text hath it) of ſome apoſtatizing or backſliding perſon that ſhould ſolicite others to ſin; ſaying, Come, let us go, and ſerve other gods; he meant it of thoſe whoſe hearts were hardened and heightened in ſin, whoſe original corruption was drawn out not only to do wickedly themſelves, but to provoke their brethren unto wickedneſs; theſe he calleth emphatically a root which beareth gall and wormwood. For look what a mans own corruption or original ſin is to him, the ſame is another corrupt and ſinful perſon to him; namely, an inticer unto ſin. So the Author to the Hebrews expounds Moſes (Heb. 12. 15.) while he uſeth the ſame phraſe, or rather borrows it of Moſes, Leſt any root of bitterneſs ſpringing up, trouble you, and thereby many be defiled: That is, leſt ſome ſcandalous perſons not only trouble the peace of the whole Church, but alſo vitiate the purity of ſome particular members of the Church, by the contagion of their evil example: Now, though theſe Scriptures do rather call ſinful perſons, then the ſin in a perſon, a root of bitterneſs, yet thoſe perſons are therefore called ſo, becauſe of their ſin; and their ſin is a root, which as it defiles others, ſo it deſtroyes themſelves. When the Apoſtle Peter ſaw he was deceived in Simon Magus, he ſaith, Now I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterneſs, and in the bond of iniquity. In the gall of bitterneſs (Acts 8. 23.) that is, in a ſtate of ſin and impenitency, which will at laſt bring forth the bitterneſs of puniſhment. In that ſence alſo the Prophet threatens, Iſa. 24. 9. They ſhall not drink wine with a ſong, ſtrong drink ſhall be bitter to them that drink it; that is, it ſhall be turned into bitterneſs: We have a common ſaying amongſt us, Sweet meat hath ſowr ſauce: So here, ſtrong drink, which goes down merrily, ſhall be turned into bitterneſs, they ſhall not drink it with a ſong. Voluptuous men mingle their drink with ſinging; but theſe ſorrowful men ſhould mingle their drink with weeping; this would make it bitter to thoſe that drank it. Solomon deſcribing the harlot (Prov. 5. 4.) with the contentments which ſhe offers, concludes, Her end is bitter as wormwood; that is, the end which ſhe brings others to. That's her end in which ſhe cauſeth others to end, as well as that wherein ſhe ends her ſelf: Her end both wayes is the ſame, bitter as wormwood. The Prophet Jeremy ſhuts up his admonition (chap. 2. 19.) with, Know therefore and ſee, that it is an evil thing and bitter, that thou haſt forſaken the Lord thy God, &c. Sin is like that book (Rev. 10. 9.) Sweet in the mouth, but bitter in the belly. Or, as Abner ſaid to Joab, (2 Sam. 2. 26.) Shall the ſword devour for ever? Knoweſt thou not that it will be bitterneſs in the latter end? Yea, we may call every ſin a bitter thing, not only in reference to the future effects of it, but in reference to the preſent taſte of it. Sin is often bitter, not only in the belly, but in the mouth: It is bitterneſs not only in the end, but in the beginning, yea, the very ſweetneſs which is in ſin, promotes the bitterneſs of it: for as in nature, ſweet meats liberally fed upon, breed choler, and beget bitterneſs in the ſtomack; ſo theſe ſweet morſels of ſin, upon which the ſoul feeds, cauſe bitter taſtes, and ſowr humours, diſaffecting both ſoul and body, and troubling the whole man.

Non mirum eſt peccata quæ primum dulcia videntur amaritudines vocari, cum dulcia omnia in amarorem & bilem facile commutentur. Pined.

Secondly, Bitter things are the diſpleaſure of God, take it abſtractedly from the puniſhments which uſually are ſent out after it. Thou writeſt bitter things againſt me; that is, thou art angry with me. A man of a bitter ſpirit, and an angry man are the ſame. (Dan. 8.7.) In the viſion of the He-goat and the Ram, it is ſaid, That the He-goat came cloſe unto the Ram, and he was moved with choler againſt him; ſo we tranſlate it: It is the ſame word in the Chaldee, which we have here in the Hebrew: He was moved with bitterneſs; that is, he was very angry. So (Hab. 1. 6.) the Chaldeans are deſcribed to be a bitter and an haſty Nation; that is, an angry Nation. Anger is bitter both to thoſe who are angry, and to thoſe with whom we are angry. Again (Prov. 17. 11.) An evil man ſeeketh only rebellion; it is this word, He ſeeketh only bitterneſs, which we tranſlate rebellion; becauſe they who indeed rebel are full of wrath, rage, and bitterneſs. The word is uſed in the ſame ſence upon the ſurpriſe of David's Carriages by the Amalekites at Ziklag; 'tis ſaid, The ſoul of all the people was grieved, or bitter (1 Sam. 30. 6.) That grief was properly anger, as we may collect by the effect of it; for they ſpake of ſtoning him; ſtoning is an high act of angry revenge. The learned Phyſitians tell us, that bitter things are naturally very hot; anger and diſpleaſure are the heat of a mans ſpirit; Anger is the boyling of the blood about the heart, as Philoſophers teach. So that bitterneſs being cauſed by heat, we may well expreſs bitterneſs by anger, which hath ſo much from heat. Hence curſing (which is an act of anger) and bitterneſs are put together (Rom. 3. 14.) as alſo bitterneſs with wrath. Eph. 4. 31. Thus here, Thou writeſt bitter things, or bitterneſs againſt me, is, thou writeſt thy ſelf angry and diſpleaſed with him. And ſo the words [againſt me] me] have an accent, a weight in them: As if he had ſaid Thou ſeemeſt to vary the courſe of thy dealings towards me, both in reference to former times, and in reference to other perſons: thou waſt not wont to be thus bitter againſt me, and towards others, thou art ſweet and gentle; (Iſa. 54. 7.) In a little wrath I hid my face from thee, for a moment; but with everlaſting kindneſs I will have mercy on thee; that is, the experience which thy people have had of thee, and ſuch have been my experiences: but now thou ſeemeſt to run another courſe, Thou writeſt bitter things againſt me.

Taking bitterneſs for anger, I might Obſerve,

That God ſometimes appears very angry with thoſe whom he entirely loveth.

He ſeems to be all gall, when he is nothing but honey; to burn with wrath, when an everlaſting flame of love is kindled in his breaſt. I have lately inſiſted on this point, therefore I forbear.

Vox amaritudinis accipitur pro mortis ſententia lata. Bold.

Again Obſerve, The anger of God is very terrible, it is a bitter thing.

There is no dallying with Divine diſpleaſure.

Thirdly, Others reſtrain theſe bitter things to death. Thou writeſt bitter things againſt me; that is, a decree of death. Death is a bitter thing: Bitterneſs and death are joyned in Scripture, (2 Kings 4. 40.) The Prophets ſaid, Death was in the pot, when they had put wild gourds or bitter herbs into the pot: Wild gourds are very bitter, ſo bitter, that the Perſians called them, The gall of the earth; death was in the pot when ſuch bitter herbs were there: So Moſes ſpeaks (Deut. 32. 32.) Their grapes are grapes of gall, their cluſters are bitter, their wine is the poyſon of Dragons; that is, their grapes, their cluſters, their wine, all their deſigns and actions are all deadly; deadly to themſelves chiefly; but deadly alſo unto others (Prov. 31. 6.) Give wine unto thoſe that be of heavy hearts; ſo we read it, give wine unto thoſe that be of bitter hearts: ſo ſaith the Original: And it it is plain from the context, that he means it of perſons ready to dye, or to be put to a violent death. The borders of death are bitter, much more death it ſelf; yea, to ſome the borders or approaches of death are more bitter then death it ſelf. When Agag was ſpared by Saul, he doubted not of quarter at the hands of Samuel, and therefore comes out delicately (both in his gate and garb, 1 Sam. 15. 32.) and ſaith, Surely the bitterneſs of death is paſt; that is, the fear of death is paſt; ſurely if Saul a Souldier ſaved me alive in the heat of the battel, Samuel a Prophet will not kill me in cold blood. In this ſence Hezekiah complains (Iſa. 38. 17.) For peace I had (or on my peace came) great bitterneſs; that is, the fear of death, as the next words explain, while he ſaith, But thou haſt in love to my ſoul delivered it from the pit of corruption. Job had the ſentence of death in himſelf, and he thought God had written that ſentence too. Thou writeſt bitter things againſt me.

Analogia ſumi videtur ex lethalibus quibuſdam venenis, quæ cum ignea & calidiſſima ſunt, amariſſima etiam ſunt. Fel terræ. Pined.

But I conceive [bitter things] are here intended in a larger ſence, being put not only for the evil of death, but for all the evils of this life, for whatſoever renders the life of man bitter and grievous. For as bitterneſs among all taſtes is moſt unpleaſant to the palate: ſo alſo are afflictions both to the mind and outward man. The ſeventy agree in this ſence ſo fully, that in ſtead of bitter things they tranſlate, Thou writeſt evil things againſt me. It is frequent in Scripture to call any afflicting evil a bitter thing. (Ruth. 1. 20.) Naomi changeth her name to Marah, when ſhe was full of trouble: Call me not Naomi, that is beautiful; but call me Marah, that is bitter, for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me, I went out full, and the Lord hath brought me home again empty. She had loſt all, and was in great affliction, therefore ſhe takes a name ſutable to her eſtate, Call me Marah. We read of the waters of Marah, that is, bitterneſs (Exod. 16. 23.) All the waters of affliction may be called Marah, only the Lord ſhews his people a tree (as there he did Moſes) which being caſt into them makes them ſweet. Afflictions in themſelves are not joyous but grievous; Heb. 12. 11. How grievous or bitter afflictions are to the fleſh, hath been heretofore inſiſted on, therefore I paſs it here. Thou writeſt bitter things againſt me.

Amaritudo eſt quicquid poteſt vitam reddere moleſtam. Inter ſapores amaritudo eſt inimiciſſima naturæ & palato. Hinc amaritudo dicitur de re quacunque triſti, ſc. amara anima, amarus fletus, amaræ lachrymæ. Pined.

And makeſt me to poſſeſs the ſins of my youth.

The Hebrew word which we tranſlate to poſſeſs, ſignifies alſo to diſpoſſeſs or diſinherit, and by conſequent to conſume and deſtroy: ſo ſome tranſlate it: whereas we ſay, Thou makeſt me to poſſeſs the iniquities of my youth; they ſay, Thou diſpoſſeſſeſt me by the iniquities of my youth; or as the Vulgar, Thou doſt conſume me by the ſins of my youth; thou makeſt me poor and naked, thou ſtrippeſt me of all my comforts by reaſon of the tranſgreſſions of my youth. And ſo thou diſpoſſeſſeſt me, is the ſame with our rendring, Thou makeſt me to poſſeſs

Verbum ירש Ex iis eſt quæ contraria ſignificant; denotat enim hæreditate aliquem expellere, & per conſequens conſumere, perdere.

The ſins of my youth.] What are thoſe?

Firſt, Some expound theſe words [of my youth] not of Job's youth perſonally taken, but of his youth relationally taken; that is, of his Children. So, Thou makeſt me to poſſeſs the ſins of my youth, is, thou makeſt me to poſſeſs the ſins of my youths, or of my young ones, who ſinned againſt thee; I ſeem now to be puniſhed for them, and to inherit my Childrens tranſgreſſions. So did Eli, God reckoned with him for his childrens ſins: Eli poſſeſt the ſins of his youth, of his relational youth, of his ſons whom he did not reſtrain (as he had power to do) when they were not only vitious, but ſcandalous. Sin is an inheritance which aſcends as well as deſcends: As many children poſſeſs or are puniſhed for the ſins of their old age, that is, of their fathers (they imitating their fathers ſins) ſo many fathers poſſeſs or are puniſhed for the ſins of their youth, that is, of their children, they having not ſufficiently reproved their Childrens ſins: While Parents neglect their duty to their Children, they feel ſmart for their Children; and the Father of ſpirits layes thoſe rods upon their backs, which their fooliſh indulgence would not ſuffer them to lay upon the backs of the Children of their fleſh. But I paſs this interpretation, as over-reaching the ſcope of this Text, though it contains a general truth.

Quidam exiſtimavit ſuæ adoleſcentiæ peccata vocari ea, quæ à filiis ſuis adoleſcentibus perpetrata fuiſſent. Pined.

Secondly, Others interpret theſe words as a proof of Job's eminent and exemplary piety and holineſs, all the time of his elder and more confirmed years: As if God could find little or nothing to charge him with as ſinful, after he came to be a man, and was maſter of himſelf. 'Tis ſaid by the reporter of Cardinal Bellarmine in his life and death, that when the Prieſt (according to the Romiſh cuſtom) came to abſolve him, he could not remember any particular ſin to confeſs, till he went back in his thoughts as far as his youth. If it were ſo, I muſt ſay, that how great a Scholar ſoever this Cardinal was in books, he was but a mean Scholar in his own heart and life, in which the beſt Chriſtians ſee ſin enough to confeſs and bewail in their beſt times; yea, the better any one is, the more he ſees his own ſinfulneſs. The oldeſt and ſincereſt of Saints in this life, needs not go a day back, much leſs back to the beginning of his knowing dayes, his youth, to find matter of confeſſion, ſeeing he ſins every day, yea, every hour. Yet thus they report of Bellarmine to advance his piety, that, if he had not confeſt the ſins of his youth, he could not tell what to confeſs. In this ſence, the preſent expoſition makes Job ſpeak to God, Thou makeſt me to poſſeſs the ſins of my youth, as if all the other ſections and parts of his life had been unblameable. But this ſavours not the ſpirit of Job, who, as he was very confident of the ſincerity of his heart, ſo he was well acquainted with the ſinfulneſs of his nature, and ſaw himſelf not only a ſinner, but much ſin, all his life over.

Quidam ex hoc loco colligunt eximiam viri ſanctiſſimi ſanctitatem, qui in ætate jam confirmata & matura nihil ſibi conſcivit. Sanct.

Thirdly, Thou makeſt me to poſſeſs the ſins of my youth, is, Thou makeſt me poſſeſs or remember all my ſins: Job had the whole courſe and tenour of his life in view. Old age and youth are the two extreams of mans knowing time upon the earth: We can hardly remember what we were, or what we did before the days of our youth; though before that we are evil, and do evil. Man is born in ſin; and he ſins almoſt as ſoon as he is born; but thoſe ſins fall not under our own obſervation. Auſtin ſaid of himſelf, I know not the ſins I committed in my infancy, yet I know that then I ſinned; which he proves, becauſe he had obſerved anger and envy in ſucking Children. Job goes not back to the ſins of his infancy and childhood, which others might remember, but he goes as far as himſelf could remember, even to the ſins of his youth: Theſe he poſſeſſed, or the thought of theſe poſſeſſed him. That poſſeſſes a man which his mind runs much upon. God is therefore ſaid to make him poſſeſs the ſins of his youth, becauſe the dealings of God with him cauſed him to recollect and read over all his ſins, eſpecially the ſins of youth.

Pœna eſt quaſi culpæ prognata & filia, atque adeo ipſe homo grandævus & ſenex ſuccedit ſibiipſi puero & adoleſcenti. Pined.

Fourthly, To poſſeſs the ſins of youth, is, To feel ſorrow or pain for the ſins of our youth. We may be ſaid to poſſeſs the ſins of our youth two wayes: Firſt, When we feel the ſmart of them: Secondly, When we are affected with the filthineſs of them in our riper years. Some old men poſſeſs the ſins of their youth another way, namely, by delight: For as moſt delight in the act of ſin, and not a few are delighted in the hopes of ſin, a ſin to be committed pleaſes them with a promiſe of future pleaſure, To morrow ſhall be as this day (ſaid thoſe Epicures, Iſa. 5. 6.) and much more abundant. They taſted the ſweet of ſin before they came at it. So there are ſome who take delight in the ſins that are paſt: They that are old in ſin can talk merrily of, and contemplate ſweetly upon the ſins and vanities of their youth; and in this they do not only poſſeſs the ſins of their youth, but react the ſins of their youth: For ſo often as a man remembers a ſin which he hath committed with content, he commits it again. Holy Job did not poſſeſs the ſins of his youth thus; he reflected upon them to mourn over them, and repent afreſh for them, not to make merry with them, he chewed them over again in his thoughts, not as ſweet morſels, but as gall and wormwood. Thus he was made to poſſeſs the ſins of his youth.

Fifthly, The ſins of youth are poſſeſſed, When the guilt of them flies in our faces, and our fears that they are not pardoned return upon our ſpirits: In this ſence alſo (poſſibly) God made Job poſſeſs the ſins of his youth. He was as much (or more) exerciſed with inward terrour, as with outward trouble; and when God hid his face from him, he ſaw his ſins with open face.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Youth is eaſily overtaken with ſin.

Young men are leaſt able to foreſee the iſſues, to reſiſt the temptations or keep out of the wayes of ſin. The Prophet deſcribes the childehood of Chriſt, our Emanuel, under the notion of childehood in general, which knows not how to refuſe the evil and chuſe the good (Iſa. 7. 15.) Paul ſaith of himſelf (1 Cor. 13. 11.) When I was a childe, I ſpake as a childe, I underſtood as a childe, I thought as a childe: all in him, or done by him, was childiſh, when he was a child. 'Tis but a little better, (ordinarily) and ſometimes it is much worſe, in the next ſtep of mans life, which is youth. He that is a youth, thinks as a youth, ſpeaks as a youth, acts as a youth; all in him and done by him is youthful, that is, imperfect and immature, ſubject to miſcarriages and miſtakes. David puts and anſwers the queſtion, (Pſal. 119. 9.) Wherewithal ſhall a young man cleanſe his way? Young men are apt to go foul wayes, or to defile their wayes, and therefore need inſtruction how to cleanſe them. And, David prayes in ſpecial that God would pardon the errours which he found in that paragraph of his life, Pſal. 25. 7. Remember not the ſins of my youth. And beſides the obnoxiouſneſs of youth to ſin in general, Youth hath its proper ſins. The Apoſtle writing to Timothy, an holy man, yet a young man, exhorts him (2 Tim. 2. 22.) Fly youthful luſts, look to that; there are luſts which hang upon youth, & dog that ſeaſon of life more then any other, there are certain ſins to which we are peculiarly endangered in each diviſion of our lives: As every calling, every place, every relation hath its ſpecial ſins and temptations, ſo hath every age of life. Old men are paſſionate and covetous, men of middle age are revengeful and malicious, young men are precipitate and voluptuous. The Hebrews call a young man Nagnar, which ſprings from a root ſignifying to ſhake off or to be toſſed to and fro, implying that ſuch are unconſtant to their own reſolutions, and apt to ſhake off the graveſt counſels. Hence the Apoſtle cautions not only Timothy but Titus, Let no man deſpiſe thy youth: as if he had ſaid, thy youth lies open to contempt, becauſe it lies ſo open to ſin: keep to the rule, and thou wilt keep up thy reputation. Be thou watchful over thy ſelf, leſt thou be deſpiſed: For, I conceive, the charge is not ſo much given unto others (though that be a good fence) as unto Timothy himſelf. Paul puts it cloſe upon him, Let no man deſpiſe thy youth, do thou ſo behave thy ſelf, that none may have ſo much as a colour or pretence to deſpiſe thee. How he might do ſo, his next adviſe directs: Be thou an example of the believers, in word, in converſation, in charity, in ſpirit, in faith, in purity (1 Tim. 4. 12.) Make it appear that thy wiſdom and underſtanding have outſtript thy years; make it appear that all gravity doth not wait upon the hoary head; make it appear that ſome, even in the bud and bloſſome of nature, are ripe in grace and mature in holineſs; write after this copy, and all will either imitate thee or not condemn thee: Thus aged Paul leſſons and cautions his young ſcholar Timothy, as knowing the diſadvantages of youth, and the temptations it ſubjects us to.

Furioſus juvenibus animi habitus. Plat. l. 2 de Leg.

Hence Obſerve, Secondly. That ſins of youth may prove the ſufferings of old age.

As young men who are very active and venturous receive bodily bruſes and blows in the heat of youth, which they feel and groan under when they are old; ſo likewiſe the ſins which young men venture upon and make light of, may preſs their ſouls and lie heavy upon their ſpirits in old age. Job ſpeaks of ſome wicked old men (chap. 20. 11.) whoſe bones are full of the ſins of their youth, which ſhall lie down with them in the duſt. The ſins of ſome old men are young; while their bodies grow weak, their luſts grow ſtrong: ſuch ſhall feel more ſmart of them in old age, then ever they found pleaſure or delight in them in youth: Their bones ſhall be full of them, though their bellies are never full of them. It is a ſad meeting when young ſins and old bones meet together: And it is poſſible that even they who have truly repented of the ſins of youth, may yet feel the grief of them in old age: For though ſuch ſhall not be puniſhed for the ſins of youth, yet they are often chaſtened for them, and though God will not remember their ſins againſt them, yet he may give them ſuch mindings of them as will make their hearts to ake, and themſelves cry out, What fruit have we of thoſe youthful vanities, whereof we are now aſhamed, and wherewith we are now pained? If our youth be not given as firſt-fruits unto God, he uſually gives us (yet in mercy to his) bitter after-fruits. Give God the poſſeſſion, yea the dominion of thy youth, leaſt thou ſay (as Job) he makes me poſſeſs the ſins of my youth.

Seek firſt the kingdom of God, ſeek it firſt in intention in the firſt place, and with the beſt of thy deſires and endeavours: Seek it alſo firſt in time, let him have the flower of thy youthful ſervices, leaſt thou taſte the fruit of youthful ſins.

Hence Obſerve, Thirdly. That a godly man looks often upon preſent ſufferings as the chaſtenings of his former ſin.

God did not afflict Job for his former ſins, for he told ſatan (chap. 2.) Thou moveſt me againſt him without cauſe, that is, without any ſuch cauſe as thou haſt pretended and ſuggeſted, I finde no affected unrighteouſneſs in him: yet Job ſaith to God, Thou makeſt me to poſſeſs the ſins of my youth. He look't back upon his life and ſaw ſuch failings and corruptions as might call for the rod of this ſharp and ſevere correction. Whatſoever Gods aim is in afflicting, it well becomes the beſt of Saints to have an eye upon their ſins when God hath them under his afflictions. They who are freeſt from the fear of Gods revenging hand for ſin, are readieſt to remember their ſin, when they feel his correcting hand.

Hence Obſerve, Fourthly. Sins formerly repented of and pardoned, may be preſented to the ſoul as unpardoned.

Some conceive Job under that temptation, while he was under this affliction. The tenour of the covenant of grace is, I will forgive their iniquities and remember their ſins no more: and when their ſins come to be ſearched for, they ſhall not be found, becauſe I have pardoned them. God never revoked any of his gracious pardons, nor doth he ever recharge pardoned ſins: yet a godly man may remember his old ſins with new fears that they are not pardoned. As it is one of ſatans devices to fill them with aſſurance of pardon, who are under guilt: ſo to fill thoſe with doubtings that they are not pardoned, who are acquitted from guilt: while it is an eaſie thing with a ſoul to ſin, it is alſo very eaſie for that ſoul to believe the pardon of ſin: But when once Chriſt helps us to diſpoſſeſs our ſouls of the power of ſin; how doth Satan labour to poſſeſs our ſouls with the guilt of it? yea, God himſelf may for a time or for our tryal make us poſſeſs the guilt of it; and leave us to the queſtionings of paſſed pardon. In ſuch a caſe the ſins which have been pardoned are pardoned again, not that the firſt pardon is recalled, but cleared, and faith ſtrengthned that we are pardoned. For though there are no degrees in pardoning grace it ſelf (in ſanctifying grace there are, that doth or ſhould grow every day in us, and we encreaſe in it with the encreaſe of God) yet pardoning grace may have an encreaſe as to the perſon pardoned. All the ſins of a believers youth are pardoned, yet he often wants evidence of their pardon: The grace of God knows no decay, but there are decays in our ſpirits and upon our faith about it, and thoſe ſins whoſe commanding ſtrength is broken, may ſtand up in much condemning ſtrength. Thou makeſt me to poſſeſs the ſins of my youth.

Laſtly Obſerve, That in times of affliction believers are apt to have miſgiving thoughts about the pardon of ſin.

Affliction carries with it a renovation of guilt, though it be no argument of guilt; As puniſhment is the daughter of guilt, ſo affliction is ſomewhat akin to puniſhment. Now becauſe he who is but afflicted often thinks himſelf puniſhed, and he that is puniſhed ought to acknowledge himſelf guilty, hence it comes to paſs that he who is but afflicted thinks himſelf under guilt, he is full of fears that his ſins ſtand ſtill upon his own ſcore, and that God is reckoning with him upon that account. When the womans ſon was dead, ſhe ſaid to the Prophet, Art thou come unto me to call my ſins to remembrance, and to ſlay my ſon, (1 Kings 17. 18.) Her ſorrows brought her ſins to remembrance, and then ſhe feared that God contended with her for her ſins. God maketh us to poſſeſs the ſins of our youth, when in old age (as it follows) he puts our feet in the ſtocks.

Verſ. 27. For thou puttest my feet alſo in the ſtocks, and lookeſt narrowly into all my paths, and ſetteſt a print upon the heels of my feet.

I ſhall add only a word of this and of the next verſe, becauſe both are but an aggravation of Jobs ſufferings, about which he hath ſpoken ſo much before.

Me coërces iſtis malis quaſi ſontē compedibus vinctū. Jun.

For thou putteſt my feet.] As if he had ſaid, Thou proceedeſt with all ſeverity againſt me as againſt a grand malefactor, thou layeſt me faſt by the heels. It is uſual to put offenders into priſon or into the ſtocks. Some tranſlate this word by ſhackles, ſome by ſtocks, ſome by priſon: Job amplifies his miſery under all theſe notions. His afflictions were to him as a priſon, as ſtocks, as ſhackles. The Church expreſſeth her ſufferings in this metaphorical language, He hath builded againſt me, and compaſſed me with gall and travel: he hath ſet me in dark places, as they that be dead of old: he hath hedged me about that I cannot get out, he hath made my chain heavy. Jeruſalem was as a priſoner loaded with irons, bound in chains, and encloſed round about with thick and mighty walls. Such was Jobs condition, Thou putteſt my feet in the ſtocks,

Lam. 3. 5, 6, 7.

Amplificatio eſt arctiſſimæ cuſtodiæ. Pined. Singulis his malis circūcludens me, tanquā armatis cuſtodibus. Jun.

And lookeſt narrowly into all my paths.] This good man was not only a priſoner but a cloſe priſoner; His paths were looked narrowly unto, his troubles like armed keepers went with him whitherſoever he went: if at any time he was let out of the ſtocks, a watch was ſet upon him leſt he ſhould eſcape, or rather it was with him as with thoſe priſoners who are narrowly watcht while they are in cloſeſt priſons. When Peter was in priſon, the keepers watched at the door, and more then that, he ſlept between two ſouldiers bound with two chains, (Act. 12. 6.) Thus narrowly was Peter looked unto; And thus in alluſion was Job looked unto: Am I a ſea or a whale, that thou ſetteſt a watch over me? was Jobs queſtion in the ſeventh chapter; His aſſertion here, Thou lookeſt narrowly into all my paths, ſeems to carry the ſame intendment; thither I refer the Reader for the further clearing of this.

ἐφύλαξας δὲ μου πάντα τὰ ἔργα. Sept.

Yet others give the meaning thus, Thou obſerveſt all my actions, and then paths are taken metaphorically: ſo the ſeventy tranſlate, Thou takeſt notice of all my works: Which reading bears a proportion to the proceedings of a Magiſtrate, who having attached an offendour, and laid him faſt, looks and enquires into his life, and examines his particular offence, that ſo a charge or an inditement may be drawn up and brought in againſt him at his tryal. The next clauſe runs in the ſame ſtrain.

And ſetteſt a print upon the heels of my feet.] Maſter Broughton tranſlates from the letter of the Original, And thou leaveſt thy prints upon the roots of my feet. The roots of the feet are, ſay ſome, the ſoles, ſay others, the ſteps of the feet. And whereas we tranſlate the heel, which is the hinder part of the foot, the word is tranſlated alſo by the forepart of the foot, which is divided into toes, as the root of a tree divides it ſelf; But though there be ſome variety about the particular ſignification of the word, yet the general ſence is, That Job proſecutes the allegory of a priſoner.

Radices pedū ſunt vel veſtigia vel plantæ. Coc. Radices pedum vocat ipſos primores vel extremos pedes, qui in digitos quaſi radicis partes dividūtur. Jun. Simpliſſimū puto ſignū tibi facis, i.e. annotas omnia veſtigia mea. Merc. Ita me quacunq; incedā ſollicite obſervas, ut ubicunq; pedē poſui, tu quoq; veſtigium figas. Bez. Vel ut ſenſus ſit, ſe nervo & cippo adeo conſtringi & premi, ut vibices appareant. Lav. Veſtigia iræ tuæ uſq; ad extremos pedis articulos pertingunt, ut quum pes ſontis totus uritur gravitate compedū. Jun.

Firſt thus, Thou ſetteſt a print upon the heels of my feet, that is, Thou followeſt me as it were at the heels; Thou doſt not only watch my paths, but even telleſt my ſteps, if I do but ſet down my feet, thou printeſt upon the very ſame place, and ſo it falls in with the ſence of the former clauſe.

Or Secondly, He in theſe words complaineth of his ſoreneſs by reaſon of this impriſonment. Thou ſetteſt a print upon the heels of my feet, the ſhackles and the chains which are upon me, leave their marks behind them in my fleſh, my feet, the very ſoles and toes of my feet ſwell with my heavy fetters. Jobs condition was like that of the afflicted Jews in the Prophet (Iſa. 1. 5.) The whole head was ſick, and the whole heart was faint, from the ſole of the foot even unto the head, there was no ſoundneſs in him, but wounds and bruiſes. There was a wound in the very ſoles of his feet, that is, he was all over wounded, or afflicted quite through. As Paul ſaid I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jeſus, ſo might Job, Paul had marks or prints of his ſuffering for God, Job of his ſufferings under the hand of God.

I will not draw out any particular obſervations from theſe words, ſeeing they all tend (which hath been more then once obſerved already) to ſhew, Firſt, That God caſts his outward diſpenſation towards his choiceſt ſervants into forms of greateſt rigour and ſeverity.

Secondly, That great afflictions often draw out great complaints from the choiceſt ſervants of God.

Thirdly, That the moſt patient man may ſometimes let fall words of impatience under the hand of God.

Where faith is higheſt it is not alwayes at the ſame height, and where patience hath a perfect work, ſome of its works may be full of imperfection. But I paſs theſe, and ſhall only note two things.

Firſt, The ſeveral ſtairs or ſteps by which Jobs ſpirit aſcended to the higheſt ſence of his afflictions. Here is a ſevenfold gradation, in this and the precedent verſes. Firſt, God hid his face. Secondly, He counted him as his enemy. Thirdly, He broke him like a leaf. Fourthly, He writ bitter things againſt him. Fifthly, He made him poſſeſs the ſins of his youth. Sixthly, He puts him into priſon. Seventhly, He watched him, leſt he ſhould eſcape, and followed him ſtep by ſtep. What could be added to theſe ſorrows? might not Job ſay with the Church in the Lamentations, Was there ever ſorrow like unto my ſorrow? They that are greateſt in holineſs, may be greateſt in ſufferings.

Secondly Note, Job ſtill keeps his eye and heart upon God in all his afflictions.

THOU hideſt thy face. THOU counteſt me thine enemy. THOU purſueſt me. THOU writeſt bitter things againſt me. THOU makeſt me poſſeſs the ſins of my youth. THOU putteſt me in the ſtocks, THOU ſetteſt a print upon the heels of my feet. He ſees God in all, and fears not to make him the Author of all theſe evils: We honour God as much in acknowledging him to be the fountain of all the evils we ſuffer, as of the good things we enjoy.

The twenty eigth verſe is joyned by ſome to the next chapter, as if that whole chapter were but an explication of this verſe, or at leaſt this verſe the preface to that whole chapter.

Verſe 28. And he as a rotten thing conſumeth, as a garment that is moth-eaten.

And he.] Who is that? He changeth the perſon from the firſt to the third; he doth not ſay, I, but He, though he meaneth himſelf; ſuch ſpeaking is frequent in Scripture, and hath been noted before in this Book.

He as a rotten thing, &c.] As if he had ſaid, I am not able to continue under theſe afflictions, or bear theſe preſſures any longer. I faint, I fail, I decay, I dye. He asked the queſtion what he was (Chap. 6. 12.) Is my ſtrength the ſtrength of ſtone? or is my fleſh braſs? Here he tells us what he and his ſtrength, what he and his fleſh are, Even as a rotten thing, as a garment that is moth-eaten.

We have here a double ſimilitude, both implying his inſufficiency to ſtand in the hands of God. Firſt, Of a rotten thing. Secondly, Of a garment eaten with moths. I conſume; and how? As a rotten thing. The Hebrew is concrete, I conſume as rottenneſs; rottenneſs it ſelf is conſuming; and rottenneſs conſumeth any thing it toucheth. Time will conſume that which is ſound; but that which is already rotten, how quickly doth it conſume? How can that hold out againſt decay, which is a decay? I conſume as a rotten thing.

And as a garment that is moth-eaten.] David compares man under affliction to a moth, as here Job to a moth-eaten garment. Pſal. 39. 11. When thou with rebukes doſt chaſten man for iniquity, thou makeſt his beauty to conſume away like a moth. Moths have ſo little ſubſtance in them, that they have ſcarce any ſubſiſtence. The leaſt touch cruſheth and moulders them into nothing. A Moth is as weak as weakneſs it ſelf; yet it eats out the ſtrength of the ſtrongeſt garment. A moth-eaten garment is ſcarce a garment: The beauty of it is defaced, and the uſefulneſs of it is departed. Mans beſt garments of honour and riches, are little better then a moth-eaten garment: (James 5. 1, 2.) Go to now ye rich men, weep and howl for the miſeries that ſhall come upon you; your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Where the Apoſtle is conceived to invite rich men (from which they think themſelves at greateſt diſtance) to mourn over their miſeries. Firſt, Becauſe they treaſure up riches, of which they make no uſe, but let them corrupt: and becauſe they provide Wardrobes of apparel, which they wear not, but the Moths eat them up. Secondly, Becauſe they lay out their ſtrength and time in gathering a periſhing portion, riches which are corruptible, and garments which are meat for Moths. As if he had ſaid, how vain are you who labour for that which is more then corruptible? Your riches are actually corrupted, and your garments, how careful ſoever you are to perfume and preſerve them, are more then ſubject to Moths; the Moth actually eats them. Now (I ſay) if mans beſt garments are little better then a moth-eaten garment, what is a moth-eaten garment? And then what is that man (ſuch a one Job accounted himſelf) who conſumeth as a garment that is moth-eaten? Surely the ſpirit of this holy man could not go lower for a compariſon, then the effects of Moths and rottenneſs.

By which ſelf-abaſement he ſeems to argue with God for compaſſion and ſparing mercies: As if he had ſaid, Could I bear theſe ſorrows any longer, I would not ſo earneſtly beg an end of them: But alas! if they do not end ſpeedily, I muſt: My ſtrength is gone, and I am but rottenneſs: Thou who teareſt me as a Lyon, by open and violent afflictions, doſt alſo eat me as a moth by ſecret and ſilent conſumptions.

I might here alſo draw out divers Obſervations about the frailty of man: As,

Firſt, That man is but weakneſs and rottenneſs.

Secondly, That man cannot hold out againſt the hand of God.

Thirdly, That even ſome of Gods chaſtenings are deſtroyings and conſumings to all the ſtrength and luſtre of the outward.

Fourthly, That a Believer in affliction is apt to miſ-judge the iſſues of his own condition.

But becauſe theſe points have occurred upon other Texts of like ſence with this, therefore I only hint them, and ſhall ſhut up this whole Chapter, with this brief admonition from the concluſion of it. How ſhould we labour to pleaſe God in walking uprightly with him, before whom we cannot ſtand when he is angry with us? How ſhould we labour to live in his favour, by whoſe diſpleaſure we are ſuddenly conſumed? And if the chaſtenings of God conſume thoſe whom he loves, how will his judgments conſume thoſe whom he hates? When thou, Lord, with rebukes doſt chaſten man for iniquity, thou makeſt his beauty to conſume, Pſal. 39. 11. How then will his beauty conſume, when God with ſevereſt revenges chaſtens man for iniquity? Our God is a conſuming fire, he can conſume us as a rotten thing, and as a garment that is moth-eaten; therefore let us (ask and) have grace, that we may ſerve him acceptably with reverence and godly fear.

CHAP. XIV. Verſ. 1, 2.

Man that is born of a woman, is of few dayes, and full of trouble.

He cometh forth as a flower and is cut down: He fleeth alſo as a ſhadow, and continueth not.

IN the laſt verſe of the former Chapter (which ſome connect with this) Job ſhewed how poor and pitiful, how weak and miſerable a thing man is under the afflicting hand of God, and he did it under the ſhadow of a two-fold ſimilitude. Firſt, Of a rotten thing. Secondly, Of a garment which is moth-eaten.

He proſecutes the ſame Argument in the firſt and ſecond verſes of this Chapter; From all, drawing down this expoſtulatory concluſion, verſ. 3. And doſt thou open thine eyes upon ſuch an one? &c.

Verſe 1. Man that is born of a woman, is of few dayes, and full of trouble.

Job doth not ſay, I who am born of a woman, am of few dayes; but Man that is born, &c. He ſpeaks in the third perſon, rather then in the firſt, for two reaſons, as I conceive.

Firſt, To ſhew that thoſe miſeries which were fallen upon him might fall upon others; No temptation had taken hold of him, but ſuch as was common to man.

Secondly, He ſpeaks thus, the more to abaſe himſelf. The third perſon put for the firſt implyes contempt. He thinks himſelf ſcarce worth the naming, who doth not ſpeak of himſelf in his own name. Man that is born of a woman, &c.

Tertiæ perſonæ pro prima uſurpatio contemptum denotat. Bold.

Man is here deſcribed two wayes: Firſt, In his original or procreating cauſe, Woman. Secondly, In his ſtate or condition, and that from a double adjunct: Firſt, Of time, He is of few dayes: Secondly, Of affliction, Full of troubles: Both further illuſtrated by two ſimilitudes: Firſt, Of a flower: Secondly, Of a ſhadow: Of all which this is the ſum or the reſult, He continueth not, verſ. 2.

Man that is born of a woman.] That is, Every man, or (as we ſay) every mothers child. Mr. Broughton adds an Epithete borrowed from the ſignification of the Hebrew word Adam, Earthly man born of a woman. The firſt woman was (in a ſence) born of a man; but ſince all men are born of a woman: And as the firſt man received his proper name Adam (which is now become an Appellative or common to all men) from the matter out of which he was formed, earth, or red earth, Gen. 2. 7. So the firſt woman received her proper name (which is now become an Appellative or common to all women) from the matter out of which ſhe was formed, the fleſh and bone of man, Gen. 2. 23. And Adam ſaid, this is now bone of my bone, and fleſh of my fleſh, ſhe ſhall be called woman, becauſe ſhe was taken out of man. And as in our language the woman hath but a ſyllable more in her name then the man, ſo alſo in the Hebrew, there it is, Iſh, Iſhah, with us, Man, Woman. The Rabbins have an obſervation, that in the words Iſh and Iſhah, the letters of the Name of God Jah are contained, which is (ſay they) an Argument or token of the gracious preſence of God with Husband and Wife, while they walk in that relation according to the will of God; but if they depart from that, God departs from them, and taking the letters of his own Name from their names, there remains nothing but fire (ſo the words denuded of Gods Name ſignifie) between them both.

Mulier dicitur virago quia de viro ſumpta.

In איש & אשה Continetur nomen Dei. יה Quod eſt ſymbolum gratioſæ Dei præſentiæ ſi maritus & uxor juxta Dei præcepta vivant, ſi ab eis decedant & Deum recedere ab ipſis, ut utriuſque nomen excluſo יה maneat אש ignis Buxt.

But to the Text. Man is here ſpoken of as born of a woman, rather then as begotten by man, and that (poſſibly) for theſe three Reaſons.

Firſt, Becauſe the formation and production of man is from the woman, in her the body of man is framed by the mighty power of God, and all the pieces of it put together; and in her man receives his life and quickening. Hence it was that Adam, who at firſt called his Wife Woman, becauſe ſhe was taken out of man, calls her afterwards Eve, becauſe ſhe was the mother of all living, (Gen. 3.20.) And upon this ground ſome Nations have made a Law, that all deſcents ſhou'd be reckoned by the Mother, becauſe the Mother gives the greateſt contribution towards the birth and bringing forth of man.

Secondly, He ſpeaks of man as born of a woman, thereby leading us to the original of mans ſin. The woman was Satans inſtrument to enſnare the man: Sin began at the woman, though it was finiſhed by the man. Adam charged his ſin upon the woman ſinfully, to excuſe his ſin, The woman whom thou gaveſt to be with me, ſhe gave me of the tree, and I did eat, Gen. 3. 12. Paul charged the ſin of man upon the woman holily, to humble woman for that ſin, 1 Tim. 2. 14. Adam was not deceived (that is, he was not firſt deceived) but the woman being deceived, was in the tranſgreſſion. While we remember, that we were born of a woman, by whom ſin came into the world, we cannot but remember and be convinced, that we came ſinners into the world.

Apud Lycios ſi quis percontetur, qua familia ortus? &c. A matribus genus ſuum repetere ſolebant, quod plurima ſubſtantia qua conſtamus materna ſit. Plut. de Clar. Mulier. cap. 9.

Thirdly, He ſpeaks of man born of a woman, to mind man of his weakneſs. Sin and weakneſs enter'd man at the ſame time; and the woman is not only a weak veſſel, becauſe of her tranſgreſſion; but the weaker veſſel, becauſe of her conſtitution (1 Pet. 3. 7.) Man being born of a woman, the weaker veſſel, muſt needs be a veſſel of weakneſs. The Apoſtle ſaith, God ſent forth his Son made of a woman (Gal. 4. 4.) Which imports, not only the myſtery of Chriſts birth, that he mas made of a woman (a pure Virgin) without the help of man; but alſo, the frailty of Chriſt in his birth, that he was born, into the world paſſible, mortal, and infirm, becauſe born of a woman. Hence when men act weakly, or below men, they are in Scripture called, or compared to women (Jer. 51. 30.) The mighty men of Babylon have forborn to fight, they became as women; that is, weak and puſillanimous. So the Prophet Iſaiah deſcribes the degenerate Governours of Judah (Chap. 3. 12.) As for my people (ſaith the Lord) women rule over them; that is, men rule over them, whoſe ſpirits are effeminate, and whoſe courage riſes no higher then that of women. Some of the ſuperſtitious Heathen, to advance the ſtrength and abilities of their Goddeſs Wiſdom, fancied, that ſhe was born of a Father, without a Mother, And here I conceive the principal intendment of Job, in leaving out the mention of man, and aſcribing the whole production of man to the woman, was to imply, or rather to prove how weak and frail a piece of fleſh man is by nature.

Hanc de patre ferunt ſine matris fœdere natam. Martianus in Palla. Hym.

As that which is impure cannot ſend out that which is clean; ſo neither can that which is weak produce that which is ſtrong. As man breeds that in him which will conſume him; ſo he is bred of that which ſhews he muſt conſume. If it be asked how a garment frets when it is not worn, or how timber waſts when it is not uſed? We anſwer, the garment breeds a moth which frets it; and the timber a worm which eats it out. If it be alſo asked, How man decayes when no outward violence appears againſt him? We may anſwer, he breeds his own decay; himſelf gives life to a worm in his root, which ſmites his flouriſhing gourd to death: Thus man breeds his own conſumption. But beſides this, he is bred of that which doth conſume, Man is born of a woman. And, as God decreed, for the puniſhment of her ſin, That the woman ſhould bring forth in ſorrow (Gen. 3. 16.) ſo the woman brings forth a ſorrowful man, Can we expect any thing but ſorrowful from ſorrowful? From frail but frail? Or from her who is of few dayes, and full of trouble, any thing but him who is ſuch himſelf? So it follows in Job's deſcription of man, where having given us the cauſe, he proceeds to the effects. Man that is born of a woman. Woman is the procreating cauſe of man, and from her man derives a double effect. Firſt, He is of few dayes. Secondly, He is full of troubles.

Is of few dayes.] The letter of the Hebrew is, ſhort, or cut ſhort of dayes. Mr. Broughton renders, Short of life. So the Pſalmiſt (Pſal. 89. 45.) The dayes of his youth haſt thou ſhortened, or cut off. 'Tis ſaid of Abraham (Gen. 25. 8.) that he died in a good old age, an old man, and full. The Hebrew goes no further, He died full. Full of what? Our Tranſlators, to fill up the ſence, add by way of explication, Full of years. Abraham had his belly full of living before he died, he had not an hungry deſire after a day more in this life: He was both hungry and athirſt for eternal life. He died full of years: but though Abraham was full of years, yet his life came alſo into Job's reckoning. Few of dayes.

The dayes of man are few, or ſhort: Firſt, Conſidered in themſelves (Pſal. 39. 5.) Behold thou haſt made my dayes as an hand-breadth. That is not long, which is no longer then the breadth of an hand. The breadth of the hand is taken two wayes: Firſt, In the largeſt extent, for a ſpan, or the whole ſpace between the top of the thumb, and the little finger ſtretched out. Secondly, In the leſſer extent, for the breadth only of four fingers, which is the meaſure (as Interpreters conceive) which David takes of the dayes of man.

Secondly, The fewneſs or ſhortneſs of mans dayes, may be conſidered comparatively, and that two wayes. Firſt, As man may be compared with man. Secondly, As man is compared with God.

We may collect the fewneſs of mans dayes now, by comparing him with man, under a twofold conſideration. Firſt, Of what number the dayes of man once were. Secondly, Of what number they ſhall be.

Firſt, The dayes of man are few now compared, firſt, with what his dayes were before the flood; then many men lived, ſix, ſeven, eight, nine hundred, and ſome almoſt a thouſand years, as Moſes hath reported the genealogy, age and death of the Patriarchs from Adam unto Noah (Gen. 5.) Now, if any man attain fourſcore, or a hundred years, he is wondrous old; and if any reach one hundred and forty or fifty, (as lately one of our Countrey men did) he is ſuch a rarity, that he draws more eyes to behold his wrinckled withered face, then any can with their moſt youthful beauty. I read of one, who had been an Eſquire for the Body to Charles the Great, Emperour of Germany, who is called in Hiſtory John of Time; becauſe he lived three hundred ſixty and one years. Yet three hundred ſixty one, is but a few to eight or nine hundred years: And beſides, the life of that Age is not to be caſt up by what years one man lived; but by what was the ordinary number of mans years in that age.

Johannes de Tempore Caroli M. Armiger, obiit annos 361. natus. Faſcic. Temp.

But as mans dayes are few, compared with what he lived before the flood; ſo they are fewer compared, ſecondly, with the dayes which man might have lived if he had not fallen. The ſtate of innocency had in it a kind of immortality; it was not impoſſible for Adam to die before he fell; but it was poſſible for him not dye; this is now changed into a certainty, that we ſhall dye, according to that Law of Heaven (Heb. 9.27.) It is appointed unto all men once to dye. Now the dayes of man are truly called few, or cut ſhort, becauſe it is determined they ſhall end, and that ſhortly: And though the determined end of theſe dayes is uncertain to us; yet their end is certainly determined.

Now if the dayes of man are few, compared with what they once were, or might have been upon the earth; how few are they in compariſon of what they ſhall be when he ſhall be raiſed out of the earth? Then the dayes of mans life, whether in Heaven or Hell, in happineſs or in miſery, ſhall be as many as the dayes; or rather as long as the day of eternity.

Again, As the dayes of man are few, compared with what he once had and ſhall have; ſo they are feweſt of all, compared with the dayes of God; ſo few, that as his dayes cannot be counted becauſe they are ſo many; ſo ours can hardly be counted becauſe they are ſo few. David, who found out a dimenſion (a hand-breadth) for the dayes of man, conſidered abſolutely, or in themſelves, could find out no dimenſion little enough for the dayes of man compared with God (Pſal. 39. 5.) Mine age (and his age may be the meaſure of every mans age, Mine age, ſaith he) is as nothing before him. All time is as nothing, compared with eternity; what a nothing then is the age of one man to eternity, which is ſcarce any thing to all time? Some things created and finite are ſo great above others, that they are nothing to them: What is the Ant to the Elephant, oa the Shrimp to the Whale? What is the whole body of the Earth, to the body of the Heavens? Naturaliſts ſay, 'tis but a point. Now if one creature be ſo far exceeded by another creature, that it is ſcarce diſcernable; how indiſcernable are all creatures to the Creator, finite to Infinite? As one part of the earth is but a point to the whole, and the whole earth but a point to the Heavens; ſo one part of time is but a moment to all time; and all time is but a moment to eternity; eſpecially to the eternity of God: which is not only as ſome creatures (by his diſpenſation) ſhall have, an eternity forwards; but alſo as no creature is in a capability, or poſſibility to have, an eternity backwards; and yet in ſtrict ſence, there is neither forwards nor backwards; neither paſt nor to come in Gods eternity; His Being conſiſts in one eternal Now, or I am; and hath nothing to do with, I was, or I ſhall be: And therefore the age of man is nothing before him; for mans age, though it be as nothing, undivided, is yet divided, into paſt, preſent, and to come. Three nothings, which being added together, amount in the total ſum to this nothing of the age and dayes of man. (as David ſpeaks) before God.

Hence Obſerve, Sin is the ſhortener of mans dayes.

Job leads us to this Obſervation, while he ſaith, Man that is born of a woman is of few dayes. Man born of a woman is ſinful man. This truth is ſo general, that it never received an exception in any one man born, after the ordinary way, of a woman. Chriſt was born of a woman; but he was conceived miraculouſly by the holy Ghoſt. Man might have been born of a woman, and yet have been of many dayes, if he had not been born in ſin. 'Tis the birth of ſin in man which is the ſeed of death: And as ſin makes the dayes of all men few in nature; ſo the ſins of ſome men makes theirs fewer then the dayes of nature. For, as though the dayes of a good man at the moſt are but few; yet becauſe of ſome ſpecial goodneſs they are often prolonged: So, though the dayes of a wicked man at the moſt are but few; yet, becauſe of ſome ſpecial wickedneſs they are often ſhortened. Solomon gives us both parts of this aſſertion in one verſe (Prov. 10. 27.) The fear of the Lord prolongeth (or addeth to) dayes, but the years of the wicked ſhall be ſhortened. And as Solomon tells us poſitively, they ſhall be ſhortened, ſo David tells negatively, how much they ſhall be ſhortened (Pſal. 55.23.) Bloody and deceitful men ſhall not live out half their dayes: Poſſibly they ſhall not live out a quarter of their dayes; but he is peremptory that they ſhall not live out half their dayes. Thus, as every man, becauſe he is a ſinner, ſhall live but a few dayes; ſo ſome ſhall not live half thoſe few dayes, becauſe they are notorious ſinners. All men are of few dayes; ſome men are of fewer then a few. The ſin of nature ſhortens all mens lives into a few dayes, and ſins of practice ſhorten ſome mens lives into fewer then a few.

From Job's ſolemn Doctrine of mans ſhort life, or few dayes, we may draw out many leſſons of very ſerious admonition.

Firſt, Seeing our dayes are few, let us live all our dayes: Some loſe many out of a few, and live not one of their few dayes. 'Tis poſſible to have a being (according to the account of man) many dayes, and to have lived none of them; or not to have lived at all. We live no more of our time then we ſpend well. A Heathen ſaid, He lived no day without a line; that is, he did ſomewhat remarkable every day. What a ſhame is it that a Chriſtian ſhould live a day without a line; do nothing in it worth the doing!

Secondly, Be perſwaded that your dayes are few. It is eaſie to ſay our dayes are few; but it is hard to believe it: Every Age hopes to ſee the next Age. The child hopes to be a youth, and the youth to be a man; the man hopes to be an old man; and he that is an old man, hath hopes to be very old; he that is very old hopes to live more then a few dayes yet; or that yet he ſhall not dye theſe many dayes. And becauſe every Age hath hopes to live that which is to come, it doth not live that which is preſent. We ſhould do more work, but that we hope for more dayes.

Thirdly, Seeing the time of this life is ſhort, and haſtens out of our hands, let us make haſte to lay hold upon eternal life. Our dayes here are few, ſuch as a Child may count; but dayes innumerable, ſuch as no man can count, or depend upon them. All our dayes are but few; and every man living hath lived a few dayes already; poſſibly thy few dayes paſt are all that thou ſhalt paſs. Say not of repentance, I will repent to morrow: Say not to Chriſt when he is tendered thee to day, come again to morrow. Boaſt not thy ſelf of to morrow (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 27. 1.) for thou knoweſt not what a day (even the day thou now haſt) may bring forth. Poſſibly this day may bring forth thy death (for the dayes of man are few) and then how ſhall to morrow bring forth thy repentance, or make thee another offer of a This-dayes refuſed Chriſt? Wilt thou boaſt of the births of to morrow, when as thou knoweſt not whether a morrow ſhall be brought forth to thee? Man (whoſoever thou art) waſt thou not born of a woman? If ſo, thy dayes are few, thy buſineſſes are many, and there is one thing neceſſary. We ſay of ſome men, that they do much in a little time: And truly how much ſoever any man hath to do, he hath but a little time to do it in. Few dayes ſure are but a little time; and all the time we have is but a few dayes. Beſides, Theſe few dayes are all the working-dayes that ever we ſhall have: Let this be a ſpur to diligence and to duty. Hear and obey the counſel of the Preacher (Eccleſ. 9. 10.) Whatſoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in the grave whither thou goeſt. In Heaven there is nothing but reſt; and in Hell, though there be no reſt, yet there is no labour. In Hell there is nothing but wages; and in Heaven there is nothing but reward; our whole work lyes in the few dayes which are on this ſide both.

Ab hoc momento pendet eternitas.

Fourthly, See in this truth, what falſe concluſions worldly men make unto themſelves, when with him in the twelfth of Luke, ver. 19, 20. they ſay to their ſouls, Souls, ye have good laid up for many years, take your eaſe, eat, drink, and be merry. How vainly do men reckon upon many years yet to come; when as their whole time paſt, preſent, and to come, can make up but a few dayes! The Apoſtle James rebukes thoſe upon this ground, who forelaid their buſineſs but one year; How much more are they rebukeable who forelay their pleaſures for many years? Chap. 4. 13, 14. Go to now, ye that ſay to day, or to morrow, we will go into ſuch a City, and continue there a year, and buy, and ſell, and get gain; whereas ye know not what ſhall be on the morrow: For what is your life? Is it not even a vapour, that appeareth for a litte time, (that's at moſt but a few dayes) and then vaniſheth away? So Paul pleads down a worldly ſpirit, (1 Cor. 7. 29, 30.) I ſay brethren, the time is ſhort; it remaineth, that they who have wives be as if they had none; and they that weep, as though they wept not; and they that rejoyce, a though they rejoyced not; and they that buy, as though they poſſeſſed not; and they that uſe this world, as not abuſing it. We ſhould ſhorten our joyes and our ſorrows; we ſhould take up or draw in our affections about worldly things, becauſe our time in the world is ſhort; and our dayes are continually drawing off from the world.

Fifthly, This ſhould check our envy at the proſperity of wicked men. Their day (of account) is coming, and their dayes (of receit) are going (Pſal. 73. 18, 19.) How are they brought to deſolation in a moment, as a dream when one awaketh? ſo, O Lord, when thou awakeſt, thou ſhalt deſpiſe their image.

Sixthly, Let the righteous be patient in affliction; all their dayes are but few; and therefore their dayes of ſorrow cannot be many. Yet a little while, and he that ſhall come, will come, and will not tarry.

Laſtly, Truſt not in man; yea, ceaſe from man whoſe breath is in his noſtrils, and whoſe dayes (becauſe they are few) muſt ſhortly ceaſe. Place not the hopes of your life in him, who cannot (with warrant) hope for a long life, much leſs aſſure you of any comfort of your life: ſeeing as his own life is empty of dayes; ſo it is, as it follows in this Text.

Full of trouble.

Few dayes and many troubles make up the character of man. We uſe to ſay, Short and ſweet; but here it is, Short and ſowre; yea, ſhort and bitter. As ſome ſpeak much in a little; much matter in a little diſcourſe; many matters in a few words: And as ſome do much with a little; much good with a little talent: So all men ſuffer much in a little; much trouble in a little time; many ſorrows in a few dayes.

Full of trouble.] The word which we tranſlate Full, alludes to the filling of the ſtomach, and the ſatisfying of the appetite with meat. Trouble is hard fare, but there is plenty of it. Man uſually hath his fill, and never knows the want of trouble. Ever ſince man brought forth ſin, the earth brought forth trouble. Sin is the ſeed of trouble; and trouble is all the harveſt we reap by ſin.

The word which we render, trouble, contains in it more ſorts of trouble then one. It notes, not only all kind of outward trouble, but inward trouble; vexing trouble, ſuch as diſturbs and unquiets the whole man. Some render it by trembling; ſo the word is uſed Hab. 3. 16. My belly trembled (or my bowels were moved) rottenneſs entred into my bones. Holy men are full of trembling at the holineſs of God; and ſinful men have reaſon to be full of trembling at their own ſinfulneſs. The body trembles when the viſions of impendent evil paſs before, or are repreſented to the mind. Others render it by anger, wrathfulneſs, rage. Man is full of anger: And that in a twofold conſtruction; Firſt, Paſſively, he feels the anger both of God and man; the ſad effects of mans rage and of Gods diſpleaſure. Secondly, Actively, man is full of his own anger; full of anger. Firſt, Againſt his fellow-brethren. Secondly, Againſt God. Thirdly, At the diſpenſations of God; when God ſends him trouble, he is angry. When God ſends others proſperity, if it like not him, he is angry. Anger makes the proſperity of others our trouble; and our own troubles would be little trouble to us if we were not angry with our troubles. Trouble and anger are well expreſſed by the ſame word, ſeeing moſt of our troubles proceed from the anger of God, and are all increaſed by our own anger.

For the clearing of Job's Propoſition, or Obſervation, That man is full of troubles, I ſhall preſent the Reader with a particular of the troubles of man.

The troubles of man are either inward or outward.

Inward troubles proceed from a threefold cauſe. Firſt, From the terrors wherewith God firſt exerciſeth the ſpirits of his own people. Job was full of theſe troubles, as we have opened before; and ſo was Heman, Pſal. 88. 15. Secondly, There are terrors wherewith God vexeth the ſpirits of wicked men; Cain, Saul, and Judas were full of theſe troubles; and the Prophet pronounceth of wicked men in general, that they are like the troubled ſea when it cannot reſt, Iſa. 57. 20.

Secondly, Inward troubles ariſe from the temptations of Satan; we hear many poor ſouls complaining of theſe: As that wicked ſpirit goes about ſeeking reſt, and finding none; ſo he would not ſuffer any man to reſt. Satan is a troubled ſpirit; and he is a troubling ſpirit.

Thirdly, Inward troubles ariſe from the luſts and corruptions of our own hearts. Paul who triumphed and rejoyced over all outward troubles, cryes out, O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death? Rom. 7. 24. Who is there that hath any ſpiritual life, who groans not under the body of this death? One bemoans and weeps over unbelief; another over pride; a third over paſſions and baſe fears; a fourth over deadneſs of ſpirit, and hardneſs of heart. Theſe fill the Saints with trouble while they keep them in; much more when they prevail and break out. And as Believers are full of trouble becauſe of their own corruption; ſo alſo by reaſon of the corruptions of others. Their hearts bleed at the prophaneſs, and their eyes weep at the pride of other men.

Theſe inward troubles are enough to fill us; but as Ezekiel's Roll was full of woes, ſo our lives are full of troubles, both within and without.

Outward troubles are of two ſorts.

Firſt, Ordinary, or thoſe which come daily upon us, the labours and buſineſſes of our callings. The Apoſtle ſpeaking of and to thoſe that marry, ſaith Such ſhall have trouble in the fleſh, 1 Cor. 7. 28. Fleſh and troubles are married together, whether we marry or no; but they that are married, marry with, and match into new troubles. All our relations have their burdens as well as their comforts.

Secondly, Extraordinary troubles; and theſe are of three ſorts. Firſt, Publick, in the common calamities which fall; Firſt, Upon the Kingdoms: Secondly, Upon the Churches wherein we live. Secondly, Private troubles, which are thoſe which befal our dwellings and Families. Thirdly, Perſonal troubles, which fall upon our own ſelves. To theſe three kinds all our outward troubles are reducible; but the particulars of them are almoſt innumerable. What Paul ſaith of his perils (2 Cor. 11.26.) we may ſay of our troubles, we are in troubles by waters; in troubles by Robbers; in troubles by our own Countreymen; in troubles by the Heathen; in troubles in the City; in troubles in the Wilderneſs; in troubles in the Sea; in troubles among falſe Brethren. We are in wearineſs and painfulneſs, in hunger and thirſt, in cold and nakedneſs; of all theſe troubles we may ſay as he (ver. 28.) They are without.

Again, we have troubles in getting, troubles in keeping, and troubles in loſing the things of this life. We have trouble in doing our duties; troubles for doing our duties; and troubles worſt of all for not doing our duties; or for doing that which is not our duties: As ſome have troubles of Conſcience; ſo not a few have troubles for Conſcience.

Laſtly, Beſides all theſe troubles, whether of action or paſſion, we are alſo, or ought to be, (we ſeldom want occaſion to be) full of the troubles of compaſſion at the troubles of others, though we our ſelves be free from trouble. Thus Paul ſpeaks of himſelf (2 Cor. 11. 29.) Who is weak and I am not weak? Who is offended and I burn not? And thus Paul charges us, Weep with them that weep (Rom. 12. 15.) Remember thoſe that be in bonds, as bound with them; and them which ſuffer adverſity, as being your ſelves alſo in the body (Heb. 13. 3.) Sympathy is a Chriſtian duty. Chriſt himſelf (our Head) is afflicted in all our afflictions; we alſo ſhould be afflicted in the afflictions of one another, as fellow-members. He that hath no croſs of his own, muſt take up and bear his brothers: And he that hath many of his own, muſt bear a part of all his brethrens croſſes. Now, what between the troubles which we feel, and the troubles whereof we have a fellow-feeling, we muſt needs be full of troubles; few of dayes and full of troubles. The report which old Jacob made before Pharaoh of his life (Gen. 47. 9.) may be the report of all our lives, when we have lived moſt, and lived beſt; Few and evil have the dayes of the years of our lives been: yea, though we ſhould have attained (which Jacob ſaid he had not) to the dayes of the years of the life of our fathers in the dayes of their pilgrimage.

What hath man (as Solomon concludes by way of queſtion concerning man in a natural conſideration) of all his labour, and of the vexation of his heart, wherein he hath laboured under the Sun? What hath man of all his labours (much more of all his ſufferings) but trouble? For all his dayes are ſorrows, and his travel grief, Eccleſ. 2. 22, 23.

From all obſerve two things.

Firſt, Obſerve the difference of the life of Saints on earth, and their life in heaven: Here it is few of dayes, and full of troubles; there it will be full of dayes, and full of comforts: In thy preſence is fulneſs of joy, and at thy right hand there are pleaſures for evermore.

Secondly, Obſerve in this conjunction of few dayes and full of troubles in the life of man, the goodneſs of God to man. Few dayes are (in themſelves) an affliction; fulneſs of trouble is (to us) a great affliction, but many dayes and full of trouble, had been a greater affliction. How ſad would our condition be if perpetuity and miſery, a multitude of dayes and a multitude of troubles had met together in our lives? The curſe of hell is eternity and miſery, a life without end, and troubles without end. 'Tis a mercy, when that which is ſharp is but ſhort, when that whoſe very beginning grieves us, ends quickly. Chriſt having foretold the deſtruction of the Temple at Jeruſalem, and the great tribulation which ſhould accompany it, even ſuch as was not ſince the beginning of the world, no, nor ever ſhall be, concludes (Mat. 24. 22.) And except thoſe dayes ſhould be ſhortned, there ſhould no fleſh be ſaved; but for the Elects ſake thoſe dayes ſhall be ſhortned. God did not make the dayes of thoſe troubles ſhorter then himſelf had decreed, but ſhorter then the enemy had determined, or then any wiſe man, who judgeth only by the rules of humane policy, could have expected. The troubles of thoſe dayes ſeemed to be very long-viſag'd, but God ſhortned the dayes, that the trouble of his people might be ſhortned, and that ſome fleſh, that is, ſome men, and thoſe men ſome of the Jews (for there is a double Synecdoche in the word fleſh) might be ſaved: that is, with a temporal ſalvation, from the Roman Sword and devouring calamities which attended that terrible War. Now as it is a mercy when God ſhortens the dayes of ſpecial trouble, into which any ſort or nation of men fall; ſo it is a mercy that God hath ſhortned and leſſened the dayes of mankind, conſidering the general trouble into which we are fallen. Let it not be a trouble to us that our dayes are few, ſeeing if our dayes were more our troubles would be more, and our ſorrows would encreaſe as the number of our years encreaſed. He that is diſpleaſed becauſe his dayes are few, is alſo diſpleaſed becauſe his troubles are ſo few. We have little reaſon to be in love with this life becauſe our dayes are few, and leſs becauſe our troubles are many. But we have much reaſon to love God, who when we had procured to our ſelves many troubles while we live, hath contracted and epitomiz'd our lives into a few dayes.

Job having aſſerted the ſhortneſs and troubleſomeneſs of mans life in a direct propoſition, proceeds to illuſtrate both by a double ſimilitude. Firſt, Of a flower. Secondly, Of a ſhadow, in the ſecond verſe.

Verſ. 2. He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down: he fleeth alſo as a ſhadow, and continueth not.

Man is like a flower and a ſhadow, he is but the ſhadow of a flower, or the flower of a ſhadow.

He cometh forth like a flower.] Some reſtrain this ſimilitude to thoſe who die in childhood or in youth: ſuch indeed are blaſted in their bloſſom, and cropt in their flower. But as one part of mans life compared with another, may be called the flower of his life, ſo his whole life laid together may be called a flower, and that's the meaning of this place. As man in his beſt eſtate, and in all eſtates is altogether vanity, ſo man in his beſt dayes, and in all his dayes is but a flower.

And whereas there are many rarities and excellencies in a flower, three eſpecially. Firſt, Odour or ſweetneſs, affecting the ſmell. Secondly, Beauty and variety of colour, affecting the eye. Thirdly, Softneſs and ſmoothneſs, affecting the Touch: whereas (I ſay) there are theſe three rarities in a flower, Job paſſeth them all by, and ſpeaks of it not as flouriſhing but withering, not in its ſpringing up but in its cutting down, or of its ſpringing only in relation to cutting down. He cometh forth like a flower.

And is cut down.] Death is the ſithe which cuts down theſe flowers, either firſt, Natural death. Firſt, By ſickneſs. 2. By age: or ſecondly, Violent death, which is, firſt, Caſual, when a man is ſlain by accident. Secondly, Cruel, when a man is ſlain by murderers. Thirdly, Legal, when a man is ſlain by the Magiſtrate.

Hence Obſerve, Man in his flouriſhing is near to withering.

He cometh forth and is cut down, his ſtanding is ſo ſmall that it is not ſo much as mentioned. We are born to die, and we die as ſoon as we are born. Chriſt ſpeaks to the Church, Canticles, 2. 11, 12. Riſe my love, for lo the winter is paſt, the flowers appear on the earth, the time of the ſinging of birds is come; ſo we tranſlate, but others thus, The time of cutting is come. The ſame word in the Hebrew ſignifies both to ſing and to cut; we taking the former, adde the word birds (which is not at all in the Original) to fill up the ſence, or to ſhew what ſinging is there meant; namely that, which is moſt proper in the ſpring when flowers firſt appear, the ſinging of birds. The other reading, as it is clear in the letter of the Hebrew, ſo it elegantly ſuits the point in hand; The flowers appear, the time of cutting is come, implying that flowers are cut even as ſoon as they appear: Such a flower is man. He cometh forth and is cut down. Thus David deſcribes him, Pſal. 103. 15, 16. As for man, his dayes are as graſs; as a flower of the field, ſo he flouriſheth; for the wind paſſeth over it, and it is gone, and the place thereof ſhall know it no more. Though the flower be not cut down with any inſtrument of iron, nor cropt by the hand, yet a breath of wind blaſts it, yea the gentle motion of the air quickly blows off its beauty. The Naturaliſt tells us of a plant called Ephemeron, becauſe it laſts but one day, as he doth alſo of a worm called Hemerobion, becauſe it lives but one day. Such a worm is man; or (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks) a worm and no man. Such a flower is man, or (as we may ſpeak) a flower and no man. The heathen Poet gives his wonder and obſervation of the Roſe, that it grows old in the very budding. The Septuagint read the words of Job in the ſame tenour. He decayes like a budding flower, that is, he decayes in his very budding: As if death did riſe early and watch for the flouriſhing flower, to crop or cut it down. And though ſome of theſe flowers ſtand till they wither, or as Solomon allegorizeth, (Eccleſ. 12. 5.) Till the Almond-tree ſhall flouriſh, that is, till gray-hairs; yet all the time of their ſtanding they have been falling, and every hour which increaſeth or ſwells their ſtalks, hath been alſo cutting of them down. And it would have been better for ſome, if they had been actually cut down in that ſtate, which we diſtinctively call their flower, while they were well-ſented and beautiful, whereas ſtanding long, they have not only decayed, but ſmelt ill upon their ſtalks. Man in his beſt eſtate is vain, and many who have ſtood beyond that, have proved far worſe then vain.

Tempus putationis advenit. Pagn.

Plin. Nat. hiſt. lib. 25. cap. 13. l. 11. c. 36.

Mirabar celerē fugitiva ætate rapinam. Et dum noſcuntur conſenuiſſe roſas. Virg.

Tanquā flos efflorescens decidit.

Now leſt this firſt ſimilitude of a flower coming forth and cut down, ſhould not reach the tranſitorineſs of this dying thing called man; therefore Job puts him upon his fulleſt ſpeed, or rather upon the wing in his motion through the world, by a ſecond ſimilitude, which carrieth in it the haſtieſt ſwiftneſs and the moſt unſetled changeableneſs.

He fleeth alſo as a ſhadow, and continueth not.

Shadows are cauſed by the interpoſition of any groſs body between us and the Sun. Every ſhadow is dark, and darkneſs is but a great ſhadow. Hence there are two ſorts of natural ſhadows. Firſt, The ſhadows of the night, to which the Church alludes, (Cant. 2. 17.) Until the day break, and the ſhadows flee away. Secondly, The ſhadows of the day; theſe are according to the motions of the Sun, in continual motion or variation, ſometimes on our right hand, ſometimes on our left, ſometimes ſhorter, ſometimes longer, and are longeſt in the evening, as the Prophet ſpeaks, (Jer. 4. 6.) The ſhadows of the evening are ſtretched out. When the Sun riſeth, the ſhadows of the night are not, and while the ſhadows of the day are, they continue not, but receive ſome change every moment.

ment. Such is man, he fleeth as the ſhadow of the night before the day, and as the ſhadow of the day till night return again.

columna erecta, à ſtādo dicta.

Et nūquā in eodē ſtatu permanet. Vulg.

He continueth not.] The Hebrew is, he ſtandeth not. A pillar is expreſſed by a word of this root, becauſe of its ſtanding and firmneſs. Man is not a pillar, but a ſhadow; or if he be a pillar, he is but a pillar of ſmoak, which is carried and ſcattered with the wind, as a ſhadow is altered or changed with the Sun. We read often of the ſhadow of death, and our life is but a ſhadow; becauſe it continueth not. Death is a perfect ſhadow, and a ſhadow is the ſimilitude of our imperfect life: To have no ſhadow of turning, notes the perfection of God (James 1. 17.) To turn like a ſhadow, notes the imperfection of man. The Vulgar tranſlates, He continueth not in the ſame ſtate.

There is a threefold ſtate of man. Firſt, A natural ſtate. Secondly, A civil ſtate. Thirdly, A ſpiritual ſtate. The two former of theſe, are of little or no continuance, the third doth not alwayes continue in the ſame ſtate.

The natural ſtate of man may be conſidered,

Firſt, In reference to his body; this ſuffers an alteration every day, either a perfective alteration, as in thoſe that are young; or a corruptive alteration, as in thoſe who are of full age: Yea, the perfective alteration of the body tends to a corruptive alteration, and while we are growing ſtronger, we are haſtning, not only to weakneſs, but to diſſolution.

Secondly, The natural ſtate of man may be conſidered in reference to his mind: This continues not in one ſtate. 'Tis the ſole priviledge of God to be one within. He (ſaith Job, chap. 23. 13.) Is in one mind, who can turn him? Men are in twenty minds, they cannot but turn. We uſe to ſay of ſeveral men, So many men, ſo many minds: But we may obſerve in the ſame man, How many minds! The mind of man is more mutable then the wind or weather: Now he is pleaſed, anon he is angry; now he likes, anon he diſlikes; now he loves, anon he hates; now he wills, by and by he wills not: The will, the affections, the underſtanding of man, are ſo often in new habits and changes of dreſs, are ſhaped into ſuch various forms of opinion and judgement, that 'tis hard to ſay what any mans mind is; and there are not many who know their own minds.

And as man continues not in his natural ſtate, whether of body or mind; ſo his civil ſtate is of as little continuance: whether we look upon him, Firſt, In his honour; Or, Secondly, In his power; Or, Thirdly, In his riches; Or, Fourthly, In his relations. I leave the Reader to enlarge upon theſe common places of mans mutability. Day unto day makes report, and every dayes experience is a Sermon of theſe things: yea, how many have we ſeen in one day, honourable and diſhonourable, in fulneſs of power, and emptied of all their power; abounding in riches, and brought to beggery, compaſſed about with friends and kindred, with wife and children, and yet forſaken of all before the evening. Their inward thought (ſaith David, Pſal. 49. 11.) is, that their houſes ſhall continue for ever, and their dwelling places to all generations: nevertheleſs man being in honour (power or riches) abideth not. If he abides, theſe do not; and if theſe abide, he doth not: and the longeſt that both theſe have abode in any example ſince the foundation of the world, is not long enough to warrant this concluſion, that, They did abide.

Thirdly, Conſider man in his ſpiritual eſtate, where his continuance is moſt ſteady, yet there he continues not in the ſame ſtate. Some have a ſpiritual eſtate, which is of as little continuance as mans natural or civil ſtate is. The hypocrite appears to others, and is often conceited of himſelf, full of the flowers of grace; but he quickly diſappears: he is cut down like a flower, and fleeth away like a ſhadow. The parable ſaith of ſuch a man, (Mat. 13. 20, 21.) He heareth the word, and anon with joy receiveth it, yet hath he not root in himſelf, but dureth for a while: that is, he continueth not: his leaf of out-ſide profeſſion falls, and his goodly form of godlineſs without power breaks to pieces upon the leaſt blaſt or touch of perſecution. And if perſecution do not kill his profeſſion, it will die alone, or rather, it will decay alone; for indeed it never had any life.

Now, as temporary believers have total decayes, and continue not at all in their ſpiritual eſtate; ſo true believers may have temporary decayes. The way of a man in Chriſt doth not flee like a ſhadow, but increaſeth more and more unto the perfect day, (Prov. 4. 16.) And that Scripture which takes up Jobs ſimilitude, comparing all fleſh to graſs, and the goodlineſs thereof to the flower of the field, the graſs withereth, the flower fadeth, doth yet by way of oppoſition, aſſure us, that the Word of God abideth for ever, (Iſaiah 40. 8.) Now, as the Word of God, ſo that grace which is revealed to us and wrought in us by the Word and Spirit of God, abideth for ever. And yet though a ſtate of grace, whereſoever, it is doth continue for ever, yet it doth not continue alwayes in the ſame ſtate: and that not only becauſe it is gradually changed by way of improvement here (till it take its higheſt degree in glory, where it ſhall know no change at all, either by way of abatement or of improvement) but alſo becauſe it is often changed by way of gradual abatement. Peter did not alwayes continue in the ſame ſtate of faith, nor the Church of Epheſus in the ſame ſtate of love, though their faith and love did continue. What ſoul can ſay it continues ever in the ſame degree of ſpiritual ſtrength, health, life and enlargements? Though the whole time of a Chriſtian in this world be a growing time, yet conſider it in parts, and we ſhall find many declining times. Thus as man continues not at all in his natural and civil ſtate, ſo his ſpiritual eſtate doth not alwayes continue the ſame: and ſo of all it may be ſaid, He continueth not.

VERS. 3, 4.

And doeſt thou open thine eyes upon ſuch an one, and bringeſt him into judgement with thee?
Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one.

JOB having ſhadowed the frailty of man under divers ſimilitudes, in the cloſe of the thirteenth Chapter, and in the beginning of this, draws down from all, this paſſionate queſtion, at the third verſe, And doeſt thou open thy eye upon ſuch an one? Upon ſuch an one as I, who am as a rotten thing; or, as a garment that is moth-eaten! Upon ſuch an one as I, who am of few dayes and full of trouble! Upon ſuch an one as I, who am like a flower coming forth, and preſently cut down! Upon ſuch an one as I, who am like a ſhadow fleeing away and continuing not! Doeſt thou open thine eyes upon ſuch an one; and bringeſt me into judgement with thee?

Terminus diminuens.

Such an one, is a term of diminution; Job debaſeth and lowers himſelf, Such an one! Is ſuch a poor one, a man ſo inconſiderable, a man who beſides the common condition of men, which is low enough, is yet brought lower by theſe afflictions?

Such an one, ſometimes increaſeth the ſenſe and heightens it. (Neh. 6. 11.) When Sanballat and the enemies of the Jews by ſecret practices and cunning plots would have diſcouraged Nehemiah, telling him what deſigns were againſt him, and perſwading him timely to avoid his own fall, that ſo the work might fall, he anſwers, Should ſuch a man as I flee? ſuch a man! A man in ſuch a place, and having ſuch power; a man ſo truſted, and under ſuch ingagements; a man upon whoſe care and conduct the well-fare of a nation, and the advancement of publick good ſo much depends? Should ſuch a man as I flee? there the ſenſe is raiſed: but here it falls; Such an one, is a poor one, a mean one; Doeſt thou open thy mouth to ſpeak againſt, or thine eye to look upon ſuch an object?

Job having conſidered his own eſtate in common with that of mankind, concludes, And doeſt thou ſet thy eye upon ſuch an one?

Whence Obſerve, That the due conſideration and knowledge of what we are, leads us to low thoughts of our ſelves.

There is no man proud of himſelf, but he that is ignorant of himſelf: we are lifted up with high thoughts above what we are, becauſe we have not true thoughts of what we are; if once we ſaw what moth eaten garments, what rotten things, what fading flowers, what fleeing ſhadows, what decaying, dying creatures we are, every one would ſay to God in holy wonder, Doeſt thou take notice of ſuch an one? of ſo mean an one as I. We ſhould not aſpire to be counted ſome bodies, ſome great ones in the world, but we ſhould look upon our ſelves as no bodies, as unaccountable in the world, ſuch as deſerve not, that the great, the high God ſhould vouchſafe us a caſt of his eye. This is Jobs ſenſe of himſelf, Doeſt thou open thy eye upon ſuch an one as I?

Oculi Dei providentiā denotat.

The opening of the eye is taken two wayes.

Firſt, In a way of fatherly care and providence: Thus David ſpeaks (Pſal. 144. 3.) Lord, what is man that thou takeſt knowledge of him, or the ſon of man that thou makeſt account of him? So Job (chap. 7. 17.) What is man that thou ſhouldeſt magnifie him, and that thou ſhouldſt ſet thy heart upon him? that is, that thou ſhouldſt take care of him, and make ſuch proviſion for him. When Hezekiah was in a day of rebuke and blaſphemy, he ſpread Rabſhakehs railing letter before the Lord, and prayed, Lord bow down thine ear and hear, open Lord thy eye and ſee, 2 Kin. 19. 16. that is, take care of me and of the people under me: the mouth of Rabſhakeh is open to threaten and revile, let thy eye be open to ſee and prevent all the evils which he threatneth.

Further, Opening the eye is an act of little or no difficulty; it is as eaſie to open the eye as to turn the hand; to give a look is a ſmall gift. Thus we may underſtand Job, as if he thought himſelf unworthy the leaſt motion of providence. Doeſt thou vouchſafe to open thine eye upon ſuch a one? I am not worthy thou ſhouldeſt take notice of me or of my condition. A glance of thy eye is more then I can look for.

I will not proſecute this ſenſe, both becauſe I handled it, chap. 7. 17. as alſo, becauſe though it be a truth, yet, I conceive, it is not the proper truth of this place.

Aperire oculos in aliquē, eſt intentis oculis eū valdè obſervare, quid rerum agat. Druſ.

Secondly, As opening of the eye ſignifies providence and care to do us good, ſo watchfulneſs to diſcover and find out what we are, or what evil we have done: for as in Scripture to open the hand is to be liberal, bountiful, and munificent (Pſal 145. 16.) Thou openeſt thy hand and ſatisfieſt the deſire of every living thing. So to open the eye upon a man, notes diligent inſpection over him, or an accurate obſervation of his wayes, goings, actings, to bring him to a ſtrict account for all: he that paſſeth a man by, and will not bring him to judgement for what he hath done, is ſaid (in our common ſpeech) to connive or wink at him. He that winks at another, will not ſee though he doth ſee. It is ſaid (Act. 17. 30.) that God winked at the former times of their ignorance, but now he commands all men every where to repent, becauſe he hath appointed a day, wherein he will judge the world. There is another meaning of winking which I have opened (chap. 8. 4.) but this is a truth, God winked, that is, he did not take much notice, or follow men up and down, to ſee what they did in thoſe times, becauſe they were in the darkneſs of ignorance; they had but little light to do good by, therefore he was not ſo ſtrict to obſerve what evil they did; ſo that the opening of the eye, implieth a critical, or a judiciary inſpection, as well as a paternal, fatherly, careful inſpection, and ſo we are to expound this place, as is evident from the ſixth verſe of this chapter, where Job deſires that which is contrary to opening the eye, the turning from him, that he might reſt till he ſhall accompliſh as a hireling his dayes. He that openeth his eye to a man turneth his face to him; now ſeeing man is weak, and his dayes determined, turn from him with thine eye, or why doeſt thou ſet thine eye upon him? As if he had ſaid, Doth it become thy greatneſs and majeſty, to take ſuch ſtrict notice of all the motions of ſo poor a creature as I am? or doth it become thy goodneſs and mercy to be ſo ſevere to watch me ſo narrowly, to look after me ſo exactly, that I cannot ſtir but thou obſerveſt it, and numbreſt my very ſteps?

Contextus expoſcit, ut de ſeveritate divini judicii loquatur, Sanct.

Cum ſtomacho & indignatione legendum eſt: Itane ſuper hoc folium & ſtipulā, &c. Mer.

Job ſpeaks in a kind of paſſion, and the gloſs which ſome interpreters put upon his words, renders them, not only very unbecoming, but very ſinful; as if he thought it altogether unfit for God to eye what he did, or to bring him into judgement for it. Heathens ſaid of their Jupiter, he was not at leaſure to look at ſmall matters; but it is a great diſhonour to God, to ſay he cannot look after the ſmalleſt matters and motions of the creature: We cannot diſhonour God more, then by counting this a diſhonour to him. The loweſt perſons and actions are not beneath the obſervation of the moſt high God. Jobs intendment was to move God to compaſſion, not to put himſelf beneath his conſideration.

Hence Obſerve, That our frailty is a good pleadable argument to move God to deal mildely and gently with us,

I am a weak poor creature, therefore pitty me, therefore ſpare me; we muſt never plead our fulneſs before God, but we may plead our emptineſs; we muſt never plead our goodneſs, nor our worthineſs, but we may our ſinfulneſs and unworthineſs. The latter clauſe of the verſe ſhews us what Job deſires, when he deprecates the opening of Gods eye upon him.

And bringeſt me into judgement with thee.

Obſerve here the change of the perſon: He ſpake before in the third perſon, Doeſt thou open thine eye upon ſuch an one? here he ſpeaks in the firſt perſon, Doeſt thou bring me to judgement with thee? He relates to his perſonal condition and makes application to himſelf, Doeſt thou bring me into judgement with thee? I ſhall not ſtay upon theſe words, having often (from like paſſages) ſhewed how unable man is to ſtand before God in judgement. Job inſiſteth much upon it, being provoked by his friends, charging him with a conceit of ſelf-righteouſneſs, which he diſclaimed as often as they charge him with it, Doeſt thou bring me to judgement with thee? Men of eminency will not contend with thoſe who are much inferiour to them, they cannot honour themſelves by ſuch conteſts, as was lately ſhewed at large (chap. 13. 25.) upon that expoſtulation, Wilt thou break a leaf driven to and fro? &c. Thus Job pleads here, Doeſt thou bring me to judgement with thee? I am no match for thee, there is no equality between us, thou canſt not raiſe thy Name by caſting me down: thou mayeſt honour thy mercy and compaſſion, by pardoning me, but not thy power by overthrowing me. The worſt and weakeſt of ſinful men, are the beſt foil to ſet off the beauty and ſtrength of mercy.

Verbum eſt futuri temporis, quod debitū connotat & decorum, ut Gen. 18. 25.

Huc pertinent omnia quæ hoc loco copioſe diſſerit Job de miſeria humanæ vitæ, ut Deus tā miſero homini miſereatur, nec tam duris experimētis probet. Mer.

Yet men are not therefore free from the judgements of God becauſe they are low and mean, for God will judge the loweſt, even ſuch as lie on dung-hills, or grind in the mill; the great God of heaven and earth will bring the leaſt to judgement, as well as the greateſt. The Rabbins have a conceit that ſome ſhall be exempt or priviledg'd from the judgement of God hereafter, becauſe they endure much pain and poverty here; but theſe are vain conceits: All muſt come to judgement, though but few ſhall ſtand in judgement. God will glorifie his juſtice in caſting the loweſt of wicked men to the loweſt hell, as well as high and lofty ones.

Take one Obſervation from both parts of the verſe laid together, Doeſt thou open thy eye upon ſuch an one as I am, and bringeſt me to judgement?

There muſt be a diſcerning of the perſon and cauſe, before either can be brought to judgement.

You muſt open the eye to ſee what the man is, and what he hath done, before ſentence be given upon him. The law forbad the Judge to receive gifts, becauſe gifts blind the eye of the Judge; a Judge had need to have his eyes open, to diſcern the cauſe and every circumſtance of it. If a gift put out the receivers eye, how ſhall the Judge diſcern him that gives it. We cannot judge what we do not know, nor can we judge aright without a right knowledge.

Job having pleaded his weakneſs, pleads his ſinfulneſs.

Verſ. 4. Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one.

As if he had ſaid, Lord, if thou openeſt thine eye upon me, thou muſt needs find me unclean, full of ſin and defiled with ſin: Nor canſt thou expect any other of me, for, who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? ſurely not one; therefore do not open thine eye ſeverely upon me, do not bring me into judgement with thee, thou art of purer eyes then to behold iniquity.

I ſhall firſt open the words and give the ſenſe as they contain an entire propoſition, A clean thing cannot be brought out of an unclean, and then I ſhall conſider Jobs ſcope in uſing this plea,

Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean?

טמא immundus, pulchra eſt illius turpitudinis & ſordium appellatio, in quam ſqualor quidam mœrentis animi & ſorditatus habitus, cruoris & ſanguinis maculæ, nubila, craſſa omnia turbida immundaque cadunt. Pined.

The word which we render clean ſignifies ſhining, beautiful, a ſubſtance ſo pure and tranſparent that we may ſee through it, ſo pure that it is free from all ſpot or defilement, from all blackneſs and darkneſs; Who can bring ſuch a clean thing out of an unclean? the Hebrew word (Tama) comes near the word (Contaminatum) which is uſed by the Latines for unclean; and it ſpeaks the greateſt pollution, the ſordidneſs and filthineſs of habit, the goar of blood, the muddineſs of water, whatſoever is loathſome or unlovely, noiſome or unſightly: All theſe meet in, and make up the meaning of this word, Who can bring a clean thing out of this uncleanneſs?

Clean and unclean may be taken two wayes; either firſt corporally and externally; or ſecondly, morally and internally; Job ſpeaks not of the former; the uncleanneſs here meant is moral or internal,

Which is alſo twofold. Firſt, The uncleanneſs of our natures: Secondly, Of our actions; the uncleanneſs which lyes in the inward man, puts it ſelf forth in the outward man; and ſo we are unclean both within and without.

Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? This queſtion may undergo a threefold expoſition. Firſt thus, Who can bring a morally clean perſon out of a perſon originally unclean? The word which we render bring, is give in the Hebrew; Who can give a clean thing out of an unclean? Which may well refer to the birth of man: So the word is uſed (Gen. 17. 16.) God promiſeth Abraham to bleſs Sarah, and give him a Son of her: So here, Who can give a clean thing? That is, cauſe it to be born of an unclean; Job layes his hand upon his birth-ſin; as if he had ſaid, all men are naturally unclean; therefore the children born of them are unclean too.

Secondly, Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? May refer to the action of the ſame man, take Job or any other perſon who is morally unclean by nature, this man being unclean, cannot bring forth a clean thing; that is, a clean action: As the root is, ſuch is the fruit; we are ſuch fruit as our parents are, unclean both; and our fruit is ſuch as we the parents are, unclean both.

Thirdly, Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? May note the change of the ſame perſon from his moral uncleanneſs into moral cleanneſs; Who can make a perſon clean who was born unclean? The Hebrew particle (Min) rendred, out of, hath a double uſe; ſometimes it notes the Original of a thing, That which is originated is like its original. Again, it notes alſo change and mutation; Who can bring a clean out of an unclean? That is, who can change unclean into clean? Beſides the word which we render bring ſignifies to make a change, Iſa. 51. 12. Who art thou that art afraid of the ſon of man, who ſhall be made as the graſs? The Hebrew is, who ſhall be given, that is, changed as the graſs.

Thus we have a threefold interpretation of the words. The firſt reſpecting the extraction of one perſon from another. All perſons are unclean, becauſe they come from an unclean root.

A ſecond referring to the actions of the ſame perſon. That which is done by man cannot but be unclean; becauſe man himſelf is unclean who doth it.

A third reſpecting the change of the perſon himſelf from what he was. Who can make an unclean perſon clean? This is a work too hard for any creature, Man or Angel. Man cannot by his own power make a natural man, much leſs a ſpiritual man; he cannot give any man a being, much leſs a holy being.

Firſt obſerve from the connection, Job having deſcribed mans life, Few of dayes and full of troubles, like a ſhadow, and like a flower cut down and withered; he now deſcends to mans uncleanneſs, as if he would lead us to the ſpring-head and cauſe of all our ſorrows: This is the method and dependance of Job's diſcourſe, which teacheth us,

That the length of our troubles, and ſhortneſs of our lives, are cauſed by the corruption and uncleanneſs of our natures.

Are our lives troubleſome? Is the ſcene of our actions intangled? ſin hath done it. Is the thread of life cut off? have we but a few dayes? ſin hath procured this. We are unclean, therefore we are dying, fading, withering. In all, whether perſonal or publick troubles, we may anſwer our ſelves with this, we have what we deſerve, the root of all our miſeries is within us, we may thank our own evil diſpoſitions, that our condition is ſo full of evil. God made man upright and happy; he gave him a life wherein he might have continued long and long, even for ever. Though man might have died as created, yet there was no neceſſity he ſhould dye till he had ſinned. Both the troubles of this life and death it ſelf are debts of penalty for our uncleanneſs; and when we are once perfectly cleanſed, we ſhall never be under any arreſt for theſe debts.

Secondly Obſerve, Sin is an unclean thing.

They who ſee the face of ſin in the glaſs of the Law, ſee it the moſt ugly and deformed object in the world. If Vertue could be ſeen, ſhe would attract all eyes and hearts to her: Vertue is an inviſible beauty. So if ſin could be ſeen, all eyes would turn away from it: Sin is an inviſible deformity. The Spirit of God doth as it were ſtrive for compariſons to ſet out the uglineſs of ſin: It is compared to the blood and pollution of an Infant (Ezek. 16. 6.) to the corruption of a rotten Sepulchre (Rom. 3. 13.) to the ſcum of a ſeething pot (Ezek. 24. 11, 12.) All theſe compariſons ſhew us ſomewhat of the uglineſs of ſin; but it is ugly beyond compare. How ſad is their miſtake who think to adorn themſelves with ſin? Who put on pride as a cloak upon their backs, and unrighteouſneſs as a Crown or a Diadem upon their heads: who boaſt as if they had their holy-day clothes on, when they are cloathed with unholineſs, and make to themſelves beauty ſpots of the blackeſt ſpots of ſin! The Apoſtle (Col. 3. 12.) calleth us to put on another kind of dreſs, to be cloathed with humility, meekneſs, humbleneſs of minde, charity; theſe are ſhining, pure, white rayment indeed; Our righteouſneſs is a filthy rag, if we boaſt in it, or would be juſtified in it: then how filthy a rag is our unrighteouſneſs, eſpecially if we boaſt of it, or juſtifie our ſelves in it!

Thirdly Obſerve, Man being naturally unclean, his children and poſterity are unclean too.

Caro in Scriptura male audit. Mirum non eſt ſi arundinis ramus aut cicutæ vacuus ſit à medulla, aut noxium aliquod habeat; Aut ſi Æthiopiſſæ filius Æthiopicū ab ea colorem trahat. Sanct.

John, 3. 6. That which is born of the fleſh, is fleſh. The copy cannot be better then the Original, nor the effect nobler then the cauſe; This fleſh hath an ill name all the Scripture over: 'Tis no wonder if that which is poyſonous bring forth a poyſonous ſeed, or that a ſtinging Serpent procreates a ſtinging Serpent, a Toad a Toad, or that a Wolf brings forth a Wolf: The ſon of an Ethiopian is alſo an Ethiopian: Our father was an Amorite, and ſo are we. The natural conſtitution of every thing is tranſmitted by natural generation; man is himſelf unclean, and all his iſſue is like himſelf. God created man pure in his own likeneſs after his Image; and man begets man impure in his own likeneſs after his image.

There are two things in this uncleanneſs.

Firſt, There is a privation of that comelineſs and beauty which was ſtampt upon man in his creation: Some define original uncleanneſs to be only a privation of original righteouſneſs, and that it is one part of it, all agree; but there is ſomething poſitive in it too; for it is as if a man, who is richly cloathed, excellently adorned, ſhould not only have all his goodly garments pulled off (which were an abaſement to him) but ſhould be thrown into the dirt, or have dirt caſt upon him; Joſeph's Brethren took off his party-coloured garment, and then threw him into a pit; ſo doth ſin: that ſtrips us firſt of our goodly array, our original righteouſneſs; and then drenches, or daubs us rather all over, or over head and ears, in mire and filth.

There are ſeven conſiderable properties in this natural uncleanneſs.

Firſt, It is an internal uncleanneſs; a ſpot upon the garment is bad enough; a ſpot upon the face is far worſe; but an infection in the fleſh is yet worſe; and that is worſt of all which is ſeated in the bowels, or hath ſeized on the vitals: The uncleanneſs here ſpoken of is not as a ſpot upon the garment, or dirt upon the face, but a ſoar in the fleſh, (a ſoar is nothing but the uncleanneſs of the fleſh gathered to a head) yea, it is like a ſoar in the bowels, or intrals, trals, in the heart or liver; for even the mind and conſcience is defiled, Tit. 1. 15.

Secondly, It is an abiding uncleanneſs, all the water in the Ocean cannot waſh it out; all the fire in Hell cannot burn it out; Hell fire ſhall never conſume this droſs: Though wicked men in this life be caſt into the fire of Gods judgments, and he kindle it with the bellows of his wrath, yet their droſs remains, reprobate ſilver ſhall men call them; (Jer. 6.30.) they will not be purged in this life, and in the next life they ſhall not be purged. They ſhall be for ever in punitive flames; but they ſhall not find (as Papiſts dream) any purgative flames. The corruption of nature will not depart from them. The uncleanneſs of the metal is the droſs of the metal; the droſs of mans nature is harder to ſeparate then the droſs of metal; the lead in that infernal furnace willl not conſume, nor will the bellows break; yet the droſs of luſt will not out of reprobates. And as fire and brimſtone ſhall not fetch this uncleanneſs out of reprobates in the next life; ſo grace and mercy do not fetch it fully out of the elect in this life; they who are renewed and regenerate, are yet in part carnal and corrupt. Graſe is in a continual conflict with corruption; but glory only makes a total conqueſt.

Thirdly, It is an abounding uncleanneſs, it is not in the hand or face only, but in and upon the whole man, it goes quite through. There is not the leaſt part free: Man from head to heel, from top to toe is deſcribed unclean (*Pſal.*14. Rom. 3.) The Lord looked down from Heaven, to ſee if there were any that did underſtand and ſeek after God: they were all gone out of the way, and become vile, vile all over. There is a double univerſality of this uncleanneſs. Firſt, It doth defile all men. Secondly, All of man: Not one man in the world but is unclean; and not one part in any man but is unclean; ſurvey him in his underſtanding, will, memory, affections, conſcience, eye, hand, tongue, feet, all the parts of the body and powers of the ſoul are unclean. As grace ſanctifies, ſo ſin defiles all where it is, even body, ſoul, and ſpirit, 1 Tim. 5.23.

Fourthly, It is an active or a powerful uncleanneſs, ſtirring up an holy war in man, againſt the holy will of God: An inordinate appetite accompanies it; or it is an inordinate appetite cauſing the inferiour parts of the ſoul ſtubbornly to reſiſt the ſuperiour; or the ſuperiour baſely to ſubmit unto and ſerve the inferiour. This makes Luſt a King, and Reaſon a Slave; yea, this would make Grace a Slave. As Paul's experience teacheth us, (Rom. 7.23.) But I ſee another law in my members warring againſt the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of ſin which is in my members. That is, it doth captivate me in part, and hath a deſign to captivate me altogether.

concupiſcentia eſt appetitus inordinatus per quem ſuperiora inferioribus tupitt ſerviun, aut inferiora ſuperioribus contumaciter reluctantur. Janſon.

Fifthly, It is a diffuſive or an infectious uncleanneſs, like a leproſie or a plague. Now, as good is by ſo much the better, by how much it is the more diffuſive, ſo evil is ſo much the worſe by how much it is the more diffuſive. This evil is diffuſive two wayes. Firſt, By way of propagation, from Adam to all his poſterity. Secondly, By way of imitation, and ſo one man doing evil, another ſeeth and catcheth it, he is infected and defiled with it: That's the reaſon why David (as ſome conceive) was ſo exceeding ſtrict, in this point (Pſal. 101.7.) He that worketh deceit ſhall not dwell within my houſe; he that telleth lyes ſhall not tarry in my ſight; his wickedneſs may ſpread, it may poyſon the heart of a King, I will not put my ſelf upon the temptation. The Apoſtle (Heb. 12.15.) warns the Church of this danger, Leſt any root of bitterneſs ſpringing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled. Though this uncleanneſs doth not infect by imitation only (which was the error of Pelagius) yet it infects ſtrongly and commonly by imitation: Hence Moſes chargeth the people of Iſrael to have nothing to do with the Canaanites, leſt they ſhould be miſled by their example. And when they acted againſt this rule, they quickly broke all rules (Pſal. 106.36.) They were mingled with the Heathen (then immediately follows) and learned their works. He means not works of art, or agriculture, of peace, or war, but of falſe worſhip and idolatry; They ſerved their idols, which was a ſnare unto them. Evil men endanger the good, as bad humors do the blood, or an infected houſe the whole neighbourhood.

Sixthly, It is a bewitching and an enſnaring uncleanneſs. All the bodily beauty in the world did never intice ſo many as the deformity and foul face of ſin hath. It was propheſied of Chriſt (in reference to his outward appearance) He hath no form nor comelineſs; there is no beauty that we ſhould deſire him. Hence the Prophet foreſees what entertainment he was like to find in the world: He is deſpiſed and rejected of men; we, as it were, hid our faces from him, and we eſteemed him not, Iſa. 53.2, 3. Beauty and comelineſs are the attractives, the loadſtone of love. Chriſt was not loved becauſe he did not appear beautiful: Luſt is loved though it be unbeautiful: There is no form nor comelineſs in ſin, nothing why it ſhould be deſired, yet it is admired and highly eſteemed by all ſorts of men. They dote upon it, and run mad with love for it, as the choiceſt beauty in the world.

Seventhly, It is a murderous and a mortal uncleanneſs; there is no eſcaping death if we live in it. This uncleanneſs doth not only ſpoil our inward beauty, and put the ſoul out of faſhion, but it deſtroyes the life of the ſoul, it is the ruine as well as the diſhonour of man.

Now as all men, becauſe unclean, bring forth an unclean perſonal iſſue (which riſeth from the ſecond expoſition.) So becauſe every perſon is unclean, the actions which he brings forth are unclean too. Whatſoever ſinful man doth, is ſinful: Conſider mankind under two ranks, regenerate and unregenerate: The unregenerate are ſo unclean, that whatſoever they do is altogether unclean. Do men gather grapes of thorns, and figs of thiſtles? Make the tree good and the fruit good, while the tree is evil, the fruit cannot be good. 'Tis becauſe the heart is evil, that (as God complains Gen. 6.5.) All the imaginations of the thoughts of the heart are only evil continually. The imagination gives ſhape to every thing which the mind works upon; all that man frames and faſhions, all the creatures he makes within him are unclean. The works of a natural man are unclean for the moſt part in the very matter; but all that he doth is unclean for the manner; his hands are unclean, and (by his handling) he makes all unclean. The mind and conſcience of a wicked man being defiled, he is abominable, diſobedient, and unto every good work reprobate, (Tit. 1.15.) that is, he knows not how to do a good work, he is not handſome-handed, or rather not handſome-hearted at any good work: he knows neither how to contrive, nor act, much leſs to delight in any thing that is good; that's the meaning of being reprobate to every good work: Though he may ſet about many good works, yet at beſt they do but bungle at them all. Some good works are ſo good that no man can do them ill; they cannot be done ſinfully, though they may be done imperfectly. Such are, to love God, to fear, to believe, to truſt, to rejoyce in him, and to hope for his mercy. Theſe works are ſo good, that, as no wicked man can do them at all, ſo, no good man can ſin in doing them. Theſe works are ſo good, that the leaſt degree of them is good; and therefore though they are acted often weakly, yet they are never acted wickedly. But there are good works which a carnal man will be dealing in, as to pray, to hear the Word, &c. Theſe he will be doing, but he is reprobate to the doing of them; he defiles and ſpoils them in the doing. The caſe is put Hag. 2.14. If a man that is unclean do carry holy fleſh, ſhall it not be unclean? The Prophet ſtates it affirmatively, ceremonially holy fleſh is defiled with our ſpiritually unholy fleſh: The uncleanneſs of the giver renders his gift unclean: The ſacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord: Their prayers are ſometimes called howlings (Hoſ. 7.) ſometimes bablings (Mat. 6.) Their prayers at beſt are but wouldings and wiſhings, or meer preſumings, ſuch were Balaam's (Numb. 33.10.) they deſire mercy more then grace, they will have the end, but care not to walk in the way.

Now if the prayers of carnal man be unclean, how unclean are their oaths? If their mercies be cruel, how merciléſs are their cruelties? If their praiſes of God be filthy, how filthy are their prophanations? If the beſt they can do be bad, how bad is their worſt?

Secondly, The works of the regenerate are unclean alſo. Job ſpeaks his own caſe, he was a holy man by Gods own teſtimony, yet he ſaith, Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? All our righteouſneſs are as filthy rags, (Iſa. 64.6.) A regenerate man ſins in all he doth: We do not ſay, all he doth is ſin, as the Papiſts charge us: The work of Gods ſpirit upon us, and the motions of grace in us are pure; yet, as clean water paſſing through an unclean pipe, receivs a tincture of that uncleanneſs; ſo ſinfulneſs cleaves to our holieſt actions, we the inſtruments being ſinful.

If it be objected, That which is ſinful is a tranſgreſſion of the Law; but good works are not a tranſgreſſion of the Law; therefore they are not ſinful.

I anſwer.

Firſt, Sin is a tranſgreſſion of the Law; but every thing which hath ſin accompanying it, is not a tranſgreſſion of the Law: We cannot argue from the abſtract to the concrete.

Secondly, There is a twofold tranſgreſſion of the Law: Firſt, Againſt the matter of any duty required. Secondly, Againſt the manner in which the Law requires that duty ſhould be performed: In this latter ſence there is a tranſgreſſion in the beſt works of Believers: Where is the ſoul that is carried out in prayer, &c. with that love and delight, with that purity and fervency of ſpirit, which the ſpiritualneſs of the Law doth call for?

If it be again objected, That good works in the regenerate are the works of the Spirit of God in them, and therefore are not ſinful,

I anſwer.

That which proceeds from the Spirit as the immediate and ſole cauſe, is not ſinful: But good works are not wrought ſolely by the Spirit of God; the ſpirit and mind of man are ſubſervient and inſtrumental in that work: Now an effect which proceeds from divers ſubordinate cauſes, takes its qualification from the loweſt as well as from the higheſt. Though a Writer have exact skill, yet if his pen be naught, the writing cannot be exact.

Laſtly, (Say ſome) good works are pleaſing to God; but that which is ſinful doth not pleaſe God.

To which I anſwer.

That our good works do not pleaſe God, as done by us; but as done in Chriſt: He is the Altar which ſanctifies all our gifts; he is our High-prieſt who takes away the iniquity of all our holy things, that we may be accepted in all our offerings. 'Tis through a Mediator that God is pleaſed with what we do, and pardons our defects.

Thirdly, The words may import a change of the ſame perſon, Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean?

Hence Obſerve, Man cannot convert or make himſelf clean; nor can any man make man clean.

Man can no more ſanctifie himſelf or another, then he can redeem himſelf or another. But you will ſay, A man is often exhorted to cleanſe himſelf (Iſa. 1. 15, 18.) Waſh you, make you clean, (2 Cor. 7. 1.) Having theſe promiſes, let us cleanſe our ſelves from all filthineſs of fleſh and ſpirit.

I anſwer.

Firſt, If theſe Texts be underſtood of perſons regenerate, as that of the Apoſtle clearly is, then it is true, they who are already cleanſed may further cleanſe themſelves; for though we do not cooperate in the firſt converſion (there we are meerly paſſive) yet we do in the ſecond: We cannot begin holineſs, but we may and ought to perfect holineſs in the fear of the Lord. We cannot work our own ſalvation; but we may work out our own ſalvation. They who have received the Spirit are fitted to carry on ſpiritual work.

And though the Text in Iſaiah ſpeaks of perſons unregenerate, yet it is not in vain to ſay even to ſuch, Waſh you, make you clean. An unclean perſon may apply himſelf to the means of cleanſing: They who have no grace, yet have reaſon; and God deals with us, as with rational creatures: They who are dead in ſins and treſpaſſes, may hear the word of life and live. The dead and unclean are invited to the means of life and cleanſing; and God in the uſe of means hath promiſed to cleanſe and enliven them; but man of himſelf cannot cleanſe himſelf, nor make himſelf differ from what he is, or others are As our ſanctification is the will of God; ſo it is the work of God too. 'Tis neither our own power, nor the power of any creature, which gives us the new creation: ſo the laſt words of the verſe reſolve, Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean?

Not one.] That is, No man can do it. Some read this interrogatively, or by way of queſtion, Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Cannot one? Or, Is there not one that can? We negatively, There is not one that can: No man can do it..

If we take (as we ſafely may) the former reading, the queſtion affirms; Is there not one? Yea, there is one, and but one, who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean: As the Scribes ſaid (Mark 2. 7.) Who can forgive ſins but God only? So, who can cleanſe a ſoul but God only? God only of unclean can make us clean. He who can raiſe up Children to Abraham out of ſtones, and alter the courſe of Nature, he can make the Leper change his ſpot, and the Blackamore his skin; to God nothing is impoſſible; but to man many things are impoſſible; and there is nothing more impoſſible then this, the cleanſing of the ſpiritually unclean. As that only can make and continue a cold body hot, which is it ſelf and of it ſelf hot; ſo he only can make an unclean thing clean, who is himſelf and of himſelf clean; God is clean, and there is no ſpot in him; therefore he can make us clean, and take out all our ſpots. The Chaldee Paraphraſt takes the word, One, for the deſcription of God, or for the Name of God. And ſo this place is paralleld by that (Mark 2. 7.) which according to the letter of the Greek is to be read thus. Who can forgive ſins but one? or, the one God?

לא אחד non unus, nonne unus? Quis dabit mundum ex homine contaminato peccatis, niſi Deus, qui unus eſt qui remittat ipſi? Chald. Nonne tu qui ſolus es Vulg. Solus Deus poteſt ex immundo facere mundum condonando peccata, nam cujus peccatum condonatum eſt, purus eſt. Druſ. Sicut de frigido facere calidū eſt ejus quod per ſe calidum eſt, ita de immundo facere mundum eſt ejus qui per ſe mundus eſt. Unde quicquid mundum eſt à Deo mundiciem habet. Aquin.

Some expound this, One, ſtrictly of Jeſus Chriſt, who was deſigned to that work when he came into the world, who is the great cleanſer: In whom a fountain is opened to waſh for ſin and for uncleanneſs, and whoſe blood cleanſeth from all ſin: Who purifieth thoſe he ſaveth, and purgeth all he pardoneth. Chriſt is that clean, that holy thing: And he being ſo, makes us ſo; yea, he is made to us of God, wiſdom, righteouſneſs and ſanctification or cleanneſs. Chriſt bringeth clean out of unclean, by removing a twofold uncleanneſs. Firſt, The guilt of ſin when he pardons. Secondly, The filth of ſin when he ſanctiſies.

From this whole Doctrine of mans uncleanneſs we learn.

First, Man cannot oblige God.

What hath man to boaſt of? Will any one be proud of his filthy garments, or of a ſpot in his face? Much leſs can we boaſt who have a ſpot upon our hearts, and are all over ſpotted in our lives.

Secondly learn, That in our confeſſion of ſin, we ſhould lay our hand upon our birth-ſin.

The ſenſe of our natural uncleanneſs humbles moſt; and we ſhould often reflect upon it, that we may be more humbled. We cannot ſhift off our ſin upon the temptation of Satan, or the ſolicitation of men; we have the root of the matter in our ſelves. Job was moſt ſenſible of the ſinfulneſs of his nature: He had many ſins, but he ſaw this at the bottom of them all. 'Tis our duty to mourn for actual ſins, but chiefly for original ſin. We muſt weep over the ſtreams; but moſt over the fountain: The heart of man hath not laboured wore to corrup any truth, then this about mans natural corruption. The old Pelagians dreſſed up Nature very fine, and would at leaſt perſwade us it is not ſo bad, or ſo oppoſite to good as ſome would make it. They told us it hath ſome diſpoſition to good; and that if helped a little, it would come on to do good. Papiſts at this day follow them, if not in the ſame ſteps, yet in the ſame path: Both have darkned counſel by words without knowledge.

Thirdly, If all men be unclean, then every man hath need of waſhing.

Thou ſhalt not waſh my feet, ſaid Peter to Chriſt, John 13. 8. If I waſh thee not (ſaith Chriſt) thou haſt no part in me. Then he prayes, Lord (waſh) not only my feet but my head, &c. Chriſt ſpeaks thus to every ſoul, If I waſh thee not, thou haſt no part in me: Chriſt is a clean Head, and he cleanſeth all his members.

Fourthly, The thoughts of our general uncleanneſs, ſhould provoke us to bleſs God, that there is a fountain open for ſin and uncleanneſs.

Fountains ſhould be as welcome to thoſe who are filthy, as to thoſe who are thirſty. When Hagar was thirſty, God ſhewed her a fountain of water: When Sampſon was very thirſty, God opened a fountain in the jaw, and he drank and was revived. We are filthy, and God opens a fountain, he ſends our leprous ſouls to the Jordan of his Sons blood, and bids us waſh and be clean. When our hands are unclean, is not a baſon of water welcome? Our ſouls are unclean, O how welcome ſhould the blood of Chriſt be unto us? Bleſs God, who, as he hath diſcovered our uncleanneſs, ſo a fountain, that we may waſh away our uncleanneſs. How wonderful are the workings of Divine love, that we, who were all ſpots and unclean, ſhall at laſt be preſented unto God perfectly clean, Not having ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing, Epheſ. 5. 27.

Having opened the ſence of theſe words, as they contain this doctrinal Propoſition of mans natural uncleanneſs: There is yet ſomewhat conſiderable in their ſcope? Why doth Job ſpeak of this uncleanneſs?

Quaſi innuat Job non debere Deū hominem punire, ob peccatum ad quod eſt pronus ex ſeſe, ſed ſui oblitus hoc dicit. Merc.

Some give this for his ſcope, as if Job from his original uncleanneſs would extenuate his actual uncleanneſs: or that he ought to be pardoned by Grace, becauſe he was polluted by Nature: As if he had ſaid, Lord, I was born unclean, and therefore cannot but be unclean; no wonder ill fruits grow on me, who have a root of evil in me. But this was (in proportion) as far from the mind of Job, as it is from the truth of God. Beſides, that we are born ſinful, and cannot chuſe but ſin, is no extenuation, but an aggravation of our ſin. That ſin is not only our act, but our nature, leaves us without deſert of pity, or matter of apology. We pity a man, who by accident hath taken poyſon, and is ſick: But who pities a Serpent, whoſe nature is poyſonous? or ſuch creatures, to whom poyſon is as food? When David confeſſeth (Pſal. 51.) In iniquity was I conceived, &c. Was he ſowing a fig-leaf over his uncleanneſs? Or covering it with carnal reaſonings? No marvel though I bring forth ſin, who was conceived in ſin. No marvel if I conceive iniquity, who was brought forth in iniquity. No, David doth not excuſe, but humble himſelf; he doth not challenge mercy, but ſees his need of mercy, becauſe he was conceived in ſin, and brought forth in iniquity. Such alſo (I conceive) was the frame of Job's ſpirit in making this confeſſion, and pouring out this complaint upon his birth-ſin.

His deſign was, Firſt to abaſe himſelf, to make his heart more pliable and ready to ſubmit unto ſaddeſt diſpenſations. I am unclean; And is it any wonder that the holy God, who cannot behold any unclean thing, ſhould throw an unclean perſon over head and ears into the waters of affliction?

Ex naturæ ſuæ corruptione ſperat Deum facilius pertrahere, ad veniam ſibi dandum, ne ſe ita graviter affligat. Merc.

Secondly, He ſpeaks this as a motive to compaſſion, deſiring the Lord to mitigate his ſorrows, while he aggravated his ſin; yea, to ceaſe from afflicting, becauſe he knew (by reaſon of this natural uncleanneſs) he could not ceaſe to ſin, till he ſhould ceaſe to be in this world. Thus God himſelf argues for his own compaſſions and ſparing mercies to the renewed World after the Flood: For whereas he had ſaid (Gen. 6. 5.) The imagination of the thought of mans heart is only evil continually, and therefore I will deſtroy, man whom I have created, from the face of the earth. Yet at the eighth Chapter, ver. 21. the Lord reſolves thus, I will not again ſmite the earth any more, and every living thing, as I have done: Why? For the imagination of mans heart is evil from his youth: As if he had ſaid, Though I drown'd the world with water, yet they are not waſhed from their uncleanneſs; I ſee water will not fetch out ſin, nor my judgment make man holy: I muſt alwayes deſtroy, if I ſhould deſtroy as often as men do wickedly, therefore I will not ſmite the earth in this ſort any more. Thus Job might move the Lord to forbear afflicting him, becauſe he could not (being born in ſin) forbear to ſin; though in this he aggravates his own ſinfulneſs. We may beſeech the Lord to ſpare us when, we act ſin, becauſe our natures are ſinful: But wo unto thoſe, who go about, either to palliate or extenuate their acts of ſin, by the ſinfulneſs of their natures.

VERS. 5, 6.

Seeing his dayes are determined, the number of his months are with thee, thou haſt appointed him his bounds that he cannot paſs.

Turn from him that he may reſt, till he ſhall accompliſh as an hireling his day.

JOB having pleaded for pity, upon conſideration of the weakneſs and frailty of man, upon the conſideration of the ſhortneſs of his life, and ſinfulneſs of his nature, proceeds here to another Argument from a double conſideration about death.

Firſt, Becauſe death hath a ſet and a fixed time, at which it will come, and will not tarry, in the fifth and ſixth verſes.

Secondly, Becauſe there is no returning from death: When death hath got us into its hand, it holdeth us faſt, and keepeth us ſure enough. This he illuſtrates two wayes, Firſt, By a diſſimilitude, in ver, 7, 8, 9, 10. There is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will ſprout again, &c. But it is not ſo with man: Man dieth and waſteth away, man giveth up the ghoſt, and where is he? This is a diſſimilitude.

Secondly, He illuſtrateth it by a ſimilitude, ver. 11, 12. As the waters fail from the ſea, and the floud decayeth and dryeth, ſo man lyeth down and riſeth not. By theſe two are ſet forth the prevailing ſtrength of death. When once we are under the power of the grave, there is no releaſe nor fetching us back by any created ſtrength.

In theſe two verſes, the fifth and ſixth, Job openeth his firſt Argument, that there is a ſet time; and not only a ſet time, but a time irrevocable; a time ſo ſet, that there can be no unſetling of it, The number of his months are with thee, thou haſt ſet him his bounds, which he cannot paſs.

His dayes are determined.

The Argument ſtands thus,

He ſhould be mercifully and gently dealt with in this life, whoſe life is ſet out by certain bounds and limits, beyond which he cannot paſs, and from which he cannot return.

But thus it is with poor man, There is a ſet period of his life, and as he cannot get beyond it, ſo he cannot come back from it.

Therefore turn away and let me have ſome reſt

As if he had ſaid, Beſides, that this life is full of evil (as was ſhewed before) death, the greateſt of natural evils, is at hand, which ſuddenly takes us away, throweth us into the grave, hides us there without poſſibility of returning to ſuch a life as we here enjoy. Job hath uſed this Argument before: Neither ſhould it ſeem ſtrange, that he now repeats, and modeſtly objects it unto God to move pity, and ſtir the bowels of his compaſſion towards him. The Pſalmiſt, whether David or ſome other Pen-man, argues thus; (Pſal. 89. 48.) Remember, Lord, how ſhort my time is; wherefore haſt thou made all men in vain? What man is he that liveth and ſhall not ſee death, and ſhall he deliver his ſoul from the power of the grave? He urgeth the Lord to grant ſome eaſe, ſome breathing, ſome reſpit and relaxation in this life, becauſe death cannot be far off, from which there is no reſcue, no returning.

The word which we tranſlate determined, ſignifies properly to dig, and by a Metaphor to make an exact and curious ſearch; or by ſearching thoughts to dig down into the depth of a buſineſs, and then to ſettle it. Hence it is tranſlated diligent, (Prov. 10. 4.) The hand of the diligent maketh rich; properly, The hand of the digger makes rich. And the word imports not only digging in the ground for ordinary commodities, as for ſtones, or coals, but digging for gold and ſilver, for the moſt precious metals or minerals; How diligent are men when they dig for ſuch treaſure and for riches? Such is the diligent hand which maketh rich. Now becauſe when we make any ſerious determination upon any matter before us, we firſt ſearch or dig into the bottom of it: Therefore the word is tranſlated here to determine. 'Tis ſo alſo, Iſa. 10. 23. The Lord God of hoſts hath made a conſumption, even determined in the midſt of all the land. God makes many conſumptions, he layes whole Countries and Kingdoms waſte; but his are not conſumptions at a venture, or by hap-hazard, accidental conſumptions, but conſumptions determined,; that is, the Lord ſets down directly who and how many, where and when, what perſons, what places, what eſtates and things ſhall ſhall be conſumed; God makes a determined conſumption in the greateſt confuſions and hurry of the nations. When we think nothing is done wiſely, all is done wiſely. And that which croſſeth the revealed, fulfils the ſecret will of God. The moſt diſorderly conſumptions (to us) are determined and ordered by God.

Conſumet populum. & præciſis amputatiſq; inutilibus impiis, abbreviabit populum & ad minutiſſinas juſtorum reliquias, rediget. Pined.

Dies hominis dicuntur definiti ad menſuram certam & anguſtum. Dies breves hominis ſunt, Vulg. Ἐὰν ϗ μία ἡμέρα ὁ βίος αὐτῦ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς. חרץ idem quod חתך Rab. Dav.

As this word [determined] is applyed to the dayes of man, it hath a twofold ſignification.

Firſt, It notes that the dayes of man are reduced by God to a certain number.

Secondly, That they are reduced to a ſhort number, ſo ſome tranſlate, Are not the dayes of man ſhort or few ? and the Septuagint yet cloſer : Is not the life of man upon the earth one day ? as if all life were contracted into one ſingle day, or determined into the narroweſt compaſs.

Yet I conceive (though the Original may bear it) this latter ſenſe is not ſuteable to this place; Job told told us at the beginning of the chapter, that the dayes of man are few upon the earth; And 'tis not probable that he would touch upon the ſame ſtring twiſe in ſo narrow a compaſs.

So then, This determination of our dayes refers to a certain number or meaſure of our dayes. Which expoſition as it keeps a difference in the words, ſo it doth much illuſtrate the mind of Job, who in this diſcourſe endeavours by various arguments to ſet forth the miſery and weakneſs of man, and to plead with God upon that account of pity and ſparing mercy. This interpretation falls in joint alſo with the next clauſe of the verſe, about which I ſhall add a word before I give the point.

The number of his moneths are with thee;

Apud nos numerum illorum eſſe dicimus quorum numerus a nobis ſtabilitur. Aquin.

That is, In thy power, under thy eſtabliſhment, or in thy knowledge, ſo we render this phraſe (Chap. 10.7.) Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked, the Hebrew is, It is with thee that I am not wicked, ſo, the number of his moneths are with thee, that is, they are plain before thine eye, and eſtabliſhed in thy counſel.

Obſerve firſt, into what ſmall portions he diſtributes the life of man, dayes and moneths, His dayes are determined, and the number of his moneths are with thee.

> God hath a diſtinct knowledge of every particular time of mans life, and digeſteth it into the ſmalleſt diviſions ;

Non de annis ſed menſibus & diebus ſolum fit mētio ad diſtinctam de ſingularibus Dei notitiam exprimendam. Bold.

He knoweth not only thoſe more remarkable ſtages of infancy, of childhood, of youth, of full age and old age, but the moneths and dayes of our lives: yea, his knowledge reacheth unto (which to us are almoſt indiſcernable) hours, minutes and moments, even theſe are meaſured, numbred, caſt up by the infinite foreknowledge of the eternal God.

> Secondly Obſerve, The dayes and moneths of mans life are ſet and fixed.

There is a reſolve paſſed upon every man, our times are not now to be diſpoſed of; God hath paſt the account of time from all eternity. As to every thing there is a ſeaſon, (Eccl. 3. 1.) ſo to every perſon : and this is true not only of ſingle perſons, but even of whole generations, yea of all the generations of mankind, (Act. 17.26.) He hath made of one blood , all nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth , and hath determined the times before appointed. God hath determined not only how long man ſhall live, but how long the world ſhall live; he ſaid of mankind before the flood, his dayes ſhall be an 120. years, Gen. 6. 3. He told Abraham his ſeed ſhould be a ſtranger four hundred years. He told the Jews their captivity ſhould continue ſeventy years in literal Babylon. And he hath told us (if we could read the figures) how many years the Church of the Goſpel ſhould groan under myſtical Babylon. All things and perſons on earth are dated in heaven. Whatſoever man is Lord of, I am ſure he is not Lord of time, he cannot diſpoſe of one minute for himſelf or others. We live not at our own pleaſure, nor at the pleaſure of any creature, God keeps reckoning for us. The very hairs of our head are numbred, then ſurely the dayes of our lives are numbred. The hairs of the head are meaneſt parts indeed but an excrement of man, and there are ſuch multitudes, ſuch nnmbers of hairs upon the head, that it is a wonder they ſhould be numbred, or any account kept of them : yet to ſhew the providence of God extending to the leaſt things, it extends to the numbring of hairs and dayes.

Now, if God hath determined the dayes of mans life, then enquire not of the ſtars or of ſtar-gazers for the number of them. When David would know the number of his dayes, he doth not reſort to Aſtrologers, but to God; Lord, teach me to number my dayes, he puts that requeſt to God; nor did he put it to God as enquiring for the preciſe number of his dayes, (about this we muſt not be curious) as to know whether we ſhall live twenty or thirty, whither ſeventy or eighty years, ſuch numbers are not to be ſearched after. It is not for us to know theſe times and ſeaſons, God keeps them in his own hand : David I ſay, did not trouble himſelf or God about this) but he prayed that God would teach him that holy skill to number his dayes, that he might apply his heart unto wiſdom; conſidering he had but little time, he would be inſtructed how to improve and uſe it well.

I ſhall open the laſt branch of the verſe, and then add ſomewhat further by way of Obſervation.

As Job acknowledgeth that our dayes are determined, and that the number of our moneths is with God, ſo he concludes that this determination is unalterable and indiſpenſable.

Thou haſt appointed him his bounds which he cannot paſs.

חקי עשית Statuta feciſti Statuta enim & decreta Dei de hominis vita ſunt velut cancelli intra quos homo continetur & ſunt certi fines, quos ultra citraque nequit conſiſtere vita. Merc.

It is uſual with men to do and undo, to reſolve and reſcind their reſolutions : but the determination of God ſhall ſtand. He ſaith and may ſay it, What I have written I have written. There are no raſures in the records of heaven : Thou haſt appointed him his bounds which he cannot paſs ; The Hebrew is, Thou haſt made him a ſtatute, thou haſt made him a Law : we rightly tranſlate law by bounds, for laws are the bounds of mens actions, men would be boundleſs and keep within no compaſs, if there were no laws to rule and order them; God gave a law to bound all men, and men make laws to bound ſuch as are under them. And as God gives us a law to bound our lives in morality, ſo he gives a bound or a law to our lives in nature; and as the way of mans life is ſet out by a Law, ſo alſo is his end or death. The Apoſtle ſpeaks very ſutably to this expreſſion (Heb. 9.27.) It is appointed (or made as a ſtatute or law) to all men once to die. There is a law, or a ſtatute paſſed that man muſt die : and there is a law, or a ſtatute paſſed how long man ſhall live, or when he muſt die, and that Law of death is irrepealable.

Iterato precepto opus non eſt.

When the Apoſtle ſaith, it is appointed to man once to die; (as we tranſlate,) The word once is not to be referred to die, as if there were ſome ſuſpition that man could die twiſe (when the Apoſtle Jude ſpeaks of ſome that are twiſe dead in ſpirituals, he means only they are throughly dead) But once is referred to appointed, it was once appointed, and that once ſhall ſtand, there ſhall never be any altering or renewing of the ſtatute; there's no need to make a new law upon the point, God hath once ſetled it, and it is ſetled for ever : When Abiſhai went to the cave where Saul was, and asked David leave to kill him, I will ſmite him (ſaith he) but once, and I will not ſmite him the ſecond time, I will make ſure work at a blow; (1 *Sam.*26.8.) Such is the intendment of the particle once in that Law : The Lord hath appointed the bounds of life once, and the bounds of dearh once : he will not appoint them a ſecond. Thou haſt ſet him his bounds which he cannot paſs.

Impoſſibile eſt hominē diutius vel minus vivere quam divina diſpoſitio habet, licet hunc hominē nunc vel prius mori ſit contingens, ſi in ſe conſideretur. Aquin.

There are two opinions about the bound of mans life, or what this bound is: Firſt, ſome place it in natural cauſes, as in the temperament and conſtitution of the body. There is a truth in that, but we muſt not reſt there : Natural cauſes are ſomewhat, and men who live long are uſually of a laſting complexion and conſtitution. But ſecondly, the true bounds are ſet by God; the will of God is the limit of mans life; for though there be a ſutableneſs in the natural temper of men to ſuch a term of life, yet God often acts beſide and croſſeth that; ſome healthy men die young, and ſome crazy men live till they are old. The bounds may be paſſed which our natural complexion ſets, the bounds cannot be paſſed which the providence and will of God ſets : That, man dies at ſuch a time, may be a contingency in reference to ſecond cauſes, but let him die when he will, it is neceſſary in regard of the firſt cauſe. He cannot paſs.

עבר Verbū prætereundi rectè quadrat legi & ſtatuto.

The word paſs, is proper to laws and bounds; bounds are ſet on purpoſe to keep us from paſſing beyond them. As all good laws are bounds which we ſhould not paſs: ſo tranſgreſſion which is the breach of ſome law, ſignifies a paſſing over or beyond the law. God hath ſet man a bound or a law, how long he ſhall live, as well as a law in what manner he ſhall live. The former bound is paſſed by man every day, the latter was never paſſed by any man. We often paſs the bounds of the moral law of God, but we cannot paſs the bounds of the eternal decree of God.

Hence Obſerve, That as the dayes of man are determined by God, ſo man cannot live a day beyond that determination.

Friends cannot protract, enemies cannot ſhorten the life of man one moment. How often did the Jews deſign the death of Chriſt, but they could not accompliſh it, till his hour was come. And when his hour was come, he would not paſs it. What was ſaid of Chriſt is true of every man, he lives not after, nor dies before his hour is come. Man is apt to think himſelf maſter of his own life, if not to continue it, yet to end it: and we have a ſaying (which ſome count a ſubtle and a wiſe one) He that cares not for his own life is maſter of another mans life: but both ſpeak falſe doctrine, and are confuted by Jobs divinity. What God ſpeaks of that law which is the rule of our lives in grace (*Mat.*5.18.) Till heaven and earth paſs, one jot or title ſhall in no wiſe paſs from the law, till all be fulfilled: The ſame may we ſpeak of this law, which is the limit of our lives in nature, one jot or title of this law ſhall not paſs unfulfilled, and when once this law is fulfilled, the life of man cannot paſs one jot or title further.

Some Scriptures ſeem to ſpeak againſt Jobs doctrine of the certain determination of mans dayes by the decree of God. I ſhall briefly clear them.

Firſt, When Hezekiah was ſick, and (as he thought) dying, did not God ſend him a meſſage by the Prophet Iſaiah (2 King. 20.5.) Turn again and tell the captain of my people, thus ſaith the Lord the God of David thy father, &c. I will heal thee, and (not only ſo, but) I will add to thy life fifteen years. If fifteen years were added, then ſurely his dayes were not determined: either God had not appointed him a ſet time, or he changed his mind and came to a new appointment: and Hezekiah did either paſs the bounds which God once fixed, or he might have fallen ſhort of them.

I anſwer,

The fifteen years added to Hezekiahs life, were added to Hezekiahs date, not to Gods. Hezekiah looked upon himſelf as a dead man: he was ſick, and ſick to death in his own opinion, poſſibly alſo in the opinion of all his ſervants and Phyſitians, yet he, & they too were deceived; God had determined him a longer time, and tells him he had, Thou ſhalt live yet fifteen years: This addition doth not imply any alteration in the purpoſe of God, as if having once decreed that Hezekiah ſhould live but forty years, he afterwards (upon his prayer) granted that he ſhould live fifty five: For as he determined Hezekiah ſhould be ſick unto death, and that he ſhould receive ſentence of death in himſelf, ſo he determined alſo, that Hezekiah ſhould recover and out-live that dangerous ſickneſs fifteen years.

Secondly, That of the Preacher may be objected (Eccleſ. 7.16, 17.) Be not righteous over-much, neither make thy ſelf over-wiſe; why ſhouldeſt thou deſtroy thy ſelf? Be not over-much wicked, neither be thou fooliſh, why ſhouldeſt thou die before thy time?

I anſwer,

He that dies before his time, dies not before the time which God hath determined. An unſeaſonable death to man doth not prevent Gods ſeaſon. To clear which we muſt diſtinguiſh about death, which is twofold; firſt, natural, ſecondly, violent: A man that dieth a violent death, is ſaid to die before his time, becauſe he dieth before that time which he might have reached according to the courſe of nature: ſin cuts man off before nature cuts him off, but then God cuts him off for his ſin. Thus many die before their time; and, except in that ſenſe, no man dieth before his time. That, ſuch was the meaning of Solomon, is plain in the text, when he ſaith, be not wicked over-much: Which (by the way) doth not imply that there is a mean in wickedneſs, or that the Preacher would perſwade men only to a temper in wickedneſs; be wicked ſo far but no further; all wickedneſs is too much or more then enough. Every mean in ſinning is an extream. But when he ſaith be not over-much wicked, he intends only thus much, give not thy ſelf up to wickedneſs, leſt the Magiſtrate (who bears not the ſword in vain) call thee to an account, and ſend thee to the grave by the hand of juſtice, before old age or ſickneſs ſend thee thither. The Hebrew is, Wherefore ſhouldeſt thou die in a time not thine? that is, before thine old age, for that is mans proper time of dying. Again, The proper time of mans dying is, when he is ready for death: As when a Steward is ready to make his account, then is his beſt time to give up his Stewardſhip; and therefore be not wicked over-much, leſt God take thee away when thy accounts are altogether unready, that's no time for thee to die in. There is a time of him that dieth, and a time of death; the time of death is whenſoever a man dieth, but the time of him that dieth is only then, when he is fit to die.

Thirdly, Some may object the promiſe which is added to the fifth commandment, Honour thy father and mother that thy dayes may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee (Exod. 20.12.) which carries this threat in it; if thou diſhonour thy father and mother, thy dayes ſhall be ſhortened: Whence it may be argued, that, the ſhortening or lengthening of mans dayes depends upon his own actings, upon his obedience or diſobedience, not upon the ſentence and decree of God: for if a mans life cannot be lengthened beyond its ſet time, where lieth the motive or ſtrength of this argument?

I anſwer,

This explicit promiſe of lengthening, and implicit threat of ſhortning our dayes, doth not enforce a mutability in the appointment of God about the date of our dayes; but only holds forth a token or an evidence who they are to whom God hath appointed many dayes. Such as are obedient to parents, may with warrant look upon themſelves as deſigned by God to long life: and they who are rebellious againſt their parents, have a witneſs againſt themſelves, that God hath allotted them but a ſhort life, or will cut them off ſhortly by death. For (as Solomon ſpeaks) The ravens of the valleys ſhall pluck out the eyes of ſuch and eat them, that is, they ſhall die ignominiouſly and their carkaſſes ſhall become meat for the fowls of the air. Our obedience or diſobedience to the revealed will of God, doth not make any change of, but fulfils and draws out the ſecret will of God.

Fourthly, Saith not David (Pſal. 55.23.) that, The blood-thirſty and deceitful man ſhall not live out half his dayes: And again (Pſal. 89.45.) The dayes of our youth haſt thou ſhortened: If our dayes may be halved and ſhortened, then our dayes are not unalterably bounded and determined.

I anſwer,

There is a twofold limit of mans dayes; there is a general limit, and there is a ſpecial or perſonal limit: The general limit, is threeſcore and ten or fourſcore years (Pſal. 90.10.) (Thoſe few exceptions which ſome have made by exceeding this limit, do not weaken this general rule). But beſides this general, there is a particular limit upon every perſon. The limit of one may be threeſcore years, when another is limited to fourty, a third to twenty, a fourth to five, and a fift to four, &c. Theſe are ſpecial limits upon ſpecial men; now when the Pſalmiſt ſaith, that a deceitful man ſhall not live out half his dayes, the meaning of it is, he ſhall not live out half the dayes of mans general limit, as ſuppoſe a bloody man be cut of at thirty, he hath not lived out half ſeventy or eighty years, which are the common bounds of life preſcribed to mankind beyond which they cannot paſs; but this man lives out all the dayes of his ſpecial limit, or all the dayes which were determined for his portion in the land of the living. Thus the bloodieſt and moſt deceitful wretch that ever was in the world lives out all his dayes. Our dayes are as many as God appoints in ſpecial and no more, whenſoever or in what way ſoever we are brought to the period our dayes.

From the whole context Obſerve by way of corollary,

Firſt, The decrees of God are abſolute and irrevocable.

As we cannot add one cubit to our ſtature, ſo not one hour to our dayes. And ſuch as the ſtatute or decree of God is concerning the number of dayes, which every perſon ſhall paſs in this temporal life, ſuch alſo is the decree of God concerning the number of thoſe perſons who ſhall inherit eternal life. The dayes of mortality are determined for every perſon, how many they ſhall be; and it is determined who and how many perſons ſhall enjoy a bleſſed eternity.

Secondly Obſerve, The abſoluteneſs and irrevocability of Gods decrees concerning the number of our dayes, doth not diſingage us from the uſe of means, and ſecond helps for the continuance and lengthening of our dayes.

Man muſt not ſay, God hath decreed how long I ſhall live, therefore I need not take any care of my life; this were to reſiſt the command of God, while we think we ſubmit to his decree: Whereas indeed all the commands of God are ſubordinate and miniſterial to the fulfilling of his decrees. Will any man ſay, God hath determined my dayes, which I cannot paſs, therefore when I am hungry I will not eat, when I am ſick I will not take phyſick nor uſe medicines. The decree of God is ſo far from calling us off from, that it obligeth us to the uſe of all due means for our preſervation. When Satan tempted Chriſt to throw himſelf down from the pinacle of the Temple, he anſwers, Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord thy God. While we neglect our ſelves we tempt God: we muſt not throw away our lives, becauſe God keeps them. Jacob had aſſurance of his life by a ſpecial promiſe, yet when Eſau came out againſt him with four hundred men, he doth not ſay, Lord, thou haſt undertaken for my protection, what need I trouble my ſelf? I will ſit down under that banner of thy promiſes and providence, which thou haſt diſplaid over me, let Eſau rage and threaten, let him muſter and lead all his forces againſt me if he will, what care I? I fear him not, he muſt break through the truth of God before he breaks in upon me; the word of God muſt fall before I fall: I am under the charge of heaven. Doth Jacob make this uſe of the promiſe? no, he falls a praying like a Saint, and he falls a providing for his defence like a Souldier (Gen. 32.) Had not David a ſure word from God, that he ſhould live to wear the crown of Iſrael and Judah? yea, he had not only a word but a ſign, he was anointed by Samuel, which ceremony aſſured him he ſhould be king, yet how doth he improve all aids and friends to ſave his life: He doth not ſay, Samuel hath told me from the Lord, that I ſhall be king, therefore I will not ſtir a foot from Saul, let him do his worſt: no, he withdraws from Court, and gathers an army; he defends himſelf by power, he doth not ſtand to the naked defence of the promiſe. And if it be our duty to labour after the preſervation of a temporal life, though God hath decreed the bounds of it, then much more ſhould we do thus in reference to ſpiritual and eternal life. Some will ſay, God hath made a decree which cannot paſs, who ſhall be ſaved and who damned, therefore what need we uſe the means of ſalvation? what need we avoid the wayes of damnation? but remember, the ſame word commands us to depart from iniquity, which ſaith, The foundation of God ſtandeth ſure, and he knoweth who are his. 'Tis as much our duty to give all diligence to make our calling and election ſure, as it is to believe that the election and calling of God are ſure.

Hominū excuſationes ſunt Dei tētationes.

Thirdly Obſerve, If our dayes are determined by God, then we ſhould not be afraid (when we have a due call) of ſhortening our dayes, by running hazards and hard adventures for God.
